IN the year 1818 the British and Foreign Sailors' Society represented the first enterprise of its kind for promoting the Christian welfare of the seamen of all nations, and in 1856 the first Sailors' Institute was established in Shadwell. Through changes which have been brought about in the port of London, through small sailing vessels being superseded by large steamships, that house, the lease of which has nearly expired, is no longer in the district where seamen chiefly congregate. Accordingly, a freehold site at Limehouse, near the end of Burdett Road, was obtained some time ago, and on this a house is being erected at a cost of £12,000, while £12,000 in addition will be needed for the endowment. There are to be fifty beds for the use of sailors coming to London, and the house will also be the working headquarters of the Society. Mr. Passmore Edwards has contributed £8,050 towards the cost; while the Hon. J. H. Angas, President of the Society, has sent, from South Australia, £500 towards the endowment fund.

On Thursday last, the Duke of Fife laid the foundation-stone of the new buildings, and the Lord Mayor laid the memorial-stone; and the visit of these and other eminent personages to the far east of London occasioned considerable popular excitement and interest, large and orderly crowds being attracted. Mr. Thomas Mason presided, and said that sailors needed all that was done for them, and as regarded the duty of Christian people, there could be no question. From the statement made by Rev. E. W. Matthews, the secretary, it appeared that the Khedive of Egypt, the King of Italy, and the Queen of the Netherlands had contributed. Dr. Percival, Bishop of Hereford, who presented an address to the Duke of Fife, said £10,000 would still be needed. The Duke of Fife said that the place would justify its name, and would be a refuge from the perils of the shore. Dr. Mitchell, Moderator of the Church of Scotland, showed what great improvements had taken place, and presented an address to the Lord Mayor. The latter expressed his appreciation of the aims of so great and noble a Society, and expressed the confident hope that he should be able to enlist the aid of the Corporation of London. The Duke of Fife presented an address to Mr. Edwards, and Sir J. C. Dimsdale and Mr. Frank Bullen also spoke. Afterwards, Lady Dimsdale, Mrs. Morgan Richards, and the Council of the Ladies' Guild held a reception in Limehouse Town Hall for friends interested in the work.

Oxford Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AN Electoral Council in connection with the National Protestant League has been formed in Oxford, and held its first meeting on Wednesday week. Mr. P. V. Sells, M.A., has been appointed chairman, and under his energetic leadership good work is expected from the Council.

The warm, bright summer evenings are being used by the churches for an aggressive work in the open air, and not without good results. More attention is being given to the singing, so important a factor in the open air work. The St. Aldate's Mission Band has been strengthened by a contingent of young men who are eager to help with their voices. On Sunday night they sang a quartet from "Songs and Solos," and one of them gave a short testimony. Rev. and Hon. Talbot Rice preached at the top of Castle Street, helped by his own workers from St. Peter-le-Bailey. "Please try and get my husband to think about his soul," was the request of a poor woman to the writer on Monday morning last, showing that the word by the wayside had gone home. She was one of the hearers the evening before.

At the Annual Children's Festival in connection with the Oxford branch of the C.E.T.S., held in the Sheldonian Theatre on Thursday, some strong words were spoken about the increase of cigarette smoking amongst boys. All temperance workers were urged to inveigh against it. Rev. E. T. Colson gave an address to the children, illustrating it by means of four dolls. The wax doll represented those who could not stand the fire, the china doll those who could not stand a fall, the wooden doll represented obstinacy, and the india-rubber doll those who are easily moved.

Amero, the Famine Boy.

IN the land of the Rajputs, the warrior race of India, lived a little boy. He was a bright, happy, affectionate child by nature, and loved his father and mother, brothers and sisters, as other boys do. His father was a shepherd. And Amero, for that is his name, often watched his father's sheep, in the broad fields about them. To be sure, their home was but a thatched hut, with a floor and walls made of mud. Amero had never seen a school, neither had he ever heard of the true God. Just outside the door was the god of stone, which was the family shrine whither Amero's mother had led him, since a child, with their offerings of flowers and grain, teaching him to worship the cold, dumb image.

Amero's mother, though a heathen woman, loved her boy. Dark days of famine came to this home, as they did to all the homes of the land. The sheep died, and the grain of the past year was exhausted. The devoted father denied himself to feed his children. They sacrificed to the idol under the tree; still help came not.

and every possible eatable thing. Finally, one brother sickened and died, then another; an older sister, too faint to rise, slowly sank away. The father soon followed, his strong frame yielding to the power of hunger. These only were left; Amero, his mother, and one little sister.

One day a herald passed through the village telling the suffering ones that the king commanded a bannia (a grain merchant) in a certain centre to deal out to all the starving, parched peas and grain, but the news had come too late to many. Amero looked out of his wild hungry eyes upon his mother, who no longer could rise, but what could he do, and the sister too, so little and weak?

The mother said, "My son, you can still walk, leave us and go and get food, if not for us, that you may yourself eat and live."

He sadly bade them farewell, and started on that long search after food. He was joined by many another starving boy, and by men and women, desperate with the pangs of hunger. They wandered from place to place, eating the bark of trees, seeds of grass, and leaves, but growing weaker every day, until, dropping down by the roadside, he thought he must surely die, as many were doing all about him. In his despair he was which said, "Come with me, and a lady missionary will give you food. Come." Amero raised himself, and followed the kind woman. She brought him with others into a large compound, where soon there was dealt out to them small quantities of bread baked like cakes.

In a day or two the missionary lady appeared and said to Amero: "Do you not want to leave this sad country and go with these other boys to Calcutta, where some missionaries will give you a home, plenty of food and clothes, and send you to school?"

He thought of freedom from want and suffering, and then of the bare little hut, where lay his mother and little sister so far away, and he so weak. The lady continued: "If you remain here you will die. There is no water nor food, and no hope of rain for many a day. Come along." He consented, and left his country, but his heart was still with his suffering mother and sister, whom he was unable to help.

After three days of travel, he reached home. A refreshing bath revived him, and clean new clothes took the place of the filthy rags. He also heard of a God, a loving Father who cared for all; but who was angry with the wicked every day. His heart still ached as he sat and thought of the dear ones starving in the homeland. Soon he became strong and well, and very happy in his new home.

Five months later there came a new lot of starving children and women from his famine-stricken country. Amero walked from group to group asking them from what village had they come, longing for a word from his own home, when suddenly his eye fell upon a dirty bundle of rags in the midst of a group other women and children. There was a wild cry of joy as the little, weak creature from out the bundle stretched her puny arms toward him.

It was his sister, and soon they were locked in each other's arms, while tears of joy were streaming down their faces. Amero longed to know of his mother, yet feared the answer. Soon he ventured the question:

"Where is mother?"

"Mother died soon after you had gone," she said, "and I left her in the hut and came away with a band of other children trying to find you. I was taken with small-pox and lay very ill and weak, but someone carried me to a relief camp, and from there, as soon as strong enough, I went in search of you. But I got so tired and hungry, and as I came to the station hoping someone would give me food, I found a lady putting into a train a number of starving children, and promising them food and a nice home. I did not know where they were going, but I said to her, 'I am starving, take me too,' and just as the train was moving away she snatched me into the carriage. But how did you come here, brother?"

Amero was heard to say to the other boys that night after prayers, "I know this God we have heard about is the true God, for it was He who brought me here and spared my life and let me hear about Him, and then five months afterwards He brought my little sister to me. I intend to serve this God as long as I live." Amero a few weeks later asked to be baptized, saying he wished to be a Christian boy and live for God.

Pray for this boy and his sister, and the many boys and girls like them whom God has taken from heathenism and sent to us to train for Jesus and Heaven. (Rev.) D. H. Lee.

SUNDAY, July 21.

A Strong Weak Man (Judges xvi. 20-30).

I AM not quite sure that Samson would have impressed us with the greatness of his size or the strength of his muscles. He may have been a Hercules or a Sandow in his outward appearance, but, had it been so, his life could hardly have been classed amid the worthies of the Old Testament as a life of faith, and it should be remembered that his name is specially mentioned amongst those "who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouth of lions" (Heb. xi. 32, 33). I think probably he was not specially remarkable in appearance, and that the work he did in this world was due to the marvellous force of his faith in the God of the covenant.

He was evidently of a very happy disposition, jovial, mirthful, merry, and merrymaking. He delighted in riddles, in playing upon words, in setting puzzles. He was so famous for this that at a time of great festivity his very enemies sent for their old blind opponent, that he might make sport for them. Easy-going, happy-making, pleasure-loving, the hero of the southern portions of Judah, the borderland between Palestine and Philistia, passed backwards and forwards between the two countries, having his huge jokes at the expense of Israel's foes, until that last sad day in which he was betrayed into their hand.

In his case, as in so many others, there was great laxity in his behaviour to women; and there is nothing more important in the training of character than that young men should respect maidens, with that chivalrous courtesy which the knights of old held to the ladies of their love, remembering that their mother was a girl once, and desirous that no girl should receive at their hands other treatment than that which they would have wished their mother to have received in her young life, from the hands of any. And on the other side, girls should be particularly careful of their behaviour towards young men. Let it be open and bright and natural, but let due care be always exercised, that there be nothing to draw any man on to undue familiarity. A woman must not seek, but be sought. She must not stoop to man's level, but must lift him to hers. She must not think that she will gain his respect if she uses his phrases, and stoops to imitate him in dress, speech, or behaviour. How many mighty men and noble women with great possibilities within them have been wrecked, and spoilt for the high purposes for which they were created, by yielding to the sins of passion, by obeying the promptings of appetite, by throwing the reins, as Samson did, upon the neck of desire. You must learn, young people, to have your loins girt.

It is not often that our lives are ruined by one mad isolated act. The tree crashes to the ground not in the single storm, but because its heart has been bored through by the perforation of the worm; and lives are wrecked because they have yielded to the insidious attacks of unwholesome thought and desire in secret. But remember there is nothing which you harbour in the heart that will not sooner or later express itself in your life. Samson had three distinct warnings before he told his secret to Delilah. Even then he did not realise that the Lord had left him. It is terrible when the locks of our strength are cut, terrible when the scissors pass over our head, but still worse when we are unconscious of our loss. "He wist not."

But even to the backslider in his prison cell there may come gleams of repentance and hope. Even there he may turn again to God, and the hair of his head will begin to grow again. Return, O backslider! Delilah has sorely maimed you, but God will yet restore you. The disciple who denies Christ with oaths and curses may even yet win three thousand souls by a single sermon.

The prayer of verse 28 is very touching, so eager and importunate, claiming to be remembered, asking for strength, daring to believe that God still cared and loved, and bold to claim his help; a prayer which was wonderfully answered! F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Some remarkable meetings were held in connection with the twentieth annual Convention of Christian Endeavour Societies at Cincinnati. Many eminent clergymen and laymen took part. The general secretary, Mr. John Willis Baer, speaking of the growth of the movement, stated that the net increase in the number of new societies since the London Convention is nearly 2,000, with a total membership of almost 100,000 members. One of the most gratifying facts to report was the steady development in foreign and missionary lands. Dr. F. E. Clark was presented with a memorial recognising his services as leader of the movement.

International S.S. Lesson.

July 28, 1901.

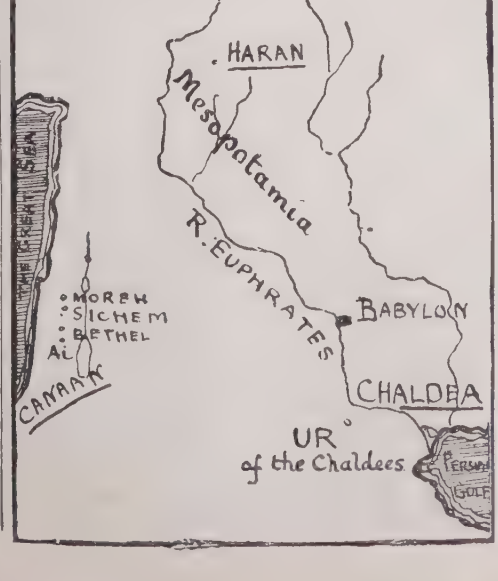
God Calls Abram (Gen. xii. 1-9).
Golden Text, Gen. xii. 2.

Introductory.

THE connective history between last lesson and this is similar to that between Adam and Noah—the gradual decline of the human race, and the predominance of evil. Noah lived to within a few years of Abram's birth; the descendants of two of his sons followed the evil; Shem's children kept up the knowledge of God in the world. But idolatry prevailed, with all its gross wickedness. God, faithful to his promise to Noah, does not again destroy the world, but meets the crisis by appointing one family as the medium of fulfilling his promise to Adam of redemption. Hence we get the call of Abraham, and the beginning of a series of Divine revelations, each clearer and more distinct as time went on, all pointing to and typifying Jesus Christ, the Saviour who was to come. (Read Acts vii. 2-8; Heb. ii. 8-11.)

Patriarchs.

This is a word applied to the heads of the generations from Adam to Moses. The fathers hand down the Covenant blessings to their children (Rom. v. 13, 14) in the chosen family. Abram means "exalted father." God's government from Adam to Moses is called the "Patriarchal dispensation."



Ur

was a large city before Abram's time; it was celebrated for a magnificent temple of the "moon-god." Three storeys of this temple still tower seventy feet above the plain; the ruins are half way between the Persian Gulf and Babylon, and six miles from the river Euphrates. Tablets lately unearthed bear various names we find in the Bible. The earliest inhabitants were the inventors of the cuneiform writing which unfolds to us the history of the past, and corroborates the Bible story. Ur was the capital of Accad, mentioned in Gen. x. 10.

Haran,

situated fifty miles north of the Euphrates, properly spelt "Charran," just below Mount Masius. The neighbourhood became famous in the Roman period as a battlefield. Abram had been told to go to Canaan, but he stopped short at Haran, and had to be told again. An obvious lesson to the Christian.

Shechem, Bethel, Ai.

Shechem, an ancient Hivite city in the valley between Ebal and Gerizim, now a ruined village. Bethel, a village further south, ten miles north of Jerusalem, standing on high ground, and amid barren rocks. (Recall many Bible incidents which occurred at these two places.) Ai, five miles south-east of Bethel. These places were most likely not built in the time of Abraham, who lived in tents.

Abram,

called the "Hebrew"; this means "the man who crossed over the river," or the "descendant of Heber." God asked him to give up three things, and promised him six blessings instead (1-3); compare Matt. xix. 29. The promise includes those made to Adam and to Noah. It was literally fulfilled in the glories of Israel, spiritually fulfilled in Abraham's spiritual children (Gal. ii. 16, 29). He is called the father of the faithful and the friend of God, and often mentioned both in Old and New Testament. All true believers are his children.

Abraham saw God in his glory, as a real existence; the result of his faith was obedience (James ii. 21-24). His faith was profound, for he never possessed any of the land. At each stopping-place he consecrated all to God, building an altar for sacrifice. Separation is the keynote of Abram's life, and should be of his children; separation to a life of faith, hope, holiness; separation from the world and sin (2 Cor. vi, 17, 18; Rom. iv. 20-25).

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission.

—This Mission at Baakleen is one of the branches of Mrs. Meredith's Institutions, and one which the Lord is blessing to souls among the Druses. The sick find help and succour in the Cottage Hospital, which is the only one for many miles around. An additional ward solely for men is much needed. The lady superintendent, Miss Kitching, and her helpers, find enough to do among the women and girls, and the native doctor, who is an earnest Christian, would be glad of help among the men. The work among the children is especially one of growth and interest. One of the children has made great progress in English, and has become a member of the Christian Endeavour Society. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Miss Lloyd, 143, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

Obituary.

MR. F. A. HOMER, J.P., SEDGLEY.

ON the 9th inst., Mr. Frederick Augustus Homer passed away somewhat suddenly with angina pectoris in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He was a well-known personage throughout a large district, where, for over forty years, he "joyfully served" his generation in varied forms of public work.

His was one of the first mission halls (if not the first) erected in this country, as a practical outcome of the great 1859 Revival, and here he laboured indefatigably for the cause of religion and temperance.

As an Evangelical Churchman he was staunch and uncompromising in his objection to Ritualism. As a county magistrate his far-reaching influence was wisely and justly used. The Local Board (and, later, the District Council) and the School Board found in him a valued helper, and recognised his work by appointing him to important offices therein.

His life, which might have been one of leisure, was filled with boundless and ceaseless activity for the spiritual and temporal good of his fellow men. Never weary in well-doing, he has entered into the reward of his labours.

MR. E. H. THOMPSON.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends in the north of Ireland at the news that Mr. E. H. Thompson, one of the Egypt Mission Band, has just died at Cairo of typhoid fever. Deceased, who was the second son of the late Mr. E. H. Thompson, J.P., of Whitcabbey, Co. Antrim, was only twenty-seven years old, and with several other young men went to Egypt in 1898 for the purpose of carrying on mission work in that country. The band included Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Friends, and has been doing a good work in Egypt. Mr. Thompson was a member of the Society of Friends, and his death has made the first breach in the band. He was a very earnest missionary.

CAPTAIN H. J. R. LOWE.

The death of Captain Henry John Revell Lowe, who was killed in a carriage accident on July 10 at Barnard Castle, removes a devoted Christian worker. He had served through the Burmese war of 1852-53, and the Crimean war. On being invalided he threw himself with fervour into religious work, and was for thirty-five years superintendent of missionaries in the London City Mission. He was vice-president of the Missions to Seamen and of the Army Scripture Readers' Association, and was connected with the National Protestant Union, the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and other religious organisations. He took a deep interest in the church work of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, where he had a Bible class. Captain Lowe was also licensed as a lay preacher by the late Bishop of London. Among the London City missionaries he commanded deep respect.

A Female Orphan Home.—In connection with the Female Orphan Home at Hampton, Middlesex, founded in 1855 by Mr. Joseph Stevenson, a Children's Guild of Help has been formed. It is composed of boys and girls who desire, with the consent of their parents, to help in every possible way the orphans who have not the advantages which they themselves enjoy. One result of this juvenile society will be seen, it is hoped, in training young people to take part in practical charity. During last year the Committee spent a considerable sum of money in maintaining and renovating the fabric of the Home. The general work of the institution has progressed continuously, and simultaneously with the growth and development of all the girls. The weakly ones have been fostered and nourished; the robust have been taught and fed, guided and corrected, trained in habits of industry, and in the fear of God, and in the knowledge and testimony of Jesus Christ. There is room for many more children in the Home, and the secretary, Mr. J. D. Cooper, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C., will be pleased to give information to friends, with a view to the extension of the operations of the institution, and the supply of vacancies.

About Books.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY.

STUDENTS will welcome a new edition, completely re-written and re-arranged, of the Concise Etymological Dictionary of the English Language, by Rev. Walter W. Skeat, Litt.D., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Cambridge. (5s. 6d. Henry Frowde.) This is one of the many useful works of philology published by the Clarendon Press; and while it is a monument of erudition and industry on the part of its author, it is also a triumph of typographical execution and general arrangement on the part of the printer.

Since its first publication in 1882, the "Concise" has passed through several editions, each of which has embodied emendations more or less important. At length, owing to the great advance made in etymological studies, the time came to cease partial improvements, and to recast the entire work. Hence, in Professor Skeat's own words, this "is less a new edition than a new book." This statement is patent on the most cursory comparison with the early editions. Instead of continuing to group derivative words under primitive forms, the author has adopted the alphabetical order throughout, which renders the book much more easy of reference, therefore more generally useful.

This Dictionary fills a place of its own. The empiricism and guesswork which once entered so largely into the making of etymological compilations are conspicuously absent. The plan is scientific, and the working out is uniformly consistent. Here we have the historical evolution of forms and meanings; and, given a philological sense, the articles are both readable and instructive. While serving as an introduction to Professor Skeat's larger work, this volume is, in itself, a reliable and compendious handbook on a subject of much educational value and profound human interest.

Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. have added to the Midget series a Life of Edward VII., King of Great Britain and Ireland, and Emperor of India. Beautifully illustrated, and bound in vellum, it is uniform with the "Life of Victoria," which has gone through several editions. (1s.)

Miss Meinertzhagen's very useful pamphlet, Homes and Hospitals, &c., for the Benefit of Gentlewomen, has reached a sixth edition. The various lists have been corrected up to date. Practical philanthropists, doctors, and nurses will find this a handy compendium of information. (1s. Miss Meinertzhagen, Great Glemham House, Saxmundham.)

Little Folks is an old friend, deservedly held in high esteem by little folks. The Midsummer Volume has the usual attractions—pictures on nearly every page, together with six full-page coloured plates and numerous illustrations printed in colour. The letterpress contents are varied, and of an order that meets the juvenile mind. (Boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth, 5s. Cassells.)

The Lordship of Christ, and Other Sermons, by Rev. John H. Goodman (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son), is an attractive volume. The exposition is free, and the application practical. Various fields of thought supply illustrative material, which is introduced in a manner that will help general readers, and prove of real service to preachers in search of lines of study and points of treatment.

Family Prayers. By George Clarke and B.K.D. It is not everyone who can profitably use books of this kind, but many heads of families find them of service. This volume is full of rich and inspiring thought, expressed in simple and devout language, the prayers being devoid of the high-sounding phraseology which often mars such "Helps to Worship." We may add, the book is suggestive rather than exhaustive. (2s. Newnes, Limited.)

A timely little volume is The Apostasy: or "Seducing Spirits and Teachings of Demons." By E. McHardie. (Aberdeen: Lewis Smith and Son; London: Marshall Bros.) The book is made up of six tracts, which trace the development of spiritualism, especially in England and America. The characteristics of the system are described, and its claims outlined. The unscriptural nature and evil results of an apostasy which is shocking in its tendencies, are faithfully delineated.

An important piece of expository work comes from the pen of Rev. Werner H. K. Soames—Eating the Bread of Life: A Study of John vi. 30 sq., and its Relation to the Lord's Supper. (2s. 6d. nett. Elliot Stock.) Scripture terms and ecclesiastical definitions are discussed with great care and thoroughness. We doubt if modern controversial literature includes a more comprehensive study in its department, or a more helpful opening up of the Word regarding truths associated with the sacrifice of Christ.

We welcome a second edition of Playing at Botany, by Phœbe Allen. The text has been revised and enlarged, and Dr. Henry Godfrey has contributed 150 useful illustrations. The object is to familiarize children with the elements of botany. The method is according to the juvenile conception of things; each flower tells its own story. The volume is at once instructive and entertaining, and is sure to prove popular among intelligent young folk. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

Chart of the Offerings: also Joseph, a Type of Christ. (1d. Morgan & Scott.) This is the explanatory title of a pamphlet, containing a very useful extract from Miss Ada R. Habershon's book "The Study of the Types." The pages present some of the most impressive facts of typology; and they furnish a powerful argument for the inspiration of the Old Testament and the divine unity of Holy Scripture. Teachers and lecturers on the subject should secure quantities of this publication for distribution at their meetings.

The second and third volumes of The Century Bible, edited by Professor W. F. Adeney, are worthy to succeed the first. They are—St. Luke, prepared by the general editor, and St. John, by Rev. J. A. McClymont, D.D. It will be remembered that this work gives both the A.V. and the R.V. The notes are brief and pointed. The preface of one volume and the introduction of another are marred by the misspelling of names that are more or less familiar in theological literature. This publication, although characterized by inequality, will assuredly be of value to students and careful Bible readers. (2s. each vol. Edinburgh: T. C. & E. C. Jack.)

"The Baptist Pulpit" grows apace. Vols. 16 and 17 lie before us—Sermons Preached in the Villages, by Rev. W. Carey Sage, M.A., B.D., who dedicates his book to the one hundred and more brethren who have been connected with his various local preachers' classes, and to "the brethren and sisters of the Bratton Baptist Church, scattered throughout our eight villages nestling under the edge of Salisbury Plain." The sermons are twelve in number, thoughtful and good. The Renewal of Youth, and other sermons, affords a sample of the pulpit work of Rev. James Owen, of Mount Pleasant Chapel, Swansea. The discourses are ten in number, substantial in teaching and eloquent in style. (2s. 6d. net each. A. H. Stockwell.)

Among helpful little books we extend a cordial welcome to new editions of three by Rev. Frederick Whitfield. While all have a message for the Christian, What the Spirit Saith (1s.) is likely to be of special value in dealing with those in perplexity about spiritual things. The great under-current of Scripture teaching is summed up in the fact that "Read the Bible as you will, every word spells Christ." A selection from former works, now out of print, is given in From Cana to Bethany (1s.). Six scenes in the life of the Lord are graphically depicted, with emphasis on the manner in which He sought to quicken and at the same time to meet the deepest need of the soul in every case. The object of Shadows of the Great Sacrifice (9d.) is to set forth some aspects of the Atonement as shadowed forth in the Old Testament. Attention is called to three figures, or types, in which the author believes such teaching is not generally perceived—namely, the Altar (Exodus xx. 24-26; xxiv. 1-12), the Bekah or Half-Shekel (Exodus xxx. 11-16; xxxviii. 25-28), and Drawing off the Shoe (Ruth iii. 12, 13; iv. 1-11). (Thynne.)

A deeply interesting little biography is The Author of "The Peep of Day": Being the Life Story of Mrs. Mortimer. By her niece, Mrs. Meyer. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Here we become acquainted with a singularly attractive personality, née Favell Lee Bevan, sister of Robert Cooper Lee Bevan. Her books for the young were characterized by a chaste simplicity, and were influential in a high degree in implanting good and holy thoughts in youthful minds. They have been translated into many languages, and their ministry will not soon be exhausted. Mrs. Meyer's pages embody the personal memoranda of the subject of the sketch, and these include several interesting letters from the pen of H. E. Manning, who at length became a Cardinal in the Church of Rome. Rev. F. B. Meyer writes a preface, in which he tersely says:—"The authoress had a genius for conveying the things of God to young and opening hearts, though in her case, as the pages of her biography prove, the genius consisted largely in her power of taking pains. It was through her conscientious earnestness in teaching the young children of the day and Sunday schools within her reach that she acquired the art of artlessness, the grace of unaffected simplicity." There is a beautiful photogravure portrait, and there are seven other highly-finished illustrations.

The latest issue of the very useful "Photo-miniature" series is TELEPHOTOGRAPHY. It describes a process of great practical importance, and is admirably illustrated (6d. Dawbarn & Ward.)

Mr. A. F. Woolley's chart, THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD, has been reproduced in lithography on a handy scale. It is published with a descriptive guide-book. (1. Woolley, "Stone House," Whitstable, Kent.)

Evangelistic.

Work Among "Theatricals."

THE life of a theatrical chorus-girl or dancer is, apart from the moral questions which have to be considered in viewing it, a career which affords, at any rate to very many in its humbler ranks, only a precarious existence at best. An engagement may last a few weeks and be followed by months of waiting. The work is itself monotonous and exhausting. Putting off the borrowed plumes of stage gorgeousness, the girl returns to her humble and oft-times solitary lodging, engrossed in the problem of making ends meet. The task of reaching such people with the Gospel is necessarily an arduous one, and Mr. William Forbes, who has devoted himself to it for so long, commands our respect and sympathy by the vigour with which he has pursued his mission.

Mr. Forbes is a native of Stirling. He came to London in 1861, and becoming spiritually impressed, about seven years later was converted, and at once commenced to take an active part in Christian work both in the metropolis and the provinces. Giving himself wholly to the work of an evangelist, in 1881 Mr. Forbes took a large stable and coach-house at Holloway, and commenced services therein. He where the good work prospered, and was organized into a Gospel Mission. In Holloway Hall, in North London, and at many centres at home and in America, Mr. Forbes delivered his message with fruitful results. From the early days of the Blue Ribbon movement he had taken a firm stand for the principles of total abstinence, and consistently advocated them. For several years he conducted two daily prayer-meetings—one in the City and one in the West End.

In 1878 in the course of his labours Mr. Forbes' attention was directed to the spiritually neglected condition of the theatrical profession, and he proceeded to arrange meetings particularly for those employed during the pantomime season, and similar gatherings have been continued to the present time. Mr. Forbes' methods are many sided. He gathers the people to social meetings where, after tea, Gospel addresses are given, necessarily brief, as the hearers have to leave in good time in order to fulfil their engagements, but consistently wise and helpful. The evangelist derives encouragement from the fact that some of the women have abandoned the stage and become Christians. One who was a frequent attendant at some of the earlier meetings has been for some years preaching and singing the Gospel. Another case was that of a girl who went home and told her parents that she had found the Lord, and would go no more to the theatre. She was immediately turned out of doors, but work was found for her by Christian friends, and she remains a witness to the truth, preferring to gain a living as caretaker of some city offices to entering again the tinsel realm of the stage.

Mr. Forbes has also gained esteem and confidence of many by the timely help he has afforded them in times of peculiar distress. This ministry has not been confined to Great Britain. On one occasion a party of English girls had a trying experience in Paris. After rehearsing in a theatre for six weeks on half pay, the public performances commenced, but lasted only for a week, the theatre being suddenly closed, and the employés in question being stranded. Mr. Forbes, who was conducting meetings for the English theatrical girls in the city, was enabled to act as general helper and adviser, and in the end he succeeded in getting the entire party safely back to London.

Mr. Forbes has a somewhat heavy financial burden to bear, but he perseveres in his useful work, and is at present occupied with a series of gatherings in the interests of the young women employed at the large and fashionable theatres and other places of amusement of the West End of London. He will be pleased to welcome Christian people to any of these meetings. Application for tickets should be made to him at 71, Tollington Road, N.

Morecambe Bay.

Mr. Charles Cook at the beginning of the year conducted a united mission at Morecambe, which resulted in most of the churches receiving some thirty or forty into fellowship. He has, by request, just returned to preach in a number of the churches, strengthening the young converts, and preaching to the unsaved.

On the Sunday afternoons, immense audiences have gathered on the rocks by the sea, a large lorry serving as a platform. Mr. Cook chose for these seaside services apposite subjects, such as, "There go the ships!"

The lectures in the week evenings, "Men of Character," and "Epitaphs or Sermons in Stones," have been greatly appreciated, and largely attended.

Mr. Cook returns to Hyde Park for Sunday, July 21.

Tent Work.

"Half Way Through the Tent Season."

The Evangelization Society (21, Surrey Street, W.C.) can now report that their tents have accomplished about half their work for the present year. Over two thousand meetings have been taken by the evangelists since the missions began in May, and it may be of interest to our readers to know that these missions have extended from Ross-shire to Hampshire and from Cornwall to Norfolk. In many cases the tents have proved far too small for the crowds which have attended, especially on the Lord's Day. In Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, where a very good tent holding several hundreds was packed, the evangelist, Mr. Charles Noakes, was obliged to take the Corn Exchange for the Sunday evenings, and another evangelist was sent from London to help in the tent.

Similar testimony reaches from Mr. Shields' mission in Great Harwood, Lancashire, where a large schoolroom was requisitioned for the last Sunday's meeting, whilst in country districts in very many places two, three, and four hundred people have come together, many of them walking distances of five, six, or seven miles in order to be present. Surely these facts show the readiness with which a living Gospel is welcomed, and that where an evangelist is specially fitted by the Lord for the great and solemn work, he need have no fear of lacking

SATISFACTORY CONGREGATIONS.

From the neighbourhood of Liverpool we also have very cheering accounts from the new branch of the society there established. At Seacombe 1,000 people have attended Mr. Smart's meetings on Sunday evenings, whilst from Ormskirk and Aintree

MR. W. FORBES.

we have very encouraging reports of Mr. Trowell's work. The following letters of testimony will, perhaps, prove of more interest to our readers than any summary which could be given, however large and wide:—

Regarding Mr. Canning's mission of seven weeks in Barrow-in-Furness, a correspondent writes: "In presenting my statement of accounts, I would like to add a word of testimony to the work done here by Mr. Canning. For any trouble we have taken we have been repaid a hundredfold. It became apparent from the first that the mission would be a success; indeed, the first Sunday evening saw the tent full, and on the second Sunday many had to go away unable to find a seat, whilst others were standing. The week evening meetings were also well maintained throughout the mission. As to results, over ninety have told us that they have taken the decisive step; some, we believe, are very good as well as deeply interesting cases. The evangelist is the right man for work of this character. He has a very forcible way of presenting Gospel truth, with the result that the audience is sorry when the address is over. He does not give an 'entertaining' address, but brings the truth to bear on sin and its results, showing that there must be

'A JUDGMENT TO COME.'

He is specially useful in dealing with the church-going class of people, and pulls down every refuge in which they may have been hiding. Many have been brought to the Lord. Many individual letters have been received which space forbids our publishing.

From Woodford the Society has received the following:—"The mission of Mr. Goudie, just closed, will be long remembered. It has been the means of leading many to the Lord Jesus, and has been a blessing to some of the Lord's people who were apathetic and lukewarm. The Word has indeed been with power, and we have realized that what was done was not the work of man, but of the Holy Spirit, hence the quiet wondrous power of the meetings which, though free from excitement and external emotion, were none the less earnest, real and blessed. Many instances might be given of individuals who have made known to us the great and blessed work that has been done in heart and conscience. More than ever before we see that what is needed is not mere human eloquence or brilliant intellectual discourses, but the real, simple Gospel message preached in the power of the Holy Ghost. We have felt and seen the blessed reality of the apostle's words, 'Able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.'"

London Tent Campaign.

The tent at Tooting was opened on Saturday by Messrs. R. S. Bradbrook and J. Gracie. They are looking forward to times of great blessing.

The Brixton campaign was closed on July 9 by a service conducted by Dr. John Robertson, of Glasgow, where many professed to find the Saviour. The month's mission was used of God to the blessing of many souls, and the local committee are anxious to follow up the work.

Mr. J. S. Harrison preached in the Woolwich tent on Sunday week, and Mr. C. Inglis has been continuing the meetings during the past week. The addresses were very searching in their character, and God's people were greatly cheered by the number of seekers dealt with during the after meetings. The Gospel solos, impressively given by Miss Inglis, were a blessing to many.

The tent at Notting Hill was opened on July 6 by Messrs. R. S. Bradbrook and J. Bennett Anderson. The Evangelists and local workers were encouraged by seeing some seekers pass into the inquiry room, and others confessing Christ among the congregation. The attendance on Sunday night was very good.

The Weaver Brothers commenced preaching and singing at Walthamstow tent on Sunday afternoon last, when they held a consecration meeting. At night a great crowd gathered, and the Word, both in song and speech, was in evident power. A ready response was given to Mr. Bewley Weaver's appeal for decision. Many rose to confess Christ, and when the inquiry room was opened, from persons came for spiritual guidance. A remarkable feature was the large number of men who yielded. There was a quiet, inquiring spirit evident; although there were no signs of outward excitement, there were evidences of a deep convicting spirit.

Last week the Weaver Brothers were at Forest Gate. The meetings increased nightly in attendance and in spiritual power. On the Wednesday a young lady, who had found Christ at the Woolwich tent during the Weaver Brothers' meetings there, gave her testimony. It was most explicit. She said she had always been looking forward to going on the stage, but, she said, "This is the only 'stage' I shall ever stand on—to testify to Jesus." During the week many hearers sought the Lord. It was the most fruitful week since the opening of the Mission. Very good meetings were held last Lord's Day. Mr. J. S. Harrison spoke in the afternoon and evening, and seekers were dealt with in both inquiry rooms.

The second week of the month's campaign at Canning Town has concluded. The district is populated entirely by the working classes, chiefly dockers, gas-workers, and shipbuilders. The public-houses have very many devotees, while gambling and other forms of vice are greatly in evidence. As an instance of the condition of the neighbourhood, it is stated that in one of the leading thoroughfares, leading to the docks, there are no fewer than twenty-five public-houses. During the past week, Rev. John T. Vine has been preaching the Gospel to thousands of eager and attentive listeners, and large numbers each night have been seeking pardon for sin. On the occasion when Mrs. Gregory delivered an address to children, many of the elder ones came out as inquirers. Each evening Mr. Vine has delivered an impressive address, going straight to the hearts of his hearers. He is continuing at Canning Town for another week.

The Christian workers in connection with the tent at Shepherd's Bush have been encouraged and strengthened by what God has been doing in their midst during the past week, when Messrs. G. C. Tullar and I. H. Meredith, the American evangelists, held their first mission in London. On Lord's Day evening, July 7, the tent was crowded, and a large number stood around listening to the clear and plain proclamation of Gospel truth. Mr. Tullar spoke from the words, "In the ways of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death." The friends had been looking forward to a great ingathering of souls at this meeting, but the sinner seemed to be bound tightly to his sins, and only a few in that vast number appeared to yield to Christ. The workers were much encouraged, however, by a number testifying during the week that they had found Christ at the Sunday evening service. The congregations have been more than maintained, hundreds gathering night after night. On the Wednesday, one man stood up and said that he had been a most miserable backslider for many years, but on the Sunday evening he had returned to the fold. This case is typical of many of which news has been received. On Saturday evening an endeavour was made by the energetic and loving band of workers to gather in the young men and women of the district, and a large number accepted the invitation, the congregation being equal to that on any evening during the week. The first half an hour was devoted to a bright song service, the large congregation joining most heartily in the singing. Mr. Tullar addressed the large and attentive company from the words "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." When the evangelists asked those who were seeking Christ to raise their hand, so that prayer might be made on their behalf, there were many responses, and a number rose and went into the inquiry room, where workers were busily engaged in pointing them to Christ. On Sunday, pastor of Dutch Reformed Church, New York City, commenced a week's mission. Long before the time for commencing in the evening the immense tent was crowded, and the first hour was spent in praise and prayer. As the service commenced large numbers still pressed into the tent. The majority were attendants at churches or chapels, while others seemed the most unlikely to be stirred. The powerful address was listened to with eager attention. Dr. Elliott put the way of salvation before his audience as earnestly as if it had been his only opportunity, and his message, based on John iii. 16, found its way into many hearts. Preacher and workers were encouraged, and gave thanks to God for the number who sought the Saviour.

Tents are now erected in the following districts: Tooting (Mitcham Road, near Broadway); Shepherd's Bush Green (close to Shepherd's Bush Hotel); Canning Town, Forty Acre Lane, Barking Road; Forest Gate and Upton Lane; Notting Hill (close to St. Helen's Gardens); Walthamstow (Hoe Street). Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU is conducting Bible studies this week in the Walthamstow tent, two minutes from Hoe Street Station, daily at 3 p.m.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

It is always difficult to sustain evangelistic work in halls during the very hot summer weather. The people will go into tents, but the difficulty in the congested state of this great metropolis is to secure sites whereon to erect them. For some seasons now Mr. Charrington has had a large tent erected in the main thoroughfare of the Mile End Road, which is sanctioned by the London County Council, and here services are held nightly from June to the end of September. Mr. E. P. TELFORD, who for over a quarter of a century has taken a month every year of special services, has just completed another very fruitful mission. While the week-night meetings in the tent were well attended, tho Sundays in the Great Hall were quite up to the average. Mr. Telford, from length of service, is very acceptable at the Great Assembly Hall. He is a most faithful exponent of the Truth, and both believers and the unsaved were recipients of blessing through the preaching of Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Mrs. Telford's sweet singing was missed during this visit, she having, for some time, been very unwell from over-strain of work. Mr. Telford left with the good wishes of all who love him for the Gospel's sake.

Mr. Collard at Thames Ditton.

Mr. W. COLLARD has concluded a mission at Thames Ditton, Surrey. The tent was well filled on Lord's day, July 8, and some who were impressed by the Gospel preaching were subsequently pointed to the Saviour. On the following evening some effort at opposition was made, about twenty rough men, the worse for drink, going from the public-houses to the tent. Mr. Collard spoke to them of his own experiences prior to conversion, and they bought copies of his "Life Story," and took them back to a public-house. On another evening about thirty of them attended, quite sober, and one of them, who was impressed, came back to the tent after leaving, and begged the evangelist to pray for him.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Church of England.

An anonymous contribution of £1,000 has been received at Messrs. Coutts' Bank for the credit of the Additional Curates' Society.

Visitors to Lynmouth and Lynton are enjoying this month the ministrations of Canon Atherton, of Exeter. His robust delivery (whether in prayer or sermon) stands in pleasant relief from the unnatural voice and manner of so many modern clerics, and his manly sensible sermons are warmly appreciated.

Bishop Perowne has decided to vacate the see of Worcester at Michaelmas, when he will remove from Hartlebury Castle to Henwick Grange, a place in the country, which he has arranged to rent. The see of Worcester is worth £5,000 a year, but the retiring Bishop will take a pension of over £1,600 a year for the remainder of his life. Bishop Perowne was promoted to Worcester in 1890 from the deanery of Peterborough.

Rev. S. A. Johnston has an admirable report to give of his first year's work as vicar of St. Andrew's, New Kent Road. The Sunday evening congregations continue to improve, but, with the poverty of the neighbourhood increasing, it is not surprising to learn that the Sunday morning congregations do not grow. Mr. Johnston established a Church Council, which has done much to help forward the whole work of the parish. The general organizations are in a healthy state, and the missionary contributions are considerable.

Rev. Herbert Knott, vicar of Totland Bay, Isle of Wight, writes to say that owing to the settlement of the two south transepts of the Parish Church, and the need of enlargement for the many summer visitors, they are advised by their architect that they had better pull down the transepts and build a side aisle. This means an expenditure of about £800, far more than they can hope to raise from the parishioners, though they are trying to do something towards it. Mr. Knott appeals for the prayerful interest of those wishing to see the work sustained on Evangelical lines.

An outdoor crusade against the drink is being waged at Sileby, near Leicester. Every night meetings are held at the church gates by the vicar, Rev. A. G. Townshend, who at last challenged the local brewer to meet him in the open air to discuss the question, "The drink; is it the friend or foe of the working classes?" The brewer did not appear; but the opposition grows more bitter every day. The vicar has been threatened that "it will be made so hot for him that he will be glad to leave the place." Despite the opposition, scores of pledges are being taken. Valuable help is being rendered by Mr. Ross, the Primitive Methodist minister, and Churchmen and Nonconformists are standing shoulder to shoulder.

Congregational.

Something like forty cases, many involving fresh aggressive work, came before the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society at their July meeting. It was resolved to take immediate steps to secure £1,000 income in addition to the sum raised last year. Among gifts received last week was the sum of £100 from the church at Edgbaston of which Rev. W. S. Houghton is minister.

The leave-taking services of Rev. Dr. Forsyth, at Emanuel Church, Cambridge, were attended by large congregations. Naturally there was a desire expressed on the part of many of Dr. Forsyth's church and congregation that there should be a presentation, but upon it coming to the knowledge of Dr. Forsyth he requested that it should not be, at the same time expressing his sense of their regard for him.

In the last of his lectures to artisans at Lyndhurst Road Church, Dr. Horton pointed out that with higher wages, greater comfort, and increased education, there has come a terrible increase in drinking, especially among women. We spend ten shillings a head more to-day on drink than in 1880; and the drink trade dominates the public life and the Parliament of the country to a disastrous extent. Then, the evil of gambling has grown enormously, even women and children being infected with it, while the old English observance of the Lord's Day is being given up by a large part of the nation; the pleasure-makers have got it for their own.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. J. T. Davies to Portland, Dorset; Mr. Bond Thomas, of New College, to Marlborough Church, London; Rev. David D. Joseph to Mill Street Church, Newport, Mon.; Rev. T. E. Evans to Casllwchwr, Glam.; Rev. Idwal Johnes to Knott Mill Hall, Manchester; Rev. F. J. Morrish to Charmouth; Rev. J. T. Cynon Davies to Malvern.

Baptist.

The second annual thankoffering of the church in Edith Road, Stratford New Town, realized £82. The work is making very encouraging progress, under the ministry of Rev. Hamilton Watts, B.A.

On Monday last, on his ninety-first birthday, Rev. John Spurgeon, father of Charles Haddon Spurgeon and Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, laid the foundation-stone of an extension of the South Norwood Church.

The mission started in January at Walton-on-Thames has been constituted into a church, with Rev. Francis W. Woods, of Leyton, as pastor. Services are being held in a room at No. 5, The Broadway, and are being well attended. Endeavours are being made to secure a site for a chapel.

Rev. E. B. and Mrs. Woods have been welcomed home, after their marriage, at Clarendon Hall Church, Leicester. During the pastor's absence a number of improvements have been made, including a new rostrum and some structural alterations, which add to the effectiveness of the building as a place of worship.

Pastor T. J. Hazzard has been succeeded at the Lighthouse Mission, Bow Common, by Pastor J. Menzies Love, late of Arthur Street Chapel, King's Cross. In the course of a farewell letter to friends and supporters, Mr. Hazzard writes: "Kindly accept the assurance of my heartfelt thanks for all your kind sympathy with me in a work which I trust may under God become a yet greater power for good in Bow Common."

About two years ago a cause was started in Addiscombe (near Croydon) by the present pastor (J. T. Cole) and his wife, and up to the present time they, with a few friends whom they gathered around them, have been working in a fast-growing neighbourhood of the working class. The room now occupied in Edward Road, Addiscombe, is far too small to accommodate those who attend the services and school. A plot of land has been secured in Morland Road, and plans have been accepted to erect an iron building seating 250 persons. The cost of land and building will be £1,000, and it is the earnest desire of the pastor and deacons that the church may be opened free of debt. Those who desire to assist may address Pastor Cole, 25, Stroud Road, Woodside, South Norwood.

Calls (accepted):—Rev. J. W. Rose to Park Church, Great Yarmouth; Rev. Evan Watkins to Soar Church, Henllys; Rev. William Morgan to Whitebrook and Llandogo, near Chepstow; Rev. J. R. Cooper to Castle Donington.

Methodist.

A mission hall and other buildings are to be built on the magnificent site of the old Eastbrook Chapel at Bradford, Yorks.

At the invitation of the Methodist churches of Australia, Rev. H. Price Hughes has promised to spend six months in an extended tour in the Australian colonies.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is giving up his regular ministry at St. James's Hall on Sunday mornings at the end of this month, but will still remain on the staff of the West London Mission.

The Manchester Primitive Methodist College has had to give up a larger number of students this year to meet the extraordinary demand for ministers in the Connexion, than in any previous year during its existence. Most of the students appointed to circuits will commence their ministry on or before July 21.

Primitive Methodists in East Hull have secured a site for a suite of buildings, including a church to seat 900, and schools for 1,000 scholars, with class-rooms and other accessories, at a total estimated cost of £12,000. Memorial-stones of the new schools have been laid, and £1,736 raised towards the estimated cost of £6,000.

A statement will be made at the opening of the pastoral session of the Wesleyan Conference by the missionary secretaries to the effect that immediately at the close of the present war Rev. Marshall Hartley will proceed on a prolonged official visit to South Africa with a view to the reorganization of the society's missions in the Transvaal, Swaziland, and Rhodesia. This will prevent his nomination this year as President of the Conference for 1902.

A promising feature of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission is the growing zeal and capacity of the members for Christian work. The voluntary workers now number over a thousand. Without these it would be impossible to carry on the Mission on so extensive a scale, but with such trained help it is possible to reach, not only the 14,000 that gather for the Sunday services, but great numbers during the week by various meetings in the open-air, lodging-houses, &c. The property of the Mission is now valued at £200,000. The total yearly cost of the work is about £10,000, of which the Mission itself raises £6,500.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Herridge, of Ottawa, is visiting this country, and will occupy the pulpit of Frognal Church on Sundays until July 28 inclusive.

The planting of a new cause at Keighley, Yorks, will be followed, it is hoped, by the founding of others in West Leeds and Huddersfield. According to Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Hull, at least twenty churches could be planted in Yorkshire if men and means were forthcoming.

Presbyterianism is making rapid strides at the east end of Newcastle. Following upon the successful church in Heaton Road, where Rev. Joseph Rorke is pastor, and the more recent church at Byker, which also has a numerous congregation, a mission church has been built in Welbeck Road, just within the city boundary. This new church was opened by Mrs. R. J. Gibson, and is an offshoot from Heaton Road.

Open-air meetings, held every Sunday evening after service outside Prospect Street Hall, are attracting large gatherings. A platform which holds a harmonium and player, as well as a speaker, is used. Large numbers of men who are non-church goers gather round, and from time to time some of them appear in church a Sunday or two afterwards, after listening in the open air.

The work of the Women's Settlement in East London is largely evangelistic. The aim is to begin at the heart of things and work outwards. Bible classes, mothers' meetings, short addresses on Sunday evenings at some of the "dosses" or lodging-houses in the district, are among the means employed. Once a week a mothers' meeting is held at Millwall. The mothers bring their babies, and one of the ladies in residence takes complete charge of those little people, so that their mothers may be left quite free to listen to the reading of Scripture and the short address.

Fallen Asleep.

Downs Baptist Church, Clapton, has suffered a great loss by the death, at the age of sixty-one, of Mr. JOSIAH BAINES, who conducted the large Bible class and acted as secretary of the Foreign Missionary Auxiliary.—Mr. WM. HOWLETT, superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school at Pentney, Norfolk.—Rev. R. W. GALLOP, who last year became rector of Charles Kingsley's parish of Eversley.—Aged seventy-two, WILLIAM LECKIE ROBINSON, one of the founders of the early morning schools at Cow Lane, Coventry.—Mrs. BURTON, wife of Rev. Dr. Henry Burton, of Blundellsands. Mrs. Burton, who was a daughter of the late Mark Guy Pearse, was born at Camborne, Corhwall, where she began her Christian service in a Sunday school.—At Belfast, Rev. JAMES EDWARDS, Methodist minister, aged sixty-five years.—At Skerries, co. Dublin, Mrs. WHITLEY, an earnest Sunday School teacher and Christian worker in the Methodist Church.—At Tunbridge Wells, aged eighty-one, Rev. JOHN OSWALD JACKSON, Congregationalist.

Notes & Comments

Mr. Gurney's Articles. Many of our readers have expressed warm appreciation of the Studies in the Epistle of James, contributed to our columns during recent weeks by Rev. T. A. Gurney, of Swanage. Owing to excessive pressure on our space, arising from the Keswick and Student Conventions, we are compelled to suspend the series for a week or two. At an early date we hope to give some more papers from Mr. Gurney's pen.

Mildmay Conference, 1902. Owing to the ceremonies in connection with the coronation of King Edward VII., the Mildmay Conference will be held next year on May 27, 28, and 29, instead of the last week in June. Many friends will doubtless be glad to have this early intimation.

The Power of the Penny. It has been suggested that an effort should be made to collect a million shillings this year in the diocese of York for religious purposes. The Archdeacon, however, prefers the penny, and has asserted that it would be more to the advantage of the diocese in every way if each family of church-people within it would continuously contribute that coin weekly, as the "church pennies" would amount to £23,000 per annum. Many of our excellent religious and philanthropic societies might benefit largely if even such a limited self-denial became at all general; and yet how easily the trifling sacrifice might be made, if only the power of the penny in charitable work were recognised.

Preaching Without Words. We are apt to pray for the development of the spiritual life of our nation, and for the spreading of Christ's kingdom; and to forget, what the Bishop of London has recently urged, that we cannot have any part in the deepening of that spiritual life unless we ourselves are drawing day by day nearer to God. If we are doing that, and our hidden power is coming from the centre to the circumference, men and women who would turn away from the spoken word will even unconsciously be affected and influenced in the presence of the peace which should control the life of every one who has indeed been with Jesus. There should be restfulness and calm about us as near the still waters. That silence will often be more eloquent than words to those who are weary.

Welsh Baptists and the Free Church Federation. The Welsh Baptist Union has unanimously resolved to decline joining the Free Church Federation, "so long as the Central Council, as such, makes arrangements for united communion gatherings." The English Union has left this stage in the evolution of inter-denominational brotherhood behind it. The Lord's Table is naturally the place and occasion where the unity of the Federation expresses itself most thoroughly, and in the most spiritual mood. It is clear, however, that the Welsh Baptist Churches, so long as they decline to meet their Free Church brethren on terms of spiritual equality, are right in keeping aloof from this movement towards reunion. We trust, however, that ere long they will come to the adoption of Open Communion as their English brethren have done, and so be able to join in full fellowship with their fellow-Christians in other Churches.

The Terms of Communion. There is a growing conviction that to make Baptism a term of Communion is to go beyond Scripture, if not, indeed, to go contrary to its teaching. The time has come to distinguish between that which is essentially Christian and that which is merely denominational; and, assuredly, Communion is an ordinance that should combine rather than divide. As an act of personal testimony, Baptism may be a means of grace; as an ecclesiastical institution, it has all along been largely associated with error and mischief. It is eighty-five years since the celebrated Robert Hall wrote his treatise on "The Terms of Communion, with a Particular View to the Case of the Baptists and Pædobaptists." In our judgment, party convictions cannot be the conditions of salvation, and therefore they should not be made the terms of Communion. The Christian platform should bear the inscription, "All one in Christ Jesus."

Bringing up the Reserves. Most great reforms are preceded by a period of discontent, and we may therefore find ground for congratulation that we have reached the stage at which there is a growing dissatisfaction with the divisions which are so evidently weakening Christian effort in many of our smaller towns and villages. The desire for union is undoubtedly deepening, and a wish to strengthen the forces against evil. Frequently a great economy is nothing more or less than a stoppage of waste. If one place in which several bodies of Christians are each but weakly represented were to set the example of combining the scattered bands, others would follow. Let the motto be that of Milton:—"In essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, in all things charity," and the basis the prayer of the Lord Jesus Himself—"that they may be one, even as we are One" (John xvii. 22).

Early Closing Commission. The report of the House of Lords Commission on the Early Closing movement in shops ought to remove once for all certain fallacies which have hitherto hindered reform. In the first place, the poorer classes who, according to Lord Salisbury, would find early closing a hardship, show that this would not be so, by the simple fact that all those co-operative stores which cater for the poor have already adopted early closing. Even such workers as waiters, cabmen, carmen, &c., have given strong evidence in favour of it. Further, small tradesmen have shown themselves even more anxious for early closing than their richer brethren (partly, no doubt, because the present system entails personal labour during long hours). Over 290 tradesmen's associations expressed themselves to the Commission as favouring the general provisions of the Early Closing Bill, while the presidents of the College of Physicians and of the College of Surgeons emphasised before the Committee the physical evils of long hours, especially in the case of women. In fine, all the stock arguments against the movement have been finally demolished. All that remains is to overcome the opposition of the leading members of the Government.

Our Child Toilers. Since the day when George Cruikshank graphically depicted the terrible condition of the children employed in the mines and factories, there has undoubtedly been much effective remedial legislation. Quite recently the limit of age of the little "half-timer" was raised from eleven to twelve years. Much, however, remains to be done, for England still compares very unfavourably with several Continental countries as regards the protection of children. It is not difficult to perceive why Germany and America are outstripping us, the limit of compulsory school attendance in those countries being in many cases sixteen or seventeen years. The moral atmosphere of the factory is often not a healthy one for children of twelve, and it is to be regretted, for the sake of their future manhood and womanhood, that they cannot be saved from it still longer.

The Sleeping Partner. Numbers of people who would be horrified to see their names over public-house doors have nevertheless accepted the dread responsibility which attaches to the evils flowing from the trade in drink. The shareholders' lists of the great brewing and distilling companies are crowded with the names of such—including even clergymen, ministers, and lay Christians, who appear to keep their eyes closed to their complicity in the publican's business. How great this responsibility it is difficult to estimate. A contemporary, in drawing attention to the growing development of the drink traffic, states that between the years 1896 and 1900, the company known as "Allsopps, Limited," increased its hold upon tied public-houses from the value of £270,000 to £3,500,000. The publicans and gin-shop keepers who, under this objectionable arrangement, hand out the drink to the debased and degraded beings at their bars, are simply acting as the agents of the brewery and distillery shareholder who finds it convenient to remain out of sight.

Drink in Germany. An article in the Kreuz Zeitung does away with the prevalent notion that drunkenness is a negligible quantity in Germany, as is sometimes asserted. It is often affirmed that the "lager" beer imbibed in such large quantities in that country is harmless in its effects. The writer of this article, which is aimed at advocating the disuse of intoxicants in army and navy, completely dispels this fallacy. In 120 German army prisons 46 per cent. of all the murderers committed their crime while under the influence of drink, while 63 per cent. cases of manslaughter, 74 per cent. of serious assault, and 77 per cent. of criminal immorality come under the same head. In the navy, of 1,671 cases of punishable offences during the last six years, three-fourths of the serious cases are due to drunkenness. There is no land or people where intoxicants are freely used, where sin, crime, suffering, and death are not traceable to them.

Youth and Alcoholism. Our neighbours across the Channel have had the felicity of being early in the field in the serious work of training youths of both sexes in the science of eating and drinking. It was only in November last that the Minister of Education issued his famous letter imposing upon masters and mistresses in the schools the work of teaching children the real value or otherwise of popular drinks. This letter has now been followed by a most instructive little volume for use in schools, in which all the commonly-consumed drinks are analysed, and their unfitness as foods demonstrated. The charm of the volume is its directness and simplicity, the profoundest science being so popularized as to become a positive recreation to young people. This is just what we need in England. Even earnest appeals to young people to avoid drink are not nearly so impressive as scientific demonstrations. If to these we add the moral and religious duty, the argument for all young people becomes perfect. It is to this work of prevention that all serious workers feel they must chiefly address themselves. It is much easier to guard a healthy appetite from becoming depraved than it is to cure a depraved one.

Death of Mrs. Kruger. In the annals of the South African war there will be recorded no more pathetic and touching incident than the death of Mrs. Kruger during the prolonged absence of her husband. The event cannot fail to awaken in every humane heart deep feelings of pity and regret. In her earlier days she fulfilled the humble duties of the household with such zeal and fidelity that when raised to a higher position she found it difficult to abandon her former habits. Her devotion to her husband, and to the cause which he espoused, was not exceeded by those of wider knowledge or of noble birth. The sad feelings of this aged, lonely woman, forsaken during the last twelve months of her life, left to the consideration of "the foe," with the hope deferred, that her husband would return—a hope never realized—can better be imagined than described. Those who were in Pretoria say that her labours on behalf of the needy women and children of the fighting burghers were endless. According to her lights she was a brave and noble woman, and had she moved in a less circumscribed sphere might have won a place among the world's great ones.

The Cost of Armed Peace. It would appear that what has been termed "the reckless pursuit of imperial aggrandisement," is likely to put it out of our power for many years to come to carry out those pressing reforms at home which are so necessary to the well-being of the people and the true prosperity of the nation. Sir Robert Giffen, one of the ablest of living economists, has asserted that "we must keep in South Africa a permanent garrison of 50,000, that an additional 15,000 are necessary in Egypt, that our peace establishment must not be less than 360,000 men, with a total armed force of 780,000." The army estimates will, therefore reach about £40,000,000 annually, and those for the navy an equal or a larger amount. If this is to be the expenditure in times of peace, where is the money to come from for the war against poverty and sorrow, for the old age pensions, the better housing of the poor, the redemption of the slum child, and the pauper orphan?

The Native Races Question. We have often called attention to the grave importance of the "native population question" in South Africa, which looms up behind that of the war. It is growing clear that the moral sentiment of this country on the question is very different from that of South Africans generally. A reviewer of Mr. E. T. Cook's able book on "The Rights and Wrongs of the Transvaal War" in the Athenæum puts the whole case into the following sentence:—

> The fact is, that there is one subject upon which almost all whites in South Africa agree, and that is, the treatment of the natives; and the one point on which the Boers are popular with the majority of British South Africans is that they are said to understand how to treat the natives better than the Mother Country does.

When we realize that the Boer method has always been to treat the native races like slaves under the arbitrary power of their master, it is clear that a very grave outlook is before us. This country has not made the vast sacrifices entailed by this war to perpetuate a more or less recognised system of slavery in South Africa.

The "Actors' Church Union." Efforts have been made for many years to reach the employés in our theatres religiously, and some good has been done. Whatever may be our opinion of the dramatic art, the salvation of actors is an end worthy of all endeavour. The latest organization to this end is a movement among actors themselves, which has met for its first annual gathering at the house of the Bishop of Rochester. Its companion society, "The Actors' Church Alliance" in America, has done something in bringing ministers of all denominations into touch with the "profession," and in other ways. But the church, not the stage, must be the predominating influence if any good is to be accomplished. This is where, hitherto, such "unions" have failed. One of the great spiritual hindrances of theatrical life is Sunday travelling, which is compulsory at present on all provincial travelling companies. This difficulty is just such a one as can only be successfully attacked from within, and if the sufferers can combine to change this tyrannous and demoralizing custom, the "Actors' Church Union" will have done an important work.

Suicide and the Stage. What may be termed "tragedies of disappointment" are common, unhappily, to all walks of life, since no profession or position affords immunity from failure, particularly in these days of eager and strenuous competition. At the same time it may reasonably be held that the fantasy and unreality of a stage life tends peculiarly to foster a condition of unhealthy excitement, the outcome of which is mental strain and nervous misery—"when the heart is sick, and all the wheels of Being slow." It does not appear that the two young actresses who recently destroyed themselves, under such pathetic circumstances, were in financial need, while it is quite clear that their moral character was spotless, but the exactions of an unnatural life afford but an ill preparation for days of disenchantment. "We thought we were better out of it, as we had so many disappointments." Commenting upon the tragic event, the Daily Telegraph says:—

> Each of these young women had made a fair and square attempt to earn a living by hard work. Their good name and fame were beyond reproach, and their bold spirit of independence tided them over many a difficulty. It is infinitely pathetic to think that their hard struggle is typical of that endured by many other honest women in the desire to obtain occupation on the boards of a theatre, and it casts a pathetic light upon the overcrowded condition of the ranks of those who seek for fame before the footlights.

What an illustration this affords of the reiterated claim that the theatrical profession is an important factor in our social morality! There are well-known men and women occupying high positions on the stage to-day whose lives are discreditable to themselves and to the public which patronizes them, while "honest" women are pushed out into poverty. Such melancholy incidents should supply food for solemn reflection to those who follow the profession of stage player, especially to any who yearn for the consolations of "that secret place, where tumult enters not."

A Daily Peril. In a striking paper in a leading monthly review, Mr. Weiss does very good service in calling attention to the need of strict care on the part of parents and others in regard to the reading of young people. Only too much of the current periodical literature of the day is permeated with a spirit of intense worldliness, and a negation of religion, while the shelves of the circulating libraries are crowded with works of fiction as unhealthy as they are silly. In many cases, too, the worst examples of the impure productions of the French press are to be found there, and, as they are handed out indiscriminately, it behoves parents to see that in giving to the members of their families the assumed advantage of "the run of a library," they have not put within their reach sources which may stain the young imagination and poison the life.

Labour and Result. It is a great misfortune for any servant of God to labour on year after year without seeing definite results of his ministry. If we are truly workers together with God we have a right to expect blessing as the result of our labour; such blessing as shall abundantly demonstrate to men that we are undoubtedly the servants of the Most High. A man whose ministry produces no definite result in the sanctification of the lives committed to his charge has good reason to ask himself whether he is really in his right place. Let every earnest worker seek to be continually filled with the Holy Spirit, and continually led of the same Spirit; then, whatever is done must succeed, according to the Divine estimate of success, whether it be with or without demonstration to our eyes.

A Remedy for Insomnia. Many recipes of a more or less complicated and impossible kind have been given with a view of inducing sleep among those who are liable to insomnia. Most of them fail to recognise the root of the trouble, which is the tendency of the mind to brood over the irritations and annoyances of the day, which tend to grow into gigantic proportions when reviewed in the loneliness and darkness of the night. This being so, is it not clear that the true remedy, in many case, is to form the religious habit of resolutely "counting one's blessings" in going to sleep? A good man recently advised another to try the effect of quietly repeating, when he feared a bad night, the first few verses of Psalm ciii. over and over again, or that golden utterance of Isaiah, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed upon Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." The effect was immediate. Here is a suggestion that is worthy of the devout attention of many an over-strained and anxious believer.

"Boldness to Enter."

By Rev. JAMES MURSELL, Clapton.

HAVE you got this? You reply, It all depends upon the place to be entered. I enter my own home boldly enough; loved faces smile from the window as I open the gate and mount the steps; I have boldness to enter the familiar door of my home. But "boldness to enter the holy place"—have you got that?

From the far-off past a voice rings out, "Who shall ascend into the mount of the Lord, and who shall stand in his holy hill?" Another voice replies, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." I find no encouragement in that answer. If this is the only man who may have boldness to enter the holy place, I must stay outside in the cold with my fears and my sins. I only know One who answers to that description. He may knock boldly at the beautiful gate of the holy place, and when the watchman looks over the wall he breaks into a cry, "Lift up your heads, ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors." The King's Son, who is Himself a King, may well have boldness to enter the holy place. It is his home; but I am a sinner full of guilt and fears. All I can say is, "Depart from from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord!" All I can do is to beat upon my breast and cry, "God be merciful to me, a sinner."

But it is to those who feel how sinful they are, and who yet cannot keep away from the door of God, the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, speaks of "boldness to enter the holy place."

What is the secret of this blessed fearlessness? It is, to begin with, having your heart sprinkled from an evil conscience. The word "conscience" is a great word with the writer of this Epistle to the Hebrews, which is not to be wondered at, since he deals largely with the great subject of the soul's approach to God; and the instant we draw near to God, or think of doing so, conscience comes into action. Now the first action of an awakened conscience is to make a man aware of his sin. It speaks to us of that which separates the soul from God. Many a man is afraid of coming to God at all, not to speak of coming boldly, because

HIS CONSCIENCE TROUBLES HIM.

It reminds him, alas, of what God and he alone know; it brings up before his inner eye the secret sin of which everyone else is ignorant, but which God has set in the light of his countenance. Hence he has no confidence before Him; he feels no right of access to the holy place. But God has gloriously met such need, "for if the blood of bulls and of goats sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purify your conscience to serve the living God?"

Here, then, the most fearful and most conscience-stricken sinner may take courage. Conscience may be cleansed; the bitter sense of sin may be transformed into the glad assurance of pardon and acceptance before God. Acknowledge with true heart the failure of your best, as well as the scandal of your worst; then pray that in his mercy God will sprinkle your evil conscience with the blood that speaketh better things than that of Abel, and it will be according to your faith.

But this is only half the secret of this glad courage. The other half is found in the sprinkled blood of Christ. The conscience of the man who knocks at the door of God's holy place must be sprinkled with the blood of the Saviour, whose pierced hand opens wide the door and draws him in. The sublime phrase, "the blood of Jesus," is too profound, too lofty, too divine for anything but reverent use; yet no other phrase of equal length tells us so much, both of the bigness of God's heart and of the blackness of man's sin as this—"The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son." That phrase tells us of a sacrifice for sin made once and for all, and of a love for the sinner which is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. Dying love and deathless love are both made ours upon the cross of Christ.

The blood of sprinkling gives us boldness to enter the holy place because it meets us with the assurance that Christ has made a sacrifice for sin which covers ours, so that they are brought no more against us. Hebrews ix. and x., are crowded with contrasts between the old dispensation, with its temporary sacrifices, and the new, in which the Son of God made atonement for the sins of the whole world. Here are a few:—"The same sacrifices which they offer year by year;" "The offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Again, "Every high priest standeth day by day ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifice;" "By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are being sanctified." Again, "In these sacrifices there is a remembrance made of sins year after year;" "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Now, what do these things mean? They mean that the sacrifice of Christ completed for ever and for all the work by which the most sinful of men

MAY BE JUST WITH GOD.

The righteousness of God is satisfied by the willing offering of his Son upon the cross. That is the eternal and the universal significance of the death of Christ. Its personal significance for us is that, though we may remember our sins with bitter shame, God, for Christ's sake, has utterly forgotten them. Surely, then, we may do the same, or remember them only as sins forgiven. The blood of Christ reminds us that the Son of God has freely suffered for our sins, and borne our guilt and penalty; so that we have boldness to enter into the holy place, gladly and gratefully conscious that, in forgiving us our sins, He has forgotten them for ever.

Then, too, the blood of Jesus shed upon the cross for sinful men reveals the heart of God. Do you want to know what is the feeling in the heart of God towards you? Have you ever wondered what God feels as He watches your life from day to day? At the cross we see not only the offering made for sin, but the love which God feels for the sinner. That is how He loves us, and loves us not at our best but at our worst. Like the Psalmist, we may feel ourselves brutes before Him, and not men, yet in high Heaven the Holy God has in his heart for us a love as mighty and as sacrificial as the cross displays. Surely we may have boldness to enter the holy place of a God who loves us with such everlasting love. Surely to know this should from our hearts as we draw near to Him. Through Christ we come not to a God whom we must persuade with tears and arguments, but to a God whose grief is that we will not come to Him that we may have life, and whose loving face, when we draw near, lights up with welcome and with joy.

So the sprinkled blood of God's dear Son, falling upon the guilty conscience, cleanses it from its pollution and takes its fears away. We are meant to be glad as children, not timid as beaten slaves, in the presence of God. The man who sees and feels the holiness of God so as also to feel and see the vileness of his sin; who sees, too, the sacrifice of Christ for him and the great love that blazes at its heart, will be bold—yet not over-bold—as he enters with thanksgiving the courts from which he shrank with fear before. His, the boldness of the man who sits down in the secret place of the Most High, and finds in sitting there life's highest good and fullest bliss. His, the blessed assurance of one who has found cleansing from a polluted conscience and confidence from a condemning heart in the shadow of the cross. His, that has given its fears to the stormy winds at the voice of Him who says to troubled consciences, as He did to raging waves, "Peace, be still."

The Gospel which invites us to such boldness is the truth of God. Too many of us stop with the truth about ourselves, and never venture as far as the truth as found in Jesus. We cry, "Iniquities prevail against me," and suppose, as has been beautifully said, that there is a full stop there; there is only a comma; the words go on—"but as for my transgressions Thou shalt purge them away." Do not stop at the "me," get on to the "Thou." Do not stay with yourself; hasten to God. Do not gaze at your iniquities; turn to the mercy that purges them away. If I linger over myself and my sins and my falls, I am afraid, I sink in deep waters; but when I turn to God and fall on his kind arms and his forgiving love, then I grow bold. His gentleness makes me great. The Blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanses me from all sin. I have boldness to enter the holy place by a new and living way which He has consecrated.

Other Lands.

A Missionary Re-Union.

A WEEK of deeply spiritual refreshing was experienced by the missionaries and friends who attended the eighteenth annual meetings of the International Missionary Union at Clifton Springs, New York. While most of our membership is drawn from the various missionary societies of the United States and Canada, we were happy in having with us representatives from Germany, Scotland, and England. Among the latter were Dr. and Mrs. J. Howard Taylor, who added much to the interest of our meeting.

Certain features have become a permanent part of our annual meeting, and draw large crowds from outside the membership. These are—the Recognition Meeting, held the first evening (Wednesday), when missionaries, grouped on the platform according to their countries, introduce themselves to the congregation; the Women's Meeting of Friday afternoon, when we get a panoramic view of woman's work, in five or ten minute speeches from women of all boards and all fields; the Children's Meeting of Saturday afternoon, when the best seats are reserved for children. On the platform are curios from mission lands; there is singing in various languages, and addresses to the children. This is followed by the President's reception, giving an hour of social intercourse—on the lawn if the weather is fine, otherwise in the gymnasium. On Saturday evening is the composite stereopticon lecture, when three or four or more which illustrate their work. There is the Sabbath morning sermon and the Sabbath afternoon meeting, where the Student Volunteer Movement, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and other organizations of young people are heard from. On Tuesday afternoon there is the home session, when practical methods of awakening interest in the home churches are discussed.

To many people the most interesting of all sessions is the farewell to outgoing missionaries on the last evening of the week. This year there were fifty-nine on the platform, who expect to return to their work before another meeting. These in turn each spoke a few words, or one missionary spoke for a little group of his fellows, and then all were commended to God in prayer. The farewell address to the outgoing missionaries has often been given by their beloved friend, Dr. Henry Foster, the founder of the Sanitarium, by whose hospitality the International Missionary Union found a permanent home in Clifton Springs. We miss his genial welcome, and the wonderful combination of commonsense and spirituality which was one of his charms, for last winter God took him to a higher service. As one who knew him well said of him: "He always walked with God, and one morning he walked away with Him."

There are always meetings where people can hear those fresh from the field give the latest news from almost every part of China, India, Africa, Japan, Roman Catholic countries, the islands of the sea, and other remote portions of the earth. The veterans are here, too, to tell us of the early struggles in the beginnings of work. One of our officers, whose strong personality is greatly missed, has gone home this year, with his mind still vigorous at the age of ninety—Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, the founder of Robert College in Constantinople.

In addition to the popular meetings, the morning hour, from nine to ten, is given to prayer, and is to the missionaries the most precious hour of each day. "My Gospel"—the personal element in our religion—was

A FRUITFUL THEME.

Many testified to certain Scripture passages which in great emergencies had come to them to comfort, to cheer, to instruct, or to reprove, and had ever after been a part of "My Gospel."

Particularly striking was the testimony of missionaries from China as to the power of the Word of God during the terrible scenes through which they had passed, and the comfort it gave to the martyrs.

One of the pleasant features of the I.M.U. is its informal character. It has been called a "missionaries' club," and the free interchange of thought on mission problems, with the broad view one gets of other denominations than his own, is most helpful and suggestive. An interesting discussion was held on "The Strategic Points of Missions." Dr. Whiting, of Peking, also emphasized the idea that the strategic point is one of time rather than of place, and that the point of time in each land is now.

We had with us from China those who had been in the siege of Peking, or had marvellously escaped from the interior of China; some who had fled across the desert of Gobi 1,200 miles to Siberia; and others whose dearest ones had suffered martyrdom. All alike testified to the wonderful grace of God in these trials which enabled them to rejoice in the midst of every experience. All look forward alike with confident hope to the evangelization of China. God's providences in missions was the thought most prominent throughout the week, not from China's missionaries only, but from every other field.

The Indian Famine.

THE outlook in India is becoming particularly grave with regard to Gujarat. Lord Curzon, in a recent official telegram said: "Monsoon is irregular and weak. Rainfalls much below average everywhere, except West Coast Districts and in part of Deccan, Burma, and Eastern Bengal, but it is sufficient for sowings generally, except in case of Punjab and part Gujarat. Crops are withering in parts of Central Provinces and Bombay, and heavy rain is urgently needed for rice crops. Gujarat, in parts, has received very little rain, and the usual sowings are greatly retarded.

Rev. Dennis Osborne, writing from Poona on June 26, points out that "the number of persons on Government relief is rapidly going up. The official reports told of an increase, in but a few days, of nearly 10,000 persons. The rains, which began promisingly in certain parts (though by no means generally), have become uncertain, and in some places have stopped. I am in receipt of urgent applications for help. For example, Rev. W. Kiefel, Gossners Mission, Govindpur, Chota Nagpur, writes:—'The distress has three centres, with three groups of villages. In one of these groups it is specially bad, and only on account of my relief work acute famine has not broken out. Up to this (June 7) I had money for relief works up to 800 persons, whom I have employed, but my funds are exhausted. Can I

SEND PEOPLE AWAY TO STARVATION?'"

Mrs. H. Tytler writes from Simla:—"Many thanks for the help sent for 'Our Saviour's Orphan Home.' I have fourteen of the children with me here, and they are getting on extremely well, I am thankful to say, especially the girls." Mrs. Tytler hopes that ladies at home will come forward to help in the work of educating and training the famine orphans.

The problem of providing for famine orphans continues to demand much attention from the missionaries who have them in charge. Rev. G. W. Park, of Nadiad, writes concerning the large orphanage and industrial school in that town:—

"We had to exercise the greatest care in feeding the children. They came to us in baskets, too weak to walk, and anything like enough food to satisfy their hunger was as fatal as a dose of poison. Literal 'bags of bones' were brought to us, boys of ten years of age whose waist could be spanned by my hands. I want to thank the London Christian and the other kind friends in England and America for their gifts of food, such as milk and biscuits. Without this, many now happy, strong boys and girls would have died. Getting the children was easy. What to do with them after they were obtained was a very much more difficult matter. While the majority of the people in this part of India are agriculturists, yet they live in great part a hand-to-mouth existence, and this, coupled with the fact that land here is worth some £50 per acre, made it out of the question to put our boys on the land. To give them simply an education meant that they, when grown up, would be loafers. To put them in shops to learn a trade as we could do at home was impossible, for the reason that, with the exception of the big cities, India has few shops. The only thing to be done was for the Mission to start shops of its own in which the boys could be taught. Suitable buildings have been erected, and tools purchased. In two or three months I hope to have wood-working, tin-smithing, blacksmithing, and one or two other trades in full swing. The boys are eager to learn. Many come from castes heretofore hardly touched by Christianity."

Dire scarcity has for some time prevailed in the Sylhet district. "A Brahmo," writing to the Bombay Guardian, says:—

"People are selling everything they have for a nominal price. I exhort the workers of Christ to advance to the scene of misery and do what they can to save their poor brethren. . . . I can testify that Christian missionaries are the greatest benefactors of the miserably clad, ill-fed, so-called lower-caste people. I have no objection to their proselytizing. All other religions have failed to save the lower strata of the Hindu society from social thraldom, and personally I look to Christian faith as the panacea which alone can work miracles among these down-trodden people, long accustomed to look upon their present condition as the dispensation of God."

Sunday Reform in France.

THE printed report of the ninth International Sunday Rest Congress, held in Paris last October, having just been issued, attention may be drawn to some of the reforms which have taken place in France itself. Formerly all subordinate railway servants worked seven days in the week, Sundays and week days alike. Since the first Paris Congress they have been permitted one rest day per month, or twelve in the year, an earnest, let us hope, of more to follow. Prior to 1889 all the French post offices were open all day on Sunday throughout the whole year. After the Congress of that year, leave having been granted for half a day's rest to such post offices as could secure the permission of their respective Municipal Councils, eighty towns closed their post offices on Sundays from noon. Little by little the movement gained impetus, till the Congress of 1900 was officially informed that 454 post offices remained shut on Sunday afternoons. Last November the Post Office authorities at Paris honoured themselves by ordering every post office in the French Republic to close at noon on Sunday. When the question of Sunday trading came up for discussion at the Congress, M. Honoré, director of the large warehouses at the Louvre, announced that for some years he had been able to liberate from Sunday work about 3,000 of his employés without any detriment to the business, the extra receipts on Saturdays and Mondays compensating for the loss of the Sunday trade.

It is not a little remarkable that while our neighbours across the sea are seeing the wisdom of securing, wherever they can, their Sunday rest, so many foolish Englishmen should be willing to sacrifice it. It is also to be noted, that when in 1889 the French authorities were asked to permit in the Exhibition buildings the holding of a Congress for promoting "Sunday rest," the Government refused to allow it unless the official title should be altered to "weekly rest." Haunted by the dread nightmare of clericalism, they feared the word Sunday. But in 1900, persuaded of the beneficence of the promoters, they authorized the use of the official title, "Congrès du Repos du Dimanche," and none other.

Open-Air Work in Belgium.

"WILL you come and help us at our open-air meeting?" said M. le Pasteur Yung.* "My assistant, M. Fritz, will be there, and I expect a good attendance." I at once said, "Willingly"; but as we were making our way to the place I was wondering if Charleroi would resemble many a hard day at Galway, Sligo, Cork, or Athlone. On rounding the corner, however, we came upon a fine congregation of people waiting for us, and we had a delightful time! I never thought to witness such a scene in Roman Catholic Belgium! How the crowd did listen! I could have spoken for hours, and felt I could gladly spend years among such lovable people.

Equally interesting was the service in the church on Sunday morning. I counted about 100 men and 150 women. This was a fair proportion of the 1,000 Protestants who live in the town and district, when, after deducting the aged, the sick, and infants, it is borne in mind that business goes on upon the Lord's Day as on week-days, and that, therefore, young people cannot attend religious meetings. This is one of the many difficulties in Belgium. Business hours in shops are, with exceptions, from 7 a.m. to 9 and 10 p.m. One young girl in a fishing-tackle shop at Liège told me her hours were from 5 a.m. to midnight, Sundays included. She got no salary.

The same day I had a children's service in the church. The boys were nearly as numerous as the girls. Nothing could be better than the attention and intelligence of all the children, and their hearty singing was most enjoyable.

On leaving the church, I was in time to help Commissioner Booth-Clibborn in his recent spiritual campaign at Charleroi and the neighbourhood. Assisted by an efficient corps of Belgian S.A. soldiers, we had about ten street meetings, and five or six indoor services in the two days. The Holy Spirit of God assuredly breathed upon the preaching. All the meetings were good, and men and women professed conversion. But the street gatherings attracted me most; the magnitude of the crowds, the their politeness, the complete absence of hostility, and the admirable preaching—all filled my heart with praise and singing. Part of the time our pulpit was the wagonette of a former Roman Catholic, who is now a bold street preacher. The conversion of this gentleman and his entire family and household through the Salvation Army four years ago is a very interesting story.

Two similarly happy days were next spent among the coal miners and factory workers of Quarignon and Croix, and I then hastened back to Charleroi to hear Pasteur Frank Thomas, of Geneva, disputing with the Socialists, the Materialists, the Romanists, and the Anarchists. It was splendid. He preached the Gospel boldly and lovingly, and I felt that God has in him a mighty champion for the truth. He is a warm friend of the Eglise Missionnaire Belge.

Space forbids a description of the appalling moral condition of Charleroi; but one fact is an index to that condition. It is stated that there is a public-house to every fifteen inhabitants.

Tunis.—To reach with the Gospel all classes and races living in Tunis, a band of missionaries have, in late years, tried, amongst other means, a Bible depôt. In this are displayed copies of God's Word, in all the languages of the passers-by; and in constant attendance within is a young convert from Judaism, who is willing and able not merely to enter into conversation with all who go to the depôt, but also to explain both the Old and New Testament. The various missionaries attend the depôt by turns as often as their time allows, and it is found that they thus get a point of contact with many individual souls who could not otherwise be reached. Particulars of this effort will be gladly supplied by Mr. E. H. Glenny, honorary secretary of the North Africa Mission, Linton Road, Barking, London, or by Miss Grissell, The Bible Depôt, Tunis, North Africa.

The Volunteers of America.

THE work of the "Volunteers of America," which was commenced in 1896 by Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth, quickly gained the confidence and esteem of Christian people. The outcome has been seen in a rapid advance in many departments of religious and philanthropic service, in various cities of the States.

Mr. Ballington Booth has issued a "Review of the work" of the past five years. From the particulars which he gives we find that the Volunteers have nearly one hundred "posts," or evangelistic centres, which raised for their own support during the past year over £16,000, and recorded an aggregate attendance of considerably

OVER A MILLION PERSONS.

Some useful branches of social work have likewise been started. In the homes for destitute men, many helpless creatures—those who usually sleep in doorways or grope into any corner where the police are not likely to find them—are sheltered, while the hotels for working men are frequented by a poor but respectable class who do not wish to mingle with the degraded, and who can afford to pay a small sum for a night's lodging. Rooms are also let by the week to deserving men, and in restaurants on the buildings cheap meals are provided at a nominal cost.

In the "Home of Mercy" branch, young women in distress are warmly welcomed, and everything possible is done to help them towards a better life. A large number have been placed in suitable situations.

The tenement work among the deserving poor is the latest development, and the need for it was realized during the distribution of

at Christmas time. "Bishop Potter's disclosures of the awful vice existing in New York city do not begin to compare with the fearful conditions of want and destitution which have been unearthed in the great cities."

Mrs. Ballington Booth's labours are devoted more particularly to the Prison League. She reports that branches are now formed in thirteen State prisons, with a membership of 7,500 prisoners. A correspondence for the moral elevation and benefit of their families is carried on with some 19,000 men. There are two large Homes known as Hope Halls, in which 90 discharged prisoners are accommodated. Thus far, 70 per cent. of these have given satisfaction in the places of occupation and trust to which they have been sent. At the Chicago Hall there is always an average of 40 "paroled" prisoners—men who before the expiration of their terms have been given by the prison authorities into the charge of the Volunteers. Another useful department is found in the Home for poor children. It is a consistent aim in all the varied operations to subordinate everything to definitely spiritual aims.

As to the financial position, the sum borrowed to meet the initial expenses has been repaid. The Volunteer workers prove valuable allies to the churches at large, and the voluminous testimony of ministers pronounces the Volunteer constitution "a wise, safe, and strong document."

Polish Protestants.—A few friends in this country are interesting themselves in a small community of Polish Protestants scattered over Eastern Austria, Silesia, and Moravia. They number about 3,000 souls, who belong almost exclusively to the labouring classes. Scattered over an area of about twenty square miles, they are almost lost among the 150,000 Roman Catholics inhabiting the same area. Those who know anything about the power of Rome in a country like Austria will appreciate the difficult position of our brethren, the Polish Protestants; and heroic examples are quoted to show the self-sacrifice and devotion of the struggle by which alone a separate existence is maintained. A special effort is at present being made to provide a church to supplement the present altogether inadequate accommodation these people possess for meeting together; and Rev. J. Barraclough (St. Thomas', Lambeth, S.E.), who has investigated the case, is acting as treasurer.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THE present year is the Jubilee of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, and it is the desire of the committee that it should be a time of rejoicing for what the Society has been permitted by God to accomplish, and a time from which shall date a new start in the work for which it exists.

In a circular letter just issued, signed by the president, the Countess Roberts, the following statement appears:—

"Fifty years ago there were no Zenanas open to Englishwomen. To-day the missionaries of this Society alone visit 3,754 Zenanas, and teach the women who spend their lives in them of the Saviour who died to free them from a bondage even worse than that of Hindu custom. Fifty years ago there was practically no education for the girls of India. To-day this Society supports sixty-seven schools for girls, and has three institutions in which native Christian women are trained to be teachers. Fifty years ago there was no intelligent medical assistance possible to the Indian woman. To-day this Society maintains three hospitals and several dispensaries, in which about 24,000 patients receive medical aid and Gospel teaching, the dispensary visits averaging upwards of 60,000 annually. Fifty years ago a woman teaching among the villages was unknown. To-day this Society sends missionaries and native Bible-women who strive to teach the women in about 1,000 villages.

"May we not rejoice that God has permitted us already to make such progress? This year is also to be

THE STARTING-POINT OF FRESH EFFORT.

For this purpose it is desired to raise a Jubilee fund of £20,000, needed:—1. To pay off a deficit due to the famine, the plague, and the rise in the value of the rupee. 2. To increase the staff of Bible-women, who read and explain the Scriptures in the villages. 3. To erect a new hospital. 4. To establish new dispensaries. Special donations from those to whom God has given the means will be most thankfully welcomed, and some have already been received or promised in sums ranging from £1 to £250. But the majority of the supporters are already doing so much, that for this special effort the Society depends largely on small sums. The committee therefore appeal for 250,000 shillings. To raise this large number they earnestly ask their friends to assist by collecting as well as giving.

"The present time is most opportune for the extension of the work in India. The people have been solemnized by the recurrence of famine and plague, and have seen how vain has been their hope of deliverance by false gods. Our missionaries are heartily welcomed as a rule. India being under British sway, ladies may live and work there happily and in safety. During the last twelve years our work has been more than doubled, and the medical missions have increased tenfold. Yet the openings are so numerous that our present staff is altogether inadequate, and twice the number of missionaries could be usefully employed at once."

Attractive cards and boxes have been prepared, and will be supplied on application to the secretaries at the office, 2, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, London, W.C.

State Protected Cruelty.—The return required annually by Parliament under the provisions of the Vivisection Act has once more been furnished. It goes without saying that its array of figures demonstrates again the unpleasant fact that there is a development in the direction of actual torture. The vivisectors are rapidly discontinuing the use of anæsthetics in their operations. Last year there were no fewer than 8,594 cases in which wretched animals, in the full possession of their faculties, were experimented upon, and only 1,885 in which anæsthetics were employed. Many of the animals, too, were permitted to linger in agony for days after the operations, or, as the report delicately puts it, "until the main result of the experiment had been attained." It appears, too, that the practice of vivisection is now becoming the rule rather than the exception in our English medical schools.

SUNDAY, July 28. John xi.

IT was becoming that space and leisure should be given to this description of our Lord's greatest miracle, in which transcendent demonstration was given to the fact that the Light was also the Life of men. But perhaps the nurture of Martha's faith is at least as interesting a recital as the story of the call of Lazarus from his death-sleep.

It was our Lord's almost invariable practice to associate Himself with the faith of some human soul before He wrought his great marvels. In most cases this faith was present in the heart of the subject of the miracle, but in others He sought it in father or friend. Here He developed it in the heart of Martha. Outside the village, He gave her a promise on which her faith might feed, "Thy brother shall rise again." He met the invariable practice of unbelief to defer to some distant future, or to the remote past, the manifestations of Divine power, by reminding her that, as He stood before her, He was the Resurrection and the Life, and eliciting from her the confession that He was most certainly the Son of God, the expected Messiah. And finally at the grave He remonstrated with her for opposing the rolling away of the stone, and reminded her of what He had said, that if she would believe, she should see the glory of God. Surely her glance of answering faith assured Him that she could trust Him for this also, and the all-powerful word was instantly spoken. We are reminded of those wonderful words of the Apostle, 1 John v. 14-16.

The effect of this miracle was profound and far-reaching. The waves of this mighty moving of the Angel of Life in the pools of death were felt not only in the lowly home of Bethany, but amid the councils of the high priest; and Caiaphas, in memorable words, which have been fulfilled in a sense he little dreamt, was found among the prophets.

MONDAY, July 29. John xii.

In this chapter we are accosted by strange contrasts. Here, for instance, in the first paragraph, is the ardent love of Mary, who could not forget that she owed her brother to the interposition of her dearest friend; and against it stands Judas, dark, malignant, vindictive, meditating the deed of unqualified treachery.

In the next is the enthusiastic loyalty of the Galileans, and the common people, escorting the Saviour, in lowly triumph, into the city of his fathers; while, on the other hand, the Pharisees scowl, and meditate vengeance, not only against Jesus, but against Lazarus also.

Once more, the Evangelist records the eager desire of the Greeks who, weary of their own religion, seek to see Jesus, as though art, and poetry, and architecture, and learning, can never satisfy the cravings of the soul for God—but they are met by a startling unveiling of the cost of pain and death, with which the Master would have to finish and crown his work.

We may gravely question whether we can call ourselves disciples so long as we have not followed the Lord along this track of rejection, suffering, and death. The true cross must be found in every life—that we are dying, either to the favour and admiration of man, or to the incitements and allurements of the flesh. In a measure, each of us must fall into the ground to die, if we would have the deepest fellowship with our Lord, and if we would no longer abide alone, but bear much fruit.

This chapter closes another division of this book. And again we have the clear issues stated—faith or rejection, loyalty or refusal to have this Man to reign (Cf. vi., 71).

TUESDAY, July 30. John xiii.

What an exordium is presented in these opening verses to what may be called the chapter of the Laver, and to the remainder of this book, which is surely the Holy of Holies of the Bible. Ah, marvellous verses (1-3), which show that the hour and minute hand at last stood together on the figure of Time's dial, that had been fixed before the worlds were made; which characterize the love of Christ to his own as being not to the end of his life merely, but to the utmost limits of love itself; which reveal the depths of our Lord's consciousness, and show that He was aware of his Divine nature, his almighty authority and power, and his heavenly destiny. As we read them we expect some development of Deity, some manifestation of Divine power which should appear worthy of such an introduction; but how startling to be told that He arose from supper and laid aside his garments and began to wash the disciples' feet!

This washing is significant of that daily, hourly cleansing which we need, whose feet are condemned to tread the dusty highways of the world. But is it not also significant of that humility, that tenderness for each other, that Divine way of dealing with sin, which should ever characterize the disciples of such a Saviour?

The Lord washed the feet of Judas, and then made one last effort to divert him from his purpose. The gift of the sop was the consummate proof of friendship, but it was unavailing. Judas turned from the helpful, healing, tender love of the Master, and withdrew thus from the one means of salvation into the darkness of his own miserable soul.

It was a relief when he was gone, and the Lord could freely speak of his approaching glory, and of love, expatiating on the shining table lands, but not as yet revealing even to Peter the dark ravine which separated Him from them, and the shadows of which He was already entering.

WEDNESDAY, July 31. John xiv.

What the "Song of the Cows" is to Swiss soldiers on foreign service, awakening insatiable longings for home, and sacred with a hundred memories, this chapter is to all holy souls. The Father's House, where a prepared mansion awaits each of us, so perfectly adapted to the peculiarities of our temperament; the convoy thither in the bosom of Jesus; the way which is also the Lord Himself; the revelation of the Father in his human life; the assurances of answered prayer; the promise of that other Comforter, who is never to leave us until we are safe at home—these are words that make our eyes fill with tears, and our spirits yearn for our eternal home.

Here, for the first time, our Lord uses the phrase, "In that day" (20), which we are destined to hear again from his lips (xvi. 23, 26), and which signifies the Age of Pentecost. Here, also, He announces that the only gauge of Love is obedience. Ponder that well, ye who talk so much of what you are prepared to give Him, but who refuse to obey his literal and absolute commands. Here, moreover, we learn that He is desirous, through the Holy Spirit, to tenant and indwell each believer's heart. Here we have that benediction of peace, which is his last and best bequest. Let us ask Him still to talk with us; and, above all, to communicate the secret of his unfaltering loyalty to the Father. "Arise, let us go hence." He is always leading us into new departments and avenues of service, teaching, and experience.

THURSDAY, August 1. John xv.

The Parable of the Vine. The vine is not able to do its work in the world without its branches; they stretch far from the root, to bear its strength and sweetness to those who stand outside the wall (Gen. xlix. 22). We need the Lord Jesus, but He needs us, else He cannot bless men as He would. What a sublime thought is here, that Jesus needs something which I can yield Him. The vine and its branches make one plant, so Jesus and his Church are one. The vine is a lowly plant; it trails along the ground, or if it be lifted on the trellis-work, its meek and suppliant boughs are nailed, whither the husbandman may choose—not altogether at his whim, but that they may get the requisite amount of sun and air. The vine suffers more than any other tree. In the spring it is deeply gashed by the pruning-knife. In the autumn its boughs are ruthlessly plundered, and who cares for the leaves or long boughs so long as the grape-bunches are secured? Lastly, through the winter it lies neglected and lonely, until it again begins its gracious ministry to man.

The reiterated message of this chapter is that we who are in Jesus as to our acceptance with God, must abide in Him as the blessed secret of our service to God and man. We cannot be severed from Christ, our covenant Head, when once we are truly united to Him for salvation; but we may cease to abide in Him for the supply of grace and power in ministry. Abide in Him for the power to bring forth "fruit," "more fruit," "much fruit"; for the power to pray; for the joy of Christian living; for power to bear witness to the world.

We gain by our losses. For the loss of the outward presence of our dear Lord we are abundantly repaid by the perpetual spiritual presence of the Holy Spirit, who is as really in the body of the Church, during the present age, as the Lord was present in his human body during his sojourn in this world.

(1) The chief sin of the present age is its rejection of Christ. It is not the sin question only, but the Son question. For the rejection of Jesus men are condemned. (2) The assertions of Jesus as to Himself are vindicated, and his righteousness declared. His divine mission was proved by his Resurrection and Ascension, and these again have been attested by the Advent of the Holy Spirit. (3) At the cross was the hour of Satan's judgment. There he was condemned and cast out. His power is broken, though still he does his utmost to annoy and intimidate the followers of Jesus.

This chapter condemns those who fix their exclusive attention on the Holy Spirit. He comes to reveal the Lord, to glorify Him, to take of his, and unfold it to us; and in knowing Him, we come to know God. The Spirit reveals the Lord, the Lord reveals the Father, and perhaps in the highest state the Father reveals Himself (25, 27).

God still speaks to us in proverbs. We could not understand or receive the perfect discovery of Himself. These are but parts of his ways. But in a little while, when the entire mystery of his will has been fulfilled, He will speak to us plainly: we shall see face to face. In the meanwhile, amid the mysteries of life and death, in Jesus let us seek peace (33).

SATURDAY, August 3. John xvii.

In Christ's own oratory we hear Him pray. But how admirable, how wonderful! Nothing for Himself; all his requests are for those He loves. And there is a tone of expectant faith in this marvellous prayer of assured trust, as though He knew that He was asking what was in his Father's heart and thought. It is marvellous to hear the Master speaking as though He had already passed through death, and were pleading before the throne, "Father, I will."

There are four thoughts in this prayer, which are woven together like the four strands in a rope. First, the thought of the Father's gifts. How constantly the Lord refers to those whom God had given, to the gift of eternal life, to the eternal life which is the divine gift, and to the glory which was already bestowed. Second, He speaks of glory. He knows what glory is. He is the King of glory. Glory is the manifestation of the hidden, inner secret of God; and the Lord had glorified the Father by revealing Him in every word and act. Third, He dwells upon that word, keep, until we feel sure that we can never perish, who are kept by such divine safeguarding. And Fourth, there is the oneness into which He desires to bring us all—a oneness, not of creed, of externals, of formality, but of life, like that which unites the Holy Trinity in the bonds of a mystic and blessed unity. In every age the Church has been as diverse as possible in her outward organization, but there has always been the unity of the one Body, the one Flock, the one Temple. We cannot make that unity, but we must endeavour to keep it, always remembering it, especially when dealing with our fellow-believers.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE value of preventive work among young women who have drifted into positions fraught with moral danger is happily receiving increased recognition. It is obviously one of the most desirable of aims to turn the steps of wanderers into right paths, ere they have fallen into any of the traps and snares set by wicked and designing traffickers in human flesh.

In this department of Christian service the admirable institution near King's Cross and St. Pancras railway termini, the "Open-All-Night Refuge," has long been most useful in to destitute young women found homeless upon the streets at night. Many are the tragic and painful histories that have been told to the matron by those who have been rescued, and many an anxious mother's heart has been made glad by receiving from this haven of hope the cheering news of a daughter's rescue.

The Refuge is, however, only one item in the organization of Samaritan institutions in connection with the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Work which has its headquarters at 200, Euston Road, N.W., and is popularly known under the compressed title of "Friendless and Fallen."

This useful mission, then, accepts any girl in distressful circumstances. It does more. It gives her, if she so desires, a thorough training for domestic service, or for other means of earning a livelihood suitable to her physical strength and abilities. In the Jubilee Home, which is devoted to this purpose, fifty respectable and friendless girls are helped and educated. The testimonies which have been received from employers of girls who have been passed on to situations are highly satisfactory. For the betrayed and outcast, there are three homes in the suburbs, in addition to a central

RECEIVING AND TRAINING INSTITUTION.

Penitent women are daily welcomed. This sad and difficult branch has likewise proved very fruitful, a fact which Mr. W. J. Taylor, who has long supervised the Mission's operations, ascribes largely to the thoroughness of the Christian teaching which is given both by the permanent staff and by lady helpers. The work is necessarily an expensive one, although, through the industry of the inmates, a considerable amount is raised towards their support; and it is to be hoped that the committee will receive encouragement in the efforts they are making to clear a heavy debt which at present hampers their efforts.

Deptford Medical Mission.

NEARLY a thousand persons have been benefited by the convalescent home opened at Bexhill-on-Sea in August, 1896, in connection with the Deptford Medical Mission, the average stay being about fifteen days. At present the ten beds are occupied, and several are waiting their turn for admission. Many most touching letters have been received from former inmates; but a yet more eloquent testimony lies in the sight of men and women as they go and as they return. To realize what the brief rest means to some it is necessary to come into contact with their life, with its unceasing toil for daily bread, and in many cases with much shadow and little sunshine. Not only is bodily strength renewed at the Home, but many leave cheered and helped in the way heavenward.

A few weeks ago a returned patient, who once had more than enough of this world's goods, but who is now lonely, weak, deaf, and often not far from starvation, wrote saying, "Please join with me in thanksgiving to God for the great benefit I have received."

At the present moment the funds in hand are only sufficient to meet current expenses for a few days. If these poor and often sadly depressed ones could be seen, no words of pleading would be needed. Information regarding the work may be had from Mrs. Pring, at the Mission, 188, High Street, Deptford, S.E.

Theatrical Mission and Home.

FROM a statement prefixed to the twenty-fifth annual report of this Mission, it appears that "Macready House," formerly used as a home for theatrical employés, and as the offices of the Mission, has been sold, and the work transferred to other premises, at 92, Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square, W. By this sale the trustees have been enabled to discharge all their indebtedness, including a mortgage of £4,000, and to have a balance in hand, a condition of affairs which has been unknown by the Society for many years past.

The new premises are large, commodious, and well built, are conveniently situated, and it is hoped that of effort in the future will amply justify the action recently taken. The Home, when ready for occupation, will accommodate sixty instead of, as hitherto, thirty-two young women. Owing to a chronic state of poverty in past years it has been impossible to keep the furniture in repair, to say nothing of replenishing the store. There is now needed, therefore, fresh and additional supplies of furniture, beds, bedding, &c. Some structural alterations and additions are also required to adapt the premises more completely to the work to be carried on in them. Rooms for the matron, with baths and lavatory conveniences were necessary, and by order of the authorities new drainage had to be constructed.

The initial cost is estimated at £750, and the committee are most anxious, in the continuance of their work under more favourable conditions than have obtained heretofore, to keep free from debt. While the Home will shortly be in actual occupation, it has been deemed wiser to defer the public opening until after the holiday season, and Wednesday, October 23, has been fixed for the ceremony. Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., has consented to preside over the meeting at four p.m., and he will be supported by Archdeacon Sinclair, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and others.

Those who are desirous of influencing for good the

in the theatrical profession (many of whom lack the comfort and kindly care of home life and are exposed to peculiar temptations) will find through this Mission an opportunity of helping to bring the truths of the Gospel of Christ to the hearts of hundreds who might not otherwise come under gracious influences. Though only sixty will be in the Home at a time, yet about 2,000 young girls and women are more or less in touch with the Society's agencies.

Country Towns Mission.

THE sixty-fourth annual report deals largely with the village work of the Society, and states that letters are continually received, testifying to the lack of faithful teaching which exists. About one-half of the fifty missionaries in connection with the Society are labouring in groups of villages; while those who are stationed in towns visit in nearly every instance the villages in their vicinity. Reference is made to temporary work carried on in districts where there is exceptional spiritual need. The main purpose of these temporary efforts is not to hold meetings, but to carry out the peculiar work of the Society, viz., thorough visitation of all the homes in a district.

Up to the present time, the missionaries who have been sent to this occasional work are those appointed to labour permanently in other districts, in connection with the Society, and who have been transferred temporarily. The Committee feel how advantageous it would be to have two or three additional missionaries set apart for this temporary visitation. By thus extending the sphere of operations, the Society would be further helping to meet the need which unhappily abounds. A copy of the report will gladly be sent on application to the Secretory, Mr. G. H. Mawer, 18, New Bridge Street, E.C.

The Holiday Season.

CITY WORKWOMEN.

SITTING by the sea, or listening to the lark, or gathering wild flowers, how delightful this is in the hot summer weather! Will those who are thus blessed think of the Woodford Home for City Young Women, of which Miss Reynolds writes: "Our wish is that the 'Home' should be a happy resting place for some women and girls (who number many thousands) who work in the City. Since the opening of the 'Home' about 5,000 have stayed in it, for longer or shorter periods."

Those who are able pay 8s. per week; but many have to be taken freely. In a letter, Miss Reynolds says, "May God put it into people's hearts to assist, for there are many who must go without a holiday unless help comes, though I am thankful that we just keep along, always out of debt."

Those friends interested in the work who are unable to give money can help very much in gifts of cast-off clothing, household linen, curtains, carpet, food, or books for the library.

Address, Miss Mary Reynolds, Invercloy, Woodford Wells, Essex.

WILLIAM LUFF.

EAST LONDON CHILDREN.

SIR,—Most of your readers will have the joy of a pleasant holiday this summer time. Will they think of our boys and girls here in East London, the majority of whom will get no change of air unless it is specially provided? Whilst we had our beautiful estate at Milton-next-Gravesend, our whole community used to go down there, and camp out for a fortnight in the summer. But we have no room for such a happy feast of tabernacles at Farnborough, where the Milton boys now are.

I should like to send all our boys to a seaside camp if we could afford it. Our schoolmasters and other officers are very willing to spend a portion of their holidays in this fashion, and the boon to our London children would be very great. As to the girls, I want to arrange for them to go in smaller parties under the care of Sisters, and to get a week or ten days by the sea. We have a great many pale-faced delicate girls and boys, who ought to have such a change. They have no parents with whom they can go on country excursions, and many never had a real holiday of this kind. They are the children of the Church. We feed them, clothe, teach, nurse them; shall we also give them a holiday?

Contributions, marked "Summer Holiday Fund," will be enthusiastically welcomed by the children, and gratefully by—Yours faithfully,

ARTHUR E. GREGORY.

The Children's Home, Bonner Road, London, N.E.

WEST LONDON POOR.

Sir,—July is here, the London season is over, and the thoughts of happy Londoners are being turned to Swiss mountains, Scotch moors, and cool sea breezes. May I appeal to your readers once more on behalf of those who will have no holiday unless help is given to them? There are toiling tailoresses and sempstresses, weary men and women, pale, sickly children in the frightfully overcrowded back streets and alleys of West London, who will stifle in their small, close single rooms all through July and August unless we can assist them to a blessed fortnight of fresh air, rest and happiness.

I have no space to speak of the mental and moral, as well as physical, good done by these country holidays. One most respectable hard-working woman I know intimately had never slept out of London for twenty years until helped by our Holiday Fund. Another toiling mother had not had a day's holiday for seven years, and there are hundreds of others in equal need. We know these cases personally, and have special facilities for dealing with them if the necessary funds are sent.—I am, &c.,

KATHERINE PRICE HUGHES.

Oral Instruction of Deaf and Dumb.—The annual meeting of the Association for the Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, held at 11, Fitzroy Square, London, W., a few days ago, was largely attended. The advantages of a purely oral system were commended by the Chairman (Rev. C. H. Parez) and others. The children are taught to speak, to converse with their fellows. The Association supplies the London and other School Boards with teachers. Ten ladies are receiving training as teachers. During the afternoon a number of prizes were distributed to the girls and boys.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 22 TO 27.

(FROM OUR OWN COMMISSIONERS.)

ONCE more the time for this holy convocation has come round, and the calm, retiring spot amid the mountains of Cumberland is the meeting-place of a multitude of Evangelical Christians. Keswick is, of course, full of visitors, and while a few of those who throng its streets are holiday-makers, the overwhelming majority have heard the Master's call, "Come ye apart," and are seeking in this lovely vale the rich and abiding blessing which God alone is able to bestow.

For the next few days, preachers of nearly every denomination, teachers of varied orders, and missionaries from almost every clime, will mingle in praise and supplication—"all one in Christ Jesus." The ordinary motives and concerns of life are left on one side, and one and all seek to come nearer to the source of repose and blessing.

Many things tend to drive God out of the lives of his people, and the purpose of the Keswick gatherings is to promote what may be called

AN ABIDING REALIZATION OF GOD.

The fulfilment of this means more than words can describe; but as surely as it is fulfilled there comes a rest of soul unknown before, with deep and lasting comfort from the truth that Christ is able not only to save his people to the uttermost, but to keep them always and unto the end, giving them peace, power, and victory in life and service. "According to your faith it shall be done."

Members of every Evangelical section of the Church of Christ during these days stand together as the practical exemplification of that unity for which our Lord Himself so earnestly prayed, and longs that the members of his church on earth should manifest before the world. The Convention strikes in the soul of the Christian visitor. First of all, it calls to Prayer. Before all and after everything, as well as in the midst of the entire proceedings, there are prayer meetings—gatherings of few and many, all of one mind in seeking the blessing of God upon everything that is said and done in connection with the Convention. That which should be general and universal in the Church of Christ—a spirit of prayer and supplication—is assuredly distinctive of Keswick Convention, which stands for prayer. Agreeably to spiritual experience, praise is combined with prayer—praise not only for blessings received, but likewise "for all the grace we have not tasted yet."

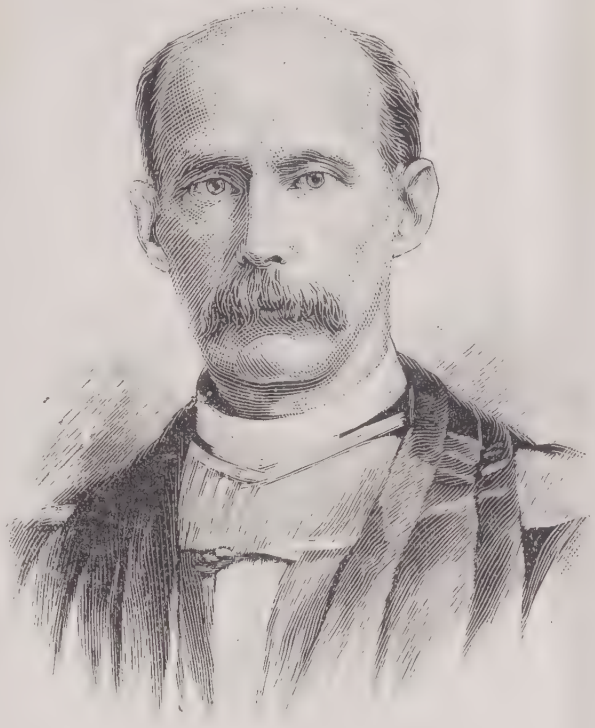
The second note of Keswick is Instruction. Perhaps some would put this first; if it comes second, it is because it is the outcome of prayerful communion with God. These two are joined together in experience, and to divide them may be convenient, but nevertheless it is difficult. The teaching of Keswick is essentially for Christian people, designed to remind them of God's blessed provision for life and godliness, for health of soul and power in service. In days when there are many temptations, whereby Christians become absorbed in material things, and Christian workers have their much obscured, it is well that there are invitations to "come apart and rest awhile"—occasions whereon we can rest in the love of Him who is the expression of God's love, and "consider Him" who is above all worthy of contemplation and sacred reverence. At Keswick the Word of God is expounded to practical purpose. We apply ourselves to the Scriptures, that we may with godly fear apply the Scriptures to ourselves.

The third note of the message of Keswick is Work. It is to this that prayer and instruction tend. Very often also work is the starting point for an interest in the prayer and instruction of the Convention. How frequently does the Christian worker realize the need of new life in prayer, and greater power in preaching, through coming to an end of himself! Then he turns aside to a convention, and experiences refreshment, and the renewal of his strength. From his own ignorance he advances to knowledge of the deep things of God; from his own weakness he passes to the strength which is from heaven. Hence, the promotion of prayer and the organizing of instruction lead to renewed effort for Christ. Gathered around the Lord in a spirit of submission we hear his Word, and willingly go our several ways to serve and obey Him, with greater acceptance, and "with signs following."



THE BISHOP OF MOMBASA (RIGHT REV. DR. PEEL.)

From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

The personnel of the platform is exceptional this year. Among new faces is that of Rev. Jas. Mursell, whose portrait appears on page 11. Great regret is felt at the enforced absence of the esteemed chairman,

MR. ROBERT WILSON.

For some time past, as readers of THE CHRISTIAN are aware, Mr. Wilson has been in a very weak condition of health, and to the great regret of his friends has been obliged some time ago to give up all hope of attending the Convention, and occupying the onerous position of chairman. The demands upon the chair are numerous, specially including tactful action and self-restraint. These parts so conspicuous in Mr. Robert Wilson, are showing themselves in good measure in the conduct of Mr. A. A. Head, who is presiding over the meetings in the Old Tent. Another well-tried occupant of the chair is General Hatt-Noble, who is this year taking charge of the meetings in the New Tent in Skiddaw Street. Almost all the brethren whose names have become associated with Keswick during recent years will be heard on this occasion. We doubt not that these, and other instructed, experienced students of the ways of God with man, will bring forth much treasure, new as well as old, from the inexhaustible treasury of the Word. And it is certain that, even without the intervention of the human voice, God will Himself speak to waiting souls in accents of love and power.

MEETING OF MISSIONARIES.

Many of the Convention leaders being in Keswick at the close of last week, preliminary prayer-meetings were held on Friday and Saturday evenings, and an assembly of peculiar interest took place on Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Dyce Alexander and Mrs. Albert A. Head had invited all the missionaries present at Keswick to afternoon tea, and a subsequent meeting in the tent in Skiddaw Street. For an hour there was a delightful opportunity for conversation with old friends, and for the recognition of fellow-workers from all parts of the world. Then followed the reunion in the tent, at which Mr. Head presided, and which was opened with prayer by the Bishop of Mombasa.

Mr. HEAD greeted the assembled missionaries in the name of the ladies who had called them together. He said "It seems easy to speed missionaries to the foreign field, but we do not always bear you in remembrance and pray for you as we ought. When we look into your faces our hearts are stirred with missionary enthusiasm, remembering many of you before you went, and having read of you and prayed for you. You have often longed to be here. Not that there is any charm in the word Keswick, but God meets you here that you may go forth recuperated to bear the Gospel message. We are here to greet you, and that you may greet one another. We want all strangeness and stiffness to be done away with. We want you to know one another, so that when you meet you may feel that you all belong to one family and are met for one common purpose. Barriers are broken down as we gather for social prayer in the presence of our blessed Lord and Master." Mr. Head then in successive groups, according to the countries which they represented. A good many were from Africa, a larger number from China, not quite so many from India; then one or two from North America, a few each from South America and Australasia, and two from Europe. Of course these did not express the proportion of missionaries in each country or quarter of the globe, but only those present from each on this occasion.

Mr. Head then invited all to join in a hymn (see p. 18), written by Miss B. Porter, the music by Mr. H. Green. (The words and music are copyright, and may be obtained from Mr. Arthur Mercer, Sec. S.A.G.M., 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W. The price is 4d. per dozen, 1s. 3d. per 100, post free.)

Miss PORTER then rose and said:—It is such a joy to see so many whom I have never seen before. We have prayed for you in all the places which have been enumerated. I want to pass on to you an old translation of a verse familiar to us all:—

Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even for ever.

The old translation is, "His Kingdom

SHALL HAVE NO FRONTIER."

It came to my heart as a message from God. As though He said to me, "There is no frontier to my kingdom, to my home, to my power, to your service for me, to your prayer for largest blessing, to your sacrifice for me." God will lead us forth where there is no frontier. The Christ at God's right hand says, "My kingdom shall have no frontier. Are you sinking under discouragement? There is no frontier to your hope, as there was none to my sacrifice and its results, when I opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers."

May the eternal Spirit lead us ever deeper and deeper into communion with God and with his Christ at the right hand of power.

After Miss Porter's concise and telling address, spoken with remarkable clearness and emphasis, Rev. CHARLES INWOOD spoke from Psa. l. 5: "Gather my saints together unto me; those that made a covenant with me by sacrifice." This is not at all an unsuitable word for to-day. We are amongst his sanctified and separated ones, through the blood shed on Calvary for sinners. We have entered into covenant with God. But there is a secondary sense in which these words are true of you as of few others. You have entered into

A SPECIAL COVENANT WITH GOD.

You are separated by the living sacrifice of yourselves to his service.

I see before me many whom I have met in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. It would scarcely be possible to overstate the possibilities of this hour, the whole world may be influenced thereby. In Dublin Telegraph Office, at two minutes before ten each morning, every operator must stop from work, and place his hand upon his instrument; and at ten o'clock the time is received from Greenwich, and instantaneously flashed to every telegraph office throughout Ireland. If you get, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, a fresh adjustment here, you may be the means of conveying it to Spirit-taught Christians throughout the world.

This is a very sacred opportunity, created by God for you. Not one of you has drifted here. You are here as an expression of Divine love and care. "Oh how great is his goodness laid up for them that fear Him!" God has been shaping and guiding your way, and He has brought you to this opportunity to-day. His table is WELL LADEN WITH GOOD THINGS.

This is a rare opportunity for spiritual blessing. The quiet of Keswick has something to do with it. There is a concentration of prayer and faith all over the world of saints who cannot come, and also of those who are here. There is no magical impulse, but there are certain divine conditions which can scarcely be existent on the same degree anywhere else.

I know from recent experience how keenly you realize your need—need of personal invigoration, re-creation. It is a melancholy fact that some who go out full of enthusiasm lose their first love. Some have come home with a strained and almost surrendered Christian creed; faith in God gives way. One has confessed to returning to lay again, in this land, the foundations of his faith, which had begun to fail.

The foundations can only be laid in the Word of God, and the atoning work of the Lord Jesus Christ. May one come back like that? Oh, if one such needs this re-creation, I do believe that God is so tender to honest doubt that He will appear to such a one, and dissipate all his difficulties.

There are some whose hearts are weary through the hardness of the work: the Master calls you apart to rest awhile. Some spirits are sad because of the awful events since we met here one short year ago. Some of the sweetest saints have gone through the bloody gate of martyrdom. We rejoice in the testimony of these our beloved brothers and sisters. No testimony during the past century has been of greater value and influence to the Kingdom of God.

The needs born of your furlough, the loss of friends, conditions of health, the crossing of plans, and other circumstances, cause need of rest and refreshment. You feel in your hearts a deepening need and a possibility of a great Pentecostal uplift, a keener vision, a higher spiritual ideal. Things that have satisfied you will never satisfy again. The uplift of ideal and motive will and must lead along Pentecostal lines. There is no new Gospel—a new Gospel is a wrong Gospel. What is wanted is a new realization of the old Gospel in your own souls.

From the first, abandon yourselves to God's teaching. Whether health return or not, live to the glory of God alone. I do pray, my dearly beloved brothers and sisters, that God may give you a measure of spiritual blessing above all that you ask or think.

PRELIMINARY GATHERING.

The meeting on Saturday evening in the tent in Eskin Street was largely attended. The proceedings opened with a season of quiet waiting upon God, after which all joined heartily in the hymn, "We praise thee, O God, for the Son of thy love." Many a soul must have gone out in warm desire with the words:—

Revive us again, fill each heart with thy love,
May each soul be rekindled with fire from above;
Revive us again, raise the dead from the tomb,
May they now come to Jesus while yet there is room!

The company were led in prayer by Rev. J. J. LUCE, who recalled in tender terms the chastenings of the year. Some have been called away from earth, others are laid aside from service. These thoughts passed through the minds of the great company present. Having prayed for blessing upon new comers and others, Mr. Luce invoked the grace and power of God upon all who should speak from the Convention platform.

After the familiar hymn, "Oh for a thousand tongues to sing," Mr. HEAD, the chairman, read Eph. iii. 14-21. Proceeding to speak words of welcome to the large company before him, he distinguished them according as they had been present in other years or were new comers, also according as they were missionaries from abroad or others who desired to consider the great subject of sanctification by faith. The absence of Mr. Robert Wilson was the subject of kindly allusion. Prayer was asked in his behalf; also for the widows of the late vicar of St. John's, Keswick, and Rev. C. A. Fox. For the King and Queen we should also pray.

Referring to the turn of events in South Africa, Mr. Head mentioned the war as another subject of earnest petition that God may speed a peace that shall be abiding, "and shall unite the two nations together in an indissoluble union." The massacres in China, with their martyrdom and bereavement, were also mentioned; may God comfort those who have given up of their best for Him, and may new workers be forthcoming, so that the Gospel may spread as never before in the land where so much has of late been done to impede its course! In conclusion, Mr. Head appealed for special definiteness in prayer; and his own petition was that the spirit of waiting upon God in prayer might characterize the Convention as never before. The meeting was then led in prayer by

THE BISHOP OF MOMBASA.

He began with personal needs, making a special point of heart cleansing in order to acceptable worship: "We acknowledge our continual failings; we humble ourselves because our faith is so small; but is not this Thy great opportunity? We have gathered from many homes; and we are all here together; and surely Thou readest our hearts that we are of one mind before Thee, that we may be cleansed from self, that we may have our eyes enlightened, that we may see in our hearts and lives that which has to be put away. Our heavenly Father, we ask Thee that Christ may dwell in our hearts, consciously to us, that He may not be vague, and a power that we do not understand, but that He may be to us what He really is—a living, loving Person, who delivers us and sanctifies us, who enables us by the Holy Ghost."

Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE followed. He particularly asked that the sorrows of the war might be blessed to some who had hitherto been indifferent to eternal things; also that the judgment of the sword might pass away from us as a nation; and that compassion might be shown for the bereaved on both sides of the conflict. The meeting was much touched by the breadth of the petition presented; and the impression was conveyed that there are many and large things concerning which God would be inquired of at this time. The hymn which followed was "Search me, O God, my actions try." The address was by who based his remarks on Psa. lxii. 6, "My soul, wait thou only upon God." The primary and all-inclusive condition of spiritual blessing is to keep the eye fastened wholly upon God. It is possible to miss blessing by talking too much of Keswick and the Keswick blessing; the magical and superstitious are closely associated. Satan diverts the mind from God to Keswick, from the Master to the servant, from Divine truth to individual experience. We must be on our guard against this, and turn our eyes wholly and only upon God. If we "wait only upon God," we shall realize a reverent spirit, devout, teachable, and humble, with a heart-hunger for the best God can give us.

Proceeding, Mr. Inwood warned the audience of the evil of making sanctification a subject of discussion, a matter of pronunciation, a theological shibboleth. The question of personal holiness is not a mere question of view; but the attitude of the will of people to the holy God—our surrender to God, and God's mastery and use of us, with the communion which these bring. To seek holiness is to seek God, and to come face to face with God is to fulfil the prime condition of sanctification. There are difficulties, intellectual, ecclesiastical, theological, and moral, which will rise like mountains in some lives, and although teachers may be unable to render much help, God will be at hand. "The mountains flow down at his presence." The purpose of God is great and full for every soul.

Grace there is my every debt to pay,
Blood to wash my every sin away,
Power to keep me spotless day by day—
In Christ, for me.

The meeting closed with prayer led by Rev. F. S. Webster. As the company dispersed it was felt that God had sent a word which supplied a timely keynote for the twenty-seventh Convention at Keswick, the first of the new century.

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

There were special preachers in the various places of worship on Sunday. At St. John's there was a very full congregation. Prayers were read by Rev. R. C. Forrest, curate; the lessons by Rev. John Brash, Wesleyan minister; and Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Director of Livingstone College. The preacher was who, after alluding to the recent death of the vicar, took for his text 1 Thess. v. 24, "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it," and delivered a very timely discourse. He looked forward to great things by the power of God at this first Convention of the new century. Some visitors at the Convention have well-defined needs; others are conscious of aspirations which they can hardly express: the text encourages a restful conviction that God knows the need, and is able and willing to supply it "according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Notice the ground on which we may rest: "Faithful is He." Faith needs a foundation on which to repose. Trusting is stepping out upon something, believing it to be trustworthy. There are many things in which we are asked to put our confidence which are not worthy of our trust, because the foundation is not safe. It matters not how true or how real the act of trusting may be, permanent stability is impossible if the foundation is insecure. The lighthouse which Smeaton built upon Eddystone rocks was marvellously constructed, but after a while it was discovered that the rock at the foundation had a small fault, which by the action of the sea was in course of years enlarged so as to become a large cavern. The foundation was pronounced unsafe and the lighthouse insecure in consequence. So the noble building was taken down and removed to the land, where it was put up again as a curiosity. The mistake was not in the building, but in the foundation. So our act of trusting may be everything that is desired, and yet the ground of our faith may be untrustworthy. The Apostle Paul gives us a foundation upon which we may build with full confidence. It is the faithfulness of God—"Faithful is He."

The statement implies a promise—something which God undertakes to accomplish. The promise is found wrapt up in the Apostolic prayer immediately preceding: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, &c." But in the text it is not the promise that is conspicuously before us, but

THE PROMISER.

The value of every promise depends upon the promiser. The Apostle might have said "Precious is the promise"; but he preferred to say "Faithful is the Promiser." So we rise from the promise to the Promiser; we can rise no higher. "Who is the Promiser? "The very God of peace," the God who has revealed Himself to you as the God of your salvation, Having given us his Son, will He not with Him also freely give us all things? Here, then, is a foundation upon which to rest our utmost confidence. It is not our fidelity or earnestness; it is God's faithfulness. Our faith is not increased by looking into our hearts, or by being occupied with our own acts of trust; but rather by being occupied with God and resting upon his trustworthiness.

In the next place, notice the privilege to which God calls us. Those to whom the Apostle wrote had been called from darkness to light, from death to life. God calls those who are already called; He calls to a closer walk with Him. Do you not need it? Who of us will say that he does not need to be brought into a condition of closer fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ? Surely this is the prayer of every heart-Christian. You remember the command to Abram—"Walk thou before Me." He had been called before that; two definite revelations had been made to him previously. First, God revealed Himself as the God of promise, with the command "Get thee out of thy country." The second revelation was, "Fear not, I am thy Shield and thy exceeding great Reward"; thus God appeared as the God of salvation. Abram needed another revelation, and God appeared to him as the Almighty, the all-sufficient God, El Shaddai, and this time the command was "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect." We are not to walk before men, before the Church, before the Christian world, but before and we are to be perfect. It is a call to fuller life. We are not merely to live, but to live fully. A scene in the Gospel story describes the porches of the pool of Bethesda as filled with impotent folk, it was a hospital—no one could do a day's work. There was no health, no power; and the same may be said of many Christians. There is life, but on a low level. One man in the multitude, who represented the whole, received a call from the Lord to quit his feeble physical condition for a fuller life. Such a call comes to us to-day. If we reply, and allow the Lord to deal with us, we shall receive power for future service, and be able to say, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me."

It is a call to brighter experience. When we contemplate the promises of Scripture, we say, "How wonderful!" Why have they no place in our personal experience? God is calling us that we may not only know the promises as being in the Bible, but likewise as manifest in our lives, revealed in our experience.

The last point is: God Himself undertakes to accomplish the promises to us. "Who also will do it." The promise belongs to God; the fulfilment is his also. And "He will do it!" He will sanctify us wholly; that is, consecrate us fully. "Sanctify" does not mean "cleanse"; it implies that cleansing has taken place already. Then comes consecration. Here we have the

DIVINE SIDE OF CONSECRATION

—what God does; He will sanctify us wholly, spirit and soul and body. Mark the order—not body first, but spirit. Human religions begin with the circumference in the hope of affecting the centre. God's religion begins with the centre, and works to the circumference. First the spirit, then the soul, and then the body! Hence the Apostle says: "I beseech you that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice." With some Christians that seems the last thing thought of as a sacrifice to God.

How does God consecrate? It is by taking possession. In this way He makes things holy. Look at the bush at Horeb, and the Tabernacle in the wilderness. God's presence makes the ground holy; his appropriation made the bush holy. When He takes possession of a man, with his marvellous capacities of spirit and soul, He achieves still more wonderful results than in the case of an inanimate object. If God is faithful and pledged to perform his promised work, we must submit ourselves to Him, and see that we do not stand in the way of God's power. Let self retreat. Let God make us vessels "meet for the Master's use."

PROFESSOR MACKINTOSH.

The morning service at the Congregational Chapel was well attended, and was as simple as it was inspiring. The pastor, Rev. Herd Taylor, directed the opening devotions. Very near were one and all drawn to the Throne of Grace, as earnest and heartfelt petitions, mingled with thanksgiving and praise, and God was besought to pour out his gifts upon his people waiting before Him at Keswick.

Professor MACKINTOSH, of Dublin, was the preacher, and his discourse was based on the words, "Unto Him that loveth us, and loosed us from our sins by his blood; and He made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father; to Him be the glory and the dominion for ever and ever" (Rev. i. 5, 6, R.V.) The Christian life was set forth as being a co-operation between God and ourselves. In order that any co-operation shall accomplish its purpose, those co-operating must understand each other's minds, and know what each has to do. One great source of failure has been that man has not understood which part of the work is his. He has too often expected God to do what God intended he should do, or has attempted to do himself what God intended to do for him.

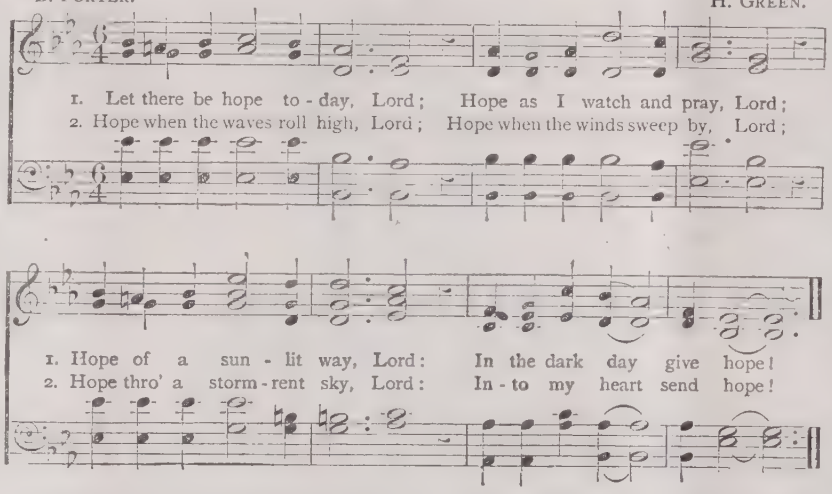
In the words of the text, we find a position, process, and purpose. Man's position is, loved of God. The seven churches to which John wrote represented almost every position of the Christian life. For some he had words of commendation, for others words of condemnation. As God looks down upon the Church on earth to-day He sees a great deal to condemn, little to approve. With urgency the speaker pleaded with his hearers not to look out on the Church as a whole, but into each individual heart. How many of the motives that influence us in our daily life have their source in God's good pleasure? Yet, in spite of all, God's love has been bestowed—"Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love." Long before we thought of this love, it was shining upon us.

After man's position comes the process—the washing away of sin by Christ in his own blood. Nothing less than his atoning work could bridge the gap which sin had caused between God and man. Many are waiting to feel free from sin before believing in the sacrifice of the Saviour. It is not by trying to feel free that we realize our freedom, but by believing that He makes us free.

Lastly comes the purpose. He made us to be a kingdom, priests unto his God and Father. Let us not disappoint our King. He comes to claim us and all we have—our service, time, intellects, for his own use. Has God had his rights?

Hope.

B. PORTER. H. GREEN.



1. Let there be hope to-day, Lord; Hope as I watch and pray, Lord;
2. Hope when the waves roll high, Lord; Hope when the winds sweep by, Lord;
1. Hope of a sun-lit way, Lord: In the dark day give hope!
2. Hope thro' a storm-rent sky, Lord: In-to my heart send hope!

3 Hope that the clouds may clear, Lord,
Hope that dispels each fear, Lord,
Hope because Thou art near, Lord,
So let me wait in hope!

4 "In hope against hope," I wait, Lord,
As I stand at some fast-barred gate, Lord,
Hope never says "Too late," Lord,
Therefore in Thee I hope!

5 Hope though the night be long, Lord,
Hope of a glowing dawn, Lord,
Morning must break in song, Lord,
For hearts that are "saved by hope."

AT THE WESLEYAN CHAPEL.

The services at the Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday were conducted by Revs. J. GREGORY MANTLE and JOHN BRASH. In the evening the text was God's promise to Moses, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest" (Ex. xxxiii. 14). Very earnestly did the speaker plead with Christians to enter into the consciousness of the fulfilment of the promise, by surrendering themselves wholly to God, seeking and accepting his will in all things. God still holds to the promise, and grants his guiding, sustaining and protecting presence. "And I will give thee rest." This promise may be fulfilled in every life—a heart rest, which is the result of the consciousness that we are stronger than our enemies. The closing words of the speaker were directed to any heart that had not allowed the Saviour to enter. With loving earnestness the way of salvation was set forth, and many must have felt as they listened to the pleadings of the preacher that they were not far from the Kingdom.

OVERFLOW MEETINGS.

Overflow meetings in the Eskin Street tent were held on Sunday morning and evening. The speaker on the former occasion was Rev. Charles Inwood. In a future issue, we hope to give some notes of his address. In the evening the speaker was Mr. W. R. Lane, who based a very searching address upon Herod and his sin, with its sequel in the beheading of John the Baptist. At the outset he dwelt upon the importance of Scriptural views regarding sin and sinfulness. To be tempted is not to sin; a man may come out of temptation marred or made, wrecked or ennobled. There is no escaping temptation, though God will provide for us an escape from the guilt of yielding to it.

In how many cases does some Herodias come between a man and God—something in private or social life, something in business about which God has a controversy. In prayer we may profess a vague interest in everything—Jews, Gentiles, and the Church of God—but we

KEEP SILENCE REGARDING HERODIAS.

God would rebuke us in such circumstances, if only we would hear his voice; He would say, "Stop your perambulations of religious routine, and talk to Me like a man about your sin." It is not all at once that men become hardened sinners. Though born in sin, we are not born hardened sinners. It is by disregarding the monitions of conscience that we become such; and at length conscience ceases to reprove in such a case. No man can play fast and loose with conscience without suffering moral disintegration and ruin; and by-and-by the time comes when, with weakened conscience, a man does without compunction things against which his whole soul would previously have revolted.

Herod heard John, feared him, and did other things; but he would not repent of his sin, he would not undo the wrong of Herodias. While he maintained that wickedness, he and at length silenced it. So in all evil doing, and with regard to everything that stands between the soul and God. Some sins hurt the physical man, some the mental, but all hurt the moral man; and when conscience ceases to speak, there has been moral suicide.

At a later period of his career Herod questioned Christ, and it is recorded: "He answered him nothing." There comes a time when a man can receive no message from God. He will not confess his sin or put it away; and while it is cherished, God can say nothing to him. In conclusion, on the subject of sin, Mr. Lane said that there were no more hopeless specimens of humanity than the Gospel-hardened sinners that are found in houses of prayer. He prayed God to send an earthquake into the congregations, to lead such sinners to repentance.

At the close of the meeting (as at the beginning), there was a season of prayer. Opportunity was afforded for those who had been touched by the message to indicate their desire for the prayers of God's people. A large number, including many young men and women, made their wishes known, and it is firmly believed that work was done for eternity at the meeting.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

In accordance with established custom the early morning prayer meeting on Monday was devoted specially to the interests of Ireland. Mr. A. A. Head was in the chair, and several brethren besought God that He would visit the Sister Island and people with fresh grace and power, and that there might be a wider proclamation of the Gospel of Christ.

The address was given by Rev. Charles Inwood, and was a moving and timely utterance. The significance of Gospel work in Ireland was emphasized by two facts: (1) The relation of the work of God there to the great missionary forces in all parts of the world; (2) The coming struggle of the near future in this land will be a conflict between a sacerdotal and a spiritual conception of Christianity. It had been a joy to him while visiting in the mission field to find how many of the workers were Irish. He had no idea that the handful of corn in Ireland was yielding so great a harvest in the mission field. The second fact invests work in Ireland with great significance. The conflict that is being fought there will in time overtake Gospel effort in England.

Referring to the sad scenes witnessed in Limerick, as a result of Roman Catholic opposition to Protestant medical missions, the speaker averred that in his judgment what has taken place has been the foulest outrage on civil and religious liberty ever experienced in Ireland. The educational question can hardly be understood by English people; but in disputing the

in this matter it is felt that it is not merely the interests of a church or a sect, but the cause of the Kingdom of Christ, which is closely touched by that struggle. Pray that, in the day of struggle and testing, the faith and loyalty of God's people will not waver. One aspect of the position causes much grief—the growing apart of Protestants, and the inclination to stand as sects rather than one united body in defence of their faith before the world.

Mr. Inwood compared Ireland's condition to that of an invalid of whom he recently heard. She lay dying in an Irish convent—sick, with eyes closed, running her fingers down the rosary, and saying in anguish—"Oh that I knew the right way!" Ireland is sick and sad, and she needs to "know the right way." This he commended as a fitting subject for prayer.

OPENING OF THE CONVENTION.

Punctually at the appointed time the Convention proceedings opened on Monday evening. In the course of the day there had been a large accession of visitors to the town, and the stormy weather of Sunday evening gave place to a fine and genial atmosphere. Mr. Albert Head presided in the Eskin Street tent, which was filled with a large audience.

The opening hymn was "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and after prayer, led by Dr. Elder Cumming, the Scriptures were read, the passage being 1 John iv. 10-21. In the course of some preliminary remarks, Mr. Head said that during the afternoon he had an interview with the beloved chairman, Mr. Robert Wilson, whose message to the Convention was, "Give my dear love to all the friends gathered at Keswick. I should much have liked to be with them, but I cannot; I desire upon each the richest blessing which our heavenly Father can bestow." Mr. Head intimated that he would in the name of the meeting send Christian love to Mr. Wilson, and at the same time express a desire that, in his enforced absence, he would enjoy the heavenly blessings which would have accrued to him if present at the Convention.

After prayer by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, the address was delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, founded on 1 Sam. iii., which was a timely utterance. Having described the important place occupied by Samuel in the history of Israel—he may be called the second founder of the Hebrew Commonwealth—he spoke of the development of his noble and saintly character, showing what he owed to his devoted mother, and what came of his being able by the power of God to rise above the traditional piety of his time. Except for that great change in Samuel's religious life, nothing would probably have been heard of him. In like manner, in order to effective Christian service, we must exchange merely nominal discipleship for the open confession of God: such a confession as comes from a face to face revelation of God's will and power. When God first came near his soul the boy Samuel at once turned to Eli, his friend and adviser; similarly, when God speaks to us, we speed to someone with a request that he interpret the vision. We think this is the way of blessing, but, in fact, it is one of the saddest perils of Convention experience, a peril whereby souls are drawn into perturbation, and repeat, more or less, the vain experiences of Samuel when he went once and again to Eli, saying, "Thou didst call me." Weak as he was, Eli was prudent in dealing with the young man. He showed no priestly spirit, but directed the lad to God Himself, saying, "If he call again thou shalt say, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." So on that Keswick platform no priestly prerogatives are recognised. We would direct souls to God alone. In some further remarks, Mr. Meyer discouraged criticism and social chit-chat, and counselled attendants to secure solitude, and wait for the voice of God. It is through his Word that God speaks to the soul, if only the soul is willing to hear what God the Lord will speak.

In the spacious new tent in Skiddaw Street there was also a large congregation. Gen. Hatt Noble presided over the gathering, which was felt to be one of deep solemnity and heart-searching in preparation for continuous waiting upon God during the coming days. After the opening hymn, "Oh for a heart to praise my God," Professor Macintosh presented many petitions and offered much thanksgiving in prayer. A petition in song followed, and Revs. H. B. Macartney and Dr. John Smith again led to the throne of grace.

The address of the evening was given by Rev. E. W. Moore, based upon Joshua's admonition to the children of Israel—"Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." The deliverance of the children of Israel by the crossing of the Jordan was typical of the deliverance of the Christian from the power of Satan and the world. Canaan is typical of the home of the soul; it does not mean heaven to them, but heavenly places. First, it means possession after promise. Canaan had been promised to Abram hundreds of years before, but he had not been allowed to enter it. Now the time has come for his descendants to go forward and take possession. In order that we may go up and take possession of the promised land, we must realize the fulfilment of the assurance, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you." Canaan is also rest after wandering; "we who have believed do enter into rest," and rest enters into our hearts. Christ is our Shiloh. Canaan, too, is plenty after want. It does not appear that the children of Israel were allowed to want while in the wilderness, but there is a distinction plainly drawn between the barrenness of the wilderness and the plenty of the promised land. So in Jesus Christ there is a plenteousness that puts to shame the paucity of our lives. What hindered the children of Israel from taking possession of the promised land? Jordan rolled between them and Canaan. How can we cross the Jordan which rolls between our souls and God? Only by following the path in which Christ Himself led, the path of sacrifice and death. There are endless new beginnings in Christ. This path is a new way already made by Him.

The prayer meeting on Tuesday morning was also largely attended. The address was delivered by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, who brought under notice the imperative mood of the Gospel as set forth in the "musts" of Christ in the Gospel according to St. John.

Rev. Charles Inwood has left on a journey, and Rev. F. B. Meyer departs to-day for meetings in Syria.

Northfield Conference.—In extending an invitation to the Christian public to attend the nineteenth General Conference for Christian workers to be held in Northfield this season, August 1 to 18, Mr. W. R. Moody writes: "Our earnest desire is that the gathering may be to all a preparation for effective work for Christ." In addition to the usual lectures on the Word of God, institutes on methods of work, and consecutive courses of Bible study, there will also be opportunities for the consideration of plans for evangelistic work at home and abroad during the coming year. Prominent and experienced pastors, evangelists, and missionaries will be present to assist with their counsel and inspiration, including, among others—Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds; Dr. and Mrs. J. Howard Taylor, China Inland Mission; Rev. R. A. Torrey, Rev. H. C. Mabie, D.D., Commander Booth-Tucker, Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., and Rev. John Balcom Shaw, D.D.

The Scriptures for Ireland.

A PERUSAL of the annual report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland will awaken in many hearts a sense of deep gratitude to God for the blessing which has followed the circulation of the Scriptures in the Sister Isle. Among all classes and denominations, in thickly-populated centres, as well as isolated villages, the agents have laboured with faithfulness and patience in their unpretentious and often difficult task. Many persons who dare not receive regular visitations from the agents of their church are most thankful for the opportunity of receiving a copy of the Scriptures or some other book dealing with the Gospel of Jesus Christ; and often the missionaries reach a class which the clergy are often unable to touch.

The work of the Society is mainly among Protestants, but Roman Catholics are becoming more friendly disposed to the Readers, and are assuming a different attitude towards the priests. Unhappily the Society has had to curtail its sphere of operations through lack of means. The need for reinforcement increases, and if the number of Readers were doubled that need would not be met. One parish where two agents are employed to assist the two parochial clergy, has a population of 40,000; another parish having nineteen Sunday schools, with three parochial clergy, has three Readers. The Committee have recently received applications from five large, needy parishes, but unless funds are immediately forthcoming these additional Readers cannot be employed. The agents are acknowledged by the clergy, in whose parishes they labour, to be most useful adjuncts. They teach in the Sunday schools, take Bible classes among the young people, become leaders of cottage meetings, conduct evangelistic services in schoolhouses and mission halls, as well as carry on their itinerary work.

Captain Kearney White continues to act as honorary secretary, the clerical secretary being Rev. J. O. G. Dougherty. The office is at 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin.

Welsh Baptist Union.

THE annual meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union were held at Porth, Glamorganshire, on July 15-18. There was a large attendance of ministers and laymen from all parts of the Principality, as well as representatives from the Welsh churches of the denomination in England. The President was Rev. Dr. T. A. Morris, Aberystwith. The President-elect is Rev. Dr. W. P. Williams, Landore.

The first meeting was for children on the Monday afternoon. An interesting feature of this meeting was a model Sunday-school lesson given by Mr. T. Brown, M.A., Cardiff. In the evening a public meeting was held, when addresses were delivered on "Competing with the Public House," and "The Reforms needed in the Sunday School to meet the demands of the New Century."

On Wednesday morning the delegates were addressed by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., on behalf of the Twentieth Century Fund. In the course of his address the speaker said that it was proposed to raise £50,000 in Wales, although so far only £12,895 of that sum had been promised.

The same morning, and following almost immediately after Mr. Shakespeare's address, came a sermon from Dr. Maclaren. Taking as his text Paul's words to the Colossians, "Saints and faithful brethren in Christ," he preached a sermon full of Evangelical truth and fervour.

The President's address in the afternoon dealt with "The Thought of the Nineteenth Century in its Relation to Evangelical Theology." In the evening a largely-attended public meeting was held, part of which was devoted to the discussion of foreign mission work. Thursday was given to the preaching of the Gospel. Some of the most eminent ministers of the denomination preached to thousands of attentive hearers.

Chili.—Rev. C. Jenkins, Casella 246, Valparaiso, Chili, writes: "At Vina, a suburb of Valparaiso, we have neither church nor schools for the hundreds of people who live there. We are hoping to have an iron building for these purposes, to be called a 'Queen Victoria Memorial.' The district is a needy one."

American Notes.

THE twentieth International Convention of Christian Endeavourers opened on Saturday last at Cincinnati, some 10,000 delegates being present. President Francis E. Clark and Secretary J. Willis Baer were re-elected for one year. His report showed that in 1891 there were 16,274 societies, with an aggregate membership of 1,000,000 persons. In 1901 there are 61,427 societies, with a membership of 4,000,000; 16,000 junior societies, with 483,000 members; and 1,285 intermediate societies, with 38,500 members.

On Sunday night at one of the meetings of the Convention, General O. O. Howard ("The Christian Soldier"), said: "Since the incoming of what is called 'higher criticism,' it has become the fashion to lay stress upon the earthly life, the naturalistic life of men, women, and children here and now. Even in our best sermons we miss the Old Testament Scriptures. Illustrations abound which show more reading of other books, and less study of the Bible. I object to the unhappy spirit which undertakes to wrench from us that which we have loved and trusted and believed in and worked with, from our spiritual childhood to our spiritual manhood. Truth we want. Truth we welcome. So let us have the whole truth, and send forth men and women into the field as missionaries and Endeavourers to exalt the Saviour, and who are able to teach simple truths which men and women need, and proclaim good tidings of great joy continually and without reservation."

Elaborate preparations are being made for the Epworth League Convention, to be held at San Francisco from the 18th to the 22nd of this month. The sum of 30,000dols. has been raised in the city for the entertainment of the Convention, and the Californians mean to give the visitors good cause to remember their hospitality. At the afternoon session on the first day the Governor of the State and the mayor of the city will, in their official capacities, welcome the delegates. Roger Martin.

AN interesting meeting was recently held in Dublin, in connection with the Central Association of the Presbyterian Church, Mr. John Mooney, J.P., presiding. Many suggestions of a practical nature were thrown out by the speakers, and the proceedings were of a most hopeful and stimulating character. Mr. Haise has had five years' experience in work of this kind in England, and his speech made a most favourable impression. He claimed that in all Christian work amongst young men first things should be first, and he hoped to keep the Bible-class and the prayer-meeting at the front of the institution, and place all other things in subordination to them. But he hoped he would be able with the help of workers to develop work of a moral and intellectual kind which would make the place attractive to young men, and help them to feel that it was a real home for them at the heart of the city.

A great sensation has been caused in Irish educational circles by the sudden and unexpected resignation on the part of Dr. Walsh, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, of his position as a Commissioner of National Education. In order to understand the matter it is necessary to remember that the national system of education, which has been about sixty years in existence, has for its principle the idea of united secular and separate religious instruction. However, since the days of Cardinal Cullen the Roman Catholics have never looked favourably upon it, and have been doing their best to subvert it, and bring in a denominational system in its place. The system is managed by a board of twenty commissioners, ten of whom are Roman Catholics, and ten Protestants, and of late many changes have been introduced, nearly all of which favoured sectarianism.

These changes did not pass without opposition on the part of a section of the Commissioners, and now Dr. Walsh has suddenly sprung his resignation upon the public. He states his reasons for doing this were irregularities in the office and in the book store, and statements made outside by Rev. Dr. Evans, the Methodist Commissioner, and Sir Malcolm Inglis, one of the Presbyterian Commissioners. It is believed, however, that his real reason for taking that course is that he wants to break up the National Board as an undenominational system, and wants to force the hands of the Government to grant a separate educational system for Roman Catholics.

The Reformed Presbyterian Synod has just held its annual meeting. An interesting piece of old worldism was introduced into the proceedings by the reading of the "Solemn League and Covenant," and by the swearing of the "Oath of Renovation," and of the "Engagement to Specific Duties," the Covenanters standing with hands lifted up to God. Professor Dicks, D.D., who preached on the occasion, said that by renewing the Covenants those present engaged and promised anew, in the name of the Lord, to walk in all his commandments and ordinances blamelessly. By such a walk they glorified their Father who was in heaven. The Covenants were still binding on them, and on the nation by which they were sworn, because they were Scriptural, and because the evils against which they were directed still existed, and because new forms of evil had arisen. The last time, in seems, on which the renovation of Covenants took place in this country was in 1853. There was a large attendance, and the ceremony was solemn and impressive.

Some months ago two or three members of the Antrim Road Baptist Church, Belfast, began services in the Hall, 10, Clifton Park Avenue, which have resulted in the formation of a new Baptist Church. Pastor Thos. M'Dowell, of the Irish Baptist College, takes the oversight.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Taunton Association has acquired additional premises in which to carry on the work of its junior section. It is hoped to raise much of the cost by shilling contributions; and the president, Mr. J. E. W. Wakefield, has headed the list with a donation of 2,000 shillings.

The Colombo Association has won a fine testimonial to its work in the transfer to it by the Municipal Council, as a free gift, of the old Town Hall site on which to build.

The forward movement in Lancashire has resulted in a present total of forty-two branches, as compared with sixteen three years since, while the present membership for the county is 9,043, representing an increase of 2,045.

The work of the Grays Association has been productive of much good both to the members and to the district. The Bible class, the P.S.A., and the Sunday morning breakfast meetings have been means of blessing, and among evangelistic efforts put forth are services in the open air and in a lodging-house for men.

The annual Conference of general secretaries has been held at Shaftesbury House, Margate, the seaside home of the Central Association. There was a large attendance of secretaries, and the proceedings were interesting and useful. A feature of the Conference was a series of lectures by Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Edinburgh.

The Cape Town Association has resolved on the appointment of an outdoor officer, whose duty it shall be constantly to visit the vessels in the docks, the various warehouses, &c., in the interests of the large numbers of young men who are either temporarily or permanently in the city. Mr. H. A. Harris, late of the Redruth Association, has been selected for the position.

In connection with the Birmingham Association's building scheme the committee require about £50,000, the greater part of this sum being needed for building and the rest as an endowment. About £16,000 is up to the present assured. In the new building it is proposed to provide temporary boarding accommodation for the convenience of new comers to the city while in search of permanent lodgings, a want which has been very greatly felt.

The Cupar Association recently celebrated its jubilee. A warm tribute was paid by Mr. W. D. Patrick (honorary president, and a former acting president) to the memory of the founder, Mr. Charles Geddes, and of his successor, Mr. David Stenhouse, as well as to the work of Mr. James Henderson, Mr. Andrew Smith (now of Dundee), and Mr. Alexander Ramsay, who is now president of the Association. Several former members were present, and many other friends took part in the proceedings—recalling memories of the Association, in some extending over a period of forty years.

The half-yearly meetings of the National Council, which took place recently at Exeter Hall were of exceptional interest. In the morning, after a meeting of the Executive under the presidency of Sir George Williams, the Council's foreign work was under special consideration, Strong testimony was borne to the value of the work of Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, in Rangoon, and to the need for its development. A report was given of fruitful service rendered amongst the students in Bombay by Mr. Frank Anderson; and appeals were considered for workers for Singapore and Poona. An account from Mr. J. J. Virgo, the travelling secretary recently appointed by the Australasian Council, of his first three months' work in this capacity, gave promise of great developments of the work throughout Australia and New Zealand.

The Rector of Pakefield.

AT the age of eighty-two years, thirty of which have been spent as rector of Pakefield, near Lowestoft, Rev. Lewis Price, has resigned his living, to the deep regret of his parishioners, and his brother clergy in the district. In view of his departure steps were taken by a committee, with Mr. T. Sergeant as chairman, to give expression to the wide esteem in which Mr. Price is held.

Accordingly a meeting was held in Pakefield Cunningham School, when Mr. Price was the recipient of numerous handsome gifts. Rev. E. B. Browne, who for seven years has been curate at Pakefield, is also resigning, and he, with Mrs. Browne, received a number of presents, and the hearty wishes of many friends for their future usefulness in the parish of Grey Friars, Reading, to which they are removing.

Among those who bore testimony to the faithful labour and untiring zeal of the ministry of the rector were—Mr. T. F. Davies, Revs. W. P. Phillips and D. Dickson, Mr. W. P. Cooper, Mr. J. Crowe, and Mr. J. Munnings. Always a thoroughly Evangelical preacher of the Gospel, Mr. Price has become well known as a sturdy defender of the Protestant faith. He is regarded by his brother clergy as a true friend, to whom they have gone for fatherly counsel with the utmost confidence. Apart from his religious duties, he has manifested the deepest possible interest in any movement affecting the welfare of his parishioners. The day schools have received his liberal support, in more ways than are generally known; while the Pakefield lifeboat was revived as a result of his energies.

Kentish Hop-Pickers.

AMONG the helpful evangelistic organizations carried on during the hopping season in the interests of the poor people who labour at the bins, the Hop-Pickers' Mission for the Weald of Kent has long occupied a position of esteem.

Workers from all sections of the Christian Church are welcomed to co-operate in the delightful toil of going from garden to garden, or camp to camp, preaching the Gospel.

In past years the missionaries have met with much encouragement in many centres. In addition to speaking to the people personally, meetings are held in the open air and in rooms and halls, while large quantities of helpful literature are distributed. The mornings are largely devoted to the bins, and the evenings to the camp. The gardens are pictures of beauty and fruitfulness, while the hoppers, engaged in not unpleasant labour, are free at the same time to listen to the words of eternal life.

One particularly interesting part of the work is the medical department in connection with the hop-pickers' Shelter at Goudhurst. This branch is of recent growth, but is already well in hand, and is proving a boon to the sick and suffering. Many among them are learning the meaning of the words, "I was sick and ye visited Me, I was a stranger and ye took Me in."

The free tea is also a notable attraction. To quote the annual report of the evangelists, there is no need for effort to gather the people, for they are already gathered, affording a splendid opportunity for proclaiming the Gospel to those who seldom, if ever, hear it elsewhere. Sixty thousand persons, it is computed, out of the darkest slums of our great cities are thus ready to have Christ preached to them.

"Great preparations are made by the hoppers for this tea. They wash and brush up for the occasion, and come in their very best behaviour. It is really very creditable to them to see how clean and tidy the mothers and children present themselves. An open-air service is held for an hour first, and the waiters take round bags of bread and butter with cake, while others follow with tea. Kind words are spoken to each one personally, while tracts, little books, portions of Scripture, &c., are given to them. Many helpers and home-dwellers mingle among them, showing much sympathy and interest in the work." Besides this large gathering, there are other smaller gatherings for tea on different farms in the district. The influence for good in these gatherings is very evident.

Rev. J. J. Kendon, treasurer of the Mission, Goudhurst, Kent, will, on application being made, be pleased to forward copies of the annual report.

Obituary.

PASTOR A. M. A. GRAHAM, GLASGOW.

AT Pollokshields, Glasgow, on Friday, July 12, after several months' illness, Pastor A. M. A. Graham passed from this life at the age of fifty-two. For a number of years he acted as pastor in an independent mission to seamen on the south side of the Clyde, but in his earlier years, as an evangelist, he travelled widely. Mr. Graham was much blessed as a winner of souls. He was an exceptionally able preacher, and many profited by his ministry. Rev. D. M. Cameron, brother-in-law of the departed worker, and Mr. Clyde, of the Mizpah Band, took part in the service at the grave-side.

MRS. HENRY CASE, COTHAM, BRISTOL.

The sudden removal of this beloved sister in Christ, at the age of fifty years, is not only an immense loss to her bereaved family, but to the church at Bethesda (with which she had been connected all her life), and to a large circle of friends. While filling her place in the home, and affording her husband no small assistance in his extensive business, she was also "ready to every good work." To very many servants of Christ in this and other countries, the ever ready hospitality made the home at Cotham a true place of rest, and to these the tidings will come as a deep sorrow. Many a good cause has received encouragement by the kindly advocacy it has found at meetings held in the house of our dear departed friend, and the last service of her life was performed in a function of this kind, when she welcomed to a garden meeting the local friends of the W.T.A.U. on Friday, July 12. The same evening alarming symptoms manifested themselves, and, in spite of care and skill, she fell asleep on Sunday evening, July 14. A large number of sorrowing friends attended the funeral service at Bethesda Chapel on Wednesday, 17th inst., and the interment took place in the Churchyard of Westbury-on-Trym.

J. L. S.

THE LATE REV. ANDREW JUKES.

THE death is announced of Rev. Andrew Jukes, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. A correspondent of The Guardian, in an interesting memoir, says:—Andrew Jukes, a name venerable and dear to many spiritual sons and daughters in the faith of Christ, was educated at Harrow, and on leaving the school obtained a commission in the East India Company's army. After seeing a good deal of active service at Hyderabad and in other parts of India, he was invalided home, and, desiring to take Holy Orders, went up to Cambridge, where he entered at Trinity College. There he won the Hulsean Prize with an essay on the "Principles of Prophetic Interpretation," and having in due course taken his degree, he was ordained to the curacy of St. John's, Hull. In the first year of his curacy he preached a sermon on the subject of "Unity and Uniformity," which drew down upon him the censure of the Archdeacon of the East Riding, Dr. Robert Wilberforce, and the result of the controversy which followed was that Mr. Jukes, finding that he had difficulties about the doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration, and about making the required subscription, felt himself unable to seek priest's Orders, and the Archbishop of York, Dr. Vernon Harcourt, withdrew his licence.

Being now without a special cure, he entered upon an exhaustive study of the Fathers, whom he read as few men have read them, being specially attracted by them to the mystical interpretation of Holy Scripture, and drew about him a little company of disciples to whom he delivered expository lectures on practically every book of the Bible. He carried on this work for many years, one issue of it being his publication of "The Mystery of the Kingdom," and other books. At the same time he was diligently visiting the poorest of the poor in the slums of Hull, and conducting, with the help of his wife, a very successful home for the rescue of fallen women. These manifold labours at length broke down his health, and under medical advice he made a journey to the East, travelling for many months through Egypt and Palestine. On his return he spent a quiet year at Bridlington, and then, having declined the offer of a benefice made him by Archbishop Thomson, moved—his health being fully restored—to Highgate, to take up again his literary work.

By this time he had reconsidered and modified his earlier opinions, and having obtained the licence of the Bishop of London (Dr. Jackson), and afterwards of the Bishop of Rochester (Dr. Thorold), he preached frequently in many London churches. In 1879, he moved from Highgate to Woolwich, and there, though his work was hindered for a time by the sorrow of a great loss—the death of the devoted wife to whose sympathy and help he owed so much—he went on writing, and published in succession, "The New Man and the Eternal Life," and other works. He was, too, a familiar and honoured presence at the annual conferences held at Broadlands, and at the meetings of "The Clerical Friends in Council."

During all these years he was receiving from all quarters of the world letters and visitors asking his advice and direction in spiritual matters. He was pre-eminently a seer, but he was also a very sagacious teacher and a very practical counsellor. And his sympathy knew no limits.

Towards the close of his life, his health gradually failed, and he eventually gave up his home at Woolwich to spend his last days with his eldest son at West Hackney Rectory. He died during a visit to one of his daughters at Southampton, and was buried at Hull on July 9, by the side of his wife, many of his old friends following him to the grave.

City Mission Outing.

LEAVING London's roar and its summer sultriness, the missionaries of the London City Mission journeyed to Easneye, near Ware, on the 10th inst., and were entertained for the day by Mr. and Mrs. T. Fowell Buxton.

Accepting the genial invitation of their host so to do, the missionaries made the place their own for the day, and revelled in its many charms. A large party of friends and supporters arrived in the afternoon in time to witness the ambulance display. Twenty missionaries took part, evidencing complete ability to use the means of physical aid. The missionary moves about just where such knowledge may at any moment be put to the test. Is it not obvious that, grateful for bodily benefits, the patient will have a receptive mind for the missionaries' message concerning a greater gift that also is conferred "without money and without price"? St. John Ambulance Association's certificates for nursing were distributed to twenty-three missionaries.

Another pleasant feature of the outing was the hearty and enthusiastic meeting under the trees. Rev. Alexander Connell, M.A., of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, gave a practical and powerful address. He applauded with all his heart the consistency of evangelical principle and method of Gospel presentation which had characterized the society from its foundation. Canon Pelly, of West Ham, followed with an interesting and profitable study of the traits of John the Baptist. Mr. F. A. Bevan also spoke, and Mr. W. B. Murray, one of the missionaries, handed Mr. Buxton an illuminated address as a memento and appreciation of the day's hospitality, and in grateful acknowledgment of his earnest devotion to the Mission for half a century.

Soldiers' Home, Gosport.—Since 1888 a much-needed work has been carried on at Gosport by the Misses Redout. Their Soldiers' Home has been during this period twice enlarged, and is conveniently situated for the barracks, forts, musketry camp at Browndown, and the harbour. It consists of coffee-room, temperance refreshment bar, comfortable rooms for reading, writing, and games, a large room for Bible classes and Gospel services, and a smaller one for prayer meetings, as well as the usual apartments. The Misses Redout will be glad to communicate with friends interested in her work among soldier

The Best Friend to Have.

DEAR Boys and Girls,—Last year we were with all our dear children enjoying the seaside services at Colwyn Bay, and I think you will like to hear how a sweet echo of those services reached a far-off mission-house in India, and comforted one of God's servants who had lately left her own dear ones in England.

At the services at Colwyn Bay, the sweet chorus, "The best Friend to have is Jesus," was sung again and again, day after day, till we were all quite familiar with it. Our baby boy of three used to be with his nurse, who liked to sit within hearing, and he picked up and loved to join in the little chorus in his baby way, and did not quickly forget it.

That autumn we sailed for India, saying goodbye to his brothers and sisters, and taking him only with us. He was a very happy little soul on deck, and often would sing his little song in baby language at the top of his voice without a thought of the varied listeners! One could not stop him, but only trust it might be a message to some heart needing the True Friend.

Best Friend to have is Jesus,
He will keep 'oo 'est 'oo fall;
He will hear 'oo when 'oo call,
Oh! Best Friend to have is Jesus.

But now comes the real story. Soon after we reached Calcutta, I took him to spend a Sunday at a mission-house about seven miles away. There he sang his little song, which reminded me of our happy days at Colwyn Bay; but I did not know then that he was a little messenger of comfort from the dear Master to one of his home-sick children. Months afterwards this missionary said to me, "I thought you must have told him to sing it because you knew I was sad, and it comforted me so."

So, dear children, sing your sweet songs for Jesus; and ask that He will make them messages of love to weary hearts, and so shall you, too, be little ministers unto Him.—Your affectionate friend, C. P.

Only a Word.

THAT may be; but what is a word? When I speak, what am I doing? A wave passes through my body, touches my lungs, comes through my throat, strikes the palate, forms on my tongue and lips into a word, which, when I utter it, conveys my thought. A word, then, is mind expressing itself in the form of speech.

Did you ever consider the power of words? There was a man called Peter the Hermit. He used to wander about all over the country, repeating one word with such eloquence that even learned men gathered around him, and pressed forward eagerly to follow him. "The tomb of the Lord is in the hands of the infidel; go and recover it," he cried. And a great crusade followed. The Turks once said, "If you will but say 'Mahomet is the prophet,' you will find every comfort and a home in our country." Some who did not quite understand the difference one word would make, said it; but others replied, "No, no! our prophet is Jesus, and not Mahomet," and they were persecuted. One word made all the difference. Many have lived for a word; others have been stretched on a rack, and died for a word.

Then there are precious words. Some years ago in a school in one of our large cities there was a boy over whom the master had no control. He told a minister this, and one day the good man went to see the boy. "Well, my lad, how long have you been at school?" The boy answered "one" or "two" years as the case might be. "Well, what is your father?" The boy looked confused, and told him his father was dead. "It is a great loss to lose a father. But what about your mother?" "She has been out to the East Indies," he replied, "but she is coming home in a month." "And do you not wish to make her heart glad when she returns?" "Yes," and his eyes sparkled at the sound of "mother." "And do you think that the way you have been behaving at school will please her?" The boy burst into tears. The stony heart was touched by the precious word "mother."

There are kindly words. How much do they cost? Not so much as the alabaster box of ointment. "Kind words can never die." They check us when we are tempted to do wrong, and they encourage us when we do right.

Think of Elizabeth Fry visiting prisons and speaking kindly words to the prisoners, many of whom were very debased and sinful. Think of George Müller gathering around him those children in Bristol and speaking kindly words to them, all of whom were without fathers and mothers—orphans. Think of Agnes Weston, the sailors' friend, speaking kindly words to our sailor boys, many of whom in far-off places of the earth cherish and revere the name of their "mother," as they love to call her.

Again, there are Christ's words. These we should learn and love. Said one, "Speak but the word only." Only! Ah, his word is so tender, loving, and forgiving, that we all must hear it. The mother of Jesus, at the feast in Cana of Galilee, said to the servants, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." So, boys and girls, I say to you all—"Do It."

Lambeth Ragged School.—The L. & S. W. R. have recently been empowered to acquire the ground on which the school is built. In view of this it is hoped that the friends of the Society will make it possible for this healthy and vigorous work to be transplanted, in order that none of the numerous agencies which have been built up during the last fifty-five years shall be allowed to suffer. The average number of children attending the schools every Sunday is 929.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, July 28.

True Philanthropy (Gal. vi. 1-10).

WE all have a mission in the world, though we may never be called to cross the sea, or visit distant lands. Christ's command to his servants is, begin with the person next to you. Do not wait to be neighboured, but neighbour somebody. The best way to make the world Christian is to bring the person whom you can most easily influence to the Saviour. All God's great works in the world have commenced, not in committees, but in the consecration and devotion of single persons.

The Apostle indicates three methods of helping people.

1. The Restoration of the Fallen. There are some who go deliberately and intentionally into sin—it is not of these that the Apostle is speaking here, but of those who are overtaken by a sudden gust of temptation, like a ship on an inland lake, down the ravines of which the storm-blast rushes. How often that is the case. How often, as a Christian is pursuing the even tenor of daily life, he is suddenly overtaken by some temptation, and does an act or says a word which leaves a deep and sad mark on his history. David was overtaken by a fault, and so was Peter.

What an agony of remorse ensues! The sinful soul has to bear a heavy burden indeed, with tears and sighs; and too often his fellow-Christians pass him by with averted faces and frowns. No one visits him; no one cares to be seen in his company; no one tries to help him to regain his happier past.

This is not "Christ's law," which we are called to fulfil, but to seek out the erring one, to go after that which is lost, to restore the wanderer, to help him carry his heavy burden. The most spiritual people in the Church must be set to do this work, they alone have the delicacy, the purity, the humility; but even they should consider that they may be tempted, and lapse into the same sin. There are more burdens which must be carried by each of us alone, such as our responsibility to God, our eternal destiny, our personal mission to the world, and the way we perform it. But there are many burdens else, which others can help us bear.

2. The Care of Pastors and Ministers. This is specially a work for young men and women who may constitute themselves into bands of pastors' helps. If all who are being taught in church and Sunday school would only set themselves to communicate with those that teach them, how many a weary soul would pluck up new courage and hope. Communicate money, sympathy, prayer, the grip of the hand, the expression of thankfulness for blessing received.

3. The Ministry of all Men. As we have, therefore, opportunity. These opportunities of doing good are always recurring. At every turn there are those who need a helping hand. "The poor," said our Lord, "ye have always with you." Some child needs to be taken across the crowded thoroughfare, some tired girl needs our seat in the tram, some poor neighbour requires to be looked to, once or twice in a day, till son or daughter return from work, some friend needs a sympathizing ear into which to pour a long story of anxiety and trouble. "Let us do good to all," says the Apostle, "this is the law of Christ. Bear a little of the burden of each, and specially do it for those who belong to the household of God."

This way of life is compared to the sowing of seed by the hand of the husbandman. In fact, every one is engaged in sowing, either wheat or tares, either to the Spirit (i.e., according to his prompting), or to the flesh (i.e., at the prompting of our own natural impulse). For each set of seeds there will be a harvest, either of eternal life or of corruption. Oh that at last we may reap crops of love, and gratitude, and the well-done of Christ. Work with that in view, and be not weary in well-doing! Sow everywhere!

C.E. NOTES.

A society at Erzerum, Turkey, gives up one meeting every month, and divides into groups, each of which holds a meeting in some poor home.

Six months ago a Society was started in a little place called Wittedrift, South Africa, there being no church, only a Dutch school. The society now numbers twenty-three active and nineteen Associate members.

A Dutch Christian Endeavour Society in Cradock, Cape Colony, has divided the town into districts, and puts each of them under the charge of a member, who regularly visits each home with a view to discovering need and supplying help.

A house on Barry Island has been rented by the members of the Barry C.E. Congregational Society for the purpose of giving a fortnight's holiday to some twenty-four little cripples collected from Cardiff, the Rhondda Valley, Newport, and Bristol.

The Sunshine Committee of the St. Thomas' Church of England C.E. Society, Kennington, have given a tea to the cripples of the parish, at which about thirty were present. Addresses were given by the president and vicar, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., and several other friends.

About twenty Endeavourers meet every Monday in the school parlour at Tripoli, Syria. The meetings are conducted in the tongue of the Koran, but in the spirit of Paul. Every Saturday, with brooms and dustpans, they shine up the chapel for Sunday, and put the caretaker's fee into their missionary treasury, for which they raised £5 last year.

There are four native Christian Endeavour Societies in Egypt—one for young men in Alexandria, one in the young men's college in Assiout, one in the girls' boarding school, and one in the girls' day school in Cairo, each with over fifty members. In addition to these there is a Society for English-speaking people in Cairo, and at the present time a drawing-room is filled every Sabbath with young men and women. Italians, Syrians, Armenians, Copts, Hindus, Germans, English, Americans, unite in the one family, and have blessed times of fellowship.

International S.S. Lesson.

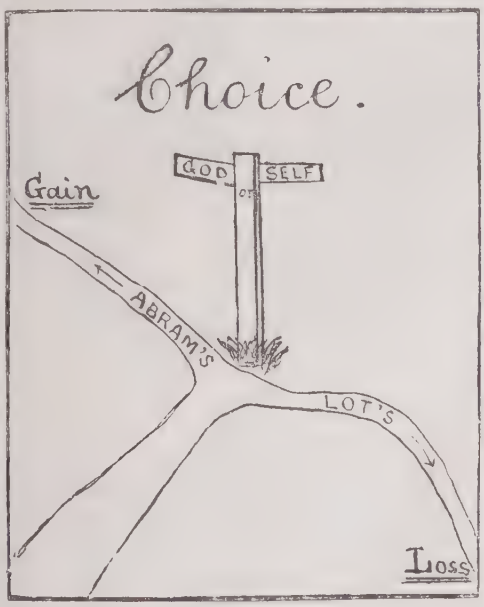
Aug. 4, 1901.

Abram and Lot (Gen. xiii. 1-18).

Golden Text: Matt vii. 12.

Introductory.

IT is a very good thing for us that the ancient books were not written on paper, like ours, but on clay and stone; so that now we can examine the "Oldest Book" and the oldest stone records together, and find they agree. From a tomb in Egypt we get a most interesting picture of a Semitic family coming into Egypt with presents to the king, just as Abram came, and the date is about the same time as Abram's journey, as recorded in the verses following our last lesson (xii. 10-20).



Egypt.

Situated at the north-east corner of Africa, a low lying country, scarcely above sea level, hence it is always going down into Egypt, up to Palestine, which is mountainous (1). It was quite an old country in Abram's time, advanced in learning, commerce, civilization. It was then under the rule of the shepherd kings who had conquered it. It was, and still is, a great corn country, and produces quantities of flax and cotton. The periodical overflowing of its one great river, the Nile, saves it from famines (Gen. xlii. 1), and its "fine linen" was famous (1 Kings x. 28).

Lot.

Abram's nephew—his father Haran having died in Ur—travelled with his uncle. He was evidently a good man, desirous of obeying God (2 Pet. ii. 7 and 8), but selfish and worldly minded. When we remember how very little these early patriarchs knew about God; contrasted with our knowledge, we can see some reason for their mistakes and failings. Lot's great mistake was choosing his home among the wicked and worldly, because of temporal advantages. First he looked, then pitched his tent towards Sodom, afterwards dwelt in the wicked city. A warning especially for the young in choosing their future career and home (1 Tim. vi. 9, 10).

Canaanite and Perizzite.

The origin of the Canaanites is found in Gen. x. 15-20. Canaan means "the low land." The Canaanites inhabited the sea-coast of Palestine and the valley of the Jordan (Num. xiii. 29). They were famous as merchants, seamen, and for artistic skill; worshipped the "Sun-god," addressed as "Baal." The Perizzites were the "villagers," or "agricultural population."

Abram was "Very Rich."

Riches are a great blessing and a great power; but bring peril, temptations, cares, responsibilities. God has a great mission for rich men now as then. Note the contrast between the two rich men in our lesson. To Abram riches brought separation from the world; prayerful trust in God. He visited each place where he had erected an altar (3). Regarding money, see James v. 1-6; Luke xii. 21; and 1 Tim. vi. 17.

Strife or Peace.

"The Lord's servant must not strive" (2 Tim. ii. 24). The peace maker is called the "Child of God" (Matt. v. 9). Refer to Rom. xii. 10; Phil. ii. 4; Matt. vi. 33. "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you," &c. (Rom. xii. 18). But peace must not be maintained by the sacrifice of truth and right. There is such a thing as false peace (Jer. vi. 14). Abram must set a good example to the heathen around.

Jehovah's Approval.

Abram was no loser by his unselfish generosity (Mark x. 29). This promise has been abundantly fulfilled; and the inheritance doubtless extends to future glory. Moreover, Abram's spiritual children are a multitude innumerable (Gal. iii. 29).

Hebron.

About twenty miles south of Jerusalem. "Mamre" was an Amorite, and friendly to Abram (Gen. xiv. 13). Here Abram built his third altar, and made his abode.

Personal Points.

1. Can I be known as Abram's child by likeness to him? 2. Why do I need an altar as Abram did? (Heb. xiii. 10-12).

Country Holidays: A Warning.

SIR,—In The Times and The Standard issues of the 9th inst., an appeal was published asking for contributions towards the "Factory Girls' Country Holiday Fund." The appeal was dated from St. Peter's Rectory, Saffron Hill, and Rev. E. Canney is the chairman of the executive committee. I have for years supported this Fund, and was only last week preparing to send a girl away by its organization as in former years.

In view of this, I invited the girl to spend a day at my house, and inquired how she spent her holiday last summer. She informed me she had been sent by the secretary of the Fund to a Roman Catholic institution at St. Albans, and that on the first Sunday after her arrival she had been taken to the Roman Catholic church. In case she might have confused a church of High Anglican ritual with one of the Roman Catholic faith, I wrote to the secretary asking for an explanation. The reply was that the St. Albans Home (Claremont House) was "managed by Catholic Sisters," and that the secretary was sending several of their own girls (I presume belonging to Saffron Hill parish) there this present week.

Considering that six Bishops of the Church of England are patrons of this Society, and that a rector of the Church of England is its chairman, is it too credulous of me to have taken it for granted that my protégée would have been sent to Church of England people? I write this in the hope that persons who desire, like myself, to subscribe to holiday homes, may first take the precaution of asking if there are not sufficient institutions of our National Church without resorting to those of the Roman Catholic faith.—I enclose my card, and remain, yours faithfully, Hampstead. F. C. P.

Village Children.—This year there are six large Gospel tents, and six caravans at work in connection with the Caravan Mission to Village Children. Not only are the children reached, but their parents also, as each night the young people's service is followed by a meeting for adults. Some 1,500 young converts are written to each month. Scripture Union branches are commenced in the villages whenever possible. In order to extend the operations, it is hoped that a van and tent will in time be found in each county, with a council of Christian friends responsible for the maintenance of the work. Copies of the annual report, giving interesting particulars of the travels and experiences of the missioners in winning the young of our villages and hamlets to the Saviour, will be sent to friends by the organizing secretary, Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Ewhurst, Redhill, Surrey.

Evangelistic.

In Yorkshire Villages.

In connection with Prospect Street Presbyterian Church, Hull, a band of workers have arranged to hold evangelistic meetings in villages near Hull on Saturday evenings during the summer. Most of the workers cycle out. On a recent Saturday twenty were at Keyingham, about eleven miles from Hull. With the help of a portable musical instrument, hearty singing of hymns, solos, &c., they soon gathered the people to hear. The pastor and several others gave brief and telling addresses, which were listened to very attentively. So interested were the people that the meeting was prolonged considerably, and at the close several villagers thanked the friends for coming to tell out the glad tidings in that way. Tracts are distributed, and thus in various ways the good seed is scattered.

Glasgow Exhibition.

Open-air services have been held nightly at various points since the beginning of May, and on Sundays in the Queen's Rooms, which faces the grounds, afternoon and evening services are held. This large public hall has been secured until the end of September for this work. A wide distribution of Gospels and Gospel books has been carried on, and already nearly 400,000 have been circulated. We are indebted to Mr. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission, for large supplies of illustrated Gospels, which are greatly valued. Besides this Messrs. Wright and Bergin, of Bristol, have gifted a large supply of tracts; also the Religious Tract Society. In addition to this at great expense we have prepared special Gospel booklets, tastefully got up as souvenirs, which are gratefully received by the visitors leaving the Exhibition. Inside there are upwards of 7,000 assistants, most of them young, and strangers to the city. These are being kindly visited with a view to their help. The vast number of people visiting the Exhibition is very impressive; special trains bring visitors from London, Liverpool, York, Manchester, Sheffield, Bradford, Leeds, Bristol, Newcastle and other English cities as well as many Scotch towns. We name this in order to call out prayer for this deeply-important work, feeling how dependent we are upon the blessing of God, and that this service may be made a deep and lasting blessing to all parts of the land. We have only yet touched the fringe of the great work, but are hopeful that it may be extended and patiently persevered in. T. McL.

Rev. E. P. Hammond writes that during the past few months he has been busily engaged in various parts of the States, and the fruit of his labours has been specially gratifying.

Mr. Samson Conley is desirous of obtaining the loan of a tent (to hold about 300 persons) for evangelistic work in the villages. His address is 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. Henry Thorne has been busily engaged during the past month in conducting Bible readings, and preaching the Gospel at watering places in Essex, Suffolk, and Kent, and during the past week at Richmond, Staines, Windsor, and Henley-on-Thames.

Rev. John Mitchell (author of "Silver Tongues," "How to Gain the Eye," &c.), is open to conduct special services and missions, free of charge, where his services may be desired. Engagements should be booked early for the coming season. Address Sherwood, Sutton, Surrey.

Writing from Brisbane, Rev. J. Lyall tells of a general mission recently held in that city, under the auspices of the Queensland Presbyterian Assembly. The first week was one of much blessing. There were seekers after Christ, and quickening came to the Lord's people. The daily prayer meeting at 11 a.m. was attended by the workers immediately engaged, and also by many other ministers and friends. Subsequently the movement widened into a simultaneous one of all the evangelical churches of the city.

An earnest band of workers from the local Free Churches, under the direction of Rev. Jesse Mayo, and representatives of the Hampstead Free Church Council, are engaged in a most hopeful effort to preach the Gospel to the throngs of people who frequent the summit of Hampstead Heath on Sunday mornings. The services commence at 11.45. Further particulars concerning this effort would be forwarded to those who desire to help in this much-needed work by the Secretary, Mr. R. E. Welsh, "Felday," Platt's Lane, Hampstead, N.

Mr. Bob Johnson has conducted a three-days mission at the Bell Green Baptist Mission Hall, Lower Sydenham. On Saturday evening last he addressed some hundreds of the workers of the Crystal Palace Gas Works in the open air, and was listened to with respect and attention by many who knew him in his unconverted days in the locality as a "minstrel." On Sunday afternoon Mr. Johnson addressed the men's meeting, and at night gave a stirring address to a crowded audience. At the close some came out on the Lord's side. A number of local friends took part in the mission. F. T. R.

Tent Work.

The Gospel Tent, Oswestry.

Messrs. J. Bollard and W. Pinches are having much blessing in the Gospel tent at Oswestry. The congregations are increasing, and the power of the Spirit is manifested in the preaching and testimony. Several have expressed a desire to learn the way of salvation. On Friday week a party of twenty friends came over from Wrexham to assist in the mission. They accompanied the evangelists round the town, making several stands to speak for Christ, and invite the people to the tent. Subsequently a large gathering assembled in the tent, and a blessed testimony meeting was held. Some of the experiences given by converted drunkards and gamblers, &c., were remarkable, and we magnified the grace of God for such conversions. Large open-air meetings are held in the centre of the town, and it is very encouraging to see the attentive manner in which the people listen to the Word of Life. T. R. C.

London Tent Campaign.

There was a magnificent gathering in the Notting Hill tent last Lord's Day, when Mr. J. S. Harrison spoke powerfully to a large company. Some decided, and there are many others who evidence anxiety of soul. Much interest was created when Mr. Mayo in his address spoke of first religious impressions created by looking from the balcony of Trinity Presbyterian Church at the Communion Service conducted by Dr. Saphir twenty-five years ago. A real work of grace seems in progress in this place.

REV. DR. ELLIOTT.

At Tooting, on Sunday, Mr. Charles Cook spoke on the "Forgiveness of sins," and at the close a very large number expressed anxiety, came forward and gave in their names as desirous of finding Christ. Mr. Cook has written personally to some of those who professed conversion, and numerous workers dealt with the anxious. The local friends are expecting revival times. There are evidences of a very great work having begun in this tent.

At Canning Town, Revs. John T. Vine and J. Bennett Anderson have just concluded a very fruitful week's services. Many souls have been awakened and believers aroused to a state of earnest activity. A number of temperance pledges have been taken, and many inquirers have sought the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Mrs. and Miss Gregory laboured helpfully among the young people. Mr. Bennett Anderson gave an impressive address on Saturday evening on intemperance, gambling, and impurity. He also addressed a men's meeting on Sunday morning. Open-air gatherings have been held every evening during the Mission. The committee have decided to continue the work for another fortnight.

The Divine blessing continues to attend the work carried on at Shepherd's Bush, much to the encouragement of those who are undertaking the labour of organization. Many precious souls have been won for the Master. During the past week Rev. Dr. Elliott's earnest and faithful preaching has been greatly blessed, particularly to young men.

Some particulars of Dr. Elliott's career will be read with interest by many friends. Rev. J. H. Elliott, D.D., pastor of the Thirty-fourth Street Dutch Reformed Church, New York City, has come to England in order to take part in the Tent Campaign. Born in 1853, and educated at Ontario, Canada, he was called to the secretaryship of the Y.M.C.A. in one of the cities of the State of Georgia, U.S. In his early labours he met with remarkable encouragement, and soon became well known as a Bible teacher and evangelist. He was joint author of "Notes for Bible Readings" (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d.), a book which has had an extensive circulation on both sides of the Atlantic. After fifteen years' work in the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Elliott entered the ministry as assistant pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church of Rochester, N.Y. This church had over 2,000 members, and more than 1,900 Sunday school scholars. From a fruitful career in Rochester, N.Y., Dr. Elliott was called to his present charge in New York City. He speedily drew in the young people of the neighbourhood, a good spiritual work is in progress, the prayer meetings being a particularly attractive feature.

Dr. Elliott was for two years president of New York State Christian Endeavour Union, and is in frequent request as a speaker at C.E. Conventions and other religious gatherings. One of his chief characteristics is his vigorous evangelical preaching. The evangelistic methods adopted in his church work have produced remarkable results in conversions and accessions to the church. At a recent Communion thirty-six were received, and of this number all but six were admitted on confession of faith.

Dr. Elliott's wide experience as a Christian worker especially fits him for the service which he is rendering in London in connection with the Tent Campaign. He has a winning personality, has a thorough knowledge of the Bible, and has a burning desire to win souls for the Master.

Mr. Leonard Weaver preached at Shepherd's Bush on Sunday last to full congregations, many people standing outside the tent The subject of the address was "Eternity," and the meeting did not close without many souls deciding to spend it at the right hand of God. One little incident was the means of great encouragement. A man rose and said that he had been praying for his boy for years, and he added, "He has just now surrendered himself to God."

A new convert whose changed life has wrought a marvellous alteration in his home, recently came up to Mr. Weaver at the Shepherd's Bush tent, and, expressing himself in terms that were colloquial and unorthodox, but which conveyed intensity of conviction and feeling, said, "You see these clothes? I might call them 'salvation' clothes. You see these boots? They are 'salvation' boots. You see my wife? I call her a 'salvation' wife. You see my daughter? She is a 'salvation' daughter. I mean by that that I entered the tent here, a year ago, in rags, as a poor drunkard; I accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour, and He has clothed me, and I am now in my right mind. My daughter and wife are properly fed and clothed, and it is all the result of the glorious Gospel. Ah, it is a grand thing to be a Christian!"

The Mission at Woolwich was closed with a praise meeting on the evening of Tuesday, July 16, led by Messrs. Leonard Weaver and William Grove. A large number attended this meeting, mostly those who had been saved during the mission, or had otherwise received definite spiritual blessing. The testimony meeting was a most refreshing, soul-stirring season. In several instance whole families had been brought to the Lord, in many cases husband and wife; and quite a number of young men—six or seven from one place of business. The testimonies were most definite and clear, and the hearts of the workers were full of thankfulness at being privileged to take part in so glorious a work for the Master. On Woolwich Common the unanimous voice of the people present was, "Come back," "Bring the tent back soon." It is hoped shortly to erect a tent at the Charlton end of Woolwich, right in the midst of a densely-populated district.

The great tent at Greenwich tram terminus was opened on Saturday last. Previous to the meeting in the tent, the Deptford brass band, that rendered such efficient help at Mr. William Grove's inspiring mission in Deptford last year, came to give the work in the Greenwich tent "a good send off." "For about an hour previous to the service," writes a correspondent, "we paraded the lowest streets in the district. We must have reached, with song, music, and words, many thousands of men and women, who literally lined the streets, and stood at their doors and windows. There was a good muster in the tent, the ministers of the local churches and most of the leading Christians of the district being present to welcome the evangelist. Mr. Grove spoke on "Peter and John." The Word was with power, and the people are full of expectation that Greenwich will be moved as it has never been before. Notwithstanding the sultry weather, and that the tent is within a few minutes' walk of Greenwich Park, a large crowd gathered. Messrs. Grove and J. T. Vine conducted the meeting. Mr. Vine's address was in the power of the Spirit, and many of the congregation were affected to tears. Several men came right from their seats to the platform and knelt and sought Christ as their Saviour. Quite a number ere the meeting closed professed to have found the Lord. Mr. Vine is at Greenwich every night during the present week.

A reunion in connection with the Brixton Campaign was held at Gresham Chapel (kindly lent) on Tuesday, July 16, when a great number of friends attended at a short notice. There were testimonies from several who had found Christ, and numbers bore testimony to the deepening of their spiritual life. The secretary, on visiting another tent, was delighted to find, singing in the choir, one of the most "troublesome" cases at Brixton, who had eventually found the Saviour. Instances such as this have gladdened the hearts of the workers.

On Sunday, July 14, the second week of the mission at Notting Hill commenced, Messrs. TULLAR and MEREDITH being the evangelists. They were greeted by an audience which filled the tent to overflowing. Night by night the interest deepened, and though there were not so many outward evidences of results, in the way of public acceptances of salvation, yet a solid work has been in progress, and there are many cases of decision. A children's meeting was held each evening last week, excepting Saturday and Sunday, with most encouraging results. A meeting for women only has also been held on Wednesdays, at 3 p.m., this has likewise been attended with much blessing.

At Forest Gate the visit of Mr. CHARLES INGLIS has been the means of much spiritual blessing. On Saturday last the friends invited a number of cripple and poor children to tea, a hearty response was given to the call for assistance, and the gathering presented a sight at once pretty and sad. The meeting was certainly owned and blessed of God. In the evening Rev. ALFRED TILDSLEY, of Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, spoke, and the meeting was one of a most searching spiritual character, a very large number rising for blessing. On Sunday, Rev. Dr. ELLIOTT commenced a week which promises to be one of great blessing.

The following letter, sent to one of the evangelists, is characteristic of the spirit of simplicity and wholeheartedness which is typical of the converts as a whole:—"It may be a joy to you to know that the writer is one who under your faithful preaching found the Loving Friend, who is at all times and in all places very near. I am pleased to say that I am still trusting in Jesus, and, God willing, am going in for the ministry. I was converted in the tent at Plumstead Marshes on September 2 last year. I pray that God will bless all the efforts put forth for winning souls for the Kingdom. The same Jesus I found I can well recommend to all, who, I know, loves all. The text on my conversion night was 'Grieve ye not the Holy Spirit.' Praying that God's blessing may be showered upon you is the prayer of one of Christ's humble children and your sincere friend."

The earnest prayer and personal assistance of the Lord's people are asked for the mission arranged for August 3-31 at Islington. A large tent, capable of seating from 3,000 to 4,000 persons, is to be erected in the spacious grounds of the Church Missionary Society, in Upper Street, Islington (entrance through the Y.M.C.A., 198, Upper Street, N.), and much blessing is expected from this definite effort to reach the masses of unconverted in North London. Mr. Leonard Weaver and other well-known evangelists are expected to take part.

Tent Work in and around Glasgow.

A remarkable tent mission, carried on under the auspices of the Jamestown Branch of the Railway Mission in the Vale of Leven, was brought to a close on Sunday evening, July 7. This is the district in which Mr. Archibald Orr Ewing, now of the China Inland Mission, used to take the lead in evangelistic work, the lead being now taken by Mr. George Prentice, who was for some years in China. The mission in the tent was opened with a conference, when Rev. JOHN MCNEILL gave a striking and characteristic address. Mr. ROBERT LOGAN, superintendent of the Tent Hall, Glasgow; Mr. HUGH PATON, the evangelist of the mission, and others, also spoke.

At the opening service on the following (Sunday) night the tent, capable of seating 300, was crowded to the door, but it was of no use for the three Sundays that followed, neither it nor the public hall proving adequate to hold the numbers who flocked to hear the Word. In the circumstances the use of the Drill Hall, a large and commodious building, having been kindly granted, the Sunday evening services were, after the first Sunday, held in it. On week nights, after the first week, the tent was filled to the door with eager and attentive audiences, and from the very beginning there were cheering results.

In Govanhill, a rising suburb in the south of the city, Mr. J. W. MOODIE, of the Evangelization Society, has been at work since the second week in June in one of the Society's large tents. During the course of the mission many souls have been individually dealt with, and of those spoken to some have made hopeful profession of faith in Christ. The meetings continue till about the end of this month.

An interesting tent mission is also in progress in Thornliebank, a village lying a mile or so beyond the outskirts of the city. The preacher is Mr. JOHN FERGUSON, and his tent, named "The Pioneer Tent," is intended for village work specially. Results of a saving kind are manifesting themselves in connection with the preaching.

The Evangelization Society.

Mr. ALEXANDER CLARK commenced his tent work this year at Stoughton, Guildford, by holding a twenty-one days' mission, being his second visit. It was under some discouragements that his earnest work was carried on, but it would have been difficult to preach the Gospel of Christ more faithfully. Many of God's people were strengthened and stimulated onward by the loving ministry they were privileged to enjoy. Others were led to accept Christ as their Saviour. Another three weeks' mission was afterwards held in the parish of St, Nicholas, Guildford. These services were well attended, especially on Sundays, when many had to stand outside. Representatives of almost every denomination in the town were present, and the congregation listened with close attention. There was abundant evidence that Mr. Clark's earnest message was greatly blessed. H. M.

Mr. SIDNEY VIVIAN has concluded a very helpful tent mission at Bromley, near Dudley, Staffs. For ten successive summers Mr. Vivian has visited the district for this purpose, and none of the missions has been more blessed than that held during the present season. During the erection and opening of the tent much opposition was shown. On the other hand, however, hundreds of interested listeners crowded the tent, and before the first week was over inquirers were dealt with. The evangelist's addresses were admirably clear and simple and full of Gospel truth. We have reason to believe many have been converted to God, among whom are some who were bitter opponents. There is scarcely an evangelical church for miles around but has on its roll of membership the name or names of persons who first saw the light in God's light through Mr. Vivian's missions. The evangelist is now at Nechells, Birmingham. A. J. B.

By arrangement of Rev. HENRY WYATT with the Evangelization Society, a tent mission has been held at Blisworth, extending over eighteen days. The tent (a large one) was crowded on the last two Sundays, and although the men were busy in the hayfields, large congregations have gathered on week nights. The clear and forcible addresses of Mr. CHARLES NOAKES were used by the Holy Spirit in leading believers into fuller blessing, and sinners into the liberty of the Gospel. On the last evening of the mission, Rev. Henry Wyatt presided, and bore testimony to the good work which, under God, had been accomplished. The evangelist then gave an address to the converts, and so concluded a mission which has been a boon to the neighbourhood.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on tent services at Hayling, conducted by Mr. Alexander Clarke, of the Evangelization Society.

That spiritual blessing may accompany a short mission on a hospital boat, and among the fishermen on the North Sea.

On behalf of Gospel meetings in the village of Whitletts, Ayrshire, in the month of August, under the auspices of the Ayrshire Christian Union.

Personalia.

Mr. COLIN YOUNG, of the Wild Olive Graft Mission to the Jews, after much suffering, has had his left eye removed. His address is Friends' Farm, Great Wakering, Essex.

Rev. JAMES A. O'CONNOR, director of "Christ's Mission," New York City, and editor of The Converted Catholic, is, after a residence in America of about thirty years, revisiting Europe in quest of rest and change. He has many invitations, however, to England, Ireland, France, and Holland, and he wishes to get in touch with the German and Austrian movement "Away from Rome."

A New Pledge.—Those interested in a temperance pledge relating to grocers' licences, may obtain a sample from Mr. E. H. Reeman, 31, Upton Lane, Forest Gate, E.

To Drapers' Assistants.—If you are an earnest Christian, a good business man, and have any desire to serve God in a heathen land, you are invited to apply by letter to the Foreign and Colonial Department of the Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, London, W.C., whence information would be sent you of twelve business appointments in India, open to suitable assistants in the drapery trade, who are between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five, and are unmarried. It would be wise to send particulars of your business training.

The Need of the Age.

A VERY helpful study of the office and work of the Holy Spirit has been issued in pamphlet form by Rev. David Mullan, of Dublin—The Need of the Age: Ecclesiastical and Otherwise. (3d. Morgan & Scott.) His special theme is the Pentecostal Baptism, and he shows in instructive detail what this meant in the Apostolic Church: how the Spirit came and what He accomplished. We reproduce the substance of an appendix showing the distinction between the work of the Spirit in regeneration, and the gifts and blessings associated with his indwelling:

THE PENTECOSTAL BAPTISM.

"As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning."—Acts xi. 15.

I.—How He fell on them at the Beginning.

1. AS BELIEVERS—John xiv. 15-17; Acts i. 2-5; ii. 32-47; v. 31, 32; viii. 12, 15, 16; ix. 17; x. 36, 37, 44; xv. 7-9; xix. 1-4; Eph. i. 13.
2. AS A SEPARATE AND DISTINCT BLESSING (see above).
3. AS HE HAD PREVIOUSLY DESCENDED ON CHRIST—Matt. iii. 15-17; Luke iii. 21, 22; Is. lxi.
4. AS HE HAD DESCENDED INTO THE TABERNACLE AND THE TEMPLE—Symbol of the Blessing bestowed even then upon true Believers—Lev. ix. 23, 24; 1 Kings viii. 10, 11; 2 Chron. v. 11-14; vii. 1-3; Num. xi. 29; xxvii. 18; Ps. li. 10-13; Isa. lxi.; Ezek. xxxvi. 27; xxxvii. 9-14.
5. PERSONALLY—John xiv. 16, 17; Acts ii. 4; viii. 29-39; xiii 1-4.
6. SUDDENLY—Malachi iii. 1; Acts ii. 2; ix. 17, 18; x. 44.
7. CONSPICUOUSLY—John xiv. 20; Acts xi. 15; Rom. viii. 15, 16; 2 Cor. i. 21, 22.
8. MANIFESTLY—Acts ii. 1-13, 33; iv. 13-31; x. 44, 45; Eph. i. 13; 1 Thess. i.
9. OVERMASTERINGLY—John vii. 37-39; Acts ii. 2-4; iv. 31-35; Rom. xi. 33; Eph. ii. 5-7; iii. 14-21; 1 Tim. i. 14; 1 Pet. i. 8.
10. ABIDINGLY—John xiv. 16; 1 John ii. 27.

II.—What He accomplished for them.

1. For their Minds—Illumination, Conviction, and Certainty—John xvi. 13; Acts iv. 20; 1 Cor. i. 4, 5; 2 Pet. i. 3; 1 John ii. 20-27.
2. For their Hearts—Sanctification, Assurance, and Rest—Mal. iii. 2-4; Matt. iii. 11-17; John xvii. 17-20; Acts xv. 8, 9; John xiv. 27; Acts ii. 46, 47; Rom. viii. 1-4; xv. 13-16.
3. For their Lives—Enduement with Power—Acts i. 4-8; iv. 33; xiv. 1-3; 2 Cor. ii. 14; Phil. iv. 13.
4. For their Bodies—The Indwelling of the Holy Godhead—John xiv. 17; Acts ii. 4; 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. iii. 16-21.

III.—In their various relations.

1. To God—Oneness—John xiv. 20; xvii. 20-26; 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13; 2 Cor. iii. 16-18; Eph. v. 23-32; 2 Peter i. 4; 1 John v. 20.
2. To One Another—Brotherhood—Acts iv. 32; 1 Cor. xii. Eph. iv. 1-16; v. 27.
3. To the World—Power for its Evangelization—Luke x. 19; Acts i. 8; ii. 41; xiv. 1-3; Rom. xv. 13-23.
4. To Creation—Harmony—Gen. i. 2, 31; Isa. li. 16; lx.; lxv. 17; Eph. i. 7-10; Col. i. 16-20; Rev. iv., v.

In the course of his paper Mr. Mullan seems to teach repeated outpourings of the Holy Spirit. Surely the Spirit has not ceased, and cannot cease to be, outpoured unless Jesus can cease to be glorified. The Spirit is the river of living water which flows from the throne of God and of the Lamb, of which we are to drink that we may be filled with the Spirit. These considerations apart, however, the pamphlet is an earnest plea for personal consecration and submission to the will of God.

Books for the Blind.

IN connection with the National Lending Library for the Blind, 114, Belsize Road, N.W., much good work is done by Christian friends who undertake to write books in Braille. These books have proved a great blessing to individuals as well as to schools, colleges, and other institutions for the blind all over the Kingdom. Carriage is paid on the hampers to those blind people who cannot afford more than the library subscription, and blind writers are also employed in making copies of volumes already produced in Braille by the voluntary helpers. Books in Braille are bulky enough to make carriage a serious item. Friends who desire to co-operate in the work may communicate with Miss Mary Griffiths, The Briars, Sandown, I.W.

London Medical Mission. — Among the numerous agencies in the Metropolis seeking to aid the poor in their suffering the London Medical Mission carries on a useful and extensive work in a district noted for its extreme poverty. The year 1900 was one of trial for the Council, owing to the diversion of public charity into unusual channels, and the clothing-room had a longer period of empty shelves than on any former occasion. The turning of the century found the supplies again coming in better, and clothing more abundant. Gifts are needed still, in order that the balance may be transferred to the right side. It is gratifying to read in the annual report (copies of which may be had from Mr. C. Oakey, 33 and 34, Short's Gardens, Endell Street, St. Giles'):—"Through it all we were receiving greater spiritual gifts. We have seen more conversions than for some time past."

About Books.

DR. JOHN KENNEDY.

SOME months ago we outlined the deeply interesting career of the late Dr. John Kennedy, for many years minister of the historic Stepney Meeting House. We now welcome the story of his useful life—Old Highland Days: The Reminiscences of Dr. John Kennedy; with a Sketch of his Later Life, by his Son, Howard Angus Kennedy. (6s. Religious Tract Society.) Born in the village of Aberfeldy in 1813, John Kennedy enjoyed a Godly upbringing. His father, James Kennedy, was a preacher of the Gospel, a dissenter in a village where dissent was discountenanced. Though forbidden to build a church, James was not to be "silenced;" so in the corner of the village square he put up a modest dwelling, the lower storey of which he devoted to the uses of a place of worship. Thus the manse in which the son, John, was born, was a church as well. From this interesting beginning a charming story is developed. The "Old Highland Days" cover the opening experiences of the young man, and then student life at Aberdeen and Edinburgh. The story is continued in admirable taste by Dr. Kennedy's accomplished son; and the chapters on the Old Stepney Meeting and the work of its devoted pastor are interesting reading. The practical philanthropy and literary performances of Dr. Kennedy, extending over many years, are described, and a glimpse is afforded of an old age that admirably realized John Bunyan's description of the Beulah peace and quiet. In February, 1900, the weary form entered upon such sleep as God gives to his beloved ones. The story of such a man's career cannot but be contemplated with profit; and the pages which Mr. Howard Kennedy modestly styles "pictures of the man and his surroundings," are graceful in style as well as instructive in substance. There are highly finished portraits and other illustrations.

An interesting and unique publication is The World's Cathedrals, reproduced to scale, and printed on fine card in the form of bird's-eye views. (6d. T. Thatcher, 44, College Green, Bristol).

The Way of the Cross, by J. Gregory Mantle, has reached its third edition. It is given forth as a contribution to the doctrine of Christian sanctity, and it is a singularly helpful little book. (1s. nett. Marshall Bros.)

Through the Kentish Hoplands is a manual of the "Field Path Rambles" series by Walker Miles. It is a capital little guide book, comprehensive and explicit, and admirably illustrated. (1s. Taylor & Son, 51, Old Street, E.C.)

A recent publication in the Alliance Colportage Library is Transformed: or the Life of Jerry McAuley, by Abbie C. Morrow—a deeply interesting record of the career of a remarkable man. (Fifteen cents. Christian Alliance Publishing Co., Nyack, New York.)

Among recent publications of Mr. H. E. Marsom, Exeter, the Earnest Words series of eight-page Gospel booklets will be found useful for distribution at open-air meetings and visitation work (6d. per packet of 24). Another series, Earnest Appeals, contains solemn messages to the unsaved (6d. packet of 12; 3s. 6d. per 100).

Brigadier Mildred Duff has written, primarily for the young people of the Salvation Army, Catherine Booth, a Sketch. This acceptable little volume clearly sets forth the salient features of the life of its distinguished subject. Mr. Bramwell Booth, under whose direction the book was prepared, contributes an introduction. (6d. and 8d. 100, Clerkenwell Road.)

Bible Readings on the Inner Life. By Mrs. Penn-Lewis. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) This is a work of special attractions. Every "reading" is the product of much study. Some of them are so long that they may be divided up for several "readings" by workers willing to follow their suggestion. Illustrative Scriptures and brief notes are introduced, and always in a happy and instructive way. Those who want "scaffolding" for addresses, will find much help in this volume.

For the "New Century Leaders" series of biographies Rev. J. Gregory Mantle has written Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A. It was hardly to be expected, perhaps, that the life of one who has responded to the claims of literature, journalism, politics, social and ecclesiastical reform, the preaching of the Gospel, and the directing of a great organization could be justly dealt with in the space at the command of the author. Mr. Mantle has attempted the task, and while the result is little more than a sketch, it is an interesting reflection of the many-sided and busy life of a forcible and successful leader of men. (1s. 6d. Partridge.)

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Dr. Straton, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, preached on Sunday morning at an open-air service in Braddan old churchyard to a congregation of about 10,000 holiday-makers from all parts of the kingdom. He made an appeal on behalf of the Manx Church Sustentation Fund, and the response was close upon £60.

It is with deep regret that we learn that Eaton Chapel, for so many years the scene of the faithful labours of the late Rev. Charles Fox, is to be permanently closed. Rev. Canon Fleming has declined to allow it to be continued as a place of worship under the Church of England in his parish. It is impossible to estimate the blessings which have gone forth from this place. The congregation met for their final reunion at Upper Walsingham on Monday last, when they were addressed by Rev. Dr. Morris from Isa. lx. 18, 19. This was the last gathering of the flock prior to their dispersion. The scene was most touching, and deeply impressive.

Canon Wescoe is leaving St. Thomas', Blackburn, after a fruitful ministry extending over forty years. A brass tablet is to be placed in the chancel of St. Thomas' Church bearing the following inscription: "This tablet was erected in thankful commemoration of the faithful services rendered to his parish by Rev. Canon Wescoe, its first Vicar. For forty years Divine faith blessed him and spared him to be a blessing to those committed to his charge. When age and infirmity compelled him to resign he did so with the mutual regret and respect of pastor and parishioners, yet still united to each other and to the Lord in bonds of everlasting love." Canon Wescoe began his work in the sheds of some cottages, but he quickly erected a church, and in time provided the parish with a noble group of parochial buildings second to none in the town.

The report issued by Rev. Henry Lewis, of Bermondsey, supplies yet another proof that Evangelical churchmen are maintaining a brave warfare against social and moral evils in the larger parishes of London and elsewhere. The difficulties with which Mr. Lewis has to contend may be illustrated by the following passage:—"We have some miles of sordid streets with small houses, each containing the population of a mansion in better-class districts. Cases of nine souls in a room ten feet square; a bed slept in by five persons; a family sleeping in a one-room home with the corpse of an infant in it; fifteen families evicted and their goods thrown out into the open court, where they remained day and night for several days before they could creep into some other overcrowded place; courts with a ground area less than that of many a suburban tennis court, and yet housing at night time from 75 to 150 souls—these are the things which come before us."

Congregational.

The directors of the L.M.S. were greatly cheered at their last meeting by a letter received from a lady who has long been a generous friend of the society, offering to support for five years an additional medical missionary at Neyoor (Travancore).

Writing in the Lyndhurst Road Church Magazine Dr. Horton, referring to his twenty-one years at Hampstead, says:—"This majority of the Church fills me with deep and unutterable emotion. I can feel nothing but unspeakable gratitude to God. Once I should have chosen and desired popularity, a crowded church, rapid and numerous accessions, and all that stir and excitement which come from what the world counts success. Now I should prefer what God has given us."

A "quiet day" was held recently at Withington Church, Manchester, to which the ministers of the city and district were invited. Rev. T. Hooper, Ashton-under-Lyne, presided. At the morning meeting, Rev. J. Kirk Maconachie (Rusholme) read a paper on "The Minister's Problem." The paper was a bright and, at the same time, a searching utterance on the work of preaching. At the afternoon meeting, Rev. W. Hewgill read a paper on "Our Life and Work in the Light of Experience." The gathering, which was of a most helpful character, promises to be an annual institution. About sixty ministers were present.

Baptist.

The church at Lorddon Road, Lowestoft, has unanimously decided to adopt the use of the individual cups for celebration of the Lord's Supper. Glass cups specially constructed for the purpose are being obtained from America at no great expense.

Rev. Leonard Tucker has resigned his professorship at Calabar College, Jamaica, owing to the ill-health of Mrs. Tucker, and has returned to England with the view of undertaking the charge of a Baptist church. On similar grounds Rev. John Muirhead has resigned the secretaryship of the Baptist Union of New Zealand.

The first anniversay services have been held at Lewisham Road Baptist Chapel in connection with the settlement of Rev. E. D. de Rusett. At the communion service, which was an exceptionally large gathering, a number of friends were received into fellowship. Collections were taken towards the erection of a larger mission hall.

Methodist.

Rev. W. Mincher's eighth anniversary at the Camden Town Primitive Methodist Church has been celebrated. Since his appointment the debt on the property has been reduced by £2,000, and the church has greatly prospered.

The handbook and guide to the Wesleyan Conference at Newcastle-on-Tyne has been prepared by Rev. A. L. Fillingham. It is an admirable compendium of useful information, and contains a map of the city, printed in colours.

The Wesleyan General Chapel Committee has sanctioned the erection of new chapels in the following circuits: Walsall, Lincoln (Wesley), Ferndale, Grimsby (George Street), Tooting, Leicester, Sleaford, and Burton-on-Trent. The sitting accommodation of these and several others will be for 6,000 persons.

The official list about to be published would appear to show that the disposition to extend ministerial appointments for a longer term than three years is growing among the Primitive Methodists. The list indicates that 165 special appointments for a prolonged stay have been made. These include eighty-five for a fourth year, thirty-eight for a fifth, eighteen for a sixth, eight for a seventh, seven for an eighth, and several for even longer periods. Rev. T. Jackson is entering upon his eighteenth year at Clapton.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has had a slight recurrence of the attack which befel him at the beginning of the year. This has probably been brought about by the fact that he recently had nine back teeth removed during one week. Although that operation was conducted painlessly, there must inevitably have been a shock to the nervous system. His medical men think that it will be safest and best for him to take six months' holiday. In the meantime, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, will take the Sunday evening as well as the Sunday morning service at St. James' Hall, and the Sunday afternoon Conference will not be resumed.

Presbyterian.

Under the will of the late Mr. George Sturge, the Foreign Missions Committee have just received a further cheque for £20,000, making in all £42,000. At a meeting of the committee, it was agreed to invest the money for the time being, and to refer to the executive the question of the best way of using it.

The aggregate meetings of the Synodical Committees have been held at Regent Square Church. There have been several matters of general interest brought before the committees, and a large amount of routine work has been got through. Since the March meetings there have been several changes in the convenorships. Mr. Robert Wales has succeeded Mr. R. T. Turnbull as convener of the Committee on the Aged and Infirm Ministers' Fund; Dr. Moinet has succeeded Dr. Watson in the College Committee; Rev. Thomas Currie is now joint convener of the Jewish Mission Committee with Rev. Robert Taylor; and Mr. Henry Robson has been appointed to act with Sir George Bruce as joint convener of the Home Mission. The Jewish Mission Committee heard some interesting reports regarding the Whitechapel Mission. Mr. Mackintosh stated that there are fresh faces in the reading-room every night. Twenty-two Jews have recently applied for personal instruction.

Society of Friends.

John Ashworth has returned from his second visit to the Dukhobors in Manitoba. Within two years a large number of these persons have practically become self-supporting on their own land. The communal spirit is strong among them. In two cases it was found that they had constructed bridges without Government aid, and in another case a ferry was established, and in operation free of charge.

J. J. and S. H. Armistead are now at Rorvik, on one of the Vigten Islands. Writing previously from Stjordalen, S. H. Armistead says: "Friends have been very kind to us, sending us tracts, &c. We give them to workmen getting their dinner, people travelling on those very slow trains, and to boatmen, &c. They are always gladly taken, though with rather a doubtful look, till they see they are in Norsk; then their faces light up with pleasure, and they hold out their hands for a hearty shake, saying, "Täk."

At the London and Middlesex quarterly meeting the report of a committee respecting possible use of the Devonshire House premises on first-day evenings was considered. As an experiment a series of meetings is to be arranged for the late autumn or early winter, at which addresses on religious subjects by well-qualified Friends will be given. Devonshire House Monthly Meeting is asked to make such arrangements with respect to the small meeting for worship usually held at half-past six, as will allow of the new experiment being thoroughly tried.

The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers has been held at the Sunday School Union House, Old Bailey, E.C. The report shows that during the year £837 were distributed among seventy aged and infirm ministers, a decrease of twelve grants as compared with the number reported for the previous year, this being due chiefly to an exceptionally large number of deaths among beneficiares. Numerous applications are, however, already coming in, and the claims on the Society for the ensuing year promise to be large. The secretary is Rev. P. G. Scorey, Gibbons House, Billingshurst, Sussex.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged seventy-nine, Mr. T. T. Ball, of Chesterton. Mr. Ball rendered whole-hearted service to Baptist causes, and took an active interest in the erection and maintenance of village churches in the district.—Mr. JOHN EVANS, M.A. He was a leading deacon in the Calvinistic Methodist Church, Criccieth.—The Presbyterian congregation at Grimsby has suffered a severe loss in the death of Mr. JOHN FISHER, chief constable of the borough. He had wrought many much-needed reforms during his short tenure of office.

Lavender Bag Mission. — Miss E. Alice Puckle, The Hollands, Langton, Tunbridge Wells, writes: "Will friends kindly help us again this year with lavender? We sent hundreds of little bags away last year, each one with a text card attached, to the sick people in hospitals at home and abroad. These little gifts are much appreciated. We have had numerous letters from South Africa, India, Gibraltar, &c., telling us how eagerly the bags are received. The sick and wounded soldiers in South Africa have been so thankful to get these bags. The scent of lavender reminds them of home, and the texts give many opportunities for the Army Scripture Readers and others to speak a word in season to sin-sick souls. From all sides we get requests, 'Do send us more lavender-bags.'"

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

Keswick Convention. We give this week an extended report of the Keswick Convention. Other particulars are retained for next week; also further notes of some of the very helpful addresses that were delivered. The meetings for mission testimonies, and in support of foreign missions, special and general, were among the most remarkable of the entire week. Nothing is more hopeful, or possesses stronger evidence that God is near to bless his whole Church, than the increasing interest in the great mission fields of the wide world. By some, grave fears have been entertained that recent events in China and South Africa would set back and hinder the cause of missions. The enthusiastic but quiet interest of a very practical character displayed at Keswick, was most reassuring.

The Royal Declaration. The great Protestant Demonstration, held on Tuesday evening in St. James' Hall, represented a mighty volume of public opinion opposed to any such tampering with the Bill of Rights as Romanist agitators have of late been demanding. We are glad to believe that the correspondence in our columns during recent weeks has done much to make the issue clear; and in view of the strong expression of opinion from all quarters, it is hoped that the Government will take a wise course in the matter of the Royal Declaration, and "let well alone." The Church Association, by which the great meeting was organized, has done nobly in the education of public sentiment, and the impressive list of supporters of its position (which is also ours), of standing by the formula which has served so well for two centuries and more, should exercise influence in high quarters as well as among the common people.

Semper Eadem. Mr. Richard Bagot, himself an influential Romanist, gives a reminder in one of the leading monthlies to those who forget that the Vatican is the head, and not the tail, of the Roman Catholic body. He points out that while Rome is crying for toleration in this kingdom, she remains ever and invariably intolerant. His illustrations are as forcible as they are striking, for Mr. Bagot is an able and skilful controversialist, but the wonder remains that, as the arguments are all against Rome, Mr. Bagot still remains in that fold. After a reference to the Vatican intimation, after the death of Queen Victoria, that it is a mortal sin for a Romanist to enter any but a Roman Catholic place of worship, and to the cry for an amendment of the King's Declaration, he gives a passage from the Civilta Cattolica, an inspired organ of the Vatican:—

> Knowing and holding firmly as an article of our holy faith that the Apostolic Roman Church is the only way of salvation, into which everyone who does not enter shall perish in the deluge, we cannot abstain from condemning the theories of toleration. . . . For these reasons, therefore, . . . the Protestant king or queen who has lived or died separated from the Catholic Church may not participate in sacred things in common with faithful Catholics. He may not be acknowledged by the Catholic Church after death, nor repose in holy ground.

It is scarcely surprising that after the true mediæval ring of this passage, Mr. Bagot should see in the King's Declaration "a very necessary pledge on the part of the Sovereign of this country to protect his kingdom from a repetition of past abuses of a religious body, claiming at the same time to be a foreign Power;" and that he should consider its existence "due to the political abuses of that Church which has never ceased to strive for political supremacy while nominally fighting for the cause of its faith."

A Generous Offer. In view of the increasing custom on the part of ministers to give short sermonettes to the young people of their congregations on Sundays, and also the spread of meetings for children and young people, Rev. John Mitchell, author of Silver Tongues (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott), is devoting a limited number of copies to the following purposes: (1) Two hundred clergymen or ministers may each obtain a copy, free, on application to the publishers (if sent by post, 3d. extra must be enclosed with application). (2) One hundred and fifty Sunday-school teachers, class leaders, or evangelists, may each have a copy for 1s. (postage 3d. extra). We can commend the book as a very helpful and suggestive volume of short talks with young people upon every-day subjects and objects, from which speakers will derive material for many occasions.

The Children's Bill—Dropped! The friends of reform, and all who love little children, will find it hard to forgive the Government for including in the list of "dropped Bills" that for regulating the sale of intoxicants to children under sixteen years of age. The Bill was one so entirely in line with the true interests of humanity, that no one who was not foolishly prejudiced, or connected in some way with the sale of alcoholic drinks, could have found fault with its provisions. The extraordinary failure of every attempt to reform the drink traffic under this and the last Governments is one to be deeply deplored. This could not have happened if the country at large had been in earnest. The words of Matt. xviii. 6, 7, need careful pondering by the whole nation in view of the facts brought to light in connection with this Bill.

The Temperance Crusade. The Twentieth Century Temperance Crusade is quietly but surely gaining a hold among the Churches and the people. While organizing methods are duly recognised, a special stress is laid upon the spiritual necessities of the work. In connection with this Rev J. Landel Jones writes:—

> Let the spiritually-disposed members of the Churches and Temperance Societies group themselves in threes and fours to meet once a week for half an hour and pray for one specific object, viz., the overthrow of the Drink Traffic, and the conversion of those directly connected with the trade. These groups may further resolve themselves into a prayer union, and fix a certain time every day, when special intercession be made on the same lines.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in earnestly commending Mr. Jones' suggestion, says:—

> It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of concentrated united prayer. If those who can do little else could only wait on God continually, and if weekly prayer circles could be formed in private homes to plead with God on behalf of the victims of the drink crave, who could estimate the result?

Substitutes for the Public-House. There is no doubt that one of the elements of attractiveness in public-houses is the social atmosphere provided to any chance stranger who may drop in. How to provide this in another way is a problem that is exercising the minds of American temperance reformers, and is the subject of a volume on "Substitutes for the Saloon," by Mr. Raymond Calkins. This writer contends that nothing effective can be done to counteract the public-house unless this side of it is provided in some other way. The public halls that are being erected in the great cities of America, and especially in the vicinity of slums, constitute a great step in advance. They are meant to be centres of social life in the neighbourhood; and contain common drawing-rooms, &c., into which any one may freely enter. A practical study of this subject from the British standpoint would be of great service at the present crisis in the temperance movement.

Behind the Shutters. The compilers of the Report of the Lords' Select Committee on Early Closing have failed to distinguish between two essentially different things, viz., early closing, as distinct from the hours of labour in shops. Without legislative protection of the male and female assistants in shops after closing time, there may be protracted hours of work with closed shutters, as is only too often the case at present.

The Promise of Evil. The great question of the housing of the poor is apparently being permitted to drop out of view, yet the tenement house is day by day becoming more and more potent for harm in the direction of vice and crime. The young criminal of our police courts is almost invariably the ordinary product of these hotbeds. It has been said that the slum tenement dweller lives a life "as logical as it is miserable." We may cry down heredity and environment, but amid such awful surroundings of filth and darkness, and poverty and rags, little is possible to the unhappy creatures but vice and crime. One cannot contemplate the awful child-life in these crowded tenements without seeing in it the most startling menace to our civilization of both moral and physical contagion. Yet we are allowing them to drift into the darkness of the night because there are some problems of political economy in the way.

A Free Church Manifesto. We have received a manifesto which all Free Church ministers in London and throughout the country, who can agree to its proposals, are asked to sign. The Manifesto expresses the earnest desire for peace which is felt by all, and says:—

> We hail with great satisfaction the following resolution, agreed to without dissentient, at a meeting of Free Church ministers held in the Memorial Hall, London, on Friday, July 12, at which all shades of opinion were represented:—"This meeting is of opinion that the time has come when the strength of the Christian Church should be directed towards a constructive policy of peace."

No attempt is made in the document to discuss the merits of the conflict. But to lay down principles on which a settlement is to be effected, without defining the cause of the trouble, must be ineffective. From the tone of the manifesto it might be concluded that each party was equally right or equally wrong. But that is not the judgment of the large majority in Great Britain and her colonies, whose growing opinion points clearly to a result which is not contemplated in this manifesto. Indeed, the parties to it were not sufficiently agreed among themselves to make their utterance other than colourless, and therefore powerless. The British people everywhere are nearly unanimous in their perception that there is only one way of avoiding a peace which is no peace, and of securing a settlement which will be right, and therefore best, for British, and Dutch, and Native, and which, by the good hand of God upon us, will be permanent.

The Demoralization of War. One of the strongest reasons, though an indirect one, for bringing the war to a righteous conclusion, is the demoralizing effect it has on the morale of the two nations. The "canons" of war are strict enough within their limits; but they are ruinous to the moral instincts of the combatants. For war means the justification of all kinds of deceptions; false sallies, misleading despatches, diplomatic evasions, —these are but the fringe of the multifold moral subterfuges that come in the wake of war. It is also ruinous to the sympathetic nature, as may be seen in the violent contrast between the thrill of horror with which news of the first losses on both sides were received, and the stolid feeling with which the teeming casualty lists are now read every morning at the breakfast-table. The brutalities of "mafficking" were almost more tolerable than this mood of indifference to human life which long familiarity with the losses of war tends to breed in the minds of even sympathetic people.

Congregational and Baptist Reunion. There is an interesting exchange of opinions going on among the leaders of the Baptist and Congregational Churches as to the possibility of so "compromising" on the dividing question of the "objects and mode of Baptism" as to make real corporate union possible. On such a vital subject the great point is to realize clearly the issues at stake. Any "compromise" which would involve tampering with the real convictions of either side, any promotion of union for the sake of union which would endanger the absolute authority of the will of Christ, so far as it can be ascertained or inferred from Scripture, would only leave a legacy of weakened faith and uncertain doctrine behind it in the "United" Church. Union is a good thing, but not at the price of principle. There is already enough union to ensure brotherliness of feeling on both sides.

Protestant Revival in Austria. Taken in conjunction with the reaction in France, where the Reformed faith has been adopted by 100 Romish priests, the fact that in the past six months no fewer than 6,148 conversions from Romanism are reported as taking place in Austria, of whom 2,538 are Bohemians, is of the highest significance. The dissent which led up to the Reformation of the sixteenth century, was born and cradled in Bohemia. There, opposition was manifested long before Northern Europe roused itself in protest; but, by the rise in Jesuitism and by internal reforms, the Church of Rome managed to retain its hold upon the central belt of Europe, including France and Austria. Now, across this great tract of country, simultaneous signs are appearing which give indication of a fresh, forthcoming struggle for freedom from the tyranny of the Papacy. What far-reaching issues may not these events betoken! What may not the twentieth century have in store for downtrodden and restless humanity, if but enlightened Christians avail themselves of their golden opportunities, and discharge with fidelity and courage their imperative duties!

"Christian Science" Absurdities. The North American Review has a scathing exposure of the views of Mrs. Eddy, who denies the most elementary facts of physiology in her anxiety to prove the independence of mind over matter, and puts a premium on parental carelessness in the upbringing of children. She goes so far as to account for the wounding of 124 and the death of twenty-six persons in a railway accident on the ground of terror!

The fear of dissevered bodily members, or a belief in such a possibility, is reflected on the body in the shape of headache, fractured bones, dislocated joints, and so on, as directly as shame is seen in the blush rising to the cheek. This human error about physical wounds and colics is part and parcel of the illusion that matter can feel and see, having sensation and substance.

Logic and physical decency respectively are outraged by such remarks as these:—

Because the muscles of the blacksmith's] arm are strongly developed it does not follow that exercise did it, or that an arm less used must be more fragile. The condition of the stomach, bowels, food, and clothing is of no serious moment to your child. Your views regarding them will produce the only result they can have on the health of your child. The daily ablution of an infant is not more natural or necessary than to take a fresh fish out of water and cover it with dirt once a day that it may thrive better in its natural element.

Creed and Greatness. A French professor, writing on the genesis of great men, comes to some startling conclusions as to the comparative effect of Roman Catholicism and Protestantism in stimulating the forces that go to make greatness, or at least, to help great men to realize themselves. Comparing Switzerland and the French-speaking Catholic Cantons with those that are Protestant, he finds that the three reformed Cantons have produced 147 men of letters, of whom thirty-five were of conspicuous talent, while the Catholic districts have only produced eight. Taking the whole French-speaking populations of the world, it appears that 10 per cent. of the Frenchmen of letters have been Protestants, a fact whose significance can be rightly gauged only when we remember that Protestants have never been more than 2 or 3 per cent. of the population. Another interesting and significant fact is that nearly one-third of the Protestant men of letters have been the sons of pastors. All this throws a flood of light on the effect of Romanism in repressing and stultifying the natural powers of the mind.

The Secret of Endurance. Visitors to Paris will have noticed in front of the Eglise de L'Oratoire a marble group representing the Huguenot persecution, together with a Bible opened at the eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, from which these words are extracted:—"He endured as seeing Him who is invisible." It is a fine sermon in marble upon the secret of fidelity and endurance, and we need it preached to us to-day, when the conditions of life make it increasingly hard to endure in the good course. Christian men and women who are really seeking to do God's will, meet with many rebuffs both from their professed friends and their avowed foes. It is disheartening to encounter so much indifference towards great social and human questions on the part of people from whom we have a right to expect every assistance, and it is discouraging to find members of the Government seeking for every obstacle to put in the way of reform which is imperatively needed. We need to endure, and the open secret of endurance is to have the inner vision of God before our souls. That will prevent us from fainting, or recover us from fainting if we have fallen. The eyes that see only the shifting kaleidoscope of refractory human life will soon ache and close; but the eyes that see God over all will look to the end when God shall be all in all.

"The Best Policy." There is a fashion in proverbs as in everything else, and the old adage that "Honesty is the best policy" has for some reason fallen upon evil times. It is not now fashionable, as it was a generation ago, to quote it often and with thankfulness, and impress it upon young people beginning life as an axiom of social ethics. Perhaps after Mr. H. G. Chapman's recent prose-poem on the "Progress of Honesty" in the World's Work there will be a renewal of interest and faith in it. The writer shows how invaluable a commercial asset a high reputation for honourable dealing is to any man in the modern business world, and how the principles of fair play are really winning their way to supremacy in spite of the ever-increasing complexity of our social system. He concludes with the following summary of the situation:—

How can we avoid the conclusion that the business community is something better than a pack of wolves preying on their fellow men and on each other by deceit and hard-heartedness and all manner of evil? The man who says that he cannot succeed in business because he is too honest is a whiner and a coward, and dares not face his own real faults. Business, to-day, is honesty.

On The Delectable Mountains.

We walk at large, released and free,
From Doubting Castle's dreary cell,
No captives of the night are we;
The day hath dawned, the shadows flee,
And all within us wakes to tell,
"He doeth all things well."

Our Leader's strong and tender hand
Sustains us in the upward road;
We journey through Immanuel's land;
We climb the hills whose slopes command
Fair glimpses of the blest abode
Where we shall rest with God.

The shepherds and their flocks are here,
In peaceful tent and quiet fold;
Sweet fellowship and holy cheer
Fill all the fragrant atmosphere,
And lo! our gladdened eyes behold
The very gates of gold.

The distant crests are bathed in light,
Far downward lie the misty vales;
Of storm and strife no sound or sight
Disturbs this ever tranquil height;
Here unbelief in vain assails,
And comfort never fails.

No passing dream, 'tis substance all,
This earnest of the bliss to come—
This taste of love's high festival
Sent from the King's own banquet-hall,
Where, under heaven's resounding dome,
The pilgrims gather home.

Then what if ere our journeys cease
Dark clouds and conflicts intervene?
Such antepast of perfect peace,
Assures us Christ's transfigured face
Shall in yon holy mount be seen,
With ne'er a shade between.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 22 TO 27.

(FROM OUR OWN REPRESENTATIVES.)

KESWICK Convention has come; we were going to add "and gone," but that would be a thoughtless statement. The meetings of the Convention have been held, but the spirit of the gatherings remains—memories of happy fellowship, recollections of the instruction unfolded, and spiritual joys and experiences originating in the course of days of blessing in Lakeland during last week. The influences of the Convention remain; and the Divine Spirit, who brings to remembrance the things of Christ, will during coming days and in many lands, recall the counsels and appeals that were delivered from many lips, in the course of the Convention, making them increasingly fruitful to the glory of God.

The attendance at the Convention was very large. Some say the visitors were more numerous than ever; the more cautious say they were as many as ever. Thousands of people arrived by rail, and stayed in the little Cumberland town; many others found lodgings in the neighbourhood, and walked in day by day. There were some hundreds of missionaries present, representing various fields in all the continents; other Gospel ministers were present in large numbers. Among the many who attended for the first time were a goodly group of Christians representing Continental Churches, and the English-speaking communities of the New World.

It was a pleasure to meet many old friends; here and there was to be found one who had attended every Convention from the first, held twenty-seven years ago; there were more who could say that they had been present twenty, fifteen, or ten times. The occasion was one of blessed fellowship; the rich and the poor met together, the strong and the weak, those having ecclesiastical importance and those having none. Nothing was said of Church or Dissent; distinctions and differences were as much as possible out of sight and out of mind.

"ALL ONE IN CHRIST JESUS."

As usual, the meetings are very numerous—fourteen daily, all told. This number includes Prayer Meetings and Bible Readings, gatherings of ministers and young men, ladies and girls. While the strength of the Convention may lie with the large meetings, to many, no doubt, the smaller meetings have a peculiar attraction. There were several new speakers, and the accessions brought breadth to the platform—not breadth of doctrine, but of practical outlook. Without exception, the new teachers were received with sympathy, and generally they made a very favourable impression.

The Morning Prayer Meetings, beginning at seven o'clock, were seasons of refreshment to many. To those who know the earnest devotion of many who attend the Convention, it will occasion no astonishment to learn that the body of the large tent was generally well filled. The morning watch is part of the life of large numbers of Christians even in these modern days of strenuous endeavour and multiplicity of engagements and concerns; and in holiday conditions, surrounded by like-minded friends, it was comparatively easy to be among those who thus sought the Lord, as it were at break of day. Mr. Head presided over these gatherings, and the addresses were delivered by Revs. W. H. Griffith Thomas, W. Darlow Sarjeant, J. Gregory Mantle, and the Bishop of Mombasa (Right Rev. Dr. Peel).

The General Meetings in the Eskin Street tent, morning and evening, were attended by large congregations. In this tent afternoon gatherings were held, three days to hear mission addresses, and once to consider the general subject of the Convention. The speakers in this tent, with their subjects of address, are:—

Rev. F. B. Meyer: How to Hear God's Voice (1 Sam. iii.); The Conviction of Undoneness (Isa. vi.). Dr. Elder Cumming: The Broken Spirit (Psa. li. 17); "The Lord Keep Thee" (Num. vi. 24). Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe: The Consolations of God (Job xv. 11); Loyalty to Christ (2 Sam. xv. 19-21; Matt. xxvi. 36-56); The Call of Love (Sol. Song iv. 8). Rev. Evan H. Hopkins: Heart Searching (Psa. cxxxix. 23, 24). Rev. J. Gregory Mantle: Communion with God (Hos. ii. 21, 22). Rev. E. W. Moore: "Make Jesus King!" (Matt. vi. 10). Dr. John Smith: The Prophet's Purpose and the Seraphs' Song (Isa. v. and vi.). Rev. James Mursell: The Consecrated Life (Rom. xii. 1). Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas: "Here am I" (Isa. lviii. 9 and other scriptures). Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant: Constraint and Surrender (Matt. xiv. 22-33). Rev. John Brash: Honour and Responsibility (Matt. v. 14). Rev. George Wilson: Obedience to the Heavenly Vision (Acts xxvi. 19). Rev. S. A. Selwyn: The Life of Victory (Isa. lxi. 3).

In the Skiddaw Street tent there was a General Meeting every evening. The speakers and their subjects were:—

Rev. E. W. Moore: Joshua's Call to Israel to Sanctify Themselves (Josh. iii. 5). What is Sanctification? (1 Thess. v. 23). Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence: Advancement in the Christian Life (Eph. iv. 14). Prebendary Webb-Peploe: The Blessing of Faith

REV. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

From Photograph by Mr. G. P. Abraham, Keswick.

(Luke i. 45). Rev. H. B. Macartney: The Source of Blessing (John vii. 37, 38). Dr. Elder Cumming: The Grace of Forgiveness (Luke xvii. 3). Dr. John Smith: The Mystery of God (1 Cor. ii. 1, 2, R.V.). Rev. Evan Hopkins: The Secret of Conscious Experience (1 John ii. 20). Rev. F. S. Webster: The Rising and Healing Power of the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. iv. 2, R.V.).

The last of the General Meetings, on Friday evening, were remarkable gatherings. The tents, of course, were thronged, and the proceedings throughout were of a solemn character. With the consciousness that another Convention, with all its privileges and opportunities, was about to close, all hearts were stilled, and subdued minds and yearning souls waited before God for Him to make known his will and purpose. At Eskin Street, Prebendary Webb-Peploe was the speaker, while at Skiddaw Street the addresses were given by Revs. F. S. Webster and E. W. Moore. In each tent the power of the Spirit's presence was manifest, and many will look back with hallowed memory to the gatherings as seasons of refreshing. Others will date their conversion to the meetings, for many rose to acknowledge that they had entered into the joy of Christian discipleship.

The General Meetings were presided over by Mr. A. A. Head and General Hatt-Noble. At other gatherings the chair was occupied by Messrs. W. B. Sloan and Eugene Stock, Dr. Wm. Ferguson, Revs. S. A. Selwyn, J. H. Battersby, J. J. Luce, F. Paynter, E. H. Hopkins, E. W. Moore, E. L. Hamilton, and Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

The Bible Readings held each morning covered a wide field of practical teaching, although they were in few hands. In the Eskin Street tent Rev. Hubert Brooke delivered four addresses, based on 1 Peter ii. 10:—(1) A Chosen Generation, (2) A Royal Priesthood, (3) A Holy Nation, (4) A Peculiar People—"that ye should show forth the praises," &c. These were forcible and timely utterances, and we hope in future issues to give notes of them.

The Skiddaw Street tent Bible Readings were by—Mr. Meyer, who dealt with the Need of Spiritual Discernment (Heb. iv. 12); Dr. Cumming, whose subject was the Mind of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 26, 27). Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave two Bible Readings:—The Science of Salvation (Rom. vi. 12, 16, 19), and Christ our Life and Law (Rom. vii. 22-25).

The attendance of young people was very large. There were (as already intimated) special meetings for young men and girls, and the interest in them was very marked. Keswick presents many sights during Convention week, but none more worthy of remark than the presence of young people. The movement from meeting to meeting affords abundant proof of earnest desire, while the serious bearing, combined with restrained pleasure, of the company, is evidence that, in spite of more general observations, God has a seed to serve Him among the young life of to-day. It must have filled many hearts with joy to see the young men and women, not only sitting under instruction designed to prove a blessing to them, but at the various after-meetings in large numbers standing up in token of their desire that God should possess their hearts and rule their lives.

THE KESWICK MISSION.

The annual meeting of the Keswick Mission was held on Wednesday afternoon in the Eskin Street tent. There was a goodly attendance, and contribution envelopes were given to friends as they entered the tent. After a song of praise, Mr. Eugene Stock led in prayer. General HATT-NOBLE presided, and in a few words commended the work to the prayerful sympathy of Christian people.

The accounts were presented by Mr. HEAD, treasurer. It appeared that during the year £1,464 2s. 8d. was received, of which £210 0s. 9d. was, at the request of donors, passed on to other missions.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT

was read by Rev. J. Harford-Battersby, Secretary. It appeared that during the year the Council had steadily sought to enter every open door which the Lord set before it. The main items were ranged under two heads:—

I. The missionaries supported by the Fund have been faithfully at work in India, China, South Africa, and Egypt. The Council has much pleasure in announcing that Rev. T. and Mrs. Walker, of Tinnevelly, have been added to the list of foreign missionaries supported by the Mission Fund. Mr. Walker is well known in India as a promoter of conventions at the hill stations where Europeans congregate in hot weather, and Mrs. Walker is a true helpmeet in this as in all else. By God's mercy Dr. Whitfield Guinness and Mrs. Forde were preserved from massacre during the recent troubles in China, and safely reached the coast. Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael and Miss Eva Carmichael, Miss Luce (hon.), and Dr. A. C. Hall, have been preserved in health and able to do good work. Miss Fugill has returned with much joy to her work in Japan. Miss Barry has completed another year of service among the Roman Catholics in Dublin. Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Green have returned home on furlough for much needed rest and change. The Council is glad to welcome them to Keswick this year. Miss Townsend has not yet been able to return to the mission field.

II. Special missioners have this year visited China and the Continent. Rev. Barclay F. Buxton, our honorary missioner in Japan, visited Shanghai towards the end of last year, and took part in a remarkable series of meetings, on which God's blessing conspicuously rested. No sooner had he left, than Mr. Walter Sloan, the secretary of the China Inland Mission, and a member of our Council, arrived. The Council, before he left England, made a grant to defray his expenses in connection with any conventions which he might be able to hold, and it is good to know that "the Lord worked with him and his fellow-workers, and confirmed the word with signs following." How blessed a privilege that Keswick has thus been able, through these two brethren and through friends on the spot, to minister comfort and encouragement to our sorely tried brethren and sisters in China! Revs. F. B. Meyer and C. G. Moore spoke at the Blankenburg Convention in August, 1900, and Rev. F. S. Webster took part in the North German Convention, which this year was held at Wandsbek, in June. Another member of our Council, Rev. F. B. Meyer, at the invitation of Mr. W. R. Moody, visited the United States in March and April of this year, and found God's people everywhere with prepared hearts, ready to receive the Word. With regard to the future, the Council, in response to very warm and urgent invitations from Canada, has arranged that Revs. F. S. Webster, John Brash, and W. Moffat should hold a series of conventions in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, and other Canadian towns in September and October next. The Council asks the earnest and persevering prayers of God's people for an abundant blessing upon this deputation. The Council is also anxious to meet the wishes of friends in Jamaica by sending a speaker to take part in the convention now held annually at Mandeville, in that island. Speakers will, it is hoped, be able as before to attend such conventions on the Continent as have been mentioned above.

The report also stated that the Council had this year doubled its grant to the fund for assisting missionaries to the heathen to attend the Convention. Mr. Head followed with some account of the new tent in Skiddaw Street. The tent itself, with poles, &c., was presented by one lady. There have been many additional charges, in the purchase of fittings, putting in electric light, &c., and it is hoped to provide a building in which to store it, also to make needful alterations in the land. About £600 is required to cover the estimated cost.

REV. F. S. WEBSTER

was the first missioner speaker. Four years ago he, with others, visited Canada, and rejoiced in the fruits of missions then held. He is looking forward with much interest to his approaching visit in company with Revs. J. Brash and W. Moffat. Speaking of his recent visit to Hamburg, he described remarkable Christian Endeavour meetings. The Wandsbek Convention was a very blessed time. The subject was, "From Egypt to Canaan," and great cordiality characterized the proceedings. The flow of free prayer was very striking, females as well as males taking part. He had returned impressed with the obligation of Great Britain in regard to Gospel teaching. Everywhere people regard Britain as the land of the Bible, and from all quarters—in the Old World and the New—they are looking to England for instruction in the spiritual life. On the Continent there are Sunday customs that sadly interfere with the maintenance of a high standard; and the prevalent Romanism vitiates the moral atmosphere. In the New World there is large opportunity, and we are expected to enter the door. To be well equipped and ready, we must, in the spirit of the old Puritans, maintain our hold of God's Word, and our regard for his holy day.

MR. CYRIL GREEN,

from Pondoland, South Africa, made a brief statement: Eleven years ago, here at Keswick, I received my call for the foreign field, and my wife received hers at much the same time. Now we thank God for the way He has led us, and for his faithfulness to us while in Pondoland. We work in connection with the South Africa General Mission. We had to begin at the beginning; we found the Pondos low, degraded, selfish, devilish people, not hungering for the Word of God. Witchcraft is one of Satan's strongholds among them. The only desire of the people seems to be to eat and sleep, and please their senses. To go in our own strength was out of the question; we could only go while resting on the power of God. Before we went to Pondoland, we never knew the power of the devil as we have there seen it; and we never knew the power of God as we have learned it there. I gathered the children for the Sunday school; and we went after the people—sometimes it meant a long ride or walk to find one or two. When Christ enters any heart there is change; but when a Pondo woman is converted—becoming clothed and in her right mind—there is a marvellous alteration; and one sees a radiance of face and joy of heart that contrasts wonderfully with the past and its abominations. In spite of great difficulties, souls are being set free from Satan, and they are in turn testifying to the power of God in heathen surroundings.

MR. WALTER SLOAN

described his journey to China. Details of pleasant intercourse during the voyage out introduced a story full of interest. Arrived in Shanghai, Mr. Sloan found a large body of missionaries; and it was his privilege to address a meeting originally called to consider missionary methods. Left free as to topic, he dealt with Heb. xii. 1, 2, with special reference to the tragic events that had been transpiring in the northern provinces. He was afterwards asked to address a series of meetings; and God's Spirit worked in many hearts. With two Bible readings every morning, and meetings at night, he had a heavy time as to work, but by the goodness of God he was relieved from any sense of strain. At various places further inland, smaller gatherings were held. It was his pleasure to see Elder Chü from Shan-si, a man of deep spiritual experience. A recent letter contains the information, received from him, that the new governor of the province is doing his utmost to protect Church members. Another extract from correspondence told of churches established in the faith, neither members nor catechumens showing any signs of going back. In fact, in some parts the churches make collections for the help of the poor and starving in other districts. As to the missionaries, they are not discouraged. They have given themselves to the work; and they are prepared to give their lives also. Mr. Sloan remarked that for some years to come there is likely to be difficulty in China. A lady worker told him that she had never been in fear in China until recent troublous times; but from what she had now seen of a Chinese riot she felt quite unable to look a Chinaman in the face. Yet she said nothing to suggest that she did not intend to continue her work. In conclusion, Mr. Sloan told of an anxious moment on voyage, when it appeared probable that the ship would founder. It was observed, however, that the second-class passengers, a number of them missionaries and missionaries' wives, were singularly calm. There was no sign of excitement. Personally he was greatly sustained by the Lord's Word: "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."

Rev. Dr. Broughton, Atlanta, was profoundly thankful at having been present at the meeting. The Keswick Mission showed the practical side of the Convention, and he would go back to America with a report that would raise the estimation of Keswick in the United States. He gloried in the grace of God by which great things are done by weak agents, and told a story which is outlined on our Young People's Page—"God Uses the weak."

GENERAL MISSIONARY MEETING.

Scarcely any indication of the exodus of visitors which had taken place the previous day could be observed at the Missionary Meeting on Saturday morning. The tent was filled to overflowing, and many were content to stand during the three hours which the meeting lasted, in order to share in the last gathering.

General Hatt-Noble occupied the chair, and prayer was offered by Dr. McMurtrie, convener of the Foreign Missions Committee of the Church of Scotland. At the request of the Chairman, Mr. Eugene Stock then assumed the direction of the proceedings, and expressed regret that a large number of requests from missionaries for an opportunity to present the needs of their respective spheres had been refused, owing to the fact that it was impossible to hold more than one meeting.

In accordance with the usual custom, the first place was given to the interests of the Jews. Rev. Samuel Wilkinson spoke of the efforts which are being made in almost every land to bring to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, the members of

THE DISPERSED NATION.

With regard to Russia, where nearly half the Jewish population of the world is to be found, the preaching of the Gospel to them is forbidden, but a door has been opened by God for the distribution of his Word, and at the Bible depôts which have been established the Scriptures are daily unfolded.

Rev. W. Dalgetty (Church of Scotland Mission, Punjaub) made an earnest appeal on behalf of the hundreds of Sikhs who are crying with loud voices for someone to reveal to them the things of the Eternal. Hindus, Brahmins, and the inmates of the zenanas, are groping for light amid the darkness of heathendom. Another worker from India was Rev. Wm. Bonnar (United Free Church of Scotland). Coming from the speaker urged the claims of the orphans who are left destitute as a result of that direful visitation. In the Mission orphanage at Kotah, a large number of these are being succoured, and the prayers of God's people were solicited that these orphans might be trained as servants of Christ, and in due time go forth and witness for Him.

From Peru, Mr. T. Jarrett brought tidings of the successful labour of the three missionaries who, in the face of persecution, were enabled to stand fast and establish a work in Cuzco, which gives promise of wide development and increasing usefulness. Mr. Arthur V. Liley described the efforts which are being made at Tunis to evangelize the Moslems. The greatest opponent to Christianity, he declared, is Islam, denying the fatherhood of God, the sonship of Christ, and the atoning death of the Saviour. By means of a Bible depôt, the Gospel is faithfully preached, particularly to the 800 students who are in the city. Mr. Liley's final request was, prayer that God would constrain some sisters to avail themselves of the opportunity which now presents itself for service as medical missionaries.

Dr. Walter Miller (Hausaland) related his experiences in

THE HEART OF THE SOUDAN.

Mission work there, although for some time greatly hindered, is now flourishing, and the only need is men to carry on and extend the operations.

A stirring account of the progress made in Central Africa was given by

BISHOP TUCKER,

who has laboured for so many years in Uganda. He drew attention to the one feature of the mission, wherein lies the secret of the wondrous blessing God has bestowed—the work has always been grounded in faith. When the call came to go out, there were those who said it was too much a venture of faith; but the pioneers, Mackay Wilson, and others, went forth to claim that land for Christ, and God gave them spiritual children. The Bishop recalled the last occasion on which he attended Keswick, ten years ago, to speak of the great hope with which he regarded his work. At that time the number of those who had been baptized was not more than 300. Since then God had given an increase of a thousandfold, and when he left a few days ago the number had reached 30,000. Out of the 10,000 who constitute no fewer than 2,000 are workers, entirely maintained by the native church. Here, again, the increase has been a hundredfold; where there were twenty workers ten years ago, there are now 2,000. These men go forth to distant parts of their own country, and to "the regions beyond." Missionaries are being sent in all directions, and God is supplying the means for their support. Men in all stations of life are giving themselves to the work; the heir to the throne of Toro has himself gone forth as a missionary. The king also has not only released personal servants, who have been called to enter the field, but has followed them to their spheres of labour with letters of kindly interest and encouragement.

Of the three lady missionaries who spoke, Dr. Mary Dods (Church of Scotland Mission), who has been labouring at Poona, urged the claims of the sufferers through famine in India, and pleaded for increased prayerful interest in the INDIAN NATIVE CONVERTS.

The father of a little girl who had accepted Christ besought his child not to "go into the Jesus religion." With simplicity, yet firmness, the girl replied, "I love my father, but I love my Saviour more."

Mrs. Armstrong, of the American Baptist Mission, gave many encouraging particulars of the spread of the Gospel in Burmah. The result of the evangelization of the Karens is that many are going forth to Siam, Assam, and other countries, preaching in several languages. A singularly interesting branch of missionary effort was represented by Miss Florence Young, who, with others, is seeking to influence for Christ the hundreds of young men who are brought from the New Hebrides and the Solomon Islands to work in Queensland. Since 1886 no fewer than 1,427 have been baptized. Twelve missionaries are now labouring among the "boys," and the average attendance per week at the Bible classes is now over 5,400. An encouraging feature of the work is the missionary enthusiasm which has been aroused among these Kanakas. A number have banded together and are subscribing £50 a year for the support of a missionary in China.

The last three of the missionary addresses were given by workers from China. Rev. Joseph Adams, an American missionary from Central China, said that if asked what was the to-day, he could reply that they were as willing as ever to lay down their lives for Christ's sake. He pleaded that none should harden their hearts towards the Chinese. True, they had been barbarous, but only because they needed the Gospel of Christ. Not only are the Chinese Christians ready to die for their Master, but they are willing and anxious to live for Him. Dr. P. Smith (London Missionary Society) voiced the gratitude of many a worker when he acknowledged how much was due to the prayers of Christians on behalf of those who had been called to suffer for the Gospel's sake.

Mr. E. J. Cooper (China Inland Mission), pathetically describing himself as one of the small remnant that escaped from the province of Shan-si, recounted, with deep emotion, the terrible trials through which his party and he had been called to pass. Being compelled to abandon the mission house, the journey of 700 miles to Hankow was commenced on foot. The painful experiences of the party, during the five months of wanderings which followed before the city was reached, were related by Mr. Cooper in tones of anguish and yet of triumph. Wife, child, and loved fellow workers one by one fell at his side, and were called from the tribulation of earth to the rest beyond. Withal he does not look toward China to-day with despair, but is prepared to "arise and build." The voices of native Christians in that empire are calling to the churches in Britain to go and gather in the harvest.

After a few words from Pastor D. J. Findlay, of Glasgow, the closing appeal was made by the Bishop of Mombasa. He asked any to rise, who, in the fulness and joy of Jesus Christ, were willing to go at the Master's call to labour in the mission field, and a large number responded. To these, words of counsel and encouragement were offered by the Bishop, and a solemn and memorable gathering terminated with the singing of the words:—

Oh, the joy of full surrender,
Keeping from Thee nought,
As I yield my heart is finding
Peace long sought.

Conviction of Sin.

Rev. CHARLES INWOOD.

And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment (John xvi. 8).

The Holy Spirit is the executive of the Godhead, carrying out the purpose of the Father as revealed in the incarnation of the Son. His primary work in the souls of men is the conviction of sin. An Oriental monarch is said to have kept his face veiled, and the people were told that it was on account of the sacredness and beauty of his countenance; but one day the veil was torn, showing a face ugly beyond conception, and disfigured by a hideous scar. The devil deals with the sinner after this fashion. His great effort seems to be to cast a veil over sin, to conceal its deformity.

The present conception of sin is utterly misleading, seeing that every apology is being made for it. Whether by proclaiming man a simple machine in the hand of the Creator, or by making him the victim or result of environment, special circumstances, or heredity, in each case much of modern fiction does away with man's accountability. As there is no moral responsibility, sin in the eyes of the world loses its ghastly aspect, and becomes a matter of course.

Let us turn to the Bible. Here we are taught on three cardinal points. 1. That sin is so bad that it brought upon the sinner the death penalty, because God is a God of Justice no less than of love. 2. That sin is so bad that no penalty short of the death of the Son of God could atone for and cleanse from it. 3. Sin is so bad that none less than the Holy Ghost can break its power. How many people speak with scorn nowadays about the atonement and other blessed truths; and why? Because of

A DEFECTIVE CONCEPTION OF SIN.

It is taught and believed that there is no hell. No shuddering now, but toleration of sin. If there are low views of sin in the Church, there will necessarily be a low conception of sin outside the Church. There is an ever-lowering standard. In a high-class periodical, a writer on public morality said: "A public man must not be judged by his private morals." Another brilliant writer dared to say that our notions of dress and undress must not be allowed to restrict theatrical representation. The standard of morality is visibly deteriorating, so that sins which were not permitted in society twenty years ago are now committed without reprehension. The prospects of our age and country are sad indeed if these conceptions of sin are to spread. We are living on the ethical capital of the eighteenth century revival, under Whitefield and Wesley. God help Great Britain if she goes on spending her capital of religious conviction until she has nothing left, and becomes morally and religiously bankrupt. Dr. Dale said truly that an ethical revival is the great need in the centres of education and culture to-day.

A still more serious consideration is the question, "Who is to blame?" Science tells us that the fires of the sun are declining, so that parts of the world once verdant and beautiful are now cold and barren under ice and snow. The name of Greenland bears witness to the contrast between its past and present state. But do you think are burning low in God? Are the Divine attributes cooling in the twentieth century? Never did the fire of holiness and of hatred of sin burn more intensely in the heart of God—the Father, Son, and Spirit—than they do to-day. There is is only one answer to the question, "Who is to blame?" We, God's professedly saved people, are to blame. We are not of the world. We are to hold forth the word of life; for we are the light of the world, the salt of the earth.

Canon Bernard has truly and wisely said that the Holy Spirit has no mission to the world but through believers in the Son of God. What an awful responsibility does that lay upon us! We are living in the dispensation of the Spirit. We are partners with Him in his work of grace, as man could not be until the Daysman had raised human nature to sit upon the throne of Deity. But so many Christians are practically living in the old dispensation, and are not ready to enter into the gracious ways and places of God. Only on the high plane of Pentecost can God co-operate with us or we with God.

You must have a certain conformation of the glass, that it may concentrate the rays of the sun into a burning focus. A certain elevation is necessary for the heliograph that we may utilize the sun to carry our messages. A certain condition of soul and spirit is essential for the Church to convince the world of sin—it is absolutely necessary to be constantly filled with the indwelling Holy Spirit.

Not by educating or cultivating those who are dead in sin can God's work be done. When the Spirit dwells in us in fulness, everything is changed. He shows

THE CHARACTER OF SIN,

He produces a personal sensitiveness which shrinks from the touch or the approach of sin. Indwelt by God the Spirit, the believer becomes to the world an incarnate spiritual conscience. The measure of the indwelling Spirit is the measure of our influence in and to the world. God has placed you in the home, the university, the house of business, that He may there carry out his gracious will through you. God wants a base of operation, and you cannot become so until you are filled with the Holy Ghost. There never was a time when it was more needed to show in practice the difference between right and wrong—to be saintly in business and in all the affairs of daily life.

God is waiting; are you ready to let the Spirit enter into your spirit? Are you willing? Here and now you may have your Pentecost; and if you go home filled with the Spirit, God will use you wondrously in convincing the world of sin, and in bringing sinners to the Cross of Jesus.

Brokenness of Spirit.

Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING.

The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise (Psa. li. 17).

THERE are two things here, and they are not the same; there is a broken spirit, and there is a broken heart. The heart is the seat of the affections, good or bad; the spirit is that part of our being which has to do with God. So that spirit is a much larger word than heart; it means much more. If you go back to the tenth verse of the psalm, you see the same contrast, and may observe the different ways in which God deals with both: "Create in me a clean heart, O God"; that is how God deals with the heart—the heart that is broken, sinful, and helpless. God does not mend it; He takes it away, and creates another; He takes away the stony heart, and gives us a heart of flesh. When God deals with the spirit, it is otherwise: "A right spirit will I put within you." He does not create a new spirit; He puts his own Spirit within us—the blessed Holy Spirit comes down into our spirit, and so fills it that it is sometimes barely possible to distinguish within ourselves which is the old spirit, our spirit, and which is the new, that is God's. In that case and teaches us to do the things that are according to his will.

It is of the broken spirit that I would especially speak just now. There is a distinction between broken and contrite; contrite means more than broken—crushed to powder, as a sandy rock by the seashore is gradually washed down by the waves of the sea, until the whole is dissolved into minute grains of sand—which the wind blows away. "A broken heart," as it were crushed to powder, "God will not despise."

The Psalmist says: God desires "not sacrifice—else would I give it: Thou delightest not in burnt offering." Of course this does not mean that God had abolished the rites of sacrifice, or that He did not ask for the five great offerings laid down in Leviticus; but that the only way the offerings could be made acceptable to Him was when they came from a broken spirit and a contrite heart. I want you to dwell for a moment on the thought of a broken spirit which God does not despise. Where shall we find rest from the care of self, the bitterness of self? It is found in the broken spirit, in the broken and the contrite heart. In order to give you that rest, God has to break your spirit. What does this broken spirit mean? First of all (1) a deep sense of sin—a deep sense of the awfulness of sin, and of our personal sin. When a soul first comes to Christ, it has to settle the question whether it shall take God's view of sin, or man's view. Man's view is that everyone is a sinner, that it cannot be helped, and that nothing else can be expected: that we cannot be so bad if we do what everybody else is doing. God's view of sin is that sin is death, spiritual death, open rebellion and enmity against God. There can be no reconciliation between sin and God; the battle must go on until God be master, and his authority unchallenged. Not only in the moment of conversion, but ever and anon,

THE CHRISTIAN IS MEETING THAT QUESTION

in his daily life. "Is my sin against God of such great consequence?"—the sins of temper, impatience, envy, jealousy, of care and distrust, of restless pining after some good that never has been yours, and you think never can be yours: all these are typical sins of Christians, going on as it were beneath the surface. How many have come to consider them as little, not needing to be dealt with, or taken away! Christian people are content to continue in this state, taking man's view of sin, and forgetting the awfulness of every sin against God. In a sense, all sins by Christians are sins of presumption. They come of presuming on the love of God, and our position as children of God, and that the pardon of our sins is assured in the blood of Jesus Christ. What an awful thing for a Christian to reckon on these things, and to say in effect, "It does not matter so much that I am not all I might be." A broken spirit deals very differently with it hardly raises its face out of the dust when it thinks of the heinousness of sin against God, of the ingratitude, the danger, and curse that are in sin itself. For in the very heart of sin there is a curse that cannot be taken out of it; to be against God in thought is a curse in the sight of God, and in the sight of every sensitive soul. The broken spirit is under a deep sense of sin.

Then (2) a broken spirit realizes its own weakness before God, and mourns over it. There is a wonderful sweetness in being weak. Have you discovered it? Man's strength brings no gracious blessing in it, simply as strength. Man's weakness, if laid at the feet of God, has a wonderful sweetness in it that but few men can know; and that sense of weakness ought not to pass away when the soul is under the power of God. Many Christians make the mistake of thinking themselves safe because they have been so long in the habit of praying and hating sin. I fear that to the very end we shall find it the Christian of fifty years' experience ought to have very little more confidence in his own strength, and in safety arising from the habits of life, than a Christian of last week. A broken spirit will be more and more overwhelmed with its own weakness in the sight of God—weakness for any trial and for any temptation.

Further (3), the broken spirit before God is in this position—that it accepts what God says about deliverance. Now, there is a truth about deliverance and the way of deliverance—both from God. The truth about deliverance is that Christians need not live in sin, in conscious sin, in habitual sin. You ask how we know. God commands us—God lays his command upon the soul against sin. Pause and think of one command, "Be ye holy." God says that, and then He adds, partly as a reason why you should be holy, and partly to provide an example for your following, "for I am holy." Take in the import of the truth that God commands you, "Be ye holy." Are you to answer God: "That is impossible"? Are you to answer: "It is impossible; why should I seek to obey an impossible command?" I quote another command found in the beginning of one of the earliest of St. Paul's Epistles—1 Cor. ii. Writing to the whole church at Corinth—a church of as imperfect Christians as ever was—"Ye are (he says)

CALLED TO BE SAINTS."

I want you singly and separately to take in the thought, "I am called to be a saint." I frankly and candidly ask you whether you do not feel a little shocked at the thought. If anybody else, any Christian brother or sister, called you a saint to your face, would you answer: "Ah; he knows me very little to call me that!" God says, however, ye are "called to be saints."

God's view about deliverance is that it is possible for us to be delivered from the habits of confirmed, and continued, and shameful sin. I am not touching the question of sinlessness. You may have no fear of that; no one on this platform teaches that. In what way is this wonderful thing to be?

GOD HIMSELF UNDERTAKES TO DO IT.

The only condition is that you put yourself into his hand for the purpose. He says: "I am the Lord that do sanctify"; and I fall back upon the words found in Ezekiel, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean." No doubt the promise, at first, was given to Israel; but the spiritual promise is for the people of God, even for us. "From all your filthiness, and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh." Not with our assistance is this done. What follows? "I will cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them. . . . I will also save you from all your uncleannesses in the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities." In a word, God undertakes to do the work of sanctification for the Christian that presents himself, and puts himself into God's hands that he may be cleansed.

The next point is—What is the attitude of the broken spirit (4) towards this work of sanctification? Such a spirit does not interfere with God's work; it can make up but rather it submits and trusts God to work. Day by day it sees God's cleansing, welcomes it, trusts for it, giving glory to God.

Are you conscious of broken purposes and hopes that have been sorely disappointed—conscious that, before God, and yourself, and your neighbours, and your friends, you are far behind and greatly lacking? If you ask God to deal with you, He will; it is the uppermost desire of his heart. He will single you out from the crowd. Are you willing that He should take you in hand? Will you welcome whatever He does for you? The broken spirit is to God a pleasing sacrifice, because it magnifies the cross of Christ and glorifies his name, and prepares for Him a people whom He may love, and that will return his love. God is thirsting for your love, for the return of the love He spends on you. It is only a broken spirit that will so accept of God's dealing as will enable one to rejoice the heart of God and to return his infinite love.

THE MINISTERS' MEETINGS.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

It was a joy to many to look back for more than a quarter of a century, when fresh springs of divine life breaking forth in Brighton, Oxford, and London told of times of refreshing coming from the presence of the Lord; joy and gladness in the Lord became strength, and the presence of hundreds of young men yielded confidence to many of the fathers in Israel.

None of the series of meetings were more important than that held daily from noon till one o'clock for ministers. Many of the younger men were doubtless startled as some of the utterances disclosed the deep need which exists for fleeing from youthful lusts, worldly pleasures, and constant surrender of the citadel (the human will) to Christ. The warnings, the danger lest the high places in the inner being should fail of being overcome and cast down; the absolute necessity for the permeation of the being by energy of the risen Christ was pressed home upon conscience and mind; that by no natural gift or ability can the man of God be furnishsd in any adequate sense to all good works. God's man must be educated, trained, and furnished by the Holy Spirit.

There must have been much casting down of imaginings and reasonings that are ever ready to hold their own against the knowledge of God. Distressed countenances were there, the storm of conflict, the vision of ministerial defect and human unfitness for divine service. Blessed were the appeals for adjustment unto cleansing from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Hallowed were the strong words which told of confidence in the Word of God; that nothing can make up for the constant and fresh furnishing which comes of the word of Christ dwelling in the ministers of Christ.

In the midst of those noonday meetings, surely the Lord appeared again and again, and it seemed that the beloved John's words were re-echoed by the great Captain of the hosts: "I speak unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the Word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." We have deep conviction that a real accession of spiritual power came to many hundreds who were present at these remarkable meetings.

THE PRAISE MEETING.

A volume of praise and thanksgiving went up from the early morning meeting on Saturday, for the joy and profit which had been realized during the week. Mr. A. A. Head presided, and Dr. Elder Cumming was the first to offer prayer. This was followed by the hearty singing of "We praise Thee, O God, for the Son of thy love."

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, with much tenderness, then commended to God many whose names are familiar at Keswick, but whose voices have not this year been heard in the meetings. Among others mentioned were: the beloved president (Mr. Robert Wilson), Dr. Handley Moule, and Dr. Harry Guinness. The notes of praise sent in exceeded 200, and these were grouped and read by Mr. Richardson. Young and old were one in acknowledging the revelation which God had been pleased to unfold concerning their need and Divine fulness, their poverty and God's wealth. Possibly no two notes were precisely alike in terms, but all combined to form an overwhelming testimony that the crowds who assembled a week ago in Keswick expectant and hungry were not being sent empty away. As usual, a parting message from Scripture was given by each one on the platform, and before separating the congregation joined in a hymn of dedication of spirit, soul, and body to the service of the Lord.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR RALLY.

The usual Christian Endeavour Rally, in connection with the Convention, was held in the Congregational Church, Lake Road, on Thursday evening. Rev. Jas. Mursell, of London, presided, and after praise and "chain prayer," each Society responded in alphabetical order. Fifty-three branches rose in turn, beginning with Almora, North India. The short messages were most instructive and interesting.

Three members of the National Council gave brief addresses, each stating the particular good which he had derived from attending the Keswick Convention—Revs. F. J. Horsefield (Bristol), Rhys Davis (Wales), Henry Montgomery (Belfast).

The Chairman asked all in the meeting who had derived definite blessing from this Convention to rise, and many all over the church responded; then all who had received good from former Conventions responded; and, finally, all who desired from this time to consecrate themselves to a life "out and out" for Christ. By this time nearly all were standing, and thus they were commended to the Lord in prayer.

The meeting was closed by Rev. F. J. Horsefield pronouncing the Benediction, and all felt it had been good to be there.

E. J. Banks, Secretary.

Wesleyans in Conference.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

THE new President of the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. W. Theophilus Davison, M.A., D.D., is a distinguished theologian, a devout scholar, an able preacher, and a writer of wide repute. He is known and honoured not only among the churches at home, but his writings and his services during two visits to the United States have gained him the high appreciation of his brother Methodists in the great republic. For twenty years he has been engaged in the important work of training young men for the work of the Methodist ministry, and there are many men now labouring in the circuits of the Connexion who look upon this genial scholar as their "guide, philosopher, and friend."

Dr. Davison has received, at a comparatively early age, the highest honour his brethren have it in their power to bestow. He was born at Bath on October 5, 1846, so that in his fifty-fifth year he comes to the Presidential Chair. He is a "son of the manse." His father, William Davison, was a native of Newcastle, the city in which the son is presiding over the Conference, and for more than fifty years he loyally served God and the Church, travelling in some of the most important circuits of Methodism. His mother was a member of the Shum family of Bath, a family renowned equally for attachment to Methodism, and hereditary association with the Established Church.

The influences that surrounded the childhood of the newly-made President were thus eminently qualified to result in an early decision for Christ. To his father, Dr. Davison confesses that he owes much of spiritual impetus, and in his Fernley Lecture on "The Christian Conscience," he pays a beautiful tribute to his father in the dedication of his book to his first teacher, and his life-long counsellor and friend. As a boy, he was educated at Kingswood School, the institution founded by Wesley himself for the sons of his preachers. In the early days the régime of Kingswood was one of Spartan sternness and severity, but many are the men eminent in various walks of life who are old boys of Kingswood, and among Dr. Davison's schoolfellows was Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., the son of a former President of a Newcastle Conference. In his school days, Dr. Davison gave promise, by his diligence and success, of his future attainments. The scholar was soon called to teach, and in 1864 he became one of the masters at the Woodhouse Grove School, near Leeds, which then held a similar position in the north to that of Kingswood in the south. While at Woodhouse Grove, the young master was brought into happy association with the young minister of the circuit in which the Grove was situated. But little did either of them dream in those days that they should become colleagues as tutors of theology in a Wesleyan College, still less, perhaps, that when one of them should retire from the chair of the Conference he would be succeeded by the other. Yet so it was to be, for on Tuesday, July 23, Dr. Thos. Allen, who in 1864 was the young minister at Woodhouse Grove, handed over the insignia of his high office as President, to Dr. W. T. Davison, his friend, the young master of early days.

In 1868, Dr. Davison entered the ranks of the ministry, and without intermediate training in any theological institution, he was sent into active circuit work. After two years as a supply, he made his mark in the following circuits, specially as a preacher who was able to solve the intellectual difficulties of young men: Castle Donington, Wandsworth, Nottingham (Halifax Place), Bradford (Manningham), and Birmingham (Islington). In 1871, he had taken the M.A. degree in the London University with high honours, and in 1881 he was called from Birmingham to fill the chair of Biblical Exegesis and Classics in the Richmond College, then the college in which the Methodist candidates were trained for the mission field. Ten years later, on the transference of Rev. F. W. Macdonald from Handsworth to the secretaryship of the Foreign Missionary Society, Dr. Davison was appointed his successor as theological tutor in the Birmingham Institution, a position which he still holds.

Dr. Davison has received many evidences of the confidence of his brethren in the ministry. In 1889 he was elected to the Legal Hundred, the central body in which, since Wesley's days, has been vested the authority of the Conference.

In 1891 he was one of the English representatives to the Methodist Ecumenical Conference in America; and in 1898 he proceeded once more to the States as the fraternal representative of the English Wesleyan Conference to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Illness prevented the complete fulfilment of his programme of public services, but his scholarly and eloquent utterances before the Conference in Baltimore and elsewhere made a deep impression on our American friends. Some years before, Dr. Davison had a serious illness, and soon after his return from America it became clear that without surgical aid he was not likely to be free from painful and prostrating attacks of a similar kind. It is stated that it was an American doctor who recommended the English visitor to consult a certain distinguished specialist at home, with the result that in the winter of 1898 Dr. Davison underwent a serious but successful operation. By God's blessing the life of his servant has been prolonged, and his health restored to more than the ordinary vigour of previous years; so that the Methodist Church may well be grateful to God that its President has been able to undertake the heavy burdens of his high office.

In Conference Dr. Davison has not been a frequent speaker, but his clear voice and incisive manner always gained him a ready hearing; and on several occasions his wise counsel has enabled him to mediate in matters of ecclesiastical statesmanship. Though he has never been the superintendent of a circuit, nor the chairman of a district, nevertheless the scholar and student has already proved in the chair of the Conference that he is no cloistered recluse, but a "master of assemblies."

As a preacher, Dr. Davison is expository in style, powerful in application, and intensely loyal to Evangelical truth. He wastes no words, is innocent of mere rhetorical devices, and seeks to bring his hearers into understanding of, and sympathy with, the Word of God. As an author he is widely known. His writings, which show a combination of qualities not often found, may be divided into three classes. First, devotional books, such as a delightful monograph on "The Word in the Heart," and a volume of "Aids to the Devout and Intelligent Observance of the Lord's Supper." Second, books for Bible students, such as "The Praises of Israel," and "The Wisdom Literature of the Old Testament," volumes that have won the high praise of authorities like Bishop Perowne and Dr. Marcus Dods. And, third, critical and philosophical essays, many of which have appeared in the London Quarterly Review and Expository Times, and some of which have been published in volume form under the title of "The Christian Interpretation of Life." When it is added that Dr. Davison's Fernley Lecture on "The Christian Conscience," was a contribution to Christian ethics, that he is on the staff of writers for Dr. Hastings' great Bible Dictionary, and that for some years he was the editor of the Methodist Recorder, it will be seen that the new President's literary labours have been considerable, and his gifts many-sided. One of the latest literary services he has rendered to the Church has been an able article on "Christ and Modern Criticism," in the London Quarterly Review, in which he stoutly withstands the attempts of the writers in the second volume of the Encyclopædia Biblica, "to strip Christianity of its supernatural elements and credentials."

A loyal Methodist, Dr. Davison is, none the less, a man of truly Catholic spirit. It was his privilege to take part in the first gathering of Anglicans and Nonconformists held in connection with a Church Congress at Bradford. He then read a valuable paper on "Devotional Literature and Hymnody: A Path to Christian Unity." "Among all who are truly Christian, unity exists whether they acknowledge it or not," so said the President of the Wesleyan Conference. May that unity receive a wider acknowledgment in the coming year.

REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE.

The sessions of the 158th Conference of the people called Methodists opened at Newcastle-upon-Tyne on Tuesday, July 23. For the first time the Representative Session, in which ministers and laymen in equal numbers sit, preceded the Pastoral Session. This peaceful resolution has been happily consummated after discussions during many years. Rev. W. T. Davison, M.A., D.D., who was nominated a year ago by the Pastoral Session of the Conference, was formally elected by the Legal Hundred as President in succession to Dr. Thomas Allen, and Rev. Marshall Hartley again occupied the position of Secretary.

Dr. Davison's address on his induction to the office of President was a timely and an impressive deliverance on

"THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD."

It will merit careful reading, and we can but indicate some of its salient points. His hearers were reminded of the history of religious movements, which began merely in struggle and persecution, passed through a period of prosperity, followed by deterioration and decay. They were told it would be the same in regard to the Wesleyan and Evangelical revival. The President proceeded to indicate how Methodists might retain the grand ideas of their fathers, and yet meet the changing conditions of the times. Danger from worldliness is not to be met by the multiplication of special services—though the President, in passing, paid a tribute to the recent Simultaneous Mission — but by the deepening and broadening of their spiritual life. Worldliness is not confined to card-playing, dancing, or theatre-going; it may be found in the business, in the house, and even in the minister's study. Amusements are multiplying on every hand. The increase of worldliness and the horror of dulness is one of the characteristics of the age. Wordsworth had said, "The world is too much with us," and we feel how true the words are to-day. The Church, however, does not exist to add to the commandments, nor to invent new sins — not to denounce the life that now is, but to win and consecrate it for the glory of God, and for the age in which we live. The scientific materialism of Professor Tyndall has had its day, but material modes of thinking are gaining unconsciously in domestic life, in education, in art, and in worship. We shall be saved not by resolutions, nor by forms, but by an abounding spiritual vitality. The President closed by referring to the decay of family religion, and the doctrine of observance of public worship. Family religion needs cultivation. The Church will never be in a healthy condition so long as religion is only associated with the chapel and Sunday school; and the Sunday school cannot take the place of family religion.

The present position and prospects of

were dealt with on Wednesday morning. Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., to whose suggestion the initiation of this great financial and spiritual movement was due, reported that a sum of £657,000 is actually in hand, and that the total promises amounted to £928,000. This did not look like failure. That the balance required to complete the million may be easily raised, Mr. Perks showed, by declaring to a somewhat incredulous Conference, that the savings of the Methodists during the last four years had amounted to forty millions sterling. Many of the brethren present seemed to be ignorant of their true riches. Whether Mr. Perks is right in his figures or not, speaker after speaker followed, urging that the Church is well able to lay nothing short of a million guineas at the feet of Christ for the extension of his work.

The venerable ex-Presidents, Dr. Rigg and Dr. Jenkins, spoke of the splendid self-sacrifice of the poorer members of the Church, while Judge Waddy, K.C., the son of a former President, earnestly pleaded that they should settle the question there and then, and he set an example of promising an additional 25 per cent. of his former gift. Many of the members of the Conference followed the example, so that before the session closed several thousand guineas were promised, and a collection throughout the circuits on the last Sunday in the year was decided upon in order to complete the Fund. Doubtless the top-stone will be brought in with rejoicing before the year closes.

Many departments of Church work have been reviewed during the week. Urgency was granted on Thursday morning to discussion on a resolution on the Education Bill. The Conference is anxious that no facilities for education should be withdrawn from the children of the artizans of England.

Foreign Missions presented many points of interest. Rev. Marshall Hartley had the joy of reporting a growing income, and extending work. He said that the action of the Committee in approaching Lord Milner has been much misrepresented. Methodism has great interests in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, and the Committee would have been recreant had it not approached the High Commissioner on the question of forced labour, the supply of drink to natives, and other matters embodied in the memorial, which had no reference to political matters.

Rev. W. H. Findlay, M.A., gave an interesting account of the progress of mission churches in the West African field, which he had recently visited as one of the secretaries of the Society; and Rev. F. W. Macdonald gave cheering evidences of success in Italy. They were receiving in increasing numbers promising native candidates for the ministry.

Amongst other public questions, the Conference spoke with no uncertain sound on

THE KING'S DECLARATION.

The most strenuous opposition of the Conference is offered to any change therein which would weaken the guarantees of the Protestant Succession. Rev. Dr. Rigg strongly emphasised the importance of the question. It is particularly important, he pointed out, at a time when many in the Church of England admit the Pope's Primacy. Where the doctrine of Transubstantiation is admitted, the priest will rule, and freedom disappear. The matters repudiated in the King's Declaration have been found by our ancestors to be incompatible with the elementary principles of liberty and religious equality. Dr. Rigg would as soon see agnosticism as Roman Catholicism established in this country, because the results in the long run are the same, the one produces and superinduces the other. The opposition of the Conference was also re-affirmed to the establishment and endowment out of public funds of a denominational University in Ireland.

In the Conversation on the Work of God, several laymen from different parts of the land told of fruitfulness in many undertakings. Mr. W. J. Davey spoke of progress among Surrey villages, and General Campbell told the story of the conversion of a Roman Catholic brother. Mr. Barr, of Birmingham, warned his brethren against the dangers of worldliness. Rev. James Hope Moulton told the story of prosperous work led by Professor Rendel Harris among the villages of Cambridgeshire during the Simultaneous Mission. Dr. Stephenson gave an example of how lapsed members might be recovered, and Rev. Joseph Posnett pleaded earnestly that they should "preach the old doctrines with the old power." Sir George Smith closed the conversation with solemn prayer that God would equip his servants for the work of the future.

The Conference heard with satisfaction a letter from Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in which he assured them that there would be no risk in the Conference presuming that he would be able to discharge his duties in London. He would carry out the instructions of the Conference conveyed to him in a letter of sympathy, and would take whatever rest his medical advisers might suggest. Mr. Price Hughes' absence from Conference has been a keen disappointment to his brethren as well as to himself.

Rev. Thos. Champness again asked Conference to declare that it was undesirable for persons directly engaged in to be nominated as officers in the Church. After some discussion, on the motion of Dr. Thos. Allen, the ex-President, the resolutions of 1899 were reaffirmed, declaring that the Conference deplored the manifold evils of the drink traffic, rejoiced in the progress of Temperance in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, but felt that to interfere with the constitutional method of appointing Church officers was undesirable. At the same time, the Conference exhorted the Methodist people to keep themselves free from complicity with the traffic, and to give their active support to all well-considered efforts on behalf of temperance reform.

The late Bishop Westcott.

THE death of the Bishop of Durham removes a distinguished prelate from the Church of England, and a highly-esteemed scholar from the Christian world. The end came peacefully on Saturday night at the Castle, Bishop Auckland, in the presence of members of his family. During his closing hours, Dr. Westcott remained quite conscious and cheerful, and requested the singing of hymns and the reading of Psalms.

Brooke Foss Westcott was born in Birmingham in 1825, and was educated at King Edward's School, under the celebrated Dr. J. Prince Lee. It is a most rare occurrence for any foundation to count amongst its former students three prelates of the eminence of those who stand in this relation to King Edward's School, viz., Dr. Benson, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Lightfoot, the late Bishop of Durham; and Dr. Westcott—a trio, it is said that, as boys, Prince Lee "loved more than any others else in the world, and whom he took every human interest in pushing forward."

From Birmingham Dr. Westcott passed to Trinity College, Cambridge. His university career was brilliant; honours and prizes attended his entire academical course, and graduation in Arts was followed by Divinity studies, the degree of D.D. being taken in 1870. Dr. Westcott also received from Oxford University the honorary degree of D.C.L. in 1881. During later years distinctions were showered upon him from many quarters. He held an assistant-mastership in Harrow School from 1852 to 1869, and in 1870 he was elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Not until twenty years after his ordination in the ministry did he hold any parochial appointment; for twelve years, 1870 to 1882, he was incumbent of Somersham with Pidley and Colne, three united parishes in Huntingdonshire. He was canon of Peterborough from 1869 to 1883, when he was appointed canon of Westminster. He was a member of the company for the revision of the Authorised Version of the New Testament. On the death of Bishop Lightfoot, he accepted the bishopric of Durham, in 1890.

During his earlier manhood Dr. Westcott had made substantial contributions to literature; and when on the Episcopal Bench he did not altogether lay aside his pen. In conjunction with Rev. Dr. Hort he gave the world a valuable edition of the Greek text of the New Testament. The work of twenty-eight years' joint labour, it is as highly esteemed to-day as it was when first published twenty years ago. He was a contributor to the "Speaker's Commentary" and Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and among his other works have been: "The Elements of Gospel Harmony," "An Introduction to the Study of the Gospels," "A History of the English Bible," "The Social Aspects of Christianity," "The Epistles of St. John, with Notes and Essays," "Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews," "The Revelation of the Risen Lord," "The Revelation of the Father," "The Gospel of the Resurrection," "The History of the Canon of the New Testament," "Christian Aspects of Life." Many of these have run into several editions. In ecclesiastical matters the Bishop was liberally disposed, putting Christ first, and reckoning himself among the servants of mankind "for Christ's sake."

The Bishop's interest in social questions was deep and practical; and his labours on behalf of the toilers of the North, especially during times of industrial conflict, have reared for him a monument in thousands of grateful hearts.

Wilton House of Rest, for ministers and other Christian workers, 1 and 2, Grosvenor Gardens, St. Leonards, which has been closed for some weeks for sanitary and other improvements, is again re-opened. Applications for particulars (enclosing stamped envelope) should be made to the Lady Superintendent, or to Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra Road, N.W.

Students at Matlock.

THE B.C.C.U. ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

A CHARACTERISTIC feature of the Conferences arranged by the British College Christian Union and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union is the rapidity with which the personnel changes. At this year's meetings, which opened at Matlock Bank on Tuesday of last week, this was specially noticeable. It is gratifying to note, however, that as men go out to various fields of labour their places are more than supplied by others, the delegates being in larger numbers than on any previous occasion.

The majority of the members arrived in time for the welcome service, at which a high keynote for the entire proceedings was struck in a forcible address by Mr. H. W. Oldham. In simple fashion the eyes of all were pointed to the Lord and Master in whose name they met—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi. 31). It was pointed out (1) that this probably rough and hardened jailor was pointed at once to the Lord Jesus Christ as a Person, the Apostle thus laying bare the very heart of the Gospel; and (2) that the words were the outcome of personal experience, speaker and hearer proving alike that salvation is not to be attained by any self-effort, but by allowing a Saviour to take us. A further step in the same direction is taken when we learn that in like manner holiness is only possible as a result of consecration. The bearing of all this on Christian work was carefully shown. "Do not resolve to do your best, and trust to Christ to help. There is a better way. Venture forth, leaning upon a personal Christ."

The first address on Wednesday was given by Rev. H. E. Fox (Church Missionary Society), subject,

"COMMUNION WITH CHRIST."

At the outset the fact was emphasized that the phrase implies mutual participation and reciprocity between Christ and ourselves, a giving and taking on both sides, appropriation by us being only part of the truth. Even to the Laodicean Church, gorged and blighted with its imaginary wealth, were spoken the wonderful words, "I will sup with him and he with me." Communion may produce common feelings, but must have its origin in common facts.

I. The facts of Redemption.—In the parable of the lost sheep nothing is said of the feelings of the sheep, but much of the joy of the Seeker who found it; and in Isaiah liii., when we read of peace won by his chastisement, and healing by his stripes, our satisfaction is assumed, while his is definitely stated. In Hebrews we are told that He endured the cross and despised the shame, for the joy set before Him; and that joy is the joy which He communicates to his people, in which we have communion with Him.

II. The facts of Life.—The exercise of the power put forth in the resurrection of Christ is manifested in us (Eph. i. 19). This is more than a parallelism, it is a community. Dwelling in love, we dwell in God.

III. The facts of Suffering.—This is one of the tokens of the true humanity of Christ (Heb. ii. 10). The large place taken by this truth in the Pauline Epistles was pointed out, with the injunction of Peter to rejoice in the fact that we are partakers of the sufferings of Christ. We like but are we willing to give Christ all He asks?

IV. The facts of Service.—In his great resurrection charge, Christ said to his Church, "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you"; this is a community of the Church with Christ, in the mission on which it is sent forth.

In his closing words Mr. Fox drew earnest attention to Christ's satisfaction in us. Do we think of God as trusting us? There is before us, if we will, a life well-pleasing to God, in which the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ will find satisfaction. What satisfaction this ought to give us! This fellowship with Christ should be evident wherever we go, so that those with whom we come into contact may be led to covet the same gift.

A special feature of the Conference was a series of meetings with the delegates from theological colleges, the theological committee being impressed with the desirability of bringing the inspiration of the movement to bear on their fellow-students. At the first of these gatherings, Mr. E. V. Page (Richmond College) spoke on "The Value of the Watchword—the Evangelization of the World in this Generation—to Theological Students." He suggested its value (1) because presenting at once the great foreign missionary enterprise; (2) as a personal motto, which it cannot be without earnest wrestling and real struggle, and will therefore be fraught with much blessing; (3) as leading to continual exercise of faith; (4) as purifying character; (5) as enabling us to see visions, which we must do if we are to work thoroughly and truly (that we are able to see them will be one of the proofs that the Spirit of God has fallen upon us, while they will make us to be men with a Message); (6) making our Message comprehensive, with an

URGENCY OF TONE AND IMPORTUNITY;

(7) making for union (a) between Christian students, (b) between those of different names and schools of thought, (c) between home and foreign workers; and (8) as an antidote for (a) disappointment and dulness, (b) professionalism, and (c) indolence.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson (London Missionary Society) followed with an address on "The Home Ministry in Relation to Missions." Every year, he said, is increasing the opportunity and responsibility not only in the opening up of the world, but in the accessibility of the people, as well as in the ways in which they are being prepared for the message.

As ministers, his hearers and those whom they represented would be recognised as leaders in the Christian thought and life of the church, expected to guide their people on all great moral and spiritual questions; and the missionary enterprise—without limiting the phrase to foreign missions—is the greatest responsibility Christian people have. They are servants of God, and have a personal responsibility for making their neighbours know that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. One of the most serious tasks of a minister's life is to bring his people to a recognition of their duty to seek for souls. He urged the responsibility of Christians who remain at home to act themselves, and to educate others as champions for those who go abroad; and gave several instances from his own experience of the unfairness and unreasonableness of much current criticism of missionaries and their work, against which it is of great importance that they should be defended.

At the evening meeting a cordial reception was given to Dr. E. Maynard Pain (Sydney), as the representative of the Australasian Students' Christian Union, who in turn presented a hearty greeting from the southern hemisphere. A high tribute was borne to the good work which has resulted in the Colonies from the impetus given during Mr. J. R. Mott's visit of organization. The secular constitution of the universities presented difficulties pronounced at first to be insuperable; and even when leave was given to hold a meeting in Sydney, it was only on condition that no prayers should be offered, no hymns sung, and no religious dogmas taught. The fellowship of the world-wide Union had, however, been and in Otago University one-third of the students are members of the Union. Dr. Pain placed the utmost importance on the making of efforts to win the students for Christ at the beginning of their career, testifying from experience that they are then much more willing to face the question: "What think ye of Christ?" than at a later period.

Laying hold of references previously made to the spread of imperialism, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson showed the bearing of the present state of public opinion on foreign missionary work. Referring to his experience in different countries, he insisted on the danger of any attempt to reproduce in other lands any particular home organization. "We are Christian Imperialists," he said, "because we do not carry British ideas of church life, or British readings of Christian documents, but to make Jesus King." He found in such an organization as the World's Christian Students' Federation a type of a Christian imperialism that is full of promise.

The heavy rain which had prevailed on Wednesday afternoon and evening continued on Thursday, and Victoria Hall was used for the general gatherings. At the morning devotional service, Rev. William Watson (Birkenhead) gave a helpful and suggestive address on "The Consciousness of Sin." Striking at the outset deep into his subject, he pointed out two dangers lying before all who are concerned with a personal consciousness of sin—(1) Vagueness of feeling, and (2) making comparison with others whom we know, or of whom we have read. He then passed on to give hints for personal guidance. (1) Get behind your motives and intentions always. (2) Practice detachment of yourselves from others. (3) Cultivate honesty and sincerity of view. (4) Guard against being artificial or fictitious in confession. (5) Guard against insensitiveness to personal sin. The greatest difficulty the Gospel of Jesus Christ has to meet to-day is the apathy, indifference, and insensitiveness of Christian hearts to sin. (6) Make specific prayer about your sins. We multiply our engagements and curtail our prayers, flattering ourselves that all work is prayer; but it is easier to work than to pray, and if we are going to make we shall lose much, and our work will suffer.

The remainder of the morning session was occupied by a "question-and-answer" meeting, organized by the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, under the presidency of Rev. H. C. Duncan (who hopes in the autumn to proceed to Darjeeling as a missionary, in connection with the Church of Scotland). Interesting and valuable discussions arose on several points closely affecting the fundamental basis of the Union, including individual freedom as to auspices under which members may go out to the mission field; the advisability of those joining who have no immediate prospect of being able to leave home; and the desirability of the signature of the declaration in any case.

In the evening the storm had increased to such an extent that heavy thunder and torrents of rain falling on the tent almost drowned the voices of the speakers. While the women students were gathered in the Victoria Hall Mr. Frank Lenwood (Mansfield College) gave to the men an address full of brotherly counsel and wisdom on "How to meet impurity." His hearers appreciated the tactful and truly spiritual manner in which the difficult subject was treated. One of the most serious features of modern life was pointed out in the unfailing way in which every new invention is at once made to minister to the lower passions of men. Earnest sympathy was pleaded for in every case in which there is evidence of a struggle going on, with sternness towards those who wilfully pursue a wrong course. Mr. H. G. Hodgkin (London) followed, his subject being, "Consecration." It was felt that heart was speaking to heart, as the principle was laid down that the true test of the value of the Conference would be not the height of spirituality reached at the meetings, but the lowest point attained at any time in after-life.

That one of the great forces at work lay in the addresses of students themselves, was again evident on Friday morning, when Mr. T. Jays (London) dealt with prayer in a heart-searching fashion. After pointing out such requisites to prevailing prayer as (1) the assurance that God is and hears; (2) the necessity for strenuous effort: and (3) the great importance of intercessory prayer—he touched a widely-felt difficulty by

DEALING WITH MIND-WANDERING.

This he believed might be met by (1) at once returning to the starting-point through a strong effort of the will; (2) the giving of plenty of time for prayer; and (3) writing down the main points or petitions of our prayers, like other habits, that of prayer would grow.

Among Friday's arrivals at the camp was Rev. G. A. Johnstone Ross (Westbourne Park, London), who remained till Tuesday, placing his time at the disposal of the executive. His first address, on "Doubt met by the Person of Christ," was a masterly statement of the main facts of the case, couched in simple and popular language, and appealed to his hearers all the more because of the element of autobiographical colour introduced. He urged the formation of a working theology, having for its centre the true majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is not a new, but a time-honoured method and instrument in the maintenance and recovery of religious faith. The importance was shown of being quite clear as to what doubt means, being, as it is, the antithesis not of knowledge, but of faith. "Religion is not intended as a substitute for the discipline of education, and doubt is really the distress of an unanchored heart. Only a Person personally known can solve religious doubts. When you are seeking the satisfaction of these, and pressing for reality, though you may not know it, it is a Person whom you seek."

The importance of this was deduced from the number of people who hang round churches, professing no religious faith, and yet persisting in listening to those whose intellectual equipment is much more slender than their own. The vision of the uniqueness of Jesus which had come within the speaker's own experience was skilfully depicted, joined to a warning that a moral admiration of Him, with an apotheosis following, instead of being sufficient, may constitute a real danger, inasmuch as it of Him. "If we will not look the Lord Jesus Christ in the face, it is because we are afraid of the stern moral demand that lies behind."

On Saturday Mr. Johnstone Ross gave a less formal talk to the theological students on "The Burden of the Ministry." This was purposely made of a preliminary or introductory nature, his wish being to come into personal contact with the men, and to discuss with them individually their aims and difficulties. The executive of the theological department determined not to appoint a travelling secretary for the coming year, an appeal is made to students of such colleges to affiliate themselves with the Student Missionary Campaign. This is an organized effort to infuse the churches with the spirit of the Student Volunteer Movement, and it is hoped to accomplish the end by carrying to them the ideal of the watchword, at the same time pressing the duty of keeping themselves informed on missionary matters.

One of the notable addresses of these opening days was by Miss Fleming Stevenson on "Daily Communion with God," when in the tenderest manner this privilege was pressed home, and the question asked, "Are we willing to pay all that communion with God may cost?" Hearers were asked to consider whether reluctance or shrinking from this daily communion may not arise from dread of light, of strenuous effort, or of the humbling experience of repeated failure.

Welsh Notes.

THE Welsh Congregational Union held its annual meetings at Maesteg, Glamorganshire, on July 22-25, under the presidency of Rev. L. Probert, D.D., of Bangor. There were over 500 delegates present.

The statistics of the denomination as submitted by the secretary were as follows:—Churches connected with the Union, 1,063; membership, 147,658; attendants at Sunday school, 149,933. The amount collected for church purposes amounted to £153,715; the contributions towards foreign missions reached the sum of £7,516 18s.; the increase in membership amounted to 1,806.

On Tuesday an important meeting was held in connection with the special fund which is being raised for denominational purposes. In a paper read by Rev. T. Thomas, Coedporth, a suggestion was made that one or two home missionaries should be appointed to labour in the Principality. The startling statement was made that ten ministers in the counties of Denbigh and Flint were in receipt of less than £1 a week salary.

Irish Notes.

IT is satisfactory to learn that while the population of Ireland as a whole is decreasing relatively, Protestantism is increasing. For instance, in 1861 the Protestants were only 22·31 per cent. of the population, but according to the late census they are now 25·70 per cent, or between a third and a fourth of the population.

The state of matters in the West of Ireland has been vividly described by the Bishop of Tuam, who, in addressing a few days ago the Synod of Achonry and Killala, said that Protestants wanted to be allowed to do their peaceable work in peace. They asked no favour or concession from anyone, although they would suppose that in the nature of things a Christian Government would support a body of people whose business in the world was to advance morality and religion. Three or four members of the Synod, among many others, were subject to cruel treatment. Except one goes with the mob, life in that part of Ireland at present is practically unbearable.

At Belfast Assizes last week Arthur Trew, Richard Braithwaite, and Robert Calvert, members of the Belfast Protestant Association, were convicted of conspiracy to excite people to riot on the occasion of a recent Roman Catholic procession through the city. The case excited great public attention. The three prisoners were found guilty, and Trew was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, and each of the others to six months. It is hoped the decision will have a good effect in the South and West, where a system of terrorism and coercion prevails to an alarming extent. If mob law must be suppressed in Belfast, and it certainly should, it cannot be allowed to reign in Limerick and Cork.

The Irish meeting at Keswick was very lively and successful. Mr. George Williams presided. He pointed to Romanism and alcoholism as the two greatest enemies of the Kingdom of God in Ireland. Miss Carnegie spoke of work among Jews in Dublin, Belfast and Cork, and Rev. T. B. Robertson, of the Open-Air Mission (which now touches fifty-two towns in the island), regretted the hostility of the English government to the movement, and the efforts of the Cabinet to govern Ireland through the priests. He gave details of the conversion of Roman Catholics through individual sympathy. Mrs. George Williams deplored the apathy of the Christian public in face of the growing evils of intemperance. She was followed by Rev. J. R. Toff, and Mr. W. T. Lindsay, of the Irish Church Missions. The latter delighted the meeting with a most racy narrative of Gospel preaching in the fairs, and of visiting from house to house. Rev. J. O. Gage Dogherty, of the Scripture Readers' Society, closed with an animated picture of colportage work. He compared the colporteurs to the infantry, and the street-preachers to the artillery. Both would secure the victory.

Employment of Epileptics.

IT is computed that there are 40,000 epileptics in the United Kingdom. The object of the National Society for Employment of Epileptics is to give these afflicted ones opportunities to forget their infirmities, and to fulfil their functions as men and women, religiously, morally, and socially. The experiment of forming a colony at Chalfont has proved a successful undertaking. When fully developed, the colony will be an industrial village, whose inhabitants, though unhappily afflicted, will be usefully and healthfully occupied. In the farm, garden, and workshop, every member of the community has opportunity for the exercise of useful industry. Those who by their generosity have enabled the committee to enlarge the colony have the satisfaction of knowing that, while they have made it possible for more colonists to be received, they have diminished the relative cost of maintenance.

The experience of the Chalfont colony proves that the younger the colonist the greater the chance of cure. The age of admission for young people has been lowered, and there is now a considerable number of young boys and girls, between the ages of fourteen and sixteen. Classes are held for such, but the conditions of the Act of 1899 preclude the Board of Education from giving the Society any monetary assistance.

The colony has now accommodation for 136. Among recent applications for admission several have been from soldiers, who, though previously sound and healthy, have become afflicted with epilepsy owing to wounds received during the South African campaign. Copies of the annual report, which comprises many interesting details of the Homes, and work of the colony, may be obtained from the hon. secretary, Mr. G. Penn Gaskell, 12, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Y.M.C.A. buildings at Brussels are situate in the heart of the city, at 10-12, Rue des Finances, and comprise a hall, seating 300 people, a restaurant, and other rooms. The membership includes young men of various nationalities, and a good work is maintained. Mr. G. Brugmann, who purchased and adapted the building, has just died before carrying out his expressed intention of bequeathing the building to the Association. This unexpected demise has given a blow to the work, and jeopardized its future. It is hoped, however, that the sympathy of Christian friends will be evinced in the matter.

The South-Western District Committee has established a large marquee for the Volunteers of the Western Brigade at Aldershot for the time they are in camp. Facilities are afforded for letter-writing and recreation. A great variety of wholesome reading matter is supplied, and evangelistic meetings are held each evening.

The report of the American Executive at the recent Jubilee Convention at Boston, of the work in the United States and Canada, was most encouraging. The 1,476 Associations reported a membership of 268,477. The 391 buildings are valued at £4,289,083. The Associations employ 1,522 secretaries, and expended last year upon international, state, and local work, £646,985.

At the last monthly meeting of the "Missionary Parliament" of the Manchester Association, an interesting address was given by Mr. Robert Stark, from Peru. The various members report from time to time on missionary work in the different parts of the world they represent. A reception of members was held recently to welcome Rev. Dr. Blanchard, from the Denver, Colorado, Association, and Mr. Saarinen, from the Finland Association, both now on a visit to this country for the first time.

The Foreign Missionary Committee of the Scottish National Council of Y.M.C.A's. is anxious to send a secretary to Lahore, India, to work among the students and young men of that city, as Mr. J. H. Oldham's recent serious illness, to the regret of the National Council, renders his return to India inadvisable. Mr. Oldham laboured with marked success, and has been enabled to place the work on a satisfactory basis. The committee's preference lies towards their representative being a Scotsman and graduate of one of the British Universities. Information regarding the position may be obtained from Mr. E. J. Hill, Bank of Scotland, Ardrossan, convener of the committee.

Other Lands.

Mr. Moody's Northfield Schools.

TWENTY years have passed since, in faith, and with no little courage, Mr. Moody inaugurated at Mount Hermon, the school for young boys, a work which, in two decades, has passed almost beyond comprehension. The attendance the first year was thirty; that for the twentieth year has been 711. Its roll contains the names of 3,284 students.

It began for little boys; it has come to be a school for young men, whose average age equals that of college students. It began in obscurity; it has come to be one of the recognised great schools of America. It is not a local school, but receives students from every continent. On the twentieth anniversary trustees, teachers, and former and present students came together, when a report of the past year's work was presented, and the occasion was one of blessing and inspiration to all.

During all the twenty years the school has been doing increasingly good work, ever developing greater needs, and coping with increasing demands. "If," as the report states, "we can do more good, and to a larger number, it must be our earnest effort to accomplish this under the guidance of our God, who has bountifully blessed us hitherto." May the work so well begun by Mr. Moody be carried on without a break.

The young ladies' seminary has also a good account to give of its work during the bygone twelve months. The number of students enrolled for the year—429—is the largest number ever registered in the history of the undertaking. Students represent not only the United States, but also Canada, Germany, Turkey, India, Mexico, Sandwich Islands, and Jamaica.

For the coming year the outlook is bright, the number of applications being larger than ever before. A high tone is maintained, and opportunities taken of influencing the lives of the students, and to this end the day of prayer proved especially helpful, many expressing their desire and decision that Christ should have entire possession of their hearts. 286 are church members, and 204 members of the Y.W.C.A., while 1,000dols. have during the year been voluntarily contributed for Christian and philanthropic purposes. The only limit to the extent of the work seems to be the limit of the accommodation in class rooms and dormitories. Mr. W. R. Moody, in forwarding the reports of the schools, remarks that the year's growth has been a source of deep gratitude to all connected with them.

Qua Iboe Mission.

THERE has recently passed away—the victim of an epidemic of smallpox which has been raging in Qua Iboe—a remarkable man, the leader in all good works, and a Church member of great influence. Ego-Ego was a man of fifty-five years of age, and when Messrs. Bill and Baillie landed in Qua Iboe some thirteen years ago, he occupied a powerful position as chief among the Ibuno tribe. After the arrival of the missionaries he became an attentive hearer of the Gospel, but for a considerable time he remained in a state of indecision, as his social position and business prospects delayed for a time his coming right out on the side of God. The triumph of God's grace was truly remarkable, and to the consistent life of this converted chief is largely due the fact that there is now a church membership of between 600 and 700 people at the Ibuno station of the Qua Iboe Mission on the West Coast of Africa.

A booklet giving fuller information regarding this remarkable convert can be obtained from the Organizing Secretary of the Mission, Mr. Fred. W. Gracey, Room 7, Y.M.C.A., Belfast.

The Indian Famine.

THE condition of parts of India continues to afford ground for grave concern. Rev. Dennis Osborne, writing from Poona, under date July 5, says: "Rain has fallen only on the coast thus far; only one shower in Gujarat, while the Central and North-West Provinces are practically rainless. Prices have already risen greatly."

Rev. P. B. Keskar, of Sholapur, writing with regard to the continued distress in the district, and of his responsibility for the maintenance of sufferers from last year's famine, informs us that he has now 332 persons in charge, of whom fifty-two are adults, and 280 children.

Rev. J. H. McNeill, of Dohad, Panch Mahals, who labours among the Bhils, writes:—"Government is doing all it can to help its own tenants with bullocks, &c., but there is a large class of sub-tenants and poor villagers for whom nothing is done, except what the missionaries can do. The day before your letter came I had fifteen persons from a village seeking help. I shall now be able to give them seed grain, and bullocks as far as the money will go. I cannot tell you how glad I am to enable the most needy ones to keep their homes together. I know many have and even that a very scanty one. Many who heard the Gospel preached during the famine, and afterwards returned to their villages, continue to cease work on the Sabbath, and come to the services."

From the Mission House, Jhalod, Panch Mahals, Mr. G. W. Blair, after referring to the loss, through famine and disease, of 18,000 people out of a population of 50,000, tells of signs of a spiritual awakening among the Bhils. A number have been enrolled as inquirers, and sixty orphans are being trained, some of whom, it is hoped, will become evangelists to their own people.

Proposed Nile Printing Press.

HOW best to bring the knowledge of the Gospel to the largest number of people in Egypt in a way which will not arouse their anger and resistance, is the problem engaging the attention of Christian workers. The Government schools are teaching the children to read in their own tongue, Arabic, and now it is proposed to establish a Free Mission Press for the whole Nile country, and to print and circulate tracts, pamphlets, booklets, wall texts, hymns, &c., in the Arabic, Greek, Italian, and English languages.

The Beyrout Printing Press is the source from which the missionaries now chiefly obtain books in Arabic, and it is felt that if a similar press were established in or near Cairo, it would prove a stimulus to mission work in Egypt, and would also lead to the discovery and development of much native talent among Egyptian Christians. By means of children's magazines the Gospel would reach the rising generation in their own language.

It is an exceptional opportunity of spreading the Kingdom of Christ in Egypt which now presents itself. The proposal is to put the Mission Press in the hands of trustees, to appoint a suitable man in charge of it, and to ask missionaries of each Society to form a Publication Committee. Full particulars may be obtained from Miss Annie Van Sommer, Cuffnells, Wimbledon.

The Chantilly Racing Stables' Institute.—Over 1,500 English people are living in Chantilly, and of this number are nearly 500 lads employed in the racing stables. Sickness and accidents constantly occur, and the need of an earnest Christian nurse (either with means to support herself, or with a friend who can supply the money) is ever asserting itself. The secretary, Mr. H. Eliot Walton, is also seeking the services of a married man to act as caretaker. Particulars will be given by Mr. Walton, who may be addressed at the Racing Stables' Institute, Rue Gouvieux, Chantilly, Oise, France; or, during August, Libertswold, Copers Cope Road, Beckenham, Kent.

A Remarkable Discovery.

TO a recent issue of The Gospel in Mexico, Mr. W. H. Stanger writes as follows:—"When Pizarro conquered Peru some 400 years ago, a few of the Incas managed to escape massacre or slavery, and escaped into the untrodden wilds of the interior. For some time afterwards vague rumours were heard concerning the existence of these people, but at last they were unheard of and forgotten. Mr. G. W. Ray believes he has discovered their descendants.

"It was after a journey of 1,700 miles up the Rio Plata, and some seven weeks in the saddle, that Mr. Ray came across a people differing entirely from all other Indians of the country, calling themselves by the name of the Cangwas. While there are several tribes of them, it is of the 'royal' one that the most interesting tale is told. These people seem to number about 300 families, the population being kept small by the destruction of all infants after the first two have been born.

"While other Indians of the interior seem to have lost all idea of God and of a future existence, the Cangwas recognise both. They are sun-worshippers, as were the Incas of Peru. A high priest leads their praise with incense offered upon an altar, and he possessed an image which was said to have been brought from heaven itself by the Creator. I write possessed for, though this was the tribal god and the welfare of the people depended upon it, the covetous old man could not resist the offer of a blanket, and sold the image to our brother! Mr. Ray also purchased for a box of matches something that he was assured was the only and original devil!

"Mr. Ray slept in the 'king's palace,' the royal family and himself sharing the only room of that primitive Windsor Castle. The bare earth was their feather bed, and their wearing apparel the only cover. Every article owned by these people is common property, so that there is no temptation to steal. They are very covetous, nevertheless, and no visitor would be welcome without a good pack of the articles that they most prize. Still, when the King receives a knife, looking-glass, string of beads, or any other valuable, it is no more his than another's. This simplicity is novel and refreshing."

Copies of The Gospel in Mexico, and information concerning the missions which it represents, may be obtained free from Mr. John Mercer, Harburg, Fallowfield, Manchester.

The North Africa Mission.

FROM Miss K. Smith, who has been labouring at Djemaa Sahridj, an interesting communication has been received in which she describes her work as follows:

"We have done more evangelizing this spring and summer than ever, in the same space of time, before. From Fort National we commenced visiting the surrounding villages on foot. The people seemed utterly neglected. They wondered to see us. 'What have you come for?' they asked us. 'To tell you that God loves you and wants to save you.'

"Then looking at us earnestly, 'You are good; you will surely go to heaven; go where you like and do what you like in our village.'

"The women and girls seem to be drawn to us at once, often clinging affectionately to us and praying us not to go away. And this on the first visit! Is it that God is preparing hearts to receive Jesus? The mistress of the hotel came twice to us by her own accord for Bible reading and prayer. The judge asked to be supplied with a Bible. Oh, how poor Africa wants Jesus!"

Prophetic Conference at Boston.—It has been decided to hold a prophetic conference in the city of Boston, U.S.A., during the last week in October, commencing on the 22nd. The best-known students and scholars of the United States and Canada and some of the leaders in the religious life of Great Britain have been invited to participate in what promises to be the most commanding and influential Conference upon prophetic themes ever held in America.

Home Missions.

Within Barrack Gates.

PASTOR W. E. WELLS has been quietly working, with God's evident blessing, in the important task of winning our soldiers for Christ where they are and as they are; and he has not toiled in vain. In the old Tower of London, in the well-known barracks in the West, and at the Guards' Depôt, where in the Anglican vestry as many as forty-two young soldiers have assembled, our lads have been met, and the name of Jesus has proved mighty to save.

Little groups have gathered on barrack stairs also, between spells of duty. In hospital and even in cells, "in season and out of season," God's Word has been spoken and blessed. The officers have ever been most sympathetic and kind. The work has thus always happily proceeded, and the general (Sir Henry Trotter) recently wrote a kind letter thanking the pastor for his "devoted service to the troops" under his charge.

A young fellow writes from Gibraltar: "I was talking to one of my comrades yesterday. He said, 'The Sky-Pilot Wells has done something for you; he has learnt you some high notions.' I said, 'Yes, thank God he has; he has helped to pilot me to the feet of Jesus." When a man decides for Christ, or is willing to meet with Christian comrades, a small pocket Bible is given; over forty of these have been so presented. Some of these Bibles have passed through truly WONDERFUL EXPERIENCES IN S. AFRICA.

A soldier in the Scots Guards was set upon by a body of Boers and stripped of all he possessed, which included a ring, and £5 in gold, which he carried in his pocket for want of a better place. He was murderously handled, and like a "certain man" of old, left half dead; but he writes: "I am glad I have not lost the Bible you gave me." Another sends a message to say that he has passed through most of the campaigns in which the Guards were engaged, and, though losing much, has still preserved the pocket Bible. His head has been covered in the day of battle, and he returns home expressing his determination to be more than ever Christ's true disciple.

The meetings are bright, free from formalism, and God's Spirit is evidently present to guide and lead to Jesus. The favourite hymn is 210 ("It is well with my soul"—Sacred Songs and Solos)—and the parting watch-word, 494 ("God be with you till we meet again"). The leaders are hoping to have an iron room of their own soon on the camping ground, where they will be able to meet those whom they first saw as recruits.

Mr. Wells may be addressed: 9, Brooksville Avenue, West Kilburn, W.

A Sheffield Mission.

THE Rescue and Evangelization Mission, Sheffield, continues its earnest and well-organized efforts for the enlightenment of spiritual darkness and the relief of the distressed. Open-air meetings are conducted with good results. Among other efforts in this department of work are the services conducted by the young women of the Bible class in the yards and narrow streets near the Thomas Street Hall. The indoor evangelistic services are largely attended, and of a fruitful character.

An important undertaking is "The Haven," a home for women and girls, in which are received those without parents or friends, some who have proved unmanageable in their own homes, and others who have in one way or another lost their good character. Respectable servants out of situation and having no proper home, and others are assisted. For example, a young woman whose husband is in the infirmary recently sought help. She could obtain work, it appeared, at a laundry, provided she could obtain a tidy dress. This was given to her, and she went to the employment, most grateful for the timely aid. This useful mission is still superintended by Mrs. E. Corbridge, 97, Gell Street, Sheffield,

London Central Mission.

WESLEYANS in Central London are in no sense slackening their efforts to meet, with Christian sympathy, the needs of the poor in Clerkenwell and other districts. A perusal of the annual report, entitled, "As the Days are Going by," will serve to convince friends of the effectiveness and strength with which the numerous agencies are maintained. The superintendent (Rev. John E. Wakerley), in his summary, says: "In the Mission there are now three chapels and one mission hall, with accommodation for more than 3,000 hearers; five Sunday-schools, with 1,937 scholars and 179 teachers; Bands of Hope with 787 members, and temperance societies with 505 members, while more than 2,500 men and women are in the thrift societies and clubs, and 1,582 are regularly meeting in class."

At St. John's Square and Liverpool Road the work has made steady progress. Camden Street branch is the centre of a many-sided and successful effort; while Windsor Hall is the home of a people who, if they could at once be transferred to a building to seat 1,500, would prove their zeal in a larger measure than is at present possible. Mr. Wakerley adds: "The need for the London Central Mission is as great as ever.

SPIRITUAL DESTITUTION AND NEGLECT

prevail to an alarming extent. Poverty appeals for help with clamant voice. Drunkenness and immorality are open sores; child-life is blighted by overcrowding and vice. The exodus to the suburbs removes many of those who should, in the ordinary condition of things, become stalwart workers."

A new departure in Clerkenwell is the holding of a mid-day service on Wednesdays, and the following from a factory girl is a type of the testimony received regarding the effort:—

I want to tell you that your dinner and evening services have been a great comfort to me at my work. I should like them more often. I have done my best to get the girls at my workshop to come. Thirteen of them came, and three men. I think it did them good. I could hear nothing all the afternoon but about the address.

The efforts of the Sisters embody a wide ministry of love, and their diaries have revealed the manifold sufferings which they have been enabled to alleviate. Tender sympathy and spiritual consolation have been carried into many homes, and have been all the more welcome because of the temporal ministry that has either preceded or accompanied it. People untouched by the ordinary ministries of the Church are influenced towards a better life by the persistent following up on the part of a Sister. The well-conducted is an important part of the enterprise. Seven regular open-air meetings per week in connection with the Central Chapel have been the means of reaching great numbers of people and sowing the seed of eternal life in their hearts. The work has been carried on with an earnest willingness to use the fine opportunity of the London streets to the advantage of the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. Lodging-house services have been held in four centres through the winter months.

One of the most pathetic and moving sights has been the Sunday afternoon tea for the destitute. About 150 men, gathered from the homeless in the streets of London, have had at least one meal on the Lord's Day, and here the lowest have been reached. No social enterprise has been allowed to interfere with the directly spiritual organizations of the Mission, as is evidenced by the constant conversions, and the passion of the members at each centre for the salvation of souls.

Rev. J. E. Wakerley may be addressed at 19, Lloyd Square, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Canal Boat People.—Brentford makes an admirable centre for a mission to canal boat people, and for some years evangelistic operations have been carried on there, in connection with the London City Mission, in a day school and meeting-room with useful results. Further provision is being made for a meeting-room,

The Bible-Class Federation.

IN 1885 three Bible-classes in Islington were grouped together for mutual intercourse, and four years later a Conference resulted in the formation of a second group at Holloway, consisting of four classes. In 1896 the seven classes combined, under the title of "The Young Men's Evangelical Bible-Class Federation."

The movement has spread steadily, and, though at first intended especially for young men, it soon became necessary to include all Men's Bible-Classes, shortening the title to "The Bible-Class Federation." Quite recently a separate section was created for women's classes. District federations have been formed, or are being formed, at Bristol, Derby, Nottingham, Huddersfield, Sheffield, and Hornsey. Local groups of classes are also spreading throughout London and the provinces.

The great aim of the Federation is to foster the devout and systematic study of Scripture. A membership card is in preparation, giving a systematic course of daily Bible study (with which will be associated a Prayer Union), specially adapted to members of Bible classes. This will commence with 1902. To further the object, local group conferences are held upon Biblical subjects, and these have proved a means of drawing forth the best efforts of members, of fostering brotherly unity between members of various sections of Christ's Church, and of enabling members to gain an all-round view of the same truth.

The second aim in view is the preparation of young men for practical Christian work by means of training centres, and it is proposed to inaugurate the first of these centres in October next at Union Chapel, Islington. Meetings will be on Tuesday evenings at 7.30, to be conducted by Mr. T. Fenwick Greves, executive president. The course will last for six months, and will include four series of subjects:—(1) Scripture history and doctrine; (2) Evidences of Christianity; (3) Religious history; (4) Training for work. A special effort is made to prevent "leakages." By means of a register of Bible-Classes, and through correspondents, young men are introduced, on their removal, from one locality to another, to convenient Bible-Classes; or, if going abroad, are supplied with letters of introduction which secure for them friendly personal interest and sound practical advice.

By means of a Bible-Class magazine it is hoped to focus Bible Class work for the benefit of all workers, and a series of articles is in preparation which it is intended to issue in a permanent form as a "Bible-Class Handbook."

Federations and groups find themselves able to undertake work which would be difficult or impossible for an individual class, such as Gospel services, open-air and indoor missions, mass meetings, systematic house-to-house visitation over a given area, mutual improvement and recreative societies, and educational classes.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has consented to act as honorary president for 1901-2. The general secretary (Mr. R. M. Waterhouse, Maud Villa, Maybank Road, South Woodford, Essex) will be happy to furnish any further particulars, or to arrange for a personal deputation, if requested.

Kennington Cross Mission.—In the densely populated south-east district of the metropolis there are, happily, those who assiduously and zealously hold up the lamp of truth. Among others, this Mission has, through its varied agencies, Sunday-school, Gospel and open-air meetings, Band of Hope, Steadfast Band, &c., been labouring throughout another year to proclaim alike to old and young the message of salvation, and to extend the kingdom of the Lord Jesus. For the expansion of the work, to include Mothers' meetings and a Young Christians' Band, Kennington Hall, hitherto occupied on Sundays and two week evenings only, is in future to be occupied throughout the whole week. Those who bear the responsibility of the enterprise trust for continued and enlarged support from God's people interested in the endeavour to bring the Gospel to the masses

SUNDAY, August 4. John xviii.

THE Lord went forth out of the city, and across the brook Kedron, to Gethsemane, but not for the purpose of concealment, as the second verse clearly proves. How characteristic it was that He should meet the band, and ask that He should be taken, while his disciples should be permitted to escape. Was not this what He was ever doing? Was He not always meeting peril, temptation, death, that the great company whom He was bringing to glory might be saved? What meeknsss and what majesty are here! Meekness that He should subject Himself to the binding thong; majesty that He should be able to use the unspeakable name of God, I AM (notice that He is not in the Greek). Well might the crowd be over-awed. Withal what humility, that He should take the cup, as from the hands of the Father, though presented by the hand of a Judas! Let us ever take the cups of life's pain and sorrow from the hand of God, not seeing Judas, but the Father.

The examination before Annas was preliminary to the regular trial before the Sanhedrim, and was intended to make up a case against Jesus, which might afterwards be laid before his judges. While the Master was before one bar, Peter stood at another; but how egregiously he failed! His fall was due to his self-confidence and lack of prayer. Those who are weak should beware of exposing themselves in places and company where they are liable to fall. Do not warm yourself at the world's fires.

There was something in Pilate which elicited the profound interest of the Saviour, as though He would start questions within the breast of his judge which could have but one solution. Here was the collision between two kingdoms—that of Rome and of Heaven; the one of iron, the other of light; this seeming strong, but destined to pass away as the chaff of the threshing floor; that seeming weak, but destined to exist for ever; Rome's emanating from this world, Christ's not arising from the world, but coming down from God, and appealing to the children of truth.

MONDAY, August 5. John xix.

Thou wert scourged, O Son of God, because Thou, too, wert to learn obedience by the things that Thou didst suffer, and it is written that every son whom God receives must be scourged; but Thou hadst done nothing amiss, yet Thou didst never seem more royal than when clothed in a film of blood. Pilate bare witness to thy innocence and goodness. His efforts to save Thee, signs as they were of his weakness, were tributes to the impression which Thou hadst made on his rugged heart. But thy course was predestined—determined upon before the world began to be. Thine own rejected Thee, kingly though Thou wert; but stay our lips from ever repeating their refusal. Be it ours to cry, in life and death, "We have no King but Jesus."

Thou wast crucified, not only that Thou shouldst put away sin, but that I might be crucified with Thee, and that thy cross with outstretched arms should stand between me and the fascinations of the world, the temptations of the devil. Oh! let me, like Pilate, write an indelible legend, which shall never be altered—"This is the King of my heart."

I stand beside thy cross, and worship in adoring love, as I behold thy love to thy mother, and thy devotion to the rule of Holy Scripture, and the majesty of thy last cry of victory. "It is finished," My Saviour—thy work of redemption and the ground of my salvation. What is there for me but to hide in the cleft of thy side, and to seek cleansing, not only from the water, but from the blood?

TUESDAY, August 6. John xx.

In considering this evangelist's account of the resurrection, we should remember that it is largely supplementary to the other narratives. This Gospel having been written long after those were in circulation, the selection of incidents which are recorded is made for spiritual purposes, with the object of showing how faith in the risen Christ grew in different cases, each case being typical, and having its own lessons to teach.

Let us remember the threefold salutation of peace. First, the peace of evening (20). When we come weary from the day's life, our garments stained, and our feet soiled, we need to meet the risen Saviour, and to hear his benediction, and to see the grounds on which we may rest assured of the forgiveness of sins, as they are disclosed in the wounds. O sinful child, let those wounds speak not only to God for thee, but to thine own heart for God, and assure thee of forgiveness. Second, the peace of morning (21). When we start upon the path of daily duty, or go forth on errands of mercy, it is well to hear again the words of the Blessed Master, "Peace be unto you," and to bend low before Him, as He breathes on us the Holy Spirit. Take a deep breath, dear heart, of that celestial breathing. It is the breath of eternity and of life. Third, there is peace for the honest doubter, who longs more than words can tell to know and realize that Jesus is really risen from the dead. You may long waver between doubt and hope, but if you are true to yourself, and follow on, though in the dark, to know the Lord, He will break upon you with morning light, and his first salutation will be Peace.

WEDNESDAY, August 7. John xxi.

This miracle remarkably answers to that in Luke v., but there is a great difference. That was to teach the Apostles to fish when the presence of Jesus was sensible and manifest to them. This teaches us all to fish in fellowship with the unseen Master. In the first He was with them in the boat; in the second He stands upon the shore, as if to teach us that, though He now sits upon the throne of God, He is as careful about his children, as to whether they have had their necessary meal, and whether they have sped well in their fishing, as ever He was during the days of his flesh. Still, if you listen, you may hear his tender voice across the intervening water, which every day grows less in its expansion. He will give you directions as to where to let down your net; He will hear your sorrowful confession of failure; He will enter into the hardships and toil of life; and as one by one we plunge into the cold wave, we shall find Him waiting to welcome us, as we emerge on the shore of heaven. We shall find that He has been providing for us, with his own hand making ready our welcome, and we shall break our fast with Him, finding some of our happiness in the blessedness of the souls that we have won for Him. We shall hear Him say to us: "Bring of the fish that you have caught," and in the converse which will ensue upon the margin where time and eternity meet, we shall begin that which will lead to the converse of eternal ages.

We are too anxious to know another's lot. So often we say to Jesus: "What shall this man do?" Let us remember that his will determines each life (if I will), that He has a separate plan for each us, and that whether by life or by death, we have to glorify God. First, with infinite love He restores the wandering soul, testing its devotion before re-appointing it to ministry, and bestowing benediction.

THURSDAY, August 8. Acts i.

The Gospel according to Luke tells us what Jesus began both to do and to teach. This book tells us what He continued to do and teach in his Church by the Holy Spirit, after He had been received up. But notice that even when He mingled with them in the risen glory of his resurrection, it was still through the Holy Spirit that He gave commandment unto the Apostles whom He had chosen. Note also that the Holy Spirit is always the promise of the Father. He is the plenteous gift of the heart of God, the stream of living water, pure as crystal, which makes glad the city of God, as it issues from the Eternal Throne.

It is not necessary now to wait for the coming of the Spirit; He came on the memorable day which still casts its light upon our world. His advent was as divine an event as the advent of the Saviour. He is as present in the world as Jesus was during the days of his flesh. It is not, therefore, our duty to wait for Him in the sense the Apostles did, but to open our hearts to receive Him, who is already in his Church.

The ascension of our Lord is the crowning episode of his marvellous life. We cannot follow Him with mortal sight. We love One whom we have not seen; nevertheless, He is with us all the days to the end of the world, bestowing upon us priceless gifts, and guiding his Church amid all her perils and difficulties.

It would seem as if the early Church made a great mistake in electing Matthias, and that Paul was God's designated successor to Judas. We are reluctant to criticize those who had the opportunity of immediate converse with Christ, but it is surely a wiser method to let God solely fill the vacant places in his Church in his own time and way, than to restrict his choice between two, or to use the lot, which has passed out of date for those of us who trust in the guidance of the Living Spirit.

FRIDAY, August 9. Acts ii.

On this day began a new era. The Holy Spirit had been in the world from the first as the Agent of creation, as the informing Breath of the Almighty, as the Spirit of inspiration to whom we owe the oracles of truth, and as the Equipper of the olden saints for huge enterprises; but his work upon the sons of men had been transitory and intermittent. He came upon Gideon and Elijah and Isaiah for his specific purpose, and when it was served it seemed as if the glow of his indwelling slightly dimmed. But from the day of Pentecost He became a resident in the world through the Church, his one object being to abide with us, to fill us with perennial fulness, to empower us with unfailing and unceasing might for service to God and man.

The symbols of the Spirit were a sound that filled the house, the fire that spoke of purity and fervour, and the rush of the mighty wind. Each of these sacred emblems is applicable to-day. But, above all, notice the characteristic work of the Holy Spirit's presence amongst men—that He filled the heart. Do we know what it is to be filled? Have we not been too content with the drop or two in the bucket, when we might have been channels through which the torrent of Holy Ghost influence might have constantly passed? Let everyone ponder the precious promise of verse 39, and claim his share in the Pentecostal gift; and if you receive it, remember v. 40, and continue stedfastly in everything which will help you to abide in the full flow of the spiritual power.

SATURDAY, August 10. Acts iii.

How many of God's children lie at the Beautiful Gate of the temple of perfect life. It was forbidden of old time that any should pass the upper portal of the Temple so long as there was any defect or blemish in their body. No doubt this was the reason why this poor cripple was kept outside. He was a Jew. There was no doubt of his inclusion in the Hebrew nation. He may have been an ardent lover of the solemn splendour of the Jewish ritual, as the notes floated down to him through the beautiful gate; but he was forbidden to enter into the court with the Hebrew men because of his defect. Perhaps you have been outside God's best from the earliest; compelled to hear the music of perfect harmony and happiness, but unable to share it. From this moment learn from this chapter how by fellowship with Jesus Christ you may receive direct from Him, through faith, a perfect soundness (16) which shall permeate your entire nature, driving before it the sin which has held you so long, and enabling you to enter the temple of life, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

And for those of us who do know the Saviour let us look to Him as the Prince (or Author) of Life (v. 15). Let us place our feet in the footprints left by Him, and let us eagerly look forward to the time when the heavens which now hold Him will restore Him to us to bring about those times of restoration which God has promised. Oh, that we may be used by Him in the restoration of the blessedness of the first creation.

God Uses the Weak.

DR. BROUGHTON, the pastor of a flourishing church at Atlanta, Georgia, who is on a visit to Europe, was called upon to speak at the close of the Convention meeting on Wednesday last week. For half an hour he kept the audience under the spell of his sanctified American humour, so fresh to many English ears.

After expressing his gratification in having his wish of many years to visit Keswick at last fulfilled, he related some interesting incidents in his pastoral life, saying, in conclusion, that what was needed in the Church of God was not so much brain-power and intellect, as simple child-like trust. He had been converted to this view during the first mission, held in a little town of the Southern States, and the following was his experience:—

It was at the close of the first Gospel address. The congregation had been listening with apparent coldness, and nobody at first responded to the appeal to express by rising their desire to be prayed for, until a little boy got up and stood upon his seat.

The preacher nodded to him, and continued: "If there are any here, bowed down under a burden, who would like to get rid of it, will they stand up?" The only burdened one, rising to his feet, and on his seat, was the same little boy.

"Now," said Dr. Broughton, "If there are any parents here who desire me to pray for their children or relations, will they let me know it by rising?" Up jumped the little boy again!

Night after night the same proceedings continued, with a varied formula of questions and appeals, and always with the same result. None but the boy responded. His perseverance became the talk of the town, and people thronged in to the meetings for the sake of seeing the fun.

A scandalized deacon came to the preacher, and kindly intimated that the boy, being half an idiot, should be prevented from turning the meetings into ridicule. The preacher refused to adopt such a measure. "He is the only manifestation of life in the congregation. I am not going to stop him. If you choose to blow out the little candle light and leave the place in perfect darkness, you are at liberty to do so!" Others came with similar intimations, meeting with the same stern refusal on the part of Dr. Broughton.

Sunday came, when, according to the American expression, "the doors of the church were to be opened for the reception of members." In the absence of the pastor, this duty fell to the share of the missioner. The church was packed that day as never before, Church members being admitted on their own profession of faith. Everybody wondered how the only candidate would be dealt with. Sure enough, there he was, making his way through the crowd to where the minister stood. He answered the question pertaining to his faith, with mutual intelligence. The proposal for his admission was put before the Church, and unanimously carried through. The "weak" little boy had been taken into the fold.

The minister began to deliver his sermon, when a man came into the aisle and said, pointing to an old man, "We have a most respectable citizen with us to-day, one who has done much for our town, whom we all love, but who is an agnostic. For twenty-five years he has not put a foot inside a church; here he is. Let us pray for him." All knelt down and pleaded with God for his soul.

As they rose from their knees, another voice, the voice of a child, was heard in the silence: "Please, let us pray for grandpa." It was the same old man for whom prayer had just been offered, and his intercessor was the newest member of the church.

Prayer continued with increasing fervency until at the close of the meeting the object of these intercessions asked permission to give his testimony. It was to please his little grandson, who was his favourite because of his affliction, that he yielded to his entreaties and came to the place of worship. Now he felt that God wished him to be a new man, and he was decided to serve Him from henceforth.

The next man to yield to the loving persuasiveness of the new soul-winner was the boy's own father—a saloon keeper. He came to the meetings, was converted under the power of the Gospel, went home and knocked the heads out of all the barrels in his saloon, and emptied the contents into the street. He gave up his business, and became of his own accord, from the very day of his conversion, a missionary to the saloon-keepers of the town. The consequence of this bold stand was that in a few weeks all the public-house keepers, with the exception of one (who, however, took the pledge), were brought to God. For two years the town was entirely a prohibition town.

The little boy in the school of God became a young man of average intelligence, and is, we are told, now studying for the ministry.

This is a forceful illustration of how God can use the weakest vessel, if we are willing to yield ourselves to Him. "When I am weak, then am I strong."

Will all new "Searchers" please note that it is not sufficient to give references only. The texts must be written out as well.

A new member asks the prayers of his fellow "Searchers," that he may be guided aright in the choice of a mission field, if, as he hopes, he is able to take up foreign missionary work.

I am sure all my little "Searchers" will be grieved to hear of the death of Bella Mack, and will join with me in sympathy for her sorrowing mother and brother and sisters. She died after many weeks of pain and weariness, borne, her mother says, without a murmur, and in the confident assurance that Jesus would come and take her home. "And," her mother adds, "though we mourn her early removal, we have the glad hope that it is only 'until He come.'" To add to the mother's sorrow, Bella's father died only a month before.

These are days of enterprize even amongst young people, and I am interested to insert the following from two of my nieces:—"We went away for our summer holidays last week to Blackpool, and built sand castles in aid of your cots like we did last year. The result is that we collected £1 5s. 6d. for the cots, which is 6s. 6d. more than we did last year." I am sure you will all agree with me that our young helpers deserve our thanks, and still more those of the little cripples who will benefit by their kind and thoughtful action.

Mabel Morris.—Many thanks for flowers.

Ronald and Ewen Bentley, Jessie Wylie, Albert Brown, Edward Neatley, William Cooper, Hilda Staite, Ruby Ellis, Marjorie Kierman, Marie Grandjean.—I am very glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and trust you will enjoy answering the questions.

Mary Hooper and Dorothy Wallace.—I am sorry your eyes are bad, and hope they will soon get stronger.

Aline Bazett.—I regret you cannot continue this quarter, but shall be glad to welcome you back as a "Searcher" when you get time.

Douglas Berry.—Thank you for the pretty text. It is very nicely done.

Willie Thomas, Phyllis Shaw, Elsie and Dorothy Hanson.—Your kind gifts will be acknowledged in the Donation List this week.

Myrtle Perry.—I was much pleased with your letter, and hope you will like your new school, and be able to continue with the "Searcher."

North Eastern Hospital for Children.—

The medical and surgical report of this hospital indicates the scope and utility of its operations, as well as the growing need for the beneficent service it renders to the suffering poor. During 1900 a greater number of patients (778) were admitted into the wards of the hospital, a larger number of children treated in the out-patient department, and more operations were performed than in any previous year. The system of inquiry into the circumstances of out-patients, with a view to preventing abuse of the charity has continued to work satisfactorily. Extended inquiries were made in 107 cases, and of those fifty-four were found to be suitable for hospital treatment. The ladies' committee have made strenuous efforts to meet the heavy demands made upon the resources of the Samaritan Fund. Copies of the annual report of the hospital (which is dependent on voluntary support to the extent of about £5,000 a year) will be sent, on application to the secretary, Mr. T. Glenton-Kerr, City Office, 27, Clements Lane, Lombard Street, E.C.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, August 4.

Gaining by Losing (Mark x. 28-30).

THE principles of the world, and of our Lord, are widely different. The world is set on grasping all it can — Accumulation, self-aggrandisement, the piling up of a fortune, the gradual or speedy climb up the ladder of fame, the gathering of troops of friends. Looking after No. 1 is the readiest way of expressing this principle of life. But it is very unhappy, very disappointing. The soul which is the centre of its own circumference, and refuses to be part of the circumference to some other centre, is doomed to realize that there are more forfeits than prizes, more bitternesses than successes, more dark hours than bright ones.

On the other hand, Christ's principle is to give, to trust, to bless. His measure must always be pressed down and running over. The cloak must follow the coat. The second mile must be gladly thrown in with the first. To be willing to surrender all for the sake of others is the ordinary claim of the King on those who own Him as their Suzerain. And in every age there have been thousands who have gladly accepted this as their rule of life. Peter and his brethren were the leaders of a host which no man can number, who have left all to follow Jesus.

He had nowhere to lay his head, and they have been houseless and homeless, wandering in the mountains, with no settled abiding-place. He was poor, and they have gone amongst their fellows, crying, "Silver and gold have we none." He was an alien from his own brethren and sisters, and they have torn themselves from the tenderest and most captivating associations of human love that they might serve Him among the brethren and through the world.

But how great has been their reward. They may not have had houses of their own, but they have been welcomed to the beautiful and wealthy homes of the rich, for the sake of the work they are doing, and the testimony they bear. They may have been called to renounce their relatives, whom they had loved from their childhood, but they become introduced to the members of Christ's body, who become woven to them by closer ties, than even the same cradle could weave. They may not have this world's money, but all their needs are supplied. Oh, it is even good, like Paul, to need all things, since by faith we come to possess all. Read the wonderful series of paradoxes to which he gives utterance in 2 Cor. iv.

Before we can understand what Christ is willing to do for us, there must be not only a taking-hold, but a letting-go. We must step out from the boat and withdraw our hand from it. We must be done with reliance on the arm of flesh that we may see what God the Lord can do.

The Lord promises eternal life as the crown of all, and surely we do not need to wait for heaven before we know what that means; for, directly we are cradled at the Cross, and see Jesus as our Saviour, we have eternal life. But we cannot realise all it implies until this mortality is swallowed up of life. Do not count your losses, but your gains. Be sure that you lose nothing for Christ's sake, for which He will not abundantly compensate you—not in this world's coins, but in the coinage of eternity. F. B. M.

Mr. J. Willis Baer has just presented the annual report of the World's C.E. Societies. It shows that in 1891, the close of the first decade of Christian Endeavour, there were 16,274 societies. In this year 1901, as the close of the second decade, the 16,274 societies have become 61,427. There are nearly four million members. The net increase of new societies since the World's Convention in London, in July last, is nearly 2,000, with a total membership of almost 100,000 members. Denominationally, the Congregationalists lead in Great Britain; the Presbyterians in the United States; the Methodists in Canada; in Australia the Wesleyan Methodists. There are National C.E. Unions in the United States, Canada, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, France, Spain, Germany, South Africa, India, China, Mexico, and Japan. There are now 16,000 Junior Societies, and 1,285 Intermediate Societies. During the last twelve months 160,000 young people have joined the churches from the ranks of our societies.

God's Promise to Abram (Gen. xv. 1-18).
Golden Text—Gen. xv. 1.
Intermediate Story.

IN the plains of Jordan were five small cities, each ruled by its own "Sheikh," or king (xiv. 1). Of these Sodom was the chief; they were tributory to Chedorlaomer, King of Elam. In the thirteenth year of their subjection they revolted, and being re-conquered (xiv. 1-5), the principal people, including Lot, were carried away captive. Abram hearing of this, followed the victors and rescued his nephew (xiv. 13-16). But after this, Lot went back to live in Sodom! Two other incidents are, Abram's interview with Melchizedek, and his refusal to take any presents from the King of Sodom. We learn much of the noble and generous and God-fearing character of Abram.

Divine Encouragement (v. 1).

Victory often brings fear. Abram was despondent, so God said, "Fear not," and gave him the reason. This is the first time we read "fear not," in the Bible, but how often God said it to his children (Refer Ex. xiv, 13; Josh. viii. 1; Isa. xli. 10; Dan. x. 12; Luke xii. 32; Rev. i. 17).

God's First Promise.

Abram had made enemies of a powerful nation, but Jehovah said, "I am thy Shield." He had declined reward from the King of Sodom. Jehovah said, "I AM, thy exceeding great reward" Jehovah was his Shield, that he might trust in Him, his reward that he might wait for Him (Deut. xxviii. 29; Psa. xxxiii. 20-xxxiv. 11).

Jehovah's Second Promise (v. 5).

Abram asked in childlike confidence how these things could be. Then came the renewal of the promise given (Chron. xii. 1, and xiii. 16). The stars in the Syrian sky appear much brighter than in ours. What token did God give to Noah? Now, every time Abram saw the stars he would remember God's promise. This has been literally fulfilled (Chron. xxvii. 23).

Justification by Faith (v. 6).

Righteousness is the state of being right with God. A sinner can never get this by any good deed of his own; it must be the gift of grace, and is promised to those who take God at his word. Mark the word in the Lord. Personal trust and reliance in a personal God. A real, unquestioning believer is a rarity. Abram believed in spite of all adverse appearances; he went out of himself, relied simply upon God, and secured the only righteousness possible for a guilty soul (Rom. iv. 4-8; xviii. 25). Faith justifies, because it receives and accepts God's grace on God's conditions; this is taken as obedience to God's law. This is how we can be saved by faith in Christ Jesus. Christ's perfect righteousness was the ground of Abram's justification, though he knew so little about it (Rom. iii. 21-26; John iii. 16.)

Communing With God (v. 7-9, 13-16).

God ever reveals new truths to those who believe in Him. "I AM Jehovah;" God's name (Ex. vi. 3). "God Almighty." Compare Ex. xx. 2. God talked with Abram as his friend (James ii. 23). What did Jesus say about us being his friends? (John xv. 14.) Abram's question was not one of doubt, but earnest inquiry. God told him all.

Sign and Seal of the Covenant (v. 9-13, 17, 18.)

Note God's tender sympathy with man's weakness; He condescends to use man's customs. The ceremony here described was that usual between two contracting parties. Abram patiently watched and waited all day (Habakkuk ii. 3; Lam. iii. 26). When night came, God ratified the covenant, passing through the sacrificed animals like a fire. Fire was generally the symbol of God's presence. Give examples.

Lessons.

1. The promises to Abram and his descendants were mostly temporal; but to his spiritual children, true Christians, they are types of the spiritual, and will be fulfilled to those who have faith in Jesus Christ (2 Cor. i. 20; Mark ix. 23; Gal. iii. 16, 17, 22).

2. Our Lord has given us a sign and seal of his covenant. The Lord's supper and the Holy Spirit (Luke xxii. 19, 20; Eph. i. 14).

3. The need of true faith, perfect trust in our God, and his way of salvation.

The Canary Islands.

AN account by Mrs. Macknight of a second year of missionary effort in the Canary Islands, tells of advance in several departments of work. Mrs. Macknight says: The Gospel is preached and free schools are planted in neglected parts.

As the words of Jesus are read or spoken the power of them is felt, and the people say: "This is the truth." A short prayer is generally taught to those who have never prayed before to God, but only to images. If it were not for the priests, who hinder at every step, and interfere in family life, the Gospel would spread rapidly. In nearly every village entered the priest will soon come hurrying along, following and watching every step, and saying to those who are listening to us and looking at the books, "Children, don't buy. The books are bad. Children, don't buy." But we go. Nearly everyone who receives the Gospel does so secretly and not before others.

A branch of the work is for Kindness to Animals, in which cause leaflets have been written and published. They have been a valuable help to the Gospel work, and have been the means of opening many hearts and homes.

We have an interesting little school in the Dragonal, a village of cave people, of boys taught by our evangelist. The walls are bright with pictures, and many working men come to hear the evangelist teach the Gospel. A school for fishermen's children was carried on during the fishing season at Telde, with the result that a good number learned to read and say Scripture verses.

Every week the people of the caves of Atalaya are visited. Here we find the direct poverty, as well as superstition. In this remarkable population we have had our school of girls, and have also taken special interest in the two local schools. We have seen our chief opposer become an earnest reader and teacher of the Bible. Ten towns and villages have been constantly visited. These have been the scenes of blessing and opposition, joy and sorrow, reception of the Gospel and open resistance. There has been a considerable sale of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels, The making of fishing-nets and knitted shawls has been taught.

Services have been held every Sabbath. While many people read the Testament, only a few give any clear evidence of conversion. Many feel and admit that the Bible is the Word of God, but go no further, as they are still bound down by Catholicism and its errors. Our efforts would be furthered by a magic lantern and a camera if any friend would kindly think of us.

Discharged Prisoners.

EVEN among hardened lawbreakers—men and women "well known to the police," whose deeds and characteristics are duly chronicled at Scotland Yard, instances of genuine repentance are not infrequently found by Christian workers, who are privileged to interview the prisoners.

It would appear that the more enlightened views which now prevail among those in authority as to their responsibility for the reclamation, as well as the punishment, of the lawbreaker, and the encouragement which they afford to spiritual efforts within the prisons, are having a good effect. "Brethren in adversity, so ran an inscription recently scratched upon a dinner-plate by a convict, and undoubtedly the thoughts of seeking pardon for sin, and of walking in the paths of righteousness, to which imprisonment may well give rise, are by no means uncommon. A number of helpful organizations undertake the important work of affording encouragement and practical help to those who desire to do better, and among these societies the Church Army occupies a prominent place. Its evangelists have conducted a number of mission services during the past few years in prison chapels, following up the preaching by individual dealing, particularly with those hearers who have been impressed.

TURN YOUR HEARTS TO GOD;"

Moreover, being certified by the Home Secretary as a Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, its representatives are allowed to interview the men at other suitable times, especially with a view to making suitable prospective arrangements for those whose terms are about to expire. The great convict establishments of Parkhurst, Borstal, Dartmoor, and Portland are each visited, once in every six weeks by Mr. Colin F. Campbell, the hon. social secretary, for this express purpose. The effect is seen in many remarkable cases, a sample of which may be quoted from the Army's record:—

Q.R., boatman. Released after serving three years' penal servitude for warehouse breaking, on ticket-of-leave. In prison on and off for fourteen years, fifteen previous convictions for housebreaking and stealing. Was met at prison doors by our officer and passed into one of our Labour Homes. Conduct in Home was very good. He worked well and left for a situation, where he is at the present time.

An important development of the work is that timely attention is paid to the needs of the who, during the period of separation incurred by their sinning husband and father, have in many instances to suffer keen privation. The kindness thus shown has its effect upon the prisoner. In one such case the wife of a Church Army officer traced the wife of a soldier who was serving a term for desertion. The unhappy woman was found in a weak and destitute condition with a baby only two weeks old, and another child of twelve months. The husband was in a state of mental distress regarding them, and on hearing that they had been temporarily provided for, evinced deep gratitude. On his discharge he rejoined his regiment, and his wife was assisted to accompany him.

The following touching illustration, quoted from the records, affords another illustration of the useful labours in co-operation of the lady visitor and the prison evangelist:—

T.U.—In this case the prison chaplain asked the Church Army to inquire into the circumstances of the wife, as the husband was serving a term in the prison. Matron of Labour Home called upon the woman, found her very respectable; she had one child three years old, and baby three weeks old. The woman herself had been very ill, as well as the baby. Gave her a little temporary assistance; shortly afterwards baby died; C.A. helped to pay cost of funeral, and matron also obtained a grant from Insurance Company. Assisted her with clothing and to get work when strong enough to do it. Received letter from husband saying that when released he meant to stick to work to show how grateful he was for help given to wife during his absence. Matron still keeps in touch with the woman, and C.A. officer will endeavour to find work for husband on his discharge.

Large numbers of men who have been helped to commence life afresh are now doing well in situations, proving themselves worthy of the trouble expended upon them, and demonstrating their gratitude. The letter which follows is typical of many which are received at the Church Army headquarters. It was written by a man who, although but forty years of age,

HAD SPENT TWENTY-FOUR YEARS IN PRISON.

With this letter was enclosed the third instalment in repayment of a small loan which had been advanced to him that he might get a little home together prior to his marriage:—

I am fully sensible of the generous act you have done, and the manner in which you have done it. Sir, I have had so little kindness shown to me in the course of my life that I began to doubt whether there was anyone who cared for the welfare of another. I know different now, for I will say that I have been treated very kindly by you.' I am aware that you have a trying duty to perform; that you will have many tares amongst the wheat which you are trying to sift; but, believe me, Sir, you will find men worth helping, even in the criminal ranks. You remarked in your letter that I had a desire to repay you the loan you advanced me for stock. I should have tried to pay you if it had been much more. I wish all men, like myself, coming from penal servitude, would join your Society. You can make what use you like of this letter, if it will be the means of inducing other unfortunate men to place themselves under your care, for you have acted gentlemanly and Christian-like to me.—Yours humbly, ——

Crime must be punished, but, the punishment ended, it is a public duty to help the ex-criminal to do better, and this important work is maintained with an encouraging measure of fruitfulness by the Church Army.

Among the Hoppers.

IN WORCESTERSHIRE.

DESCRIBING the operations of the Worcestershire Hop pickers' Mission, Rev. John Burnham writes:—

"Day by day we visit the 'hop-yards' with religious literature, and seek opportunity of personal chat with the pickers. Evening after evening finds us at one or other of the 'camps,' with a portable organ, magic-lantern, Scripture pictures and hymns, for an al fresco service. The interest that gathers about these meetings, and the eagerness with which we are welcomed, are delightful and encouraging. At these services many of the villagers come trooping in, and thus we are able often to reach with a direct homely word those who seldom cross the threshold of the sanctuary. Our Sabbaths are specially full of interest. We visit the camps, and commence service soon after ten o'clock, after which we have scarcely a free hour (save during meals) until ten o'clock at night. All our missionaries are cyclists, and we occupy five centres, from each of which we visit all the camps within six or eight miles.

"The results of our work are not wanting in proof that God is with us. Last year our missionaries were privileged to see many cases of blessing, some of them among the roughest and most unlikely of the hoppers; in other instances the missionaries' visits were blessed to the farmer and his family.

"The whole tone of the 'camps' and 'yards' that come within the area of the mission's operations, is perceptibly improving each year." The missionaries will commence work with the opening of September.

HAMPSHIRE PROSPECTS.

The season will be a very early one in Hampshire. The picking will probably commence on August 20. There is every prospect of a large crop, and large numbers of gipsies, tramps, and outcasts will be in our midst. At the opening of the season last year we were discussing the desirability of moving our tent to a more populous centre, when the speech of a passing gipsy, "You have been here so many years, don't ye go far away from us, or what shall we do?" at once decided us to keep the tent in the same place. That gipsy said at the close of the season that he had never enjoyed the tent services so much before; both he and his son signed the pledge, and thanked us again and again for all the benefit the work had been to him. This rejoiced our hearts, and made us more and more willing to do all we can for these so far sunk in darkness. At the same tent a young man, most respectably dressed, walked several miles to see the tent, and to tell the missionary that three years ago he was there as a picker, and the words he heard had been the means of a change of life, and that now he did not need to go hop-picking. These are indeed encouragements by the way. We are putting a tent in a new district, and need sympathy and help in our undertakings.

Lenten House, Alton. AURELIA CHINN.

"One by One."

WRITING in the July issue of ONE-BY-ONE, Rev. Robert Middleton, vicar of St. Michael's, Norwich, gives the following encouraging testimony:—"We have lately been taking up the work in connection with the 'One-by-One' Band, of which we have a branch. Our membership has steadily increased, and we have found that the methods of seeking out souls to pray for, as advocated in this Band, has been a very keen stimulus to prayer among our people. In our testimony meetings we have been gladdened and encouraged time after time to hear of souls won for Christ by means of the "Throne of Grace" book, which contains the names of those who are prayed for daily. Personally I do not think any agency is simpler, more Scriptural, or more calculated to be used of God in bringing about conversions than this."

AFTER FIFTEEN YEARS OF PRAYER.

One of many wonderful answers to prayer is related by one of the members of the Band, who writes:—"Few have proved the Lord's faithfulness more than myself in answering prayer about all sorts of things, from the least to the greatest. But through long days of constant work, with a very weak body, I have often been blank. The Lord knows I have my list of souls, which I bring daily. My brother, for whom I prayed fifteen years, not knowing where he was, wrote to me last November twelve months, telling me his burden of sin was so great he felt he should lose his reason. The agony lasted seven months, and one night, while pleading Psalm 25 on his knees, peace came, and it has been flowing in like a river for eighteen months. He says he felt the power of my prayers all through his wanderings. He was willing, at all costs, to make full confession to any he had wronged."

Particulars of the "One-by-One" Working Band, which embraces Christians of all denominations, will be gladly given by Mr. Thos. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, on receipt of two penny stamps.

King's Cross Mission.

FOR years past the King's Cross Mission of the Free Methodist body has maintained excellent evangelistic and philanthropic work in a very needy district of the metropolis. Under the superintendence of Rev. G. H. Turner, steady progress has been made, and large numbers of the poor gathered to hear the Gospel preached. Prior to the establishment of the Mission the building was very sparsely attended, but now it has large congregations, and is the centre of far-reaching opererations for the spiritual and social betterment of the people. Open-air work is carried on with remarkable vigour, and the cheap food store and institute have served to bring many "outsiders" into contact with religious influences. "The kitchen," says the annual report, "serves an additional Samaritan purpose; in it are prepared 'special' dishes for the benefit of the sick and dying in the crowded tenements of this densely-populated district." The past year has been one of much blessing. "Not only have we been privileged to minister to the temporal needs of great numbers of the very poor, but we have had the joy of seeing some decide for Christ, either in response to appeals from the pulpit, or as the result of house-to-house visitation, or that personal dealing by devoted workers which is of untold value in an aggressive mission among the masses."

Reaching the Villagers.—A correspondent, in describing a method which she has found beneficial to herself and to others, suggests that persons of means and leisure, who feel diffident or unsuited to direct personal dealing, or evangelistic work, should post Christian literature, tracts, &c., to residents in outlying districts (or indeed in the cities), who are outside the reach of the usual Gospel agencies. Names and addresses are obtainable from local directories.

The Elise Home of Rest, Thicket Road, Sutton, Surrey.—Since the re-opening of this Home in June, 1900, 108 visitors have been received, twenty-five of whom were given a free holiday, and the majority of the remaining number have paid 5s. per week. The Home, which is unsectarian, meets in a small way a great need, that of helping the class of genteel poor whose wants are only known to a few, and those who carry on the work seek such to benefit by it. Further particulars may be obtained from the lady superintendent.

Evangelistic.

The Open-Air Mission.

In the district of Cadnam, Hants, Messrs. Tweedie, Haswell, Fifield, and Neil have just concluded a fruitful mission. From the outset it was evident that the meetings awakened wide-spread and lively interest. Even the stormy weather did not damp the enthusiasm, though on one or two nights it lessened the size of the audiences. The clear and pointed statements of Gospel truth, the exposure of the guilt and danger of sin, and the urgent and persuasive appeals will not soon be forgotten by those who heard them. Every day there has been the house-to-house visitation, and the centres of stagnation and demoralization in the district have heard of the Redeemer's love. The mission has been a source of great blessing to the churches, and has carried gladness into many village homes. On this score few have greater cause for gratitude than the writer of these lines.

Harry Rose, Congregational Minister.

Meetings were held at Carlisle in connection with the Open-Air Mission during the recent race meeting. The campaign commenced with a prayer meeting at the Y.M.C.A. We had glorious open-air meetings both on the racecourse and in the evenings at the Market Cross. Many professed faith in Christ. One young Roman Catholic, who had come to spend two days at the races, was converted while listening to our brethren. He asked for spiritual advice, and afterwards sought the Lord.

Jas. Welsh, Hon. Sec.
Carlisle Open-Air and Slum Mission.

Among Convicts at Portland.

Among the concessions for the comfort and more humane treatment of prisoners which have been lately introduced by the Home Office authorities, there is perhaps none which has had a greater effect upon the moral and spiritual well-being of the prisoners than the special ten-days' missions which have been held, both in local and convict prisons.

Under the auspices of the Church Parochial Mission Society, such a mission has been concluded at Portland Prison, where, at the invitation of the chaplain, Rev. H. Halford-Adcock, and with the co-operation of the governor, Colonel Partridge, Rev. W. Bryan-Brown has been acting as the mission preacher. Besides the two regular Sunday services in the prison chapel, a short service with an address was held each morning before the work of the day begun, and the attention manifested by the large proportion of those present was very marked. Besides this, general ministration addresses were given daily in the infirmary.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Lancashire.

Mrs. Baeyertz conducted a sixteen days' mission (July 7 to 22) at the Baptist Church, Brynn, near Wigan. Many sinners, both old and young, professed conversion, believers being strengthened in the faith and the churches stirred up to greater activity. The afternoon Bible readings were much blessed, and believers have had new and deep truths opened up to them day by day. Mrs. Baeyertz's addresses on the Old Testament subjects are specially good, and no unbiased person could hear her unfold God's plan of salvation from the "Passover" and "Atonement" and yet doubt that one Omniscient Mind dictated the whole book. We believe that lasting good will result from this mission, as in these days of unsound doctrine a preacher who will fearlessly raise a voice against spiritual wickedness on high plans is sure to be owned of God, whose Word shall not return unto Him void. The power of the Holy Spirit has been present at every meeting, and the inquiry-room has been full night after night of persons seeking after more light and the salvation of their souls. Mrs. Baeyertz leaves Brynn with the good wishes and blessing of hundreds who have greatly benefited by her ministrations and the prayers of the people for her future success and prosperity.

Sam Woods.

The silent presentation of the Word of God will often strike deeper than the preaching of man. Evidences of this were manifest at Sandown Park Races, when Mr. William Day stood with his Gospel banner for some hours, among a vast throng.

Mr. J. R. D. McAusland has concluded a fortnight's work in Golspie, Sutherlandshire. A fine new hall has been opened there in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and meetings were held nightly, in which various local speakers took part. Deep interest was aroused, large audiences being attracted by the sweet songs of redeeming love.

Rev. W. and Mrs. Bradbury have been encouraged by seeing blessing on their recent work at Kingsford Mission Hall, N.W. They also conduct evangelistic meetings on Parliament Hill, N.W., on Sundays at 3.30 and 7. At another helpful service conducted by Mr. Bradbury in a neighbouring parish church the congregation were much impressed by the address on "The Two 'Afters' of the Saved and the Unsaved."

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

Tooting tent was well attended during the five days of Rev. J. Bennett Anderson's visit. Addresses have also been given by Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. J. S. Harrison, and other workers. Mr. Anderson also addressed large meetings of children, and had the joy of seeing many young people seeking Christ.

Rev. John Vine has had a cheering week in the Greenwich tent. On Sunday evening the Weaver Brothers commenced a mission. Although there had been a flood of water in the tent through the heavy fall of rain in the afternoon, the local friends cleared the place in time for the night meeting. A great crowd gathered, and anxious souls sought for guidance in the inquiry-room. There are evidences of a fruitful work in this district. The Weaver Brothers continue at this tent until August 9.

At Upton Park the universal testimony seems to be that the last week of the mission was by far the most fruitful. It was encouraging to trace how, week by week, the interest deepened, the work of God taking hold and producing deep conviction among the unsaved, and increased earnestness and zeal on the part of the workers. Dr. Elliott's ministry of the Word was most acceptable. On Saturday rain deluged the ground completely, but so desirous were the workers to have a good finish on the Sunday that they worked for several hours pumping and ladling out the water, and were ready for a prayer meeting at 7 a.m. on Sunday. At 11 a.m. a men's meeting was conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. Meredith (the latter singing the Gospel). The service took the form of questions on important subjects relative to Christian life and work. The questions came from the audience, and were answered by Mr. Weaver, and at the close many expressed themselves as greatly helped. The closing services, afternoon and evening, were seasons of blessing and power. Mr. Weaver in the evening preached to a crowded congregation on the words "Without Excuse," and at the close of the appeal many were dealt with, and their names and addresses taken, so that they may be visited and followed up after the tent is removed, as is the custom in all the districts.

At Shepherd's Bush tent, Mr. Leonard Weaver preached during the first three days of last week, and his earnest, faithful appeals to the undecided found a response in not a few hearts. On the Monday and Tuesday evenings the friends sang outside in the street, and many were thus attracted and their attention aroused. When the workers returned to the tent many outsiders followed them, so that large congregations gathered to hear the Word of Life. The following night's meeting was a solemn occasion. Mr. Weaver spoke from the words, "I have set before you life and death." At the close of a heart-searching address, a large number responded to the appeal for immediate decision for Christ. On Thursday, Mr. Charles Cook commenced the series of closing services. Notwithstanding the storm, a very large congregation gathered, to the encouragement of preacher and workers. Mr. Cook clearly set forth the bondage of the sinner, and the power of Christ to save. At the close several notified their intention of leaving Satan's bondage, and stepping by faith into the liberty of Jesus Christ. On Sunday evening last, the tent was crowded with an attentive audience, who listened to an awakening address by Mr. Cook on "The Foolish Virgins." At the close of the meeting many seekers asked for prayer. Men were weeping, and mothers bringing their children to be spoken to by the workers. Many backsliders were restored, while believers expressed their thanks for blessing received. Mr. Cook has written to many who confessed their need of a Saviour.

The Weaver Brothers have had a fruitful week at Canning Town. At the first service on the Sunday evening many of the anxious entered the inquiry-room, and all through the week numbers of interesting cases were dealt with. A father was rejoicing over answered prayer, in the salvation of his son, after waiting upon God for twenty years. On Saturday last Mr. William Grove commenced a mission here, and notwithstanding the drenching rain a large number were present. Mr. Grove addressed the Christians present on "Aggressive Work for Christ," seeking to stir the hearts of all present to seek to win souls. On Sunday morning a brass band conducted by Mr. Payne (the Y.M.C.A. secretary) and a number of his faithful workers paraded some of the densely-populated back streets. The friends were much encouraged, while their hearts were saddened by the sights witnessed. Hundreds of unwashed men and women crowded to their doors and windows, listening attentively to the hymns, the playing of the band, and the Gospel testimonies that were given. Mr. Grove suggested that the afternoon should be spent in the same way, missioning the streets in another part of the district. A large number of Christians, with the band, spent two and a half hours in this delightful service for the Master. An esteemed correspondent writes: "We could but think of the Scripture, 'When He saw the multitude He was moved with compassion,' and pray that the Lord's people might be baptized with the spirit of pity and compassion for these hundreds of thousands of lost men and women who never go anywhere to hear the Word. We visited at least forty streets, which at a very low estimate each contained 500 or 600 inhabitants. By far the larger part came to their doors or looked out from the upstairs windows. In many instances from nine to a dozen people were counted looking out from one house. The Gospel was rung out in song and word, and we must have had the privilege of singing and preaching the Gospel to thousands of people during the morning and afternoon. At night, notwithstanding the unfavourable condition of the tent through the storm, it was full. A large number of working men were present; many rose for prayer, and our hearts are full of praise for the result of this glorious day's work for the Lord." Mr. Grove continues this week at Canning Town.

Dr. Elliott will open the tent at Lavender Hill (close to Clapham Junction) on Sunday, August 4. There will be a men's meeting at 11 o'clock, and gatherings open to all at 3 and 7.30 p.m.

In connection with the work at the Islington tent a Conference of Christian workers will be held on Bank Holiday at 11, 3.30, and 6.30. The entrance is at the Y.M.C.A., Upper Street, Islington. Many well-known evangelists are to take part. Friends who are able to sing in the choir at the Islington tent are asked to send their names to Mr. H. Beaton, 54, Leigh Road, Highbury, N.

Tent Mission at Thornbury, Glos.

It is now a month since I pitched my tent in this town. Having requested prayer by the readers of The Christian, I would now ask thanksgiving for gracious answers to the same. We found it a valley of dry bones indeed, but, praise the Lord, there has been a shaking amongst them, and, better still, the breath of the Holy Spirit has entered and brought life to many dead souls. To his Name alone be the glory. We are closing our mission here on Bank Holiday with a gathering for the converts and friends. We are expecting the good wine to be kept till last.

Jas. A. Vicary.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, of the Evangelization Society, has just closed a tent mission at Motcombe, Dorset. The meetings were arranged for three weeks, but, so great was the blessings attending the earnest and faithful preaching of the Gospel, that the mission was continued for eleven weeks, and the meetings were crowded up to the last. We leave the tabulating of the blessed results to Him who alone knows them, and we shall ever praise Him for the blessings.

About Books.

THE JEWISH PROBLEM.

AMONG introductions to the study of prophecy, we would assign a prime place to Rev. David Baron's book — The Jewish Problem: Its Solution; or Israel's Present and Future (leatherette, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). Since it was first issued, several years ago, this work has been translated into several other European languages, including Danish, Dutch, French, Norwegian, and Swedish. In England and America it has exercised a very important ministry. A fourth edition, carefully revised, has just appeared; and in view of the continued, and perhaps intensified, interest in the Hebrew race, we gladly call attention to it. In the words of Dr. A. T. Pierson, who supplies a brief introduction, to understand these pages and grasp the great expository argument they contain, "is to get the key of all Scriptures pertaining to the past, present, and future of God's ancient people."

Mr. Thomas Law has issued an attractive pamphlet, England's Farewell to Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, being reports of addresses delivered at farewell meetings in June last. Several portraits are given. (6d. nett.)

The latest of Pansy's stories—Pauline (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly) gives a deeply interesting picture of the vicissitudes of life. The interest is well sustained throughout, and the whole tone of the book is healthy and invigorating.

More Mistakes We Make, compiled by C. E. Clark (1s. 6d. net. Horace Marshall & Son) deals with common errors—of words, traditions, and quotations, not to say many matters less easy to classify, but none the less interesting in themselves and entertaining in corrective treatment.

The Book of Comfort presents promises, assurances, and other precious things of Holy Scripture. The excerpts are grouped so to invite reading during the consecutive weeks of the year—two full pages for each week. The compilation is true to its title as a "Book of Comfort." (1s. nett. Passmore & Alabaster.)

The plain dress of Twelve Lessons by Six Members of Adult Schools (1s. and 1s. 6d. Headley Bros.) covers much that is calculated to be suggestive, and therefore useful in the best sense to busy men and women teaching senior and adult classes. The lessons are not given as models, but as specimens, expressed as nearly as possible in the words the teachers intended to use when in the presence of their pupils.

Studies in Christian Character, Work, and Experience. By Rev. W. L. Watkinson. (Two series; 2s. 6d. each. C. H. Kelly.) Two volumes of homilies and short papers which it would be difficult to match in modern literature. There is wisdom and beauty in the pages, which are rich in illustrative points, drawn from science and art, history and experience. These volumes are equal to the author's best work of the past, and that is saying a good deal.

The People's Order of Divine Service, compiled by T. Bowman Stephenson, B.A., D.D., founder and honorary principal of the Children's Home. (1s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) A model compilation in its own line. It gives the people much to do. Except the anthem, the hymns, and the lessons from Holy Scripture, every portion of the service is contained in this book, with the music of all that is to be sung. Except brief optional prayers for special occasions, the prayers are "extempore."

The new issue of the Great Eastern Railway Company's Tourist Guide to the Continent, by Percy Lindley, exhibits several new features, including particulars of additional tours in the Tyrol, express services to Norway, Denmark and Sweden, viâ the Royal Mail, Harwich-Hook of Holland Route; also of tours in the Luther country, and Thuringian and Hartz Mountains. There is a series of Continental maps, and a chapter on the cost of Continental travel. (6d. Office: 30, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Family Prayer for Four Weeks. By O. H. C. (2s. 6d. Nisbet. A volume that will help many. There are prayers for morning and evening, and in the simplest language. "Some Rules of Life," given by Bishop Gray, of Cape Town, is a welcome appendix. A larger and more complete book is Prayers for the Christian Home, published by authority of the Publications Committee of the United Free Church of Scotland. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier). After a series of prayers for eight weeks, morning and evening, there are suggestive compositions for special occasions.

The Memoir of Mrs. J. B. Griffiths, of Mazeras (U.M.F.C.), is a tenderly written record of untiring devotion to the missionary cause in East Africa. Early in childhood she began to cherish secret hopes of becoming a missionary, and the story of her consecrated life of Christian service will long be cherished. (1d. Crombie, Salisbury Square, E.C.)

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Dr. Randall, Dean of Chichester, confirms the report that he intends shortly to resign his appointment on the ground of advanced age.

At a public meeting held last week at Barry, the Bishop of Llandaff presiding, it was decided to raise £17,000 for the work of church extension in that district. The Bishop, in replying to a vote of thanks, which was moved by a Nonconformist, acknowledged that his Nonconformist brethren had made great efforts to provide for the spiritual needs of the district. He said that in days gone by the Church was not so active as now, and he really did not know how things would have gone 150 years ago but for the earnest labours of Nonconformists.

The Bishop of Worcester has dedicated the new Church of St. Agatha, Sparkbrook. The Birmingham Post points out that the building, which has been erected by the Birmingham Churches' Fund, is in fulfilment of a scheme having for its prime object the removal of church accommodation from the centre of the city, where it seems no longer required, into those outlying districts to which of late years people have flocked in ever-increasing numbers. St. Agatha's has cost £15,000, and this amount will be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of Christ Church, which was for so many years a well-known landmark in the centre of the city. There was a very large attendance of parishioners at the dedicatory service.

Rev. F. J. Gibbings, who was appointed to succeed a decided High Churchman at Christ Church, Penge, has issued his first annual report, and the facts he is able to present are full of encouragement and hope for the future. "There are some," he writes, "who can gladly bear witness that through the ministry of the Word of God they have been brought out of darkness into light. There are others who have been led to take a more decided stand for Christ, and to testify more boldly to the truth as it is in Jesus, and many have become more regular at the Lord's Table." Mr. Gibbings is proposing to build a parish hall. The Sunday school has grown by leaps and bounds, and other parochial agencies show healthy signs of activity.

Congregational.

The memorial stone of a new church in Woodhouse Lane, Leeds, was laid by Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., on Saturday week. Trinity Church will take the place of the old East Parade sanctuary, which, owing to the migration of the population from the centre of the city to the suburbs, had to be sold. Mr. Compton Rickett said he was glad to think that in Yorkshire Congregationalism possesses its old independency; whatever co-operative movement there may be for Congregationalism in the future, it will be the natural attraction of Independent Churches, working from within, towards each other.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. Alex. Forbes to St. Columb, Cornwall; Rev. J. Shuker to Edgeworth, Lancs.; Rev. W. Glasnant Jones to Shiloh Church, Maesteg; Rev. D. E. Walters to Salem Church, Llandovery; and Rev. M. Devine to Pembroke Church, Clifton, Bristol.

Baptist.

During the month of August, Rev. Emory W. Hunt will preach at Abbey Road Chapel, St. John's Wood, N.W., in the morning at 11 o'clock, and in the evening at 7.

It has been decided to thoroughly repair and renovate Highgate Road Chapel, N. (Rev. James Stephens, M.A., pastor), at the cost of over £1,500. At a recent day for special thankofferings £950 was subscribed.

On Sunday, July 21, Rev. Wm. C. Minifie, of Bradford, preached in Her Majesty's Opera House, Blackpool, to large gatherings, and on the following Monday evening delivered an impressive lecture on the "The wit and wisdom of C. H. Spurgeon." The schoolroom was filled to its utmost capacity with an appreciative audience.

Recognition services in connection with the settlement of Rev. T. R. Hurditch as pastor of East Street Chapel, St. Neots, were held on July 16. A sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. H. Thomas, Bedford. A public meeting followed in the evening, presided over by Rev. G. H. Jones, of Sandy, when a number of local ministers and friends took part. Among other speakers was Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, who gave a stirring address.

In the great disaster which has befallen the town of Rushden, Northants, by the extensive fire which occurred there, the Baptists will be severe sufferers. Their new church is to be opened in September, and not a few of the thousand workpeople thrown out of employment, as well as some of the principals of the firm whose factory is burnt, are connected with the congregation. Contributions to the building fund are stopped, therefore, when most needed.

The church in George Lane, South Woodford, has placed itself in the hands of the London Baptist Association, and a committee has been appointed from the council to take the oversight of the church. The committee has met the church, and is making arrangements for the supply of the pulpit and the conduct of the work generally. Rev. John Bradford, who is the convener of the committee, has been appointed minister-in-charge, and all communications should be addressed to him at Ivybank, Leytonstone, N.E. The chapel and school buildings offer ample facilities for aggressive work.

Gratifying progress has been made in regard to the Forward Movement in central Brighton. Twelve months ago Rev. J. Felmingham entered upon the pastorate of the Baptist Church in Queen Square, and during the year fifty (mostly young young people) have been added to its membership. Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Union Congregational Church, Brighton, having made an offer of £4,000 for the chapel premises, this was accepted by the church. Subsequently a proposal for amalgamation was unanimously carried by the churches in Queen Square and Sussex Street. The Sussex Street Chapel having been sold for £1,500, the Brighton friends have thus a nucleus of £5,500 towards their effort to provide a worthy home for the Denomination in the centre of the town.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. H. P. E. Ferguson to Northgate Church, Louth; Rev. F. W. Gusterton to Bromley Common, Kent; Rev. Wm. Fotheringham to Dunrossness, Shetland; and Rev. C. D. Jeffs to Bethel Church, St. Albans; Rev. Richard Richard, of Cotham Grove Church, Bristol, to Woodberry Down, London, N. (taking up his work on Nov. 1.)

Methodist.

The Mayor of Salisbury (Mr. H. G. Gregory) has presented the trustees of the Methodist Free Church with a freehold residence for their present and future ministers in that city.

During the past twelve years Rev. Thomas Waugh has from time to time conducted services at Witney, and his labours have been greatly blessed. He revisited the town recently, and the church was again much helped by his efforts.

A new Wesleyan Mission Chapel is being erected at Well Lane, Lincoln. For nearly twenty years an earnest and enthusiastic band of workers has conducted the mission in a small room, which was previously a workshop. In summer the air has been stifling and unhealthy, ventilation being conspicuous by its absence. The number of members grew, and it became imperative that the cramped accommodation should be increased, and that there should be a chapel which, if still small, should be worthy of the name. The total cost is estimated at about £650.

Presbyterian.

Lord Strathcona has sent a donation of £2,000 towards the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund which is being raised in connection with the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

The foundation-stone of the new church about to be erected at Shaw's Corner, Redhill, was laid recently in the presence of a large company by the Moderator, Rev. James Christie, who spoke of the church as a vigorous child, and said that so far as he could learn from the indications that had come to him from different directions, it is likely in a short time to become a strong and well-doing man. It was the first among their churches to offer to send two lady members into the slums of London, a fortnight at a time, in order that they might carry sweetness and light and culture and holiness into a benighted and neglected district.

Society of Friends.

At the Canterbury and Folkestone monthly meeting, held at Folkestone on July 17, arrangements were made for the effective distribution of the "Plea for a Peaceable Spirit," and it was mentioned that in one or two instances individual Friends have procured copies of the same in "poster" form, and posted them in their own immediate neighbourhood.

At a special meeting of the Friends' Foreign Mission Board in London, on the 19th inst., John Edward Wilson presiding, Dr. William Wilson was appointed secretary of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association, in succession to the late Watson Grace. Dr. Wilson's wide experience of missionary effort in Madagascar, where he has been working since 1877, and the intimate knowledge he has recently acquired of the Syria Mission will be of great service to the Association.

Bristol and Somerset quarterly meeting was held on July 16. The meeting on ministry and oversight, held the previous afternoon, was chiefly occupied in considering the duty of propagating the Gospel. Many thoughts on the subject were expressed—the responsibility of the meeting towards those engaged in the ministry outside the meetings for worship; the need of going to those who will not come to the meetings; the importance of the quiet meetings being held in greater depth and power; the value of addresses for religious instruction on first-day evenings; and the power of the simple preaching of the Gospel, were some of the points dwelt on.

The question of "Friends' attitude during vocal prayer" is being discussed in The Friend. One writer recalls William Penn's testimony with regard to George Fox: "Above all, he excelled in prayer. The inwardness and weight of his spirit, the reverence and solemnity of his address and behaviour, and the fewness and fulness of his words, have often struck even strangers with admiration, as they used to reach others with consolation. The most awful, living, reverent frame I ever felt or beheld, I must say, was his in prayer." The writer adds, "One could wish that this spirit were more prevalent in the present day, but in saying this I am far from desiring to check brief utterances in prayer or exhortation. Rather I would that we had more of the outflung heart of youth thrown into our midst, and such is quite consistent with a reverent and devotional spirit."

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. Hill, daughter of the late Sir Wilfred Lawson, and sister of the present baronet, has passed away at Edinburgh. She was associated with the Evangelical Union body, which she liberally helped. She was largely responsible for the erection of Fountainbridge Church, and for a great many years maintained a home for girls, called Flowerfield Convalescent Home. Till recently she kept another Home on similar lines for girls out of situation. She also built a mission hall, where for the past quarter of a century she conducted mission operations, and employed an evangelist and Bible woman.—At Hyderabad, Sindh, on July 22, Edith, wife of Rev. R. Sinker, jun., M.A., C.M.S. missionary at Hyderabad, aged twenty-nine.—Rachel Grellet, daughter of Stephen Grellet, died in Medford, New Jersey, on July 4, at a very advanced age.—Mr. W. H. F. Johnson, M.A., for many years a deacon of St. Andrew's Street Baptist Chapel, Cambridge.—Mr. George Sully Stowe. His chief services were rendered in connection with the Baptist Denomination, and the establishment of Bethel Chapel, Bute Docks, Hope Chapel, Canton, and Stanwell Road Chapel, Penarth, were largely due to his influence. Mr. Stowe's death will be a great loss to many religious and charitable institutions.—Rev. Angus Galbraith, Congregationalist, aged seventy-four. He retired from the ministry in November last year after thirty-eight years' service, of which twenty-five had been spent at Brighouse, Yorks.—Rev. J. Hale Stephens, of Chepstow, Mon., aged fifty-six. Mr. Stephens entered the Congregational ministry in 1878, and held his first pastorate at Plymouth.—At Clones, Mr. Joseph Carson, J.P., brother of Rev. James Carson, Methodist minister, Belfast, and an earnest and devoted class leader and local preacher.

Bolivia.—Mr. James Clifford, writing from Cordoba, Argentina, says:—"The gentleman referred to in your issue of March 21, as a colporteur suffering persecution in Sucre, Bolivia, is Mr. Will Payne, of Dublin. Mr. Payne has done a good deal of pioneer work in South America. The question disputed at present is the right to preach the Gospel publicly, and not the right to scatter the Word. That Mr. Payne fought and won six years ago, and since then he, other workers, and myself, have taken many cases of Bibles and portions through the Customs and sold them in the cities of La Paz, Oruro, Colquechaco, and Sucre, as well as in very many smaller places. The latest news is that Mr. Payne has to discuss the subject before the judges."

Notes & Comments

Empress Frederick. Many hearts have been touched with sadness this week at the announcement of the death of the Empress Frederick. In the case of no member of Queen Victoria's family was the motto Noblesse oblige more fully exemplified. Called at an early age to spend her life in a foreign land, she must have felt in no ordinary degree the loneliness of high station. Her married life was one of the happiest description; and her influence was second only to that of her illustrious mother in raising the tone of court life in Europe. Her beloved husband was mourned for as few German monarchs have been; and to-day two great nations are joined in a common sorrow. That a crown may weigh heavily on the head is obvious to every thoughtful person, and the world is the poorer through the loss of one who ever placed duty before privilege.

The Late Bishop Westcott. All parties in the Church of England, and every denomination outside it, join in mourning the death of the revered Bishop of Durham. No theologian of his time exercised so widespread and beneficial influence as Dr. Westcott. His ripe scholarship, his profoundly reverent spirit, his broad social sympathies, his simple and unaffected piety, formed a rare combination of qualities. The books he wrote in defence and exposition of the New Testament canon, together with those of Dr. Lightfoot, had more to do with the stemming of the tide of rationalistic criticism in this country than has been realized by most students of Scripture. His commentaries on St. John's Gospel and Epistles touch the high-water mark of expository literature. Seldom, if ever, has such scholarship been joined with a mind so profoundly evangelical in tone. It is a comfort to know that if he has gone his works remain. It will be well, too, that the closing words of his last pulpit utterance, spoken a few days before his death to a large congregation of miners in Durham Cathedral, should be remembered as the clear testimony of an aged man, who was familiar with many sides of life, and conversant with all its sorrows and struggles. Dr. Westcott, after saying that the miners and their leaders were walking upon "the true paths of progress," added:

> While, however, he looked back with thankfulness, and forward with confident hope, he could not but desire most keenly that their moral and spiritual progress should move with no less rapidity and certainty. As it was not likely that he would ever speak to them there again, he would tell them what in a long and laborious life he had found the most prevailing power to sustain right endeavour—the love of Christ; and he would tell them what he knew to be the secret of a noble life—obedience to Christ. As a watchword, fitted to be the inspiration, the test, and the support of an untiring service to God and man, he would leave them these words: "The love of Christ constraineth us."

A Generous Offer. In view of the increasing custom on the part of ministers to give short sermonettes to the young people of their congregations on Sundays, and also the spread of meetings for children and young people, Rev. John Mitchell, author of Silver Tongues (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott), is devoting a limited number of copies to the following purposes: (1) Two hundred clergymen or ministers may each obtain a copy, free, on application to the publishers (if sent by post, 3d. must be enclosed with application). (2) One hundred and fifty Sunday-school teachers, class leaders, or evangelists, may each have a copy for 1s. (postage 3d. extra). We can commend the book as a very helpful and suggestive volume of short talks with young people upon every-day subjects and objects, from which speakers will derive material for many occasions.

Holiday Sundays. During this holiday season a word of exhortation may not be superfluous to those away from home, on the question of Lord's Day observance. Many people who are thoroughly faithful in their attendance at public worship at home, neglect it almost systematically during their annual holiday, and encourage their young people to do the same. Others who do not care to neglect the habit themselves, excuse their children from doing so, and let them run free on the sands or in the woods during the hours of service. There is as much physical and spiritual need of a day of rest from pleasure as there is from work; and good habits remitted at holiday time are always a blow to one's self-respect afterwards. Besides, the religious contemplation of Nature is a secret gate to true apprehension and appreciation of her beauties. Only the devout can learn the deeper message of breaking waves and lovely landscapes. The Gate Beautiful was at the entrance to the Temple itself.

The P.S.A. and the Sunday-School. The effect which Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Societies have had on the attendance at senior Sunday school classes, and on the supply of teachers, is the subject of an interesting correspondence in the Sunday School Chronicle. There is no reason why any rivalry should arise between these two excellent institutions. The testimony of the majority of those appealed to, however, tends to show that while in some cases the members of the P.S.A.'s come from the classes and ages who have ceased to attend the Sunday-school, many senior scholars are to be found who have forsaken the school for the society. Hardly any teachers, on the other hand, appear to come from the societies into the schools. This state of things, where it exists, is not to be encouraged. The P.S.A.'s do an immense amount of good when their basis is soundly Evangelical, and truly Gospel addresses are delivered; but the teaching given in them cannot, of course, be compared with the careful systematic Bible instruction which lies at the basis of the Sunday-school system. Young men should be encouraged, so far as possible, to study the Word rather than listen to addresses.

The Jesuits in France. According to The Figaro the Jesuits have decided not to have themselves registered under the provisions of the new French law. They will not allow themselves to be accepted as an "authorized" congregation. If the news given by The Figaro, which is evidently "inspired," is to be trusted, then by October 1 all the Jesuit congregations of France will be dissolved, the older members remaining in the neighbourhood of their convents, but as private individuals, and the younger ones being sent to foreign countries, of which our own is to be one. Of course nobody is surprised at this step, for Jesuits would not be Jesuits if they welcomed the light of day. Submission to the Government is the last thing they would desire, since against it they have continually plotted. The dissolution of their Order will probably not carry with it a discontinuance of Jesuit interference in the affairs of France, but it certainly reveals to all the world the real character of their propaganda, which is political, mischievous, and anti-Christian.

The Religion of "La Croix." That meddlesome journal, La Croix, which has so industriously stirred up strife in France, is very naturally furious at the passing of the Congregations Bill. In the number of August 1, there are several attacks upon members of the Government, and the new Bill is described as an attempt to destroy the foundations of Christianity. What kind of Christianity they mean may be gathered from an announcement in another part of the same journal, which runs as follows:—

> La Croix fulfils its duty in recalling to its pious readers the practice of Communion upon the nine first Fridays, to which our Lord Himself has deigned to attach a promise of the most precious blessings, and particularly that of eternal salvation.
> Promise. "I promise thee, in the excess of the mercy of my heart, that my all-powerful love will grant to all those who make their Communion upon the first Fridays, nine times in succession, the grace of final penitence; that they shall never die in any disgrace, nor without receiving the Sacraments, and that their safety shall be assured in their last hour.

When, therefore, we read of the attack upon "religion," we know the kind of thing that is intended. But it is a shocking thing that such revolting blasphemy has ever been invented, and that such dreadful words have been put into our Lord's mouth.

Cathedral Curiosities. Steps are being taken to furnish the new Roman Catholic Cathedral at Westminster with a due supply of relics, doubtless to be utilized as the object of pilgrimages, and of Papal dispensations to those who visit the shrines. Already the alleged remains of two saints have been secured, the first said to be the bones of Edmund, King of East Anglia, which have been removed from France, and temporarily deposited at the Duke of Norfolk's castle with elaborate religious ceremonies. The second, the hand of St. James, stated to have been brought to England from Germany in 1133. There is, of course, grave doubt as to the genuiness of these articles; but the matter is not of vital moment to anybody. They will, doubtless, do very well for the absurd use to which they are to be put.

The Wave of Superstition. In the olden time the Prophet Isaiah chided the superficial religious people around him for multiplying meaningless devotions whilst their heart remained wrong. And it is a remarkable thing that men who miss the centre of things either tilt to the extreme of indifference or to the extreme of superstition. In France these two extremes are acutely marked at the present hour. The priests, face to face with a threatened deprivation of their power, are multiplying "devotions"—which, alas! is only a synonym for superstitions. The Eglise du Sacré Cœur in Paris is now the rendezvous for superstitious assemblies drawn from all France. Here the literal human heart of our Saviour is adored. Pilgrimages of the "Sacred Heart" are multiplying everywhere, as if that one material organ of the Lord's body could be detached from all else and worshipped and invoked. Lourdes is again in evidence, and thousands are flocking there. It is all sad enough, but there is an element of hope in it; for superstition is a faculty deprayed; whilst devotion is that same faculty made healthy and fixed upon its true object. And once the power of priestcraft is broken, we may reasonably hope to see a genuine revival among an interesting people.

The Past and Future of Dissent. In a valuable paper in the Nineteenth Century, dealing with the subject of Nonconformity in the Victorian Era, Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers sketches the history of a very important factor in the social life of Britain during the reign of the great and good Queen. Seeing signs of union between those who have wasted time, money, and strength in "the service of narrow sectarianism," hindering Christian work, Dr. Rogers is hopeful in regard to the century now in progress. He has, however, a word of warning to those who seek "expansion" at the cost of principle:—

But if the substitute be a languid indifference to important questions even of principle, which is christened Charity or Liberalism, but which really is an unbelief that must be fatal to all spiritual power, the last state will be worse than the first. . . . A deeper spirituality is the great need of all churches. Men are troubling themselves too much about the machinery. What is necessary is a stronger dynamic. Give us that and we shall have that brotherliness in which, and not in any mere organization, will be the power of the Twentieth Century Church.

Danger of Professionalism. The danger of a spirit of professionalism in Christian work was pointedly touched upon in an address to the students assembled at Matlock (see p. 14). The speaker urged that there may lie a subtle temptation to become so much absorbed in routine as to leave no time for coming to know men and women in such an intimate way as to be able to lead them to Christ; and he counselled those who found themselves coming to this position to give up their connection with this or any other organization rather than allow personal effort to be crowded out of their lives. He said:—

We must remember that no committee work will take the place of this. We are first of all Christian men and women, and only secondly Christian Union members; and when we lose touch with individuals, committee work is absolutely useless.

There is not a minister or evangelist, probably, who has not at times been conscious of this. It is a snare of the devil, which needs daily grace and watchfulness to avoid.

A Judge on Betting. The Government, unwilling and unable to deal with pressing and vital social questions affecting the well-being of the people, has shelved the gambling problem by taking the usual course of appointing a Select Committee to obtain evidence, to be added to the overwhelming testimony already in the hands of the public. It is not probable, however, that the judges, who are so painfully familiar with the evil and widespread results of gambling, will be called upon to attend. One of them, Mr. Justice Wills, the other day, in sentencing some prisoners at the Central Criminal Court, said, and the words might well be added to the Committee's report:—

Judges have before them perpetual object-lessons of how this canker of gambling is eating into the social life, and is demoralizing the poor and needy as well as the rich, and is bringing countless persons within the grasp of the criminal law who are tempted by the facilities which they think are given to them to make themselves rich by other means than honest industry.

A "Defence" of Gambling. "A Sporting Layman" accepts the challenge thrown out by some correspondents in the Church Times, and boldly rebuts the charge that "gambling is necessarily a sin," except in excess, and under circumstances of perilous temptation to the individual. He classes the act under three heads: (1) Betting on one's superiority in judgment or action; (2) betting on a chance; and (3) betting in order to make money. He justifies the first two methods, under certain restrictions, on the ground that there is no distinction in kind between them and many commercial habits, and on the ground of certain incidental benefits; and he is, therefore, logically compelled to pass the third. In answer, it is only necessary to point out that "two blacks cannot make a white;" and that beneficial results (?) cannot justify an action wrong in itself. The difficulty of putting one's finger on the precise element of immorality in particular cases of gambling vanishes, in view of the vast network of evil which is always and everywhere interwoven inextricably with the custom. The wrong in the fruit proves that in the root.

The Australian Commonwealth—its Future. The Royal visit to Australia is at an end, and the Duke of York has delivered a message of thanks to the new Commonwealth, characterized by much wisdom and good-will. The young Commonwealth has made an auspicious start. High ideals have been held before it, and a career of great prosperity been foretold for it. The future depends on the way in which the vast traditions of race are followed and developed under new conditions. No young country has ever begun its corporate life under more promising auspices. Leaders and people should now lay it well to heart that outward success is of little account, except as the expression of that righteousness that exalteth a nation.

Distress in Jerusalem. At no time is Jerusalem over-supplied with water, because of its entire dependence upon the rains and the inadequacy of the means of storage. At the present time, however, there is real distress in the city owing to the scantiness of the water, and a water famine is probable. The dryness of the late season accounts for this. Water is brought from Jaffa, and, of course, costs a great deal. All this might have been avoided if the authorities at Constantinople had done their most ordinary duty. Long ago they were entreated to attend to the matter, but, with usual Turkish perversity, nothing was done. Now that the question has become most acute, the Sultan has ordered some steps to be taken to convey water by means of aqueducts; but it is a question whether the scheme has not been undertaken too late. In any case, there will be much more distress, especially amongst the poor, for it will be some time before the rains come. Many of our readers love Jerusalem and the work there being undertaken by various Christian workers. It will cheer these latter to feel that they are being specially remembered by English brethren at this time.

The Porte and Palestine. Only persons who have an intimate acquaintance with the conditions of life in Palestine can realize the extraordinary difficulties which beset every enterprise to lift up the people—whether socially or religiously. Officialism is a positive incubus—it oppresses earnest endeavour in every possible way. The most petty and unreasonable obstructions are deliberately cast in the path of missionaries, honest explorers, and others. The railway from Haifa to Damascus, part of which was opened in 1893, is lying idle and unfinished, because the permission given for its construction has been withdrawn. The Sultan has just shown his hand in this matter by offering to buy this line (at a ruinous price to its constructors, of course), and use it as part of his projected railway from Damascus to Mecca. Anything that fosters fanaticism, disease, and disorder, is furthered; anything that is for the good of the people is hindered. And so the people of the country are oppressed, and left in the darkest ignorance. It is time that Europe forbade this "sick man" to misgovern and obstruct under the very eyes of great Christian Powers.

Drifting; Whither? The development of what is termed "individualism," as distinguished from that regard for the happiness and welfare of the great family of God which is the foundation of all noble national life, is already producing startling results. Recent legislation in France, based upon disregard of the "family idea," has provided gratuitous divorce for the working classes, and in one recent sitting, of a few hours only, the Paris Court granted no fewer than 294 divorces. In America, too, Miss Margaret Deland has stated, in one year the divorces, obtained easily, amounted to 23,472, a number largely in excess of those for all Europe, Canada, and Australia. The result of this condition of things is disastrous, not only to the unhappy children of such dissolved unions, but to the State itself, while the effect upon public morals is simply appalling. In this matter, as in many others, legislators fail to recognise that individual rights are social wrongs, and that individual licence may be secured at the cost of national righteousness.

Sick, and In Prison. While the ratio of insanity in each 10,000 of the outside general population over fifteen years of age is only twelve, the ratio in the same number of the prison population is about 400. Seeing that this proportion has increased from 113 during the last quarter of a century, it would appear that there is something gravely amiss in the administration of the gaols, and that the serious condemnation administered in the report of the Prisons' Committee of 1895 has been without effect in bringing about a reform. It was then pointed out that the general prison system was open to the reproach that it not only failed to reform offenders, but in the case of the less hardened criminal it produced a deteriorating effect.

The hardened criminal bears the discipline without trouble. Others are brutalized by it. Others suffer acutely, and perhaps are permanently weakened by it in mind or body.

Surely it is a public scandal that our prisons should contaminate rather than cure. The period of imprisonment should be remedial, and the punishment should end with the last day of the incarceration, while the good effect should continue.

The Royal Declaration.

GREAT PUBLIC DEMONSTRATION.

WE are glad to be in a position to give further particulars of the Protestant Demonstration, held in St. James' Hall on Tuesday evening of last week, to which we referred in our last issue. The great assemblage was most influential, as well as widely representative in character; while the proceedings were characterized by a deep earnestness of tone, joined to a stern determination of purpose.

It was manifest from the outset that the Chairman (Lord KINNAIRD) was giving expression to the Protestant sentiment of the nation as he pronounced the opinion that no crisis in our lifetime had equalled that with which we are now confronted. The question which the nation was asked to consider, was whether it would yield up one of the great safeguards against having a Roman Catholic King on the Throne of Great Britain. There was no doubt about it that the present Declaration is an adequate barrier. It is admitted to be such by Roman Catholics themselves. His lordship quoted an extract from The Tablet, showing that the Evangelical section of the Church of England had a very great interest in demanding the retention of the present Accession Oath, especially in its denial of Transubstantiation, since the very life-breath of Protestantism is the right of private judgment. "The Oath was devised, not against persons, but against principles. We believe in the right of private judgment; we believe in thinking for ourselves; and we don't intend that any Government, whether it belongs to one party or another, or any ecclesiastical hierarchy, whether it emanates from Canterbury, or from Rome, or New York, shall do our thinking for us. We want to know from the majority of our fellow countrymen—a Protestant majority—whether it is desirable that a fundamental principle of the Constitution, which our forefathers created and upheld, shall be abrogated? One of the grounds of objection is that we hurt the feelings of some of those who are our fellow countrymen. But on certain political matters, surely," he protested, "we cannot help that. We cannot be over-delicate in these matters. The truth requires sometimes to be told very plainly, and it probably does hurt. But, all the same, it is our duty to tell it, to maintain it, and to abide by it to the utmost consequences. Some of us who in the past have taken sides in politics, have sometimes to leave trusted leaders and join others, because we think the former are leading us astray—in the present case towards Rome and towards danger. Nor are we afraid of being accused of traitorous desertion when we follow what we believe to be God's leading and God's guidance in the path of duty, simply because our leaders may not go with us. And I venture to prophesy that if the followers will only take the initiative, and of themselves give a strong and a united lead, they will soon have the leaders following them. Protestants are accused of disturbing the quiet of the Government and country, which had important work in hand; but we may answer that we warned the Government that if they tampered with the Bill of Rights, they would bring on their own heads a serious agitation, which we believed they would be sorry for. Now we hope to convince them that the majority of our countrymen are determined that the Oath shall remain as it is without change. At present the words which it is proposed to put into the King's mouth do not satisfy anyone. They do not satisfy Roman Catholics, they do not satisfy Lord Halifax and his friends, and they do not satisfy others on the Liberal side who think we ought to get rid of strong words, or who want to tone down the Declaration a bit to bring it up to twentieth century ideas. Then the Bill does not satisfy Scotland, or Ireland, or Wales. In fact, I do not know, outside of a very small circle, whom the Bill does satisfy."

An important point was raised by Colonel SAUNDERSON, M.P., who insisted that the Declaration was not placed in the Bill of Rights with any theological object. "I don't believe the framers of this Declaration ever imagined it would have the effect of converting the Roman Catholics. But they had this idea in their heads—that if the Declaration was once made the law of the land, it would be an impossibility for any Roman Catholic to sit on the Throne of Great Britain. We must remember that our contention with the Church of Rome is not only theological, but political as well. Our forefathers found this out. In their opinion the power of Rome was a political power in the State, and directly opposed to all freedom, to all liberty, and all progress. Our forefathers had the merit of knowing their own minds and they were not afraid to call a spade a spade. So they decided on framing a Declaration which no Roman Catholic with any religion could possibly take. It was done with that avowed object, and for 200 years, at any rate, it has been perfectly satisfactory. And there is something more. In those times it was simply Roman Catholics on one side and Protestants on the other. But now

ROMAN CATHOLICISM HAS MADE GREAT STRIDES.

It has succeeded in alienating and perverting from the Protestant faith men who take the Protestant pay in the Church. Had it not been for the great growth of Ritualistic and Popish doctrines in our midst, we should never have had this proposal to alter the Declaration."

Among the speakers who followed were Colonel T. Myles Sandys, M.P., Mr. William Johnston, M.P., Mr. T. L. Corbett, M.P., Sir T. Fowell Buxton, and Mr. Benjamin Nicholson. The responsiveness and enthusiasm of the audience at every point in the proceedings proved how deeply the minds of Protestants have been stirred by recent events. A resolution was passed deprecating the re-opening of "grave questions which lie at the very foundation of the British Constitution, by which the civil and religious liberties of this Protestant nation have been rendered secure since the expulsion of the last Roman Catholic monarch, James II." A petition to the House of Commons was then drawn up, showing "that the attempt now being made to tamper with the Statutory Declaration required by the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement to be made by the Sovereign of this realm, is dangerous to the Protestant succession and the stability of the Throne;" and praying the House "to oppose any alteration as being mischievous and unconstitutional, and fraught with great danger to the civil, political, and religious liberties of the people."

THE BILL IN PARLIAMENT.

The Royal Declaration Bill reached the committee stage in the House of Lords last Thursday, and on Monday, although there was strong opposition, it passed the third reading. Yet, in the meantime, we understand that this will be the end of it.

The Prime Minister, in his last speech on the subject, frankly confessed that since introducing the Bill the Government had learnt that the Roman Catholics "would rather perpetuate the offensive words, unless the Government would consent to grant them something else, of which they had never indicated the slightest intention." This, he said truly, had been the real cause of the unnecessary bitterness which has crept into the discussion. Quoting a report of Lord Llandaff's speech on Friday, in which that peer "preferred the retention of the language of the Bill of Rights in its naked offensiveness to putting into the Sovereign's mouth in this twentieth century a controversial statement directed against a religion which could now be exercised without the slightest blame or reproach," Lord Salisbury said he felt the prospects of the Bill becoming law had received "a slight, at all events, not a favourable modification;" and when he read the utterances of Lord Llandaff's "co-religionists in the other House, he confessed he thought the prospects were less hopeful still." It is most gratifying to find Earl Spencer echoing the sentiments of the Prime Minister by declaring his conviction that "the feeling of the country was so strong on the Protestant succession, and there were such views held as to what the Declaration meant, that it would be perfectly futile even for the present Government, with all strength, to propose a material alteration in the Declaration."

It becomes more and more evident that, as we have pointed out, the substitution of the proposed form of Declaration would be tampering with the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement, without satisfying any of the parties concerned. The Roman Catholic peers were not satisfied, nor were Lord Halifax and his friends. To attempt to do so would indeed be a hopeless task, so long as the Declaration continues to serve the single purpose for which it was instituted, by continuing to be a disavowal of Transubstantiation on the part of the Sovereign, and hence a securing of the Throne against occupation by a Roman Catholic.

The Story of a Tract.

AT a fishing town where I recently went to preach, I received the following letter from the Mayor:—"Through poverty I had to commence life's struggle for existence very early, and without education, as a fishing lad, in 1851. About two years later, I was brought under the good influence of a pious shipmate, who gave me the little book, 'Come to Jesus.' He encouraged and helped me to read it. I read it again and again. It was the first book I ever read through, and its influence upon my early life was great and good. How much I owe to it for the prosperity and joy of my life I cannot tell. I must now ask you kindly to accept the warmest thanks that words by this feeble method can convey, and believe me sincerely and gratefully.—H.M."

I called to see the writer, who was confined to his bed by an accident. He added an interesting fact. He had laboured vainly to learn to read by puzzling over several other books, when the giver of the tract said, "This one is so simple that a child can make it out." "So," added my informant, "I first read the booklet as a reading exercise. But by thus learning my letters, I was led to learn the Gospel." This is a striking instance of how a person in the humbler walks of life may, by lending a little book, help a poor lad to Christ, and be the means of raising him to a position in which, by his social influence, personal exertions, and generous gifts, he has become one of Christ's "fishers of men." The Believer's Fourfold Position.

Lines composed on Friar's Crag, in remembrance of the four Bible readings given by Rev. Hubert Brooke in the tent at Keswick, July, 1901.

A generation chosen by the will of God,
Redeemed from bondage by the precious blood;
Made to partake in Christ of life divine,
By grace bestowed with heavenly light to shine.

To live for Him throughout life's little day,
To let Him guide us on the unknown way;
To bear his name in this dark world of sin,
And sound his praise amid its busy din.

A royal priesthood, called by sovereign grace
To stand before Him, and behold his face,
Then from his presence to go forth to serve,
With spirit, soul, and body, mind and nerve.

A priesthood that belongs to all his own,
To offer praises due to Him alone;
His messengers to be, his truth to bear,
His faithful word to keep, his cross to share.

A nation holy—set apart by blood
From everything that savours not of God,
To have no concord with an evil world,
And never have our witness-banner furled.

As saints of God to walk with Him e'en now,
And owning all of grace, to humbly bow
At his dear feet, to listen to his word,
In all to show that He is sovereign Lord.

A people for possession through his blood,
To yield ourselves up wholly to our God:
To reckon we are his, yea, his alone,
So shall he claim us jewels for his crown.

Sealed by the Holy Ghost his power to feel,
Ready for service or in prayer to kneel,
To work or wait, as to Him seemeth best,
Committing all to Him, shall all be blest.

So let us his almighty love show forth,
Proclaim his peerless Name throughout the earth;
His love in Christ, his boundless saving grace;
These be our joys until we see his face.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 11. Acts iv.

WHAT a remarkable change had come over Peter and the rest. Formerly they had been as timid as the wild things of the forest; now their boldness astonished the officials before whom they were charged. Formerly they had failed to understand the references of their own Scriptures to the Lord's death and resurrection; now they are able to quote them with unerring precision and to use them in debate. Formerly salvation had been an unfamiliar and strange phrase, which had no special meaning for them, and certainly they would have hesitated to attribute saving power, as vested alone in Jesus; now, however, they count Him as Master and Saviour, in a unique and unapproachable sense. The advent of the Holy Spirit had not only made them strong, but had cast a new light on the Scripture and their Master. Let us seek a similar enduement. We need it sorely, as we are also unversed in the wisdom and ways of the world. Above all, let us desire to have such a glow on our faces, such a tone in our voices, that men shall be compelled to take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

What exaltation, what triumph, what believing confidence in God ring out in the sublime prayer, in which these threatened men and women joined! They realized that they were under the special panoply of God, who had made the world, had spoken by the prophets, and was the Father of Jesus; and they felt that nothing would better succour their cause than miracles of healing mercy in the name of the risen Lord. Perhaps it was so, but probably their unity, their willingness to share their possessions, and their intrepid bearing, were the most convincing arguments. In this chapter, Peter was filled suddenly by the Spirit for service in an emergency, and all were filled again, as at Pentecost, showing that we may claim ever fresh infillings of the Holy One.

MONDAY, August 12. Acts v.

The closing verses of the previous chapter surely belong to this, and the story of Ananias is a foil to set forth the beautiful act of the good Barnabas. Clearly the Holy Spirit was regarded as the vicegerent of Christ in the Church. This sin was committed against Him, and by Him avenged. He is the custodian of the honour of the Master, and the purity of the Church. Notice how into God's new Eden the tempter comes again. His is the evil suggestion, but it is conceived in the soul of the sinner, and becomes his own.

Whilst the Spirit of God acts within the Church, He adds to it by adding men and women to the Lord. They who are added to the Lord as the Head must be joined to each other in Him; and through his body the risen Lord works such miracles as are here recorded, filling the hearts of the humble with love and joy, but exciting the most inveterate hatred of his foes.

The Angel of God still comes to open prison doors. Are you in sore trouble, from which there is no apparent deliverance? Are you imprisoned in the dungeon of doubt or black despair? Are you passing through persecution at the hand of your foes? You may expect that the doors will open as by unseen hands. Nothing can stay the purpose of the living God. Only use your God-given liberty to go and teach the people.

The answer of Peter proves that the Lord's promise was being fulfilled. The Holy Spirit was bearing witness with them to the risen Lord (John xv. 26). Notice the double name, Prince and Saviour, his dual gift, Repentance and Forgiveness, and the twofold witness of the Church and Spirit (30-32).

TUESDAY, August 13. Acts vi.

It should be borne in mind that the Grecians of A.V. are Greek-speaking Jews; so far there were no Gentiles in the Church. It was a kind of annexe to Judaism, and everyone had to become or be a Jew before he could be a Christian. Christianity was a sect of Judaism.

What glimpses this chapter affords into the manners of the Primitive Church. The daily ministration of relief from the Church treasury of relief to the poor; the choice of godly men, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom, to attend to secular details; the purpose of the Apostles to focus their best energy on the ministry of the Word—and prayer; the appeal of the Apostles to the people, and their response in setting certain men before them, and the ratification of their choice. All is so spiritual and so worthy of the age of the Spirit. Alas, that so fair a dawn was so speedily overcast!

The laying on of hands reminds us of the old custom of the wave-offering, when the sacrifice was waved before God for his acceptance; so these seven men were, so to speak, waved before God, and given Him for his service. Stephen was full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom, full of grace and power; well-taught in Scripture, and energized with God-given boldness. Such was the youthful apologist of the Church, and opposed to him were Saul of Tarsus, and others; but the synagogue of Cilicia is specially referred to. They captured the Savonarola of his time, but God gave the sign of the angel-face. We have also seen that glow on the faces of God's beloved.

WEDNESDAY, August 14. Acts vii.

There are several touches in this eloquent apology which demand our notice. "The God of glory." That God appeared to Abraham in Mesopotamia before he dwelt in Haran. That Moses was mighty in words, i.e., in eloquence, and in deeds, by which reference is made to a fact that Josephus notices, that Moses led an expedition against the Ethiopians, in which he was very successful. That the angel who appeared to Moses in the bush was the Angel of Exodus. These are some of the interesting points of this narrative.

But the most important point of the whole speech is to show that again and again the chosen people had rejected their God-sent prophets, and taken their own evil course. The rejection of the Lord Jesus was only in parallel with the rejection of Joseph by his brethren, and of Moses by his nation. Israel had always been stiff-necked and froward, and might not history warn them against taking a similar course towards Jesus of Nazareth? Might they not be mistaken? Might not Jesus be as great a blessing as Moses or Joseph?

Words like these could not be forgiven. They are particular not to violate the sanctity of the Temple by slaying their victim there, but they do not scruple to murder him, apparently on the charge of blasphemy. The dying martyr imitates his Master in prayer for his murderers. To welcome him, the Son of Man arises from his throne and stands to receive him. Amid the murderous flight of jagged stones, he sleeps as a tired child on its mother's breast. And from that hour his patience, sweetness, strength, are pricks in the heart of Saul.

THURSDAY, August 15. Acts viii.

It would seem that Stephen was beloved outside the precincts of the Church, for the devout men, who lamented his early death, were probably godly Jews, and not necessarily Christians. In the furious persecution which ensued, and which was directed by Saul of Tarsus, neither sex nor age was spared. Dragged before the magistrates, thrust into prison, exposed to cruel torture, the disciples of Jesus were in some cases compelled to blaspheme his holy Name. Scenes were witnessed during these terrible days which were destined to fill the heart of the future apostle with the most poignant sorrow.

This persecution was used to disperse the Church, which had grown too prosperous and easy, and needed to be reminded of the Lord's injunction to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. It was clearly not right, not according to the mind of Christ, that the light should shine only in Jerusalem, and, the salt remain in its original receptacle. How often God has to drive us by trouble to do what we ought to have done gladly and spontaneously!

The evangelization of Samaria through Philip followed, and John was sent to bring the fire of the Holy Spirit to the very spots where once he had invoked the fire of destruction. May we not learn from this mission that some are specially qualified to lead others into a full enjoyment of Pentecostal blessing? From the great city revival Philip is led to the desert to minister to one seeking soul. Be at God's disposal, that He may use thee for the many or the few.

FRIDAY, August 16. Acts ix.

When God wants captains for his army, He not unseldom takes them from the forces of the enemy. The arch-persecutor becomes the leader of the Apostles. It would seem that the most vehement opponents of Christ are the most likely to become the most ardent followers. Think, for instance, of Bunyan, of Newton, of Colonel Gardiner, of Brownlow North.

The conversion of Paul is an instance of the personal interposition of the living Christ. It was the pierced hand that apprehended the persecutor. Ever after, the Apostle insisted that he had seen the risen Saviour, and heard the word of his mouth. But even thus, human instrumentality was graciously made use of. On the one hand, the words and behaviour of the martyrs had prepared the way to Saul's heart; and, on the other hand, Ananias is needed to put the finishing touch. See to it that you are of such a temper, that Jesus may send for you to heal the souls that He wounds.

Then a period of rest fell to the lot of the Church, which walked in the fear of the Lord, and in the daily power of the Spirit; and as his presence was less needed to direct affairs from the metropolis, Peter was set free for an itinerancy which was marvellously owned of God, and had great results. Apostles should not be above ministering at the bedsides of the saints, or visiting somewhat obscure towns.

SATURDAY, August 17. Acts x.

This is one of the greatest chapters in this book. Peter is permitted to unlock the door of faith to Gentiles, as on the day of Pentecost to Jews. He was clearly guided. Not only did the vision of the sheet (emblem of the redeemed world) impress him, but it was corroborated by the knock or call of the men whom Cornelius had sent, and who at the same moment stood before the gate. Be sure not to act on visions alone, unless they are in harmony with the Scriptures, and are corroborated by the circumstances of Divine providence.

How humble Peter was. There was nothing of the priest about him. He shrank from accepting the prostration of the good centurion, who, as a scion of one of the noblest Roman families, paid the fisherman-apostle unprecedented honour. "Stand up, for I myself also am a man." Our power is, after all, in our sincerity and simplicity. The best of men is but a man at the best.

"While he was yet speaking" the Holy Spirit fell on his audience. Would that we were so full of the Spirit that He could complete our sermons, and use even a few sentences for the salvation of our congregations! F. B. M.

Scars of Victory.

Like some scarred warrior, who from distant lands,
In peace returned, first to the well-known place
Expectant hastens, where in fond embrace
He clasps his own, and each loved visage scans;
So Christ amidst his own disciples stands
That Easter morn, and whispers words of grace;
And, to allay their doubtings, bids them trace
The scars of suffering in his feet and hands.

The wounds are healed; why should the scars remain?
Could He who vanquished death not all efface,
And every sign remove of grief and pain?
Those scars now speak before the Father's face:
Christ ever lives there, as the Lamb once slain,
To heal heart-wounds and all sin's scars erase.

Conference of Evangelists.—The annual conference of evangelists at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C., has been arranged for Wednesday, September 25. Two sessions will be held, at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. The conveners of the conference are Messrs. M. H. Hodder and R. C. Morgan.

Students at Matlock.

FURTHER REPORTS.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.]

BETWEEN the meetings of the first week of the Christian Students' Conference at Matlock Bank—as reported in our last issue—and those which followed, a gathering of special interest took place on the Saturday evening. Many preconceived ideas received a rude shock as Mr. M. L. Rallia Ram (of the Punjaub University) named a few of the "Difficulties which Foreign Missionaries have to Face." First among these in the way of the English missionary he placed the fact of belonging to the ruling race, believing that beneficent as British rule has been, the Gospel would have been more readily accepted had it come through another channel. Thereafter he pleaded that those who now go should do so with an entirely open mind, and cast themselves right down among the masses of the people with the Gospel message, in spite of any other advice that may be given them.

The same thought was turned in the direction of home work by Rev. J. Scott Lidgett (Bermondsey Settlement), whose topic was "The Way to Understand Social Problems." He pleaded for the widest possible view of Christian work, the great concern of the Church being to secure the establishment of "a commonwealth in which there shall be no conditions thwarting any individual in living out a life which is a translation into being of the mind of Jesus Christ." Addressing his hearers as a company of middle-class men and women, the speaker declared that before the masses of the people can be won, all such class distinctions must be entirely lost sight of, and the servants of Christ be content to bury themselves in their work.

Text-books for the continuance of the regular courses of

had been prepared by Mr. Tissington Tatlow and Mr. H. W. Oldham respectively; and these gentlemen took advantage of opportunities to explain more fully the lines along which members might proceed in the consideration of "India," and the Book of Acts. On Sunday evening Mr. Oldham further amplified this in an address on the Holy Spirit.

The question of the establishment of a personal basis of membership had been before the Christian Unions in the various colleges, and evidently the delegates gathered with their minds very much concentrated on the subject. Three sessions of the Conference were occupied with the discussion of it in its different bearings; and the tone which characterized these proceedings, was the cause of profound thankfulness to all concerned. The advancement of Christ's kingdom among students, and by means of them throughout the world, were the ruling principles in all minds. After much prayer and careful comparison of ideas, it was almost unanimously agreed (1) that in the interests of the work it was desirable to establish such a personal basis of membership; and (2) the necessary clause in the constitution should read as follows:—"I desire, in joining the Union, to declare my faith in Jesus Christ as my Saviour, my Lord, and my God. Any student, in becoming a voting member of an affiliated Union, or in signing the declaration of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, shall be understood thereby to express his acceptance of the above." The harmonious arrival of the Conference at this finding was a cause of deep satisfaction.

The proceedings opened on Monday of last week with an inspiring address by Rev. H. C. Duncan (president of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union), on

"THE WATCHWORD—

'The Evangelization of the World in the Present Generation'—as a Spiritual Force." It was pointed out to begin with (1) that "the watchword calls us to nothing more than we are called to by the claims of Jesus Christ upon our lives, and by his commands given to his Church, though it may bring before us in a more pointed and definite way what we learn in the Word of God."

Next was placed (2) the necessity of making sure that we never put the watchword, or anything else, in the place of the Word of God; though "as we continue in prayer before God He will make the watchword a great reality in our lives from day to day."

The speaker then proceeded to (3) emphasize the watchword as "a great challenge to us to do the will of God, a call to obey more fully the commands of Jesus Christ; and it is only as we are in the paths of obedience to the will of God that we can have power for service. (4) It is a tremendous call to surrender and to consecration. It may mean the surrender of worldly ambitions. It may mean being buried in the midst of your work, in the heart of China, or in the slums of London. It may mean giving far more time to prayer. It may mean that you shall know as you have never done, what self-sacrifice means. But surely we shall not fail to yield ourselves wholly to Jesus Christ; for as we think of the world's need, and of the opportunity which this one short life of ours affords for serving our fellow-men and our God, we may, by the holding back of ourselves, fail to learn the place in this world where we can serve Him best. He has a plan for each of our lives; shall we not trust Him to make clear where He would have us go? (5) The watchword is an inspiration to intense earnestness and enthusiasm. We hear enthusiasts condemned: but has it not been those men who were consumed by a great burning desire to do the will of God who had led

THE GREAT MOVEMENTS OF THE WORLD?

If we are to do this we must have (1) a heart at leisure from itself, (2) a life of daily communion in which there is no controversy between the soul and God."

On Monday evening Rev. H. E. Grey (principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford) spoke on "Work in India," giving, in the course of his address, some interesting side-lights on problems presented to him during his experience of over twelve years in India, on the staff of the Church Missionary Society. Dealing (1) with opportunities, he expressed the conviction that instead of the opportunities for missionary work throughout the world being overstated in such books as that of Mr. J. R. Mott, the opposite is the case.

In India openings for the Gospel present themselves among all classes—Hindus, Mohammedans, and outcasts—that apparently all that is required is for people to go in and occupy the land. Government education has broken down prejudice on every hand, but great patience must be exercised, for the Christian point of view is a strange one to the people. Especially he pleaded on behalf of the large numbers of young men whose education has unsettled all their old beliefs, who do not now know what to believe, and who need a guiding hand. Mr. Grey referred in the most enthusiastic terms to the results attained by means of educational mission work, quoting instances of missionaries who, after long experience in the country, found this their most fruitful means of reaching hearts and consciences.

Turning (2) to the qualifications necessary for service in India, Mr. Grey said he had come to the conclusion that these might be all summed up in the one word "sympathy." We need to sympathize with the Christians, who must not be expected to be perfect all at once, any more than those at home. Sometimes the mistake is made of taking all converts who show ability, and at once making preachers of them, whereas none should be put forward in Christian work till they have been proved. On the other hand, there have actually been cases in which converts have been appointed as preachers because they could not get on at any trade.

Mr. Grey was particularly clear on the subject of the relation between native and European workers, warning his hearers carefully against ever taking the lead without some reason for it other than that of race. "Go," he said, "on the idea that Indians and Europeans are absolutely on the same level. There has been too much division between them in the past, and the best man should always get the best place." In order to secure this allocation of positions, all workers should meet on equal terms in one body, and the decisions there come to should be loyally accepted and followed.

Among other important points raised in Mr. Grey's address were the need (1) for great care in the avoidance of prejudice against native customs, and (2) for sympathy with native modes of thought. The latter point had, he believed, been treated far too lightly, and Europeans need to learn that they must get to the position occupied by native thought.

The day closed with a very solemn and searching address from Rev. J. Sinclair Stevenson (Punjaub), who spoke concerning "The Call to Foreign Service"—under a deep sense of the responsibility of his position. In opening, he called attention to the different, yet powerful, ways in which God had been speaking to Christian people in recent months through the course of events in India and China. Yet these dealings have failed to move the Christian Church at home as one might have expected them to do, and he asked his hearers whether they themselves had been really moved by them.

Striking right into the heart of the problem, Mr. Stevenson asked, "What is the cause of our failure to answer to this call?" (1) He thought one cause was a lack of imagination. Christian people have failed somehow to understand (a) even the extent of the work—statistics and diagrams very quickly pall on us and fail to have the desired effect. (b) Nor is the nature of the need of the heathen apprehended. After living in a slum settlement for two years, he found that the social problem is present among the heathen to a far more terrible extent than even under the worst circumstances at home. We fail also (c) in a realization of the urgency of the need. It seems as if God had by the present famine opened the door for every kind of men and women who are willing to find work in India.

(2) Mr. Stevenson then referred to the lack of consecration among members of our churches, which accounts for a great many of the excuses men give for not going to the foreign field. People who profess that "they are not good enough," should be shown that they are not willing to be made good enough. There is a more or less unconscious keeping of self in the foreground of our ideas and plans. Men do not say frankly even to themselves that they prefer their own advancement; but when they take advantage of opportunities for making money or using intellectual gifts for the Lord's cause, they forget that these same powers and gifts could be used abroad as well as at home.

(3) Turning to the lack of a true sense of proportion, the speaker declared that even a common-sense way of looking at things would send a great many people out among the heathen. "Heathen souls are no more precious than those at home, but they are as precious, and they are not being sought for in the same way."

After an address from Miss Saunders (Bombay) on "The Expression of Love in Life," a practical turn was given to Tuesday morning's session. On behalf of the Union, Mr. H. W. Oldham and Mr. C. W. G. Taylor (Edinburgh) told the story of the efforts which had been made to bring the hearts and minds of members to bear on the need for among the students in British colleges. Much consideration and prayer have been devoted to the subject, but the awakening has not come. Many suggestions were offered for affording facilities for the deepening of the spiritual life of members themselves, as well as for bringing the Gospel to bear on the general body of students. Mr. T. Tatlow added much to the value of the discussion by recounting the results of inquiries made during a recent visit to America. He confessed to a feeling of shame as he realized how far short the Unions of this country fall of the aggressive work carried on in American colleges. He pressed on every individual the call to take up this burden themselves, and then to enlist others in the same service, closing with the testimony that he himself had never experienced a repulse in his efforts on behalf of individuals.

Delegates were received at the Conference from similar Christian movements among students in Scandinavia, France, and Switzerland; and each of them brought cheering assurances of progress in the work of seeking to bring their fellow-students to the Saviour, and in smaller degree in the enlisting of individuals to give service in the wider mission field.

Following up much that had been previously said on the subject of prayer, Mr. Stephen Band (Westminster College, Cambridge) spoke on Tuesday evening on "The Ministry of Intercession" (Ezek. xxxvi. 37), with special reference to the need which had been previously expressed for a wide-spread spiritual awakening in the colleges. Referring (1) to the value of intercession, he showed that the common question—"Why is it necessary that prayer should precede the forth-putting of the Divine power?"—need not necessarily be answered, since we must exercise many of our greatest natural and spiritual privileges without knowing much about them. But, after all, the explanation is simply that there is only one source of spiritual power in this world, that that source is God, and that there is no other way of obtaining that power for ourselves and others save by prayer. "We shrink from the labour of intercession, for, while that forms the most fruitful department of Christian service, it is also the most difficult and most exacting." The speaker proposed for consideration the question—"Are we convinced in our hearts that

INTERCESSION IS INDEED A MINISTRY?"

Asking (2) "Why is it that our intercession has been so poor and so ineffective?" Mr. Band said he believed it would be generally admitted that intercession was the least interesting part of prayer; but those who do not find the topics of the prayer cycle interesting may generally be able to trace the cause to ignorance. Then we lack heartiness in our prayers for people to be brought to Christ, because every time we do so we are self-convicted of not doing more to bring them. "We forget that God means us to answer many of our own prayers. There is a Divine law of progression in spiritual attainment. (1) We see things as they are. (2) We see them as they may be. (3) We see them as they can be. Then (4) there grows up the feeling that these things must be. After that we (5) come to the step when we say these things shall be. Last of all (6) we go forward with the faith that these things will be."

A SUBTLE DANGER.

An address by Mr. Taylor on "Personal Work" formed a fitting sequel to his previous statement of the need of spiritual awakening. Reviewing his year of experience as a travelling secretary among the colleges, he expressed the conviction that this is the kind of effort being least put forth, and yet most greatly needed. Organization is being gradually brought to perfection, but he feared that even in that fact there may lie a subtle temptation to become so much absorbed in routine as to leave no time for coming to know men and women in such an intimate way as to be able to lead them to Christ; and he counselled those who found themselves coming to this position to give up their connection with this or any other organization rather than allow personal effort to be crowded out of their lives. "We must remember," he said, "that no committee work will take the place of this. We are first of all Christian men and women, and only secondly Christian Union members; and when we lose touch with individuals, committee work is absolutely useless."

Turning to the dangers of the situation, Mr. Taylor said some failed to see the need for this effort, because they did not take time to think of it; and he touched a tender point in many a conscience as he spoke frankly about the way in which Christians mix freely with friends and acquaintances without ever thinking of or praying for them in relation to Jesus Christ.

Another point which made a deep impression was a reference to men and women who left college ten years ago, without being brought into touch with Christ, and who are to-day using all their powers and influence in antagonism to Him. The students of to-day are being influenced by these enemies, and it is for Christian friends to counteract this. "If we do not, none else will. It is ours, too, to win the men and the women who will be the leaders of thought ten or twenty years hence. Dealing with the objection that the years of college life should be those of preparation and not of actual work, Mr. Taylor said it must also be remembered that to some the opportunity presented in college of working for Jesus Christ may be the only one that will ever come, while it will certainly be to some their grandest and best, and in any case such efforts may constitute the very best preparation that can be made for the future."

The devotional meeting on Wednesday morning opened with the farewell words of five student volunteers—Miss Cable (China Inland Mission), Miss Hindley (China—London Missionary Society), Miss Sampson (China—Church Missionary Society), Rev. Garden Blaikie (China—English Presbyterian Church), and Rev. H. C. Duncan (India—Church of Scotland)—who hope before the next Conference. Thereafter Mr. H. T. Hodgkin gave a suggestive and inspiring address on "Reaching Forth unto the Things that are Before," in which he pointed out the need of every individual for a clear vision of the future given to us by God Himself, a vision in detail, because if we only have a general vision the outlines will fade and blur, and the vision itself will lose its force.

When the thanksgiving service came on Wednesday evening, it was an impressive time. Mr. Crayden Edmunds (British and Foreign Bible Society), first general secretary of the British College Christian Union, recalled the story of early days, and congratulated the members on the progress made in different directions. The closing word by Mr. Frank Lenwood (chairman) was on "The Living, Indwelling Christ" (John xiv. 23; Rev. iii. 20); and the Conference concluded with a series of short thanksgivings, in which many members gave expression to their sense of blessing and help received.

Special efforts were made by the visitors to follow up their more formal addresses by less conventional gatherings in the various tents, as well as by and in this way much was done to confirm and deepen the impressions made. "I cannot put into words," said one man to the writer, "all that the College Union has done for me in the way of making definite and real the facts of the Christian life." Day after day, these young people attended the meetings and sought opportunities for quiet meditation and serious converse, while spread around were the hills and dales of Derbyshire in all their beauty.

The camp life circled round "the practice of the presence of God," and everything was made subservient to the cultivation of the spiritual being. It is interesting to note that the same camp attendants follow the Conference year after year; and, in the course of their devoted and highly appreciated service in temporal things, show their appreciation of the privilege of this going apart for a season with a company of God's people. The stormy weather of the opening days gave place to brilliant sunshine, and the closing gatherings were held under the most favourable natural auspices.

Y.W.C.A.—With a view to encourage Y.W.C.A. workers in Middlesex, and to call attention to the need of new work in several parts of the county, a united gathering of Middlesex secretaries and members has just been held at Woodlawn, Hanworth, Middlesex, by kind permission of Mr. G. F. Pollock. About 150 representatives of six branches attended. The following secretaries were present; Mrs. Mallinson, Feltham; Miss S. Pollock, Hanworth; Miss Creed, Twickenham; Miss L. Hayes, Hampton Hill; Miss C. Elliott, Hounslow; Mrs. Jones, Harmondsworth. Mr. Sayer gave an evangelistic address, illustrated with large diagrams, and Mr. Broomhall, of the C.I.M., told of the martyred missionaries. Miss Morley, Miss Pollock, Miss Ardill, and Mr. H. Kidner, took part in the proceedings.

"All are Thy Servants."

THE sixty-second report of the Orphan Homes on Ashley Down, Bristol, has just been issued, and, as usual, is full of testimony to the faithfulness of God. Commenting upon one donation of £50 received from Australia, Mr. Wright observes: "As such illustrations of our heavenly Father's power over all hearts come before us, we can only bow reverently before Him and say, 'All are thy servants.'" The record contained in the report is a striking exemplification of the truth of these words, and recalls the language of a familiar hymn:

> Say not my soul, from whence
> Can God relieve thy care?
> Remember that omnipotence
> Has servants everywhere.

The Institution has now entered upon the fourth year of its continuance since the venerable founder "fell on sleep," and still the work goes on sustained by the same gracious God through faith and prayer. In common with other charitable institutions, this one has felt the effect of the heavy claims made by war, famine, and fire in other lands; but, to quote the language of the report, "the diminution of income has not occasioned us the least financial strain or anxiety." In the providence of God, a large legacy (to which reference was made in the report of last year) has made up for the deficiency, and accordingly not only have all needs been met, but the year closed with a good balance in hand.

A special feature of interest in this report is the announcement made of

in the conditions under which orphans can be received. Hitherto, for more than sixty-four years, only children bereaved of both parents by death have been eligible for admission; now, destitute children, born in wedlock, will be eligible for admission if bereaved of one parent."

For several years there have been increasing vacancies in the houses, it therefore became a serious consideration whether, for economy's sake, one of the houses should be closed and the staff reduced, or some such change as above be made.

The increase in the number of vacancies is thus accounted for:—"Orphanages have multiplied. . . . The relatives and friends of orphans have now a choice of localities, and naturally prefer sending them to the nearest institution, as affording them more frequent opportunities of seeing the children, and at less expense. Again, the increased openings for remunerative female labour incline many to undervalue domestic service; and, consequently, to view with disfavour institutions whose object is to train girls for that most useful, and, if rightly viewed, honourable occupation. Further, there can be no doubt that religious bias, and a strong prejudice in favour of certain ecclesiastical forms, disincline many to send children to an institution where the Holy Scriptures are the sole basis and text-book of the spiritual instruction imparted."

Simultaneously with the increase in the number of vacancies, constant applications have been received for the admission of children who have lost only one parent. In reference to this, Mr. Wright says:—"Now, as long as the rule rigidly prohibiting the admission of such children remains in force, we are prevented from helping such exceedingly needy ones, whereas the relaxing of the rule would enable us to bring joy into these sorrows, and go far to fill up the vacancies which occasion us so much concern." After much consideration and consultation, the trustees resolved that, "in order to utilize thoroughly the existing accommodation, destitute children bereft of one parent may be received as the directors shall see fit, provided always that destitute children bereft of both parents shall have the prior claim."

Like all its predecessors, this report abounds with interesting incidents, showing in what a variety of ways channels of supply are opened up, and thus furnishing a testimony as eminently fitted to encourage the faith of the Lord's people, as during the God-honoured life of George Müller.

Other Lands.

The Opening of Hunan.

By Rev. GRIFFITH JOHN, D.D.

We give the following extracts from a long communication just received from Rev. Dr. Griffith John. The evidence of the settling down of China will be welcomed by our readers, as well as the sidelights thrown on the real attitude of the people to the recent outbreaks.

I HAVE just paid another visit to Hunan, accompanied by my colleague, Mr. Sparham, being our first visit since the troubles of last year. We left Hankow on 25th April, and returned on 12th May. At Yochou we were joined by Mr. Greig, the senior representative of the London Missionary Society at that city. We called at Changsha, Siangtan, and Hêngshan on the way. The round trip is about 920 English miles, and we did it in less than eighteen days. At Changsha, the Hunan Governor, Yu Lien-san, was kind enough to lend us his steam launch, the Siang-Fan, which took us up to Hêngchou and back again all the way to Hankow. The Governor would not have done this a year ago. The fact of his doing it now shows what a tremendous change has come over the official mind in these parts since the recent troubles. The kindness of the Governor on this occasion enabled us to accomplish in a little over two weeks what might otherwise have taken us six or seven weeks. At every place we were received most cordially by all the officials, both higher and lower. Taotai Tsai, the official in charge of Foreign Affairs in Hunan, treated us with marked friendship.

We called at the house bought by us two years ago, but actually handed over only two or three months since, and found that a part of it had been turned into a chapel, and that in it for hours every day. The two native brethren in charge are good and earnest men, and have the respect of both the officials and people. They are working hard, and have already gathered a small congregation of believers around them. We would have preached at the chapel; but the congregation was too large for the building, so we moved on, and came to an empty space in front of the principal temple in that part of the city. Here we stood on benches provided for us by some of the neighbours, and preached to a large congregation. The people listened well, and behaved themselves admirably, and we came to the conclusion that the people of Changsha are as ripe for the Gospel as the people of Hankow, or of any other city in Hupeh. There is no difficulty now in purchasing property for missionary purposes in the city. The Roman Catholics have just bought a large piece of land outside the city, on which they intend to build without delay. I have always maintained that our difficulties in Hunan sprang from official opposition, and that what kept us out of Changsha was an official sentiment. The facts that I have just given show conclusively that such has been the case. Our difficulties have never been with the people, but with the governing classes.

We spent a night at Siangtan, and found everything perfectly quiet there. We saw many of the converts, and were delighted to find them so happy and bright. Several candidates for church membership came before us, but we deemed it advisable to put their baptism off to our next visit.

At Hêngchou there was a wonderful display of pomp and ceremony on our arrival and departure. It was not much to our taste, neither had we anything to do with the getting of it up. It was, I suppose, the official way of showing their respect to us, and of impressing the imagination of the people. All expressed their deep regret for the riots of last year, and their indebtedness for the kindness we had shown in the settlement of our difficulties. In asking only Tls. 16,000 indemnity, we have, they said, shown ourselves to be true friends to the officials and people. We moved freely among the people, and were received with every mark of respect. There was not an angry look to be seen anywhere, nor an angry word to be heard.

It was sadly interesting to visit the spot on which our chapel stood before its demolition in July last. There we found the bare ground and nothing else. There was not a brick to be seen; the whole building had been completely destroyed, and everything in the shape of materials had been carted away. The London Missionary Society had in the prefecture between twenty and thirty places of worship. All, without a single exception, were utterly destroyed last year. Orders, however, have been given to start and we are hoping to see all our buildings up again before the close of next year. Our chapel and dwelling-houses at Hêngchou will, I trust, be up before the close of this year.

The Sunday we spent at Hêngchou can never be forgotten. A goodly number of Christians residing in the surrounding country had heard of our arrival, and came in to see us. Others came as candidates for baptism. We had two services, at both of which Mr. Sparham, Mr. Greig, and myself preached. At the close of the morning service twenty-eight persons were baptized, and at the close of the afternoon service nine more were added to their number. Some years ago one of these men, Mr. Peng, was passing through a market town about fifteen miles from Hêngchou. There he made the acquaintance of a well-to-do family. Mr. Peng preached the Gospel to them, and gave them some books; both husband and wife seemed much interested in what they heard, especially the wife. The husband became a believer, but, being an opium smoker, has not taken an active part in propagating the truth. The wife, however, became at once an earnest propagandist. Having mastered to some extent the contents of the books, she turned a part of her house into and invited them to join her in Christian worship. About a hundred people have been influenced by her example and teachings, of whom nine or ten were baptized on this occasion. When asked to whom they were indebted for their knowledge of the truth, the answer invariably was: "To Mrs. Wu." Last year this little band of converts suffered dire persecution, especially Mrs. Wu; her house was demolished, her business ruined, and her property stolen. Mr. Peng estimates her loss in property at about 4,000 dols.; her life was sought by the enemy, and for four months she wandered about from place to place in a state of great destitution. Nevertheless, her heart is full of gratitude, and her faith in God as strong as ever.

The one fact that stands out prominently in this narrative is this: Hunan is open. I have longed for many years to be able to pen that short sentence of three words. I can say so now, and my heart is full of joy as I do say it. I do not mean to say that we shall have no further trials, and that the missionary after this will find Hunan a bed of roses. Difficulties and trials are awaiting him there as in every other province. What I mean to say is that the old wall of partition which excluded him from Hunan is thrown down, and that it will be his own fault if he does not enter in and take possession.

And to what is the opening of this hitherto anti-foreign, anti-Christian province to be ascribed? It is to be ascribed to a combination of causes. The persistent attacks of the missionaries on Hunan for the last twenty or thirty years have had a great deal to do with the bringing around of the present state of things. Though not allowed to live in Hunan, their visits to the province as preachers and colporteurs have been numerous during these decades. The noble work of the native colporteurs in Hunan, carried on for many years with hardly a break, has had much to do with it. The degradation of Chou Han and the suppression of the Hunan anti-foreign literature must be regarded as most important factors; and the China and Japan war must be taken into account in any attempt to explain the new order of things.

Open-Air Work in Belgium.—II.

ON entering the large church of the Eglise Missionnaire at Liège, I was surprised at the size and composition of the congregation, delighted with the splendid singing, in which all joined heartily and skilfully, and greatly refreshed by the clear Gospel preaching of the pastor, Monsieur Brochet. He and his wife are delightful people, and wholehearted missionaries. The evening congregation, to which I preached, again surprised me by its magnitude, and by the reverence and devotion of the worshippers, both young and old.

But perhaps the excellent Sunday-school and the very numerous week-night cottage and open-air meetings strike a visitor more than the stated Sunday services. Night after night I found these meetings packed with earnest audiences, and didn't they sing! I felt I could spend my life in such glorious work. Most of these people were or had been Roman Catholics, and they seemed to have a real hunger for the Bread of God. No matter how long the preaching,

THEY NEVER SEEMER TO TIRE!

Five or six street meetings had been arranged by Pasteur Huis, of Chénée, a suburb of Liège, for the Sunday afternoon, but heavy rain made it impossible to hold them. I was much disappointed, for his workers told me the street services were always most successful. This beloved man of God interested me greatly. He is a Belgian, and by birth a Roman Catholic. His conversion, through private study of the New Testament, was remarkable, and he is to-day one of the ablest men in the ministry of the Eglise Missionnaire. He has gathered round him a noble band of workers, and God is richly blessing his solid Scriptural preaching to the winning of Romanists to Jesus the Lord. His church is too small for the congregation, and this hinders his work. In summer people frequently faint during the services owing to the heat and crush, and doubtless many fear to attend who otherwise would come. He is trying to raise £1,000 to improve the building, and I will gladly receive and forward to him donations for that purpose.

On my way home from Liège I spent two great days with Commissioner Booth-Clibborn at Amsterdam and Rotterdam. Never shall I forget those two days. The S.A. is doing much for eternity in Holland. The Commissioner has got the ear of the people; they evidently like him. He speaks Dutch as well as French and German, and in spite of the Boer war and the consequent hostility to England, we had packed audiences, and sinners coming to Jesus.

The Gospel in Argentina.

WRITING from Las Flores, Pastor George Graham, who has been a missionary in the Argentine Republic for over thirteen years, says: "We urgently need a building, both as a school and for meetings. I do not know what to do for room. All through the summer we have had some of the classes out in the corridor, but now the winter is coming on, we shall soon be unable to do this. At present we have over sixty in the day school, and close on eighty in the Sunday school—more than ever before."

Las Flores has a population of about 5,000. Here in his own home Mr. Graham has done a splendid work, amidst much Romish opposition, not only in preaching the Gospel and school-work, but in circulating the Scriptures and Gospel literature, including his own translations of Spurgeon's sermons. One who has lately visited Las Flores says, "Mr. Graham's work bears the stamp of thoroughness upon it." His ministry was never more hopeful than it is at present, and it is hoped that it will be no longer hindered for want of a suitable building in which to meet. Such a building, it is estimated, would cost from £600 to £700. Friends who would like to have fellowship in helping may communicate with Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 22 TO 27.

(BY OUR OWN REPRESENTATIVES.)

MISSION TESTIMONIES.

On the Tuesday afternoon there was a meeting for missionary testimony. The attendance showed keen interest. After prayer by Rev. E. L. Hamilton, Mr. Walter B. Sloan, who presided, read 2 Cor. iv. 1-6.

The first speaker was Rev. F. B. Meyer, who told of the work that God has done through his ministry of Holiness teaching. From last year's Convention he went to Northfield, Mass., where he took part in a series of deeply interesting meetings. He had the pleasure of giving addresses to housefuls of ministers gathered from all parts of the United States. Hurrying back to Europe, he attended the Blankenburg Conference, the meetings of which are very influentially attended. The Christians of Germany have leapt to the advancement of the truth regarding sanctification, and are in no need of help or direction on the subject, or in promoting the movement in the Fatherland. Subsequently he went to Sweden, being entertained by the Prince and Princess Bernadotte; and later on visited Berlin, where he witnessed glorious work among young men, Count Bernstorff interpreting for him. After giving what help he could in organising the Simultaneous Mission in London, he again visited America, at once undertaking work in the Southern States. Working up to Chicago, he testified for Christ to ministers of the Gospel. On all hands he had to explain what Keswick stands for, and of the work of God in connection with the Convention. Latterly the work at Harley House has been placed in his care; and although his anxieties have been great, the consolations of God have abounded to him.

THE BISHOP OF MOMBASA

followed with testimony on the life of faith in separation unto God by the Holy Spirit. The first idea of holiness is separation unto God, in which state the quality of holiness is formed in us. Speaking as one from the foreign field, he said, "Does the blessing of holiness last?" Yes, it does. In the hours of missionary life, when all circumstances are against you, there is quiet confidence gained by the knowledge of the Lord Jesus as sanctification. Here is the secret of success in Central Africa, while a man relying upon learning or even the prayers of others will inevitably fail. Missionary testimony is that unless Christ be all in all, our mission effort is a muddle, and we cannot reckon upon the work being effective among the people. The worker does not get the power of God through some great act of consecration—not as a missionary; he got it as a believer, one who obeys God from first to last. "Ten years of my missionary life were passed before I learned to work for God in this blessed separation." He desired to do good work for God, but he had not entered into the condition of sanctification. "I will be separated unto God"—that is an act of faith, and a covenant with God, when made on the knees with the heart. "Heavenly Father, I will be separated unto Thee"—that is a complete act, and God's arm is round you for life and service. You feel in yourself no better than before; you feel your deficiency; but you henceforth see the Lord Jesus Christ for sanctification. Your deficiency and impurity, your ill-temper and irritability, may be rectified by turning to the Lord Jesus for strength and holiness, peace and calmness. Every time you work for God there will be enduement of power; your words will be weak, but if you work along the lines of God's will your words will tell, because the Lord will speak through you.

The Bishop told a remarkable story illustrative of the advancement of the Gospel on simple lines in Central Africa:—"On September 24 last year I was to set sail from Africa. Some time before, a missionary had asked me to accompany him to some mountains about twenty miles from his mission-station, in order to see if some new station could be formed at the foot of the mountains. One thing and another had stood in the way, and it seemed as if I should never go as desired.

GOD OPENED THE WAY.

God knew that we wanted to carry out his purpose, but the way did not seem clear. Towards the end of August I wrote an everyday kind of letter, saying, 'If you can meet me on such and such a day at such a place, do.' That was written within three weeks of my going home. Had the missionary written 'No,' that would have been an end of it. He wrote 'Yes,' and on the day appointed met me at a station on the Uganda Railway. We went at once and saw chief after chief, asking them if they would like to have the Gospel. The district was given over to wild heathenism; there had never been a resident missionary there. The people knew nothing of Christ. The chiefs received us well, showed great earnestness in building prayer houses, and within three weeks of that time a third missionary went and pitched his tent in that mountain district, taking possession in Christ's name. On the first Sunday of his stay some 400 people came from the villages round about; and as the Sundays passed the numbers grew rapidly, and at last, without any effort, he had a congregation of as many as 2,000 people sitting patiently at his feet learning of Christ. As they attended, the people passed on what little they learned, and this brought others round the missionary. At length, with the curious stage past, the work remains, and at the end of eight months the secretary of the mission wrote that there were over 1,000 people on an average listening to the message of the Gospel, and joining in the formal services. He added that when, at the end of prayer, the company said words meaning, 'For Jesus' sake, Amen,' the noise of the little river hard by was drowned with the volume of voices."

In conclusion, the Bishop asked Christians to step into separation to God, and to take Christ as their sanctification.

On Friday, the Eskin Street Tent was again crowded. Mr. Eugene Stock was in the chair. The first speaker was Mr. Spencer Walton, of the South Africa General Mission, and his testimony was listened to with earnest attention. He had been struck on his return home with the ignorance of people in England concerning the real state of affairs at the Cape, particularly as a mission field. He drew a vivid contrast between the past and the present. Through the great parish Dr. Andrew Murray had made his life work, he had travelled, had looked upon a scene of industry, quiet homesteads, and flourishing churches; but now many a Boer who knew and worshipped his God lies beneath the sod, homesteads are burned, women and children are crowded in laager, places of worship are empty, and in one church every elder but one met his death in battle. Taking in these two scenes, we may form an idea of

THE BLACKNESS OF WAR.

All the prospects which were once so cheering are blighted, doors are closed, and village work almost ended.

Where there was once no hatred, there is now the greatest bitterness. On revisiting a town in which many had been brought to Christ through a previous mission, his own spiritual children closed their doors to him because he was a Britisher. The sore in South Africa is a running sore, and it will not be healed by legislation, emigration, or even moderation; only by the sending forth of men and women who shall take the balm of God.

Passing on to speak of the work among the troops, Mr. Walton related the experience of two years' ministering to the needs of the sick, wounded, and dying. Visiting field hospitals had afforded many opportunities for Christian service both in providing temporal comforts and unfolding to yearning hearts the one source of healing for the soul. Many a soldier's dying hour had been brightened by the ministry of the Word and Christian consolation. What had been accomplished through the Marked Testaments none could tell. In Natal alone 8,000 had been distributed—nearly 500 to officers, and many had been accepted by Roman Catholics.

The next speaker was Mr. Conway, of the China Inland Mission, who narrated the vicissitudes through which he, with others, had been called to pass

DURING THE BOXER RISING.

The scene of his labour and trial was at Honan, in connection with the work of Dr. Whitfield Guinness. After being deprived of almost every belonging, Mr. Conway and his small party were befriended by a neighbour who allowed them to remain in a loft until their whereabouts was revealed to the marauding soldiers. Shelter was then found in a haunted room until that, too, had to be abandoned. In the providence of God the streets were flooded with rain to a depth of over four feet, and an escape was effected. Hankow was only reached, however, after perilous journeyings and distressing experiences.

Another missionary from China was Mr. C. H. S. Green, whose story of anguish, suffering, and bereavement (given in a recent issue of The Christian) deeply impressed his hearers. As the speaker described his wanderings, and the remarkable manner in which the way was opened up by God, many were moved to tears, and the solemn hush which fell upon the gathering was broken only by sighs and expressions of thankfulness to the great Deliverer.

MEETINGS FOR YOUNG MEN.

There were meetings for young men in the Skiddaw Street Tent each morning. The gatherings were large, and many men of riper years were present. On Tuesday addresses were delivered by Mr. W. B. Sloan and Rev. E. H. Hamilton. The former commented in a practical and earnest way upon the words of St. Paul, "Such were some of you, but ye were washed, but ye were sanctified, but ye were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus" (1 Cor. vi. 11, R.V.). We too often are in danger of lessening the distinction between holiness and sin, and of thinking too lightly of between those who serve God and those who serve sin. We have in these words, three statements with regard to the application of God's salvation to our own personal life and history, two statements with reference to what that salvation is in itself. "Ye were washed." Here is regeneration, that cleansing of the heart which takes place when we are created as new creatures. The sins of the past are put from us when our hearts are re-created. "Ye were sanctified." The word "sanctified" has a much more limited meaning than we generally give to it. Sanctification is a being set apart for God's use. When we have been washed from everything that hindered God using us, we are set free, and He looks upon us as belonging to Himself, and we must regard the presence of evil as being an intrusion. "Ye were justified." We are brought into this blessed relationship, we know that the light of God's favour is lifted upon us, to be henceforth the horizon of our spiritual life.

Mr. Hamilton's remarks were helpful and inspiring. They had reference to the

and their bearing upon the life of the Christian. Real faith is heart-grasp of the truth. There must be resting upon the Word of God as well as an intellectual assent to the truth. One cause of much unbelief is our receiving honour one of another—seeking the approval of our fellow-men instead of seeking that honour which cometh from God alone. Another hindrance to faith is an evil conscience. Many have made shipwreck of faith through not having a good conscience. Conscience means knowing oneself. The Apostle Paul, in saying that he knew nothing against himself, meant that he had a conscience void of offence toward God and man, and this was the reason why he had such strong faith in God and in his promises.

On Wednesday a suggestive address was given by the Bishop of Mombasa on the words, "The Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon" (Judges vi. 34). Some lessons from the experience of Gideon were set forth, and the speaker's appeal to young men, to abandon everything to the following of Christ, found an echo in many a heart. Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas followed with wise and timely counsel. Directing attention to the admonition of St. Paul to the Ephesians, "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil," he dwelt upon

THREE CONDITIONS OF SUCCESSFUL CHRISTIAN LIVING.

(1) A knowledge of the foes we have to fight; (2) a knowledge of our resources; and (3) a knowledge of how to use those resources. Some of us too often make the mistake of underrating our foes. This is not only dangerous, but disastrous. Others overrate their enemies. The foes of a Christian are mighty, but not almighty; wise, but not all-wise; present, but not omnipresent. We have not to overrate our foes, but to understand them. They are threefold, the world, the flesh, and the devil. The greatest temptations of Satan have always been directed to Christians. We have need to know our resources. The world comes to us with temptation to despair. To meet and overcome this, we must be clothed with righteousness. The flesh also assails us with its deceitfulness, delights, and defilements. This enemy must be met by light. In the Word of God light is associated with sincerity, and the deceitfulness of the flesh can only be met by sincerity. When a man is willing to allow every part of his inner life to be open to the scrutiny of God, so that its every desire, move, and purpose is then he will be kept free from the deceitfulness of the flesh. Light is also associated with purity, and with this armour the defilements of the flesh have to be met. The pure Spirit of God, when allowed to enter into the heart of a man, will keep him from the defilements of the flesh. Light again is associated with joy, and with this the delights of the flesh must be met. Men invariably sin because of the delight which they imagine it affords. Victory over the delights of the flesh can only be won by what Dr. Chalmers termed "the expulsive power of a new affection." The man who delights himself in the Lord will have victory over the delights of the flesh.

On Thursday, Rev. E. W. Moore offered some thoughtful counsel concerning the training for the race of which St. Paul wrote. To win the race a young man must (1) run light; (2) rest while he runs; (3) run to win. All sins are weights, but all weights are not sins; resting and fighting are perfectly compatible; resting and racing are the complement of each other.

A powerful address was given by Prebendary Webb-Peploe. Directing attention to the words, "The servant of the Lord" (2 Tim. ii. 24) he dwelt upon the excuses which men formulate in defence of inconsistency—"I am an ordinary man," "I am as good as others."

GOD WANTS THE ORDINARY MAN.

Timothy was one of the most ordinary men, but God used him. It is not sufficient to sing, "Oh to be nothing, nothing." We are nothing already; and must be willing to take the place of nothing if God is to make use of us in his service. Passing on to refer to the claims upon Christian ministers, the speaker urged the need for getting rid of anything (even although it may not be wrong in itself) that is likely to prove a hindrance to holy living, or to repel others from seeking aid in the time of perplexity of soul. The need for humble-mindedness was pressed home in burning words, and the Prebendary pleaded with his hearers to be willing to take the lowest place—even that of a slave—that they might become sons of glory.

On Friday Rev. F. S. Webster based an impressive address on Joel ii. 28, "Your young men shall see visions." Every young man needs a vision of God. It will not make him visionary or sentimental, full of poetry, and unpractical. A vision of God brings into the life the strength, patience, persistency, and purity of the Lord Himself. Through the window of our morning Scripture portion we can see God, and the man who has seen God is not easily perturbed, even though an army encamp around the city, but is kept in perfect peace. Fervently the speaker pleaded that care should be taken to preserve a close walk with God; for those alone who walk with Him are the windows of heaven opened and a vision of God revealed. Throughout the week the meetings were marked with an intense longing, on the part of hundreds of young men, for a deeper knowledge of the things of God.

Prophet's Mission and Seraphs' Song.

DR. JOHN SMITH.

DID you ever notice the wonderful connection between the fifth and sixth chapters of Isaiah? In the former we have Isaiah, as a preacher of righteousness, diagnosing the moral and religious situation in Judah. I do not wish to launch an exaggeration, because I believe that God is not served by the exaggerations of men; but I am filled with awe at the marvellous searchlight thrown upon individual and national life in that chapter. We have there the six signs of national decadence that were manifested in that time in the history of Judah, and have been manifested wherever a nation or a people has been untrue to its calling and has fallen away under the blighting power of evil.

OF THESE SIX WOES,

the first is—an inordinate love of wealth: "Woe unto them that join house to house and lay field to field" (8). Forgetting that it is God that giveth power to get wealth, men throw the reins on the neck of their passions and let them drive; so you have the second woe—the inordinate love of pleasure: "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink," &c. (11).

Those who have lost all idea of the higher meaning of life proceed to mock at God, and duty, and conscience; they say, "When will God manifest Himself?" They abandon themselves to light and trivial, unworthy and worldly occupations, "drawing iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope." Hence the third woe (18, 19).

In the fourth woe we see the light of God upon the nation that is falling away from Him. There arise men of strong intellects and vivid imaginations, who must form a theory of the universe for themselves, and work out their own views of existence; but they are so committed to the love of pleasure that they "call sweet bitter and bitter sweet" (20). They put erroneous meanings on the problem of life, and write out their pessimisms in the face of God.

The fifth woe indicates a more terrible manifestation of the evil working in individuals and nations: "Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight" (21). When men have become so much their own masters that they want no theory of the universe, but make pleasure their god, their own desires become an all-sufficient end. Such seem to live as if they had no consciousness of God or sense of obligation to Him.

The sixth woe is—corruption in the seat of government—men giving justice for a bribe: "Woe unto them which justify the wicked for reward and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him (22-25).

There is the vision that God gave Isaiah of the country in which he lived, and the people among whom he dwelt.

WHAT AWFUL DECLENSION—

and they were the chosen people! God had lifted them above all other nations, fenced them round, and planted them as a vineyard that they might bring forth fruit to Him, and be a spring of moral witness to the whole world in that early day (1-5). And not only had they failed to realize that ideal, but they had gone down into the deeps of moral degeneracy.

What preparation does God give Isaiah that he may be a prophet to his generation, that he may speak the word of God to that great nation, and bring down the light and fire of God to a degenerate people? It has been said that people coming to Keswick are unworldly, not facing the burning questions of the day—that they come into the wilderness to nurse a mystic meditation that is as unreal as it is futile. "To the law and to the testimony": we will listen to God, and not to man. Where did God bring this burdened man, this kingly soul, bearing the burden of his nation's destiny, and surrendered already to the service of his people? We come to the sixth chapter. He brought him under the shadow of God—under the shadow of the Eternal. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple" (vi. 1). The glory of God in his overflowing majesty broke upon the prophet's vision.

The most hopeless feature of the present day is that we are so full of ourselves; even the best men, reformers burning with zeal for the people, are full of themselves. Everything is looked at from an earthly standpoint, and there is no vision of God. Let us get under the shadow of God. Nothing fills my soul with such grievous concern as the denudation of a sense of God. It seems as though the very soil of religious reverence were being washed from the minds of men. Their horizons are the horizons of time, bounded by the present. There is no overshadowing and overwhelming vision of God; and if we are going to face the social problem and bring the people to Christ, we must get under the shadow of God, and feel the glory and the majesty of the Most High, "before whom the nations are as a drop in the bucket; He taketh up the isles as a very little thing."

Isaiah is permitted to see the world in which God lives. We are all so much taken up with our own world that we do not think there is any other. The great centre of the universe is the throne of God; and round Him are the angels and archangels—thrones and dominions, principalities and powers. God is in the midst; and the inhabitants of that world have a light of their own, a vision of their own, a conception of their own. The prophet lets us see a glimpse of the glory, and he lets us hear what the holy beings are thinking about us in this world of men.

This brings us to one of the most striking contrasts in the pages of revelation. In chap. v. we learn that the prophet "looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, and behold a cry." In chapter vi. we find him turned aside from his own judgment, as he hears the seraphim sing: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory." Here is into which I want to get: "The whole earth is full of his glory!" Isaiah had said he "looked for judgment, but behold oppression." He saw corruption—corruption everywhere. But when he entered the abode of the true, into the presence of the Eternal, the seraphim, spirits of vision seeing the issues of things, judging the present by the future, are saying in the face of heaven, "The whole earth is full of his glory!" Do you not think that up there in heaven they saw the sinfulness of sin, even as Isaiah did the enormity of Judah's disobedience, the vileness of the backsliding and wandering away? That surely broke upon their vision as it had not broken upon the vision of the great prophet; and yet while they saw sin in its virulence and the vileness of transgression — how it marred the purpose of God, and wrought wreck and ruin in the land —they had a view beyond that.

Sin is a terrible fact in the history of the world of men, with its tempting, polluting, crushing power; but it is not the supreme fact, it is a disease introduced by self-will, and the purpose of God is not to be defeated by the sin of men. One great method of God in dealing with men is this—He overthrows evil by permitting the self-manifestation of evil. He allows sin, in its injustice, wrong, and worthlessness, before the eyes of men, that its nothingness may be seen, and that, at length, it may be swept from his presence for ever. His sword strikes once, and strikes no more!

TO BLAZE INTO MANIFESTATION

Of the temporal and eternal consequences of sin we would speak with awful dread, but amid all this the purpose of God is being carried out. God is bringing forth into fuller glory his essential love and holiness, and shining in his being before the sons of men. That is the marvel that found expression in the song of the seraphim—"The whole earth is full of his glory." It is a glorious thing to be a prophet. With what stupendous power did they flash light upon present-day evil. Isaiah occupied a commanding position; but now he has come under the shadow of God, and begun to see sin as from the Throne. He sees the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and how God is overruling sin by his great purposes of love. Formerly he said, "Woe be to him that addeth house to house, &c." Now he says, "Woe is me!" (vi. 5). There was a time when he felt he could be a prophet; he thought it was his work to go and discover the evil of his age. Now that he has seen God and the sinfulness of sin, in the light of God; now that he has seen God in his infinite patience working out his purpose of love, despite the contumely and transgression of men; now that he hears the seraphs, looking forward to the future and rejoicing in the triumph of mercy—he feels that he cannot report what he has seen. He says in effect, "Woe is me; I am a man of my own time. The very evils that I saw in my nation are also in myself. I belong to a people of unclean lips. I spoke of the love of pleasure; I have something of the kind in my own heart; the corruptions of my age are my own. I am a man of unclean lips."

HE HAS NO MESSAGE;

I wonder if any of us have been having any of that feeling. We have been talking of consecration and full surrender and submission to Christ; but do you not think, with the great work before us, what a shallow thing it has been with us? I have been told that 350 missionaries, and I know not how many ministers of the Gospel and Christian workers, have come to Keswick. Let me ask you—Are you making known the sinfulness of sin as in God's sight to the men among whom you move and labour? Are your congregations being bowed down under a terrible unveiling of transgression? Are you appealing to men to recognize the nothingness of evil, and making them see that in the universe of God it must dash itself against the bosses of Jehovah's buckler? Are you leading them to see the glory of God from the face of Jesus Christ, so that it is coming as a fresh message from the throne? What is our surrender worth if we cannot carry the testimony of God to men, unveiling sin, and telling of his love?

All that Isaiah could do was to confess his failure—"Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

God did not say to him, "O Isaiah, you are taking an exaggerated view." I know that a good many put off the appeals of Christian teachers by saying, "This is not the truth." God did not say that to Isaiah. The prophet's confession of utter undoneness was received, and out from the Throne there came

A SERAPH WITH A LIVE COAL.

By the power of God the sacrifice of Christ was applied to the soul. Oh that we could get down to the depths of utter nothingness; and, recognizing that the Kingdom of God is shrinking, and the kingdom of the world is increasing, we could say: "Woe is me, I am undone—it is all my shame! I have been looking at things from the standpoint of clever, intellectual men, and toning down my preaching. And here I am, a maimed, incapable witness to the great world which lieth in the wicked one!"

You remember how it was when God met us first in our utter helplessness, and brought us into the Kingdom. So He will meet us now, in the very depth of self-abasement, and He will touch our lips with the salvation of Jesus Christ. This we will take home to our hearts as an all-sufficient portion, and with the salvation of Christ there will come into our consecrated souls the fire of the Holy Ghost in power. It does not matter how weak a man may be, if the Holy Ghost is in a man who has been emptied for his indwelling in fulness, that man can shake a nation. It is not a thing to be spoken, but a thing to be done.

We have heard the seraphs' cry, and now we rise higher to the seraphs' God. What does He say when He has a man consciously nothing, and filled with the Holy Ghost? He says: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" He says: "Who will stand forth in this modern day, my confessed and attested messenger, to make real to men the things that are so unreal to the carnal mind?" There are moments when the clouds part, and we seem to have a glimpse of New Testament scenes in Old Testament story. So it is here. Not only did Isaiah see God, but he saw the Servant of God, of whom it was predicted that He should not fail nor be discouraged till He should set judgment in the earth. If you and I are yielded up to God, He will, in like manner, appear to us, and give us the very testimony we need for our day, so that men shall see God; and not only that, but the grace of God and the Spirit of God, and the old realities that dominated the life of this nation in past days will dominate it again. God will do it through and that to the glory of his everlasting name.

What indication had the prophet that this fulness of blessing was coming to him? He had a work to do that I pray we may not have. Yet, having gone so far in unbelief, we may have to go further. "Now," said God, "you are going to a people who, hearing will not hear, nor will understand with their heart, and return, and be healed." In fact, the people would be taken away into captivity, and not until a remnant should return, would the light begin to break! What a sad prospect! But this man was abased before God, and so he was enabled to endure the dark outlook, carrying, meantime, to the hearts and consciences of men, those things of which his prophecies have become the message to all the centuries since.

No one can tell what God is going to do. Issues are in the hand of God. But I long and pray that there may come a mighty revival, partly in consequence of this Convention. Whatever the issues, you and I, emptied of self and yielded up to God, will stand among men, whether they hear or whether they forbear, with the light and fire of God, which they cannot gainsay nor resist.

"Make Jesus King."

REV. E. W. MOORE.

Thy kingdom come (Matt. vi. 10).

This is a prayer so short that a child can offer it, so profound that angelic intelligences cannot fully fathom it. It looks back on the past and reminds us that the kingdom has been given and is not yet fully come; it looks forward to the future, and tells us of dominion when there shall be one Lord and his Name one. Moreover, it embraces the present, for it asks a question in every heart—Is Christ truly King? There is a parallel between the establishment of Christ's Kingdom on earth and its establishment in the individual soul. "Thy kingdom come." Where, Lord? In China, in Africa, and in the islands of the sea? Where, Lord? Neither here nor there, for "the kingdom of God is within you!"

Let us inquire (1) Whence does that Kingdom come? "I am from above; ye are from beneath," said the King. "Ye are of this world; I am not of this world." Christ's Kingdom descends; all true government does—it is a reflection of the Divine. A touching story is told of the good Frederick William of Prussia years ago. He went one day into a national school, and, being fond of children, he began asking questions. He said to a little maiden, holding up some object, "What kingdom does this belong to?" "The vegetable kingdom, your Majesty." "What kingdom does this belong to?" "The mineral kingdom, your Majesty." Then, pointing to himself, he asked, "And what kingdom do I belong to?" The maiden paused a minute, and then, instead of giving the answer that was expected, said: "The Kingdom of God, your Majesty." The King was so touched that he put his hands on the child's head, and said: "May it prove to be so indeed!"

IF THE KINGDOM IS TO COME TO US,

it must come down. Education, culture, civilization, and the advance of science, can do much, but none of them, nor all of them, can bring the Kingdom of God, or regenerate a soul. The Kingdom of God is not of this world; we are reborn into it—born from above.

Again (2) What are the characteristics of the Kingdom? What are the features that distinguish the Kingdom of God? How can we describe them in few words? It is (a) Spiritual, not formal. Outward ordinances are germane to it, but not essential. "The Kingdom of God is not meat or drink"; and you may find it in the stately cathedral and in the Keswick tent, in the great assembly and where two or three are gathered together in Christ's name. It is (b) Universal, not partial. There was some time ago a scheme broached which I felt was a grievous discredit to Christendom; it was called a Parliament of Religions, a great convocation in which, side by side with some representatives of Christ's Kingdom, were found representatives of Buddha, Confucius, and other heathen teachers. It was an old Roman proposition that the gods of the territory annexed should have a niche in the Pantheon; and in due course it was mooted to provide a niche for Christ. But when it was found that Christ must be all or nothing, then the cry rose,

"THE CHRISTIANS TO THE LIONS."

Christ will not share his kingdom with any rival. When Darius, the rival of Alexander the Great, proposed that they should share the world between them, the answer of Alexander was that there was only room for one sun in the heavens. That was a boast in the mouth of Alexander, but it is the lawful claim of Jesus Christ.

Have you recognised Christ's claim to be universal Lord, or have you somewhere a little enclosure for yourself, or has Satan got it? I remember hearing a long time ago of a proposal made in connection with the letting of a big hall for religious meetings. It was that a certain corner should be reserved for the use of the former owners or occupiers, and that there, at specified times, they might carry on their traffic in strong drink. It was said that if such a condition was allowed, the terms of hire would be "very advantageous." "No," said the Christian men concerned in the negotiations; "that would give you a right of way through our place. If you have that corner, we cannot keep you out of the hall. No; our company must have all." Are we going to let the devil have right of way in our lives? Give him but a corner, and it will not be long before he has the run of the whole.

Christ's Kingdom is not only spiritual and universal, but it is (c) Transforming, and not tyrannical. It used to be said of the Roman armies in the olden days—they made a silence, and called it peace. It is just so in the Church of Rome to-day. Such a condition is not peace; it is death. The idea residing in that word "rule" is not so much to govern and control, as to make right and straight; and covenant implies not so much coercion as assimilation. The true idea of government is to harmonize the mind and will of the subject with the mind and will of the ruler. Why was our late beloved Queen's throne so secure? Not because of the strength of her army and navy, but because the ruler was enshrined in the hearts of her people.

HOW DOES CHRIST PROPOSE TO RULE?

By making us love what He commands, and choose what He permits; by writing his law in our hearts, and bringing our will into complete harmony with his—thus making us do what we like. When Christ's Kingdom is fully come, we shall do what we like because we shall do what He likes. "If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Then, Christ's Kingdom is (d) Peaceful, not perturbed. There is a link, not only between Christ's work and peace, but also between his covenant and peace. We are taught that "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." Unless at peace, you are not completely under his control. You think that to yield completely to Christ would be to part with all that makes life desirable. But that is the way into peace, the way to ensure perfect peace. Take his yoke upon you, and find rest to your souls.

John Tauler, of Strasburg, in the fourteenth century, a preacher of eminence, felt the need of further teaching in the ways of God, and after two years of prayer he was directed to a certain church porch where he would find someone who would instruct him. The churches were great places of meeting in those days, so going, Tauler looked for his instructor. He found no one but a poor beggar!

Concluding that there was some mistake, he thought, "That man can have nothing to say to me;" but recollecting that God sometimes sends messages in very strange ways, he was not prepared to lose a message because he did not like the channel by which it was conveyed. So, in the words of a common salutation, he said to him, "God give you a good day, my friend!" The beggar looked up and said: "I thank God I never have a bad day." Tauler thought he must have misunderstood the poor man, and continued: "God give you a happy life, my friend!" "I thank God," said the beggar, "I am never unhappy." "Never unhappy! what do you mean?" "Why, when it is fine I thank God, and when it rains I thank God; when I have plenty I thank God, and when I am hungry I thank God. And since whatsoever pleases God pleases me, why should I be unhappy?"

Pausing a minute, Tauler looked hard at the poor man, and said: "Supposing it were God's good will and pleasure to cast you hence into hell—how then?" The beggar replied—"If He were to do so, I should have two arms to embrace Him with; the arm of my faith, wherewith I lean on his holy humanity, and the arm of my love, wherewith I am united to his ineffable Deity. Thus, being one with Him, He would descend thither with me; and there would I infinitely rather be with Him than anywhere else without Him." Ah, the sublimity of the reply! The theologian stood amazed, and said to the beggar, "Who are you?"

"I AM A KING,"

replied the man. "A king," said Tauler, "where is your kingdom?" "In my own heart," said the beggar. Said Tauler, "How did you arrive at this state of mind?" The beggar answered, "By prayer and humility, and the union that I have with God." "But where did you find God, in the sense in which you have described Him?" "Where I left all the creatures," was the reply. What a picture of the Kingdom of God!

How is the Kingdom to come? What are the conditions of its advent? The first is revelation of the King. Christ may be born a King in you, and yet not be fully revealed. Joash was several years old before he was brought out to the people of Israel; and when Christ was born in Bethlehem all Jerusalem was troubled. Years ago, at one of our testimony meetings, a man got up and said he had received great blessing here. Asked what he could say about his experience, he replied: "I was a Christian before I came to Keswick. Christ was my King, but I am afraid He was a Constitutional Sovereign, and I was prime minister. Now He is Absolute Monarch, and that has made a difference in my life, and brought blessing." The kingdom had come in the revelation of the King, and the surrender of all his foes.

We are here to "make Jesus King." These words are the motto of the Student Volunteer Movement, and should be the motto of every Christian. Let us say, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye doors of the earthly tabernacle of my being, and the King of Glory shall come in."

Thoughts and Intents.

REV. F. B. MEYER.

For the Word of God is living and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart (Heb. iv. 12).

The word "discern" here means criticise. In our own case I do not suppose that we need to be condemned as to our outward life, but to be searched as to our thoughts and intentions. From time immemorial God has had trouble with the heart. Gen. vi. 5 contains God's judgment on the heart of man in its natural state. "The Lord saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." In the Book of Proverbs the wise man says, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Bunyan makes Ignorance say, "I am as good as anybody else; as to my thoughts, I take no notice of them." People who take no notice of their thoughts are ignorant of the true scheme of Christian living. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," because the thoughts lay down the line, and, just as the train follows the rails, so the life follows in the direction of the thoughts.

How many there are who are careful as to the tenour of their outward life, and yet are careless of their thoughts, and at night time put off from the shore in light boats, and allow their thoughts to embark upon enchanting but forbidden islands. We are sometimes inclined to ask why a notable professor of religion should be condemned to the loss of all things through one act of sin, but the Church of Christ and society have a right to judge a man by one act, because that act is the outcome of long and

CONTINUOUS UNHOLY THINKING.

What you think, you will become; you will most certainly do the thing your mind thinks, though to-day you cry with Hazael, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" The fruit always rots at its core, and through to the rind. Every great moralist has laid stress on that. Butler, the great theologian, said there were three phases of the moral life—Thought, Act, and Habit. Thackeray thus amplified it: "You sow a thought and you reap an act; you sow an act and you reap a habit; you sow a habit and you reap a character; you sow a character and you reap a destiny." The words in Genesis and Proverbs were confirmed by our Lord—"Out of the heart proceedeth evil thoughts, &c."

Further, Paul is great in dealing with the thoughts. In Eph. ii. 3, he deals with a trinity of evils—the world, the flesh, and the devil. One trinity in unity. In verse 3 the Apostle says: "We also all once lived in the lusts of our flesh, doing the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath." It is necessary to discriminate. In themselves desires cannot be wrong. They are the team which draw the chariot of life. If it were not for the desire for food, sleep, love, the existence of our race would soon cease. Desire itself cannot be wrong, for it existed in Adam in innocence, and in our Saviour.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH DESIRE is (1) when it is excessive in a right direction, and (2) when it is in a wrong direction. It is as much a sin to have an excessive desire towards a right object, as to have a desire towards a wrong object. Paul deals with the subject when writing to the Corinthians: "That no advantage may be gained over us by Satan, for we are not ignorant of his devices." Satan is ever throwing thoughts of the flesh into our minds. We must always draw the distinction here between thoughts that are temptations, and thoughts that we harbour. We cannot help the birds flying over our heads, but we can prevent them building their nests in our hair. We cannot hinder the boy who runs down the street and calls through the keyhole of our door a bad word, but we can prevent that word entering into our hearts and bringing forth sin. Thoughts come to us from sources innumerable, as the microbes with which the air is filled.

In Jas. i. 14, 15, we have one of the most interesting records of that it is possible to find in the pages of Scripture. How can we secure purity of heart? We need (1) quick discernment, and (2) the spirit of judgment which shall turn the battle at the gate (Isa. xxviii.). This is the double need of the soul—discernment and strength. In 2 Cor. iv. 4, we read: "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of the unbelieving, that the light of the Gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should not dawn upon them." Again, in Ephes. iv. 18, "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." The man of this world does not discern evil thoughts when they come, but the spiritual man judgeth all things as they come (1 Cor. ii. 15). We are made in duplicate. The spirit has the same senses as the soul; the soul, the same as the body. The more spiritual we are, the more our spiritual senses become exercised. We need strength to TURN THE BATTLE AT THE GATE,

"Forasmuch as Christ suffered in the flesh, arm ye yourselves also with the same thought" (1 Peter iv. 1). In the nineteenth verse of the same chapter we read, "Let them that suffer commit their souls in well-doing." Not only commit your body that it may be kept from evil, but also your souls, that they may be kept from evil thoughts. The same word "commit" was used by Christ on the cross. Why did the Apostle say "to a faithful Creator"? Why not to a faithful Redeemer or Saviour? Because He who made you put nothing into you He could not control. He is able to keep that which He has made. In Col. iii. 15, the Apostle says, "Let the peace of Christ rule (or, rather, arbitrate) in your hearts." When there is any doubt in your heart as to what should be done, let the peace of God settle it. "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep (act as sentinel in) your hearts and minds" (Phil. iv. 7). God's peace walks to and fro with white wings and a sword of flame. Lastly, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." As long as we live we shall need the blood of Jesus to cleanse us from conscious and unconscious evil thoughts.

A Life Lived in the Will of God.

REV. DR. BROUGHTON, OF ATLANTA.

Rev. Dr. Broughton, of Atlanta, preached a powerful sermon in the Eskin Street Tent on Sunday morning, July 28. He is a young man of thirty-five, though he looks older; an educated and cultured Southerner, a born orator, who can play on his congregation as Mendelssohn on the organ in the illustration given below.

He took for his text, "That ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God" (Col. iv. 12). He spoke in substance thus:—This prayer first gripped my heart and brought blessing in the early days of my ministry. I was listening to a very ordinary preacher on a mighty subject. He said, "God has a place in every human life." I leaned my head on the back of the seat before me, and was carried away in thought to the place of my birth, saying, "O God, is it true that you stood by that young life, asking that you might be its Guide from first to last?" I heard God answer, "Yes; it's true that on the 5th of December, 1866, in the backwoods of Carolina, I stood by that young life, holding chart and compass in my hand, desirous of being its Guide even unto death."

"O God," I said, "I have never been gripped by that thought until now." But in this tent to-day I witness that God has, from that day, been more to me than ever before.

The Apostle was in prison concluding his letter to Colosse, and conveying the salutation of Epaphras, who always laboured in prayer, that they might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. Let us briefly study these two words. "Perfect" here is not the perfection of maturity, but of state. An unripe apple is a perfect apple, but it is not perfected. Paul speaks of himself as perfect (Phil. iii. 15), but not as perfected (12). There is no time on earth when the soul of man has reached maturity. "Complete" is in the R.V. "fully assured." It is our privilege to know that we stand perfect in the will of God.

(1) We may know that we are in the will of God if we have accepted his salvation. It is easy to imagine that God wills the salvation of ourselves, our children, our Sunday school class, &c.; but we find by searching the Scriptures that He wills the salvation of the whole world. Let us saturate our preaching with the Gospel of salvation to all, even the vilest.

(2) We have seen that it is his will that all should be saved. It is the will of God that all the saved should be sanctified. What is it to be sanctified? I have known a preacher scare half his congregation with a sermon labelled "sanctification." I have been myself in that group, because I was not instructed in the Scriptures. The word has two meanings—to cleanse and to separate. It is the will of God that we should be clean, and that we should be separate from other gods. If it would be monstrous to think that a virgin bride should prefer to live with an unclean man, or with some other than her husband, how much more horrible to think that God would live in an unclean temple, or have fellowship with iniquity. It is the will of God that we should be wholly separate from uncleanness and from idols.

(3) It is the will of God that the cleansed and separated soul should be filled with the spirit of power. If a father gives his child the food he asks, how much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him!

Jesus bade his disciples tarry in Jerusalem, until endued with power from on high (Luke xxiv. 49). To be endued is more than an endowment. It is to be enveloped in the Spirit, possessed by the Spirit (see Acts i. 8). If I know anything of it is, first to be emptied, and then to be filled.

The Church of Jesus Christ is endeavouring to equip itself for the exigencies and conflicts of the present time. One of its chief foes, under the guise of a seeming friend, is rationalism—reasoning. If anything is to be done for the glory of God, the question obtrudes itself, Whence is the money to come from? When the multitude was to be fed, Jesus commanded to make the people sit down. Suppose Philip had said, "You show us where the food is coming from, and we'll make them sit down." We are trying to manage the Church of God in the energy of the flesh, and we are getting as much as the flesh will permit.

Faith undertakes for God a thing it can't see the end of. Faith is Peter seeing Jesus on the water, and getting over the gunwale of the boat and walking to Him. Reason is Peter looking on the waves and sinking beneath them. Faith is wrought by the Holy Ghost; it does not come by reasoning. I had a right hard struggle in coming to these conceptions.

I had gone to preach the Commencement Sermon at a college in Kentucky, near the great caves, and the professor took me to see the principal one. Each of us was given a candle, and we descended. The guide showed me a stalactite, and pointed out its beauty; then a stalagmite, and I said, "Yes, it is charming." But I wasn't charmed, and I said to my friend, "I've got to preach to-night. It's dark and cold. Let us get out of this." "No, sir," said the guide, "I can't go back. We must go through the whole." Presently we found ourselves in the great hall, and the guide pointed out a piano, of which stalactites and stalagmites were the keys, and asked me if it was not splendid. But in the dim candle-light, and shivering with cold, I was sadly disappointed. But which he lighted, and there is no light like that. I dropped my candle, for the magnesium light flashed out and filled every nook of the cave. Here I saw an angel's face, there a patriarch's, then a bouquet of flowers, all wrought by the wondrous art of nature. While I was standing gazing in astonishment, I heard the Professor playing upon the stone piano, "Home, Sweet Home." I could have stayed all night, enraptured by the scene. When we got back I could not fix my mind on my text; and after trying, and finding it impossible, I gave it up.

Then God said, "Let me have your candle. You have been trying to see beauty and glory in my Word with the dim candle-light of your own reason. I have the magnesium flash-light of the Holy Ghost." I had got my candle lighted in the university, but I threw up the candle of my intellect, and down came the search-light of the Holy Ghost; I preached under its shining, and the students were edified. The Church needs nothing so much as an equipment of the Holy Ghost. So long as men can explain us we have no more power than other people; but when we are a constant walking interrogation point, asking questions in men's hearts and consciences, they inquire, "Oh, whence comes his power?" and God makes Himself heard and felt and known.

(4). It is the will of God to deliver his Church from the dominion and power of sin. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation make also the way to escape that ye may be able to bear it."

We have protection in Jesus, as well as deliverance. Here is a man in prison. The gaoler says, "Be still, I have provided a way to escape." And when all is quiet, and night has fallen, he shows him a door, and out he goes. Again and again he is taken, but each time some way of escape is shown him, now an open window, then a tunnel made under the city—and he is free. When the devil comes, rest your case with Jesus Christ. He has made a way of escape from all temptation;

HIS FINGER POINTS THE WAY OUT.

I knew a drunkard who was redeemed all over, and became a witness of Christ, and a winner of souls. One night he met an old companion who invited him for a walk, and in a dark street produced a flask and asked him to drink—it was Kentucky rye, seven years old—and he put it to his nose, with the stopper out. The Christian man was just turning it up to drink, when his heart whispered to him, "O Jesus," and in a moment he dropped the flask, which was smashed on the stones. "I didn't go to smash it," said he, "but Jesus did it."

(5) It is the will of God to guide us always and in everything; "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct thy paths" (Prov. iii. 6). On the Continent I looked upon a picture which seemed almost inspired. There was a wheel, within which a man stood in deep perplexity. Thousands of small lines crossed each other in an interminable maze. As I kept looking, I saw the picture changing. An angel looked over the rim of the wheel, having in his hand a light; the lines had all converged into one straight and narrow path; and the perplexity had passed from the face of the man in the wheel. We get up in the morning not knowing how to go, and as we wait, upon us, for He says to us: "I will make your path plain while you walk in my ways."

GOD LETS HIS LIGHT SHINE

When I was at Bonn, I looked upon the monument of Mendelssohn. When he was young, and before he had made his reputation, he entered a church, and was struck by its beautiful organ. The instrumentalist came in, and took his seat and began to play. After a while, Mendelssohn went up and asked if he would allow him to play a little. The organist, whose performance was that of a novice, replied, "No hand but mine can touch this organ." He played one of Mendelssohn's own pieces, and again the musician asked to be allowed to play a little, but met the same refusal. He walked round the church again, with increasing nervousness and anxiety, and once more asked permission to play just a little. Impatiently, the young organist said, "Yes, as you won't let me alone, you may." He walked away, and Mendelssohn touched a chord, and then played one of his own compositions, until the young performer, entranced with the exquisite harmonies, rushed up and looked into his face, saying, "Will you tell me, sir, who you are?" "I am Mendelssohn." "And I forbade you to sit and play!" said the confused and humbled man.

Oh! think of life, its boundless possibilities and endless resources, while we make our discords and waste our privileged opportunities, and Jesus Christ stands right by our side, saying, "Let Me play on the keyboard of your life; let Me sit on the stool of your daily work; let Me play in heavenly melody the music of your soul; let Me play one continual harmony of joyful obedience." Shall we say, "No; I must play on this instrument myself. No hand but mine must touch the keys of this organ"?

Oh, brothers and sisters, hear the words of a stranger who is yet one with you in Christ; let none leave this tent until you say, "Yes, Lord, I resign all into thy hands; I will yield myself to thy good pleasure, that I may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God."

THE LADIES' MEETINGS.

The ladies' meetings were again held in the Pavilion, and the numbers who came showed the need of the move from the smaller hall, in which Mrs. Harford Battersby had begun them.

They shared with the other meetings in having absences of valued friends. Mrs. Bannister was not able to come, and Mrs. Hatt Noble could not come after the first two days, on account of illness. Mrs. Penn-Lewis and Miss Nugent had, therefore, the greater responsibility. Miss Bessie Porter and Mrs. Constantine spoke on two days. Many requests were handed in and presented daily. There were many present whom it would have been a joy to hear, but the drawback of a meeting in so large a place is that prayer cannot be general.

The note struck by Rev. C. Inwood on his opening addresses in the tent (Sunday and Monday only) was that of a searching reminder of what sin is in God's sight. This line found an echo also in the ladies' meetings. It seemed specially given to Mrs. Penn-Lewis to speak of making sure of the foundations, and to warn against the false cry of "Peace, when there is no peace," and of the wall built with untempered mortar. She spoke on the house founded on a rock, and the one built on the sand which could stand no storm, and earnestly urged every hearer to see that the foundations were dug deep. The next day she carried on the same thought as regards those among whom we worked, asking, Were the foundations being laid deep in others, so that no storm should shatter them? This was felt to be a very solemn message, and all bowed in earnest seeking before God for the power not only to lay the one foundation of the atoning work of Jesus, but so to build thereon in others, that they might stand in days of tempest.

Mrs. Penn-Lewis also spoke urgently on the possible storms which may be near, testing us all here as the Christians in China had been tested, and closed by pressing on us the one Power which could uphold, as shown in the three pledges of indwelling of Father, Son, and Spirit, pledged by the Lord Jesus Christ in John xiv. 16, 21, and 23.

Mrs. Hatt Noble spoke the first day from 1 Peter ii. 9, the very verse which Rev. Hubert Brooke had chosen as the basis of his stirring Bible readings, dwelling chiefly on the last portion, "Called out of darkness into his marvellous light." Miss Bessie Porter urged the righteousness of life, which should follow the righteousness that covers us before God; and Mrs. Constantine spoke on the blessing God always gives in breaking, and how the broken and contrite spirit lies at the foundation of the deepest and most abiding blessing.

Miss Nugent began with Jeremiah xxxi. 12, showing that the goodness of the Lord was the goal to which we all "flowed together," and that whatever we met would be his goodness, whether it were convicting goodness or enriching goodness. Another day she spoke on Luke xiii. 10-18, and how the earth-bent woman needed the voice and the touch of Jesus to loose her and cause her to walk upright, just as much as the leper needed his voice and touch for cleansing; but that the healing now was as sure, and the eye of Jesus sought out now, as on that day in the synagogue, the one who needed Him most. Who would this day respond to his call, whatever it cost, as she came forward that day in the synagogue!

The closing was the three-fold call of, "Come unto Me," "Come with Me," "Come after Me." Whether for salvation, for companionship, for service and sacrifice, the invitation is "Come!" The blessed Lord wants to have us by Him; He is not content with any distance between his redeemed child and Himself. Are we going to be?

And when the record of this year's Convention is known fully it will, we think, be surely found that many gave up the last bit of distance, and left all to follow Him closely, not only abandoning outward sin, but all hindering things of conformity to the world—doubtful books, friendships which make friendship with Him impossible. All such things left that we might be wholly at his disposal.

Obituary.

REV. DR. GRITTON.

We regret to announce that Rev. Dr. Gritton passed away to his eternal rest on Thursday last, at his residence, 131, Richmond Road, Hackney, after a painful ilness, borne with true Christian fortitude, in the seventy-second year of his age. Although the disease from which Dr. Gritton suffered had been in existence for two years, and he at times, in consequence, suffered great pain, it was only within a month of his death that he was laid aside from that active work for the Master which was such a strong characteristic of his life. Dr. Gritton was held in great esteem for his high standard of duty and conduct, and for his integrity and kindly disposition, and he was much beloved by those with whom he was brought into contact. We hope in an early issue to give a sketch of Dr. Gritton's career, with portrait.

MRS. ATHRO A. KNIGHT.

There passed away on July 23, Mrs. Athro A. Knight, foundress and principal of the well-known educational establishment, Knightsville College, Brockley, and Herne Bay, and a devoted Christian lady, who will be deeply missed in many branches of religious work. Her influence over the many scholars who came under her direction was always exercised in the building up of Christian character, and they still regarded her in the after years of life as a true personal friend and adviser. Apart from the duties of her position, Mrs. Knight found also many opportunities for furthering philanthropic causes, and she founded a "Doing-good fund" amongst the pupils, which, in addition to minor charities, supports a cot in the All Saints' Convalescent Home for Children, and has for years done good work for the poor people of Deptford.

MAJOR-GENERAL HAIG.

Long associated with many branches of religious and philanthropic work in connection with the Church of England, Major-General Haig, who passed away on July 27, was a man of broad sympathies and a fervent evangelistic spirit. In some interesting particulars of his long and useful career, a correspondent of The Record says:—

"As a young Engineer officer, in India, Felix Haig was closely associated with the late Sir Arthur Cotton in the great works of irrigation on the Godavery. The spiritual misery of the people afflicted him no less than their temporal necessities, and when, in 1860, Sir Arthur Cotton sent home an appeal for missionaries to the Koi Hill tribes Captain Haig gathered some godly colleagues together in the district and prayed that God would open up the way.

"The almost immediate result was the conversion of a Hindu, Vencalarama Razu, to whom Haig had given a Bible, and who afterwards sacrificed his Government employment and became a C.M.S. catechist, and subsequently an ordained missionary. For some years a member of the committee of the Church Missionary Society, General Haig was intensely interested in the Indian work, and in possible extensions to the Mohammedan regions of Arabia and the Soudan. In 1881 he volunteered to take temporary charge of the Godavery Mission, which he had been instrumental in founding, and he remained there a year and a half. In 1885 the C.M.S. adopted his plans for the commencement of work at Aden—plans which attracted Ion Keith Falconer to go forth as a pioneer missionary to Arabia.

"In 1886 also he formulated the scheme for employment of associated evangelists for village itineration in India which has since been worked out with so much blessing, and in the winter of that year it was at his suggestion that missioners were sent to visit the native Christians of India, and do amongst them the work attempted by parochial missions at home. But perhaps the most important suggestion which he made while on the C.M.S. Committee was that the London friends of the Society should meet together for united prayer on Thursday afternoons. The suggestion was first adopted on March 12, 1885, and ever since the Thursday Prayer Meeting has been held, with untold blessing to the Society and its work.

"The latter years of General Haig's life were, however, almost exclusively given to the cause of evangelization in Ireland—the land of his birth. Joining the Committee of the Society for Irish Church Missions in 1879, he became its chairman in 1892. In 1893 he drew up the scheme for extension, along the lines of which the Missions work has since proceeded. His aim was to reach every part of the Roman Catholic population of Ireland, and he was strongly impressed with the fact that the disposition of the Irish population is, like that of India, rural, and that rural itineration must be increasingly adopted. It was a matter for the greatest regret to his colleagues when, in the spring of last year, General Haig was compelled by ill-health to give up his active participation in the work of the I.C.M. His prayerful interest in it continued through the subsequent months of great bodily weakness, and his death will be deeply mourned by all the Society's workers."

REV. ANGUS GALBRAITH.

In Rev. Angus Galbraith, late of Brighouse, Yorkshire, there passed away, on July 19, at the age of seventy-four, a minister of a type and class always too rare in the Church. Mr. Galbraith's home was in Argyllshire. He attended the Church of Scotland in boyhood, and became a teacher in a school connected with the State Church. At the Disruption he joined the Free Church, and so lost his post as teacher. He obtained another in connection with the new religious body, but lost it also, as he saw fit to join himself to the Haldaneites, as the early Congregationalists were then called. He afterwards entered Glasgow Theological Academy, and studied under Dr. Wardlaw. His first charge was at Stuartfield, in Aberdeenshire, where he laboured for ten years, when he removed to Whitehaven, in which town twelve years was spent. His last pastorate, of twenty-five years, was spent in Brighouse, Yorks. After a ministry of forty-eight years, he retired from official work only last November. Mr. Galbraith will be remembered as a truly evangelical thinker and preacher, singularly sound and clear in his teaching, and forcible and fervent and winning in his appeals from the pulpit. He was for many years a governor of Yorkshire College, Bradford, where he was a welcome visitor. Last year he was Chairman of the Congregational Union of Yorkshire. Mr. Galbraith's presence and influence will be much missed by many who have derived pleasure and blessing from contact with him either as pastor, or minister, or friend.

Temperance Endowment.

Headed by the Hon. Mrs. Arthur Bertrand Russell, a movement is on foot to raise funds for the endowment of a Chair of Temperance in the University of London, as an offset against the Brewing Professorship in the University of Birmingham. Funds are already being raised, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America has been asked to agitate for the endowment of a similar professorship at Yale or Harvard.

The Hon. Mrs. Russell, who is the sister-in-law of Earl Russell, is an American herself, and is taking up the matter energetically. A prominent temperance advocate declared recently that temperance should be taught as a scientific proposition. "Moral suasion is of little avail," she said. Temperance must be taught as a part of hygiene. If brewing is to be taught, temperance must be also."

London City Mission.—With reference to the report of the London City Mission meeting at Mildmay Conference, which appeared in our issue of July 18, Mr. J. Crozier wishes to make it clear that he has neither acted as manager of the Beckton Gas Works, nor expressed any desire to fill that position. In his address, Mr. Crozier pointed out that gambling had been effectually dealt with at the works, and went on to refer to the stoppage of the sale of beer. Mr. Crozier adds, "No works could be better managed for the moral well-being of the men."

The Apple-Graft: A Flower Fable.

A BRANCH had been grafted upon the little crab-apple tree, and it flourished finely. In due course it broke into blossom, but then it grew mightily proud of itself, and stretched towards the path that it might catch the eyes of those who came to walk in the garden.

"Take care," warned the apple tree, who had lived long, and seen much. "Take care; the east wind often comes round about this time, and many a branch does it tear off and cast aside."

"Ho! Do you think the gardener would have put me here if he couldn't keep the place safe for me just when I am at my loveliest?" questioned the graft, scornfully.

"He never meant you to stretch yourself out that way as if you didn't draw life from me," retorted the apple-tree, sharply, for really this insolence, along with the strain upon it, would have tried a sweeter thing than a crab-apple tree. "You are straining all my roots. I know you'll get broken off if you don't take care."

"I hope I shall get broken off," retorted the graft, "I am perfectly sick of you. I am sure as soon as the gardener notices my lovely blossoms he will take me off again, and make me a beautiful tree all by myself;" and with this the graft stretched itself yet more haughtily away from the trunk.

"Oh, be careful," pleaded the tree. "I know you are no use without my roots. That is why the gardener put you here."

The graft suspected truth in this, but it only grew angry at being told a truth which it hated, and so it stretched itself yet the more obstinately.

Then came the east wind. Snap! And the beautiful blossoms were lying in the dust. The children carried off the branch for a plaything, and as it was dying in their hands, the foolish graft heard them say to each other, "Isn't it such a pity that it broke off? If it had lived until the autumn there would have been dozens of apples on it from all this blossom."

Jessie Annie Anderson.

Gentle Courtesy.

"A FEW months ago," says one who witnessed the incident, "I was passing through a pretty, shady street, where some boys were playing at ball. Among their number was a little fellow, seemingly about twelve years old—a pale, sickly-looking child, supported on two crutches, and who evidently found much difficulty in walking, even with such assistance.

"The lame boy wished to join the game, for he did not seem to see how much his infirmity would be in his way, nor how much it would hinder the progress of such an active sport.

"'Why, Jimmy,' said one, 'you cannot run, you know.'

"'Oh, hush!' said another, the tallest in the party, 'Never mind, I will run for him;' and he took his place by Jimmy's side, preparing to act. 'If you were lame like him,' he said to the other boys, 'you would not want to be told of it all the time.'

"As I passed on, I thought to myself: 'There is a true gentleman.'"

"Better Take a Sheep Too."

A FARMER, about the time that temperance reform was beginning to exert a healthful influence, said to a man whom he had just taken into employment:

"Jonathan, I did not think to mention to you when I hired you that I shall try to have my work done this year without rum. How much must I give you to do without?"

"Oh," said Jonathan, "I don't care much about it; you may give me what you please."

"Well," said the farmer, "I will give you a sheep if you do without rum."

"Agreed."

"Father, will you give me a sheep too if I do without rum?" then asked the elder son.

"Yes, you shall have a sheep if you do without."

The younger son then said "Father, will you give me a sheep if I will do without?"

"Yes, my boy, you shall have a sheep also.

Presently the younger son speaks again: "Father, hadn't you better take a sheep too?"

The farmer shook his head; he hardly thought that he could give up the stimulant, but the appeal came from a source not easily to be disregarded; and the result was rum was thenceforth banished from the premises, to the great joy and ultimate happiness of all concerned.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 290).

Word Pictures.

1. Two men are approaching a city gate towards evening. As they enter they are greeted by one of the inhabitants, and induced to go into his house. An angry crowd gathers round the door. A night of anxiety follows; but early in the morning three women and one man are seen hurrying from the city. Ere long one of the women has disappeared, and only three fleeting figures can be seen. (a) Name the two men and their host. (b) Why did the crowd gather, and what took place during the night? (c) Who were the three women, and what happened to one of them?

2. Coming down a mountain side may be seen a man bearing two tablets of stone. As he nears the foot he hears sounds of revelry and shouting. A short time after the tablets of stone lie shattered in pieces on the ground, and the sounds of mirth have ceased. (a) Who was the man? (b) What were the tablets? (c) How came they to be broken?

3. Three women are talking and weeping together. The eldest of the three begs that the two younger ones shall go their way, and leave her to face the future alone. One consents, but the other, with passionate entreaty, refuses to part from her, and together they continue their journey. (a) Who were the women, and why were they weeping? (b) Give the words of entreaty used by the woman who remained.

4. Two altars stand ready for sacrifice, and a great company is gathered together to watch the proceedings. Round about one altar men shout and gesticulate throughout the day. The evening draws on, and from the second altar is heard the voice of prayer. It ceases; the multitude waits with breathless awe, for on the answer to that prayer a great decision hangs. Suddenly the altar is ablaze with light, and the onlookers fall on their knees and worship. (a) By whom were the altars erected? (b) Who prayed in the evening, and for what? (c) What decision hung on the answer to that prayer?

5. A fire is burning in a hall, and several men are gathered round it. At the other end of the hall a trial is proceeding. Three times one of the men near the fire is accosted by a passer-by, and each time he answers more angrily. The crowing of a cock is heard. The prisoner turns and his glance falls on the little group. A few minutes later a man is seen outside the hall weeping bitterly. (a) Whose trial was proceeding? (b) What did each passer-by say, and what answer did he receive? (c) Who was the man who wept, and why did he do so?

"Emmanuel, God with us."

Jesus, thy presence in our midst we own,
Rejoiced to know we do not walk alone;
Thy Spirit in our hearts the livelong day,
Can never fail—our comfort and our stay.

Thy voice we hear in tender tones of love,
It cheers us onward to our Home above,
It bids us on thy gentle bosom rest,
And claim Thee as an ever welcome guest.

Thy smile we see as in thy face we look,
Our Shepherd Thou, to guard with staff and crook:
The lambs Thou dost from threatening dangers keep,
And by still waters dost Thou lead thy sheep.

'Tis sweet, indeed, by faith to walk with Thee,
And daily in thy truth fresh treasures see;
True liberty of soul is only ours,
When following Thee with consecrated powers.

Thy life Thou gav'st our sinful souls to save,
Thine arm supports us on life's storm-tossed wave,
With Thee we find a fellowship divine,
And all our earthly aims for Thee resign.

Dear Lord, accept our song of living praise,
As still thy light is guiding all our ways;
We praise Thee that thy mercies never cease,
Rejoicing ever in thy love and peace.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, August 11.

Enemies and Arms (Eph. vi. 10-18).

WE have often tried to be strong in our own resolutions, and have failed miserably. Let us learn how to be strong in the Lord Jesus, who, as Man, proved Himself superior to all the power of Satan. On the Mountain of Temptation, repeatedly throughout his mortal life, and notably in the hour of the power of darkness, Satan measured himself against the second Man, but could find no response in that glorious Christ-nature; and remember that herein we have not example only, but power, because that very nature, which is Jesus Christ Himself, is given to each of us. When, therefore, Satan tempts, meet him, not with your own resolutions, but with the indwelling Jesus; let Jesus do it all; leave Him as your great heart-champion to subdue Satan under your feet; meet Satan in the power of the risen Saviour.

In the first stages of Christian life it is all we can do to stand; but as our experience of our Lord's resources grows, it may be possible to make attacks on the devil's kingdom. The wrestling here has to do, not so much with our private conflicts, but with the aggressiveness of Christian work, when we go up against some souls' traffic, city or country, in which Satan has specially entrenched Himself. In missions, crusades against impurity and drink, in the opening of a campaign against all such iniquities as the opium traffic, slavery, the sale of drink to native races, we are attacking strongholds of evil, which resist us to the uttermost. It may be taken for granted that behind every public-house, every haunt of crime and evil, every strongly-entrenched idolatry, each of those horrible heathen temples, there is some wicked spirit which holds it against the Gospel.

It is for this reason that the apostle says our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers; against wicked spirits, who are the rulers of the darkness of this world (see R.V.). And this is the reason, also, why prayer is so absolutely important, because it brings good spiritual forces to meet spiritual wickedness. In prayer we put ourselves in the scale against evil; nay, we, so to speak, bring Christ into the field, and enlist his living might—thus, as a godly soul pleads in some hidden closet, had we eyes to see, we should behold Satan fall as lightning from heaven.

But those who enter on this campaign must be specially careful as to their own spiritual quality and temper. Our own characters must be beyond reproach. There are certain characteristics which must be manifested in us, and the apostle, to make his meaning more graphic and impressive, compares these to pieces of armour. We must be thoroughly saved not only from the penalty, but from the power of sin—the helmet of salvation. We must be absolutely right with God and man—the breastplate of righteousness. We must be sincere and truthful—the girdle of truth. We must be filled with the knowledge of God's Word—our sword. We must be peaceful and peace-loving—our shoes.

If we are to be soldiers in Christ's army, we must have unimpeachable characters. As Paul said, we must exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man, for when our heart is pure and our life is clean God can work with us and through us to the undoing of the foe. Above all, we must pray and trust—this is the shield of faith. Come into the armoury of the House Beautiful, and get equipped before entering the conflict with Apollyon. F. B. M.

International S.S. Lesson.

August 18, 1901.

Abraham's Intercession (Gen. xviii. 16-33).

Golden Text—James v. 16.

Introductory.

BETWEEN our last lesson and this, several thrilling incidents have occurred in Abram's life, which must be pictured and explained. 1st. The great mistake made about Hagar following the customs of the country, and not waiting for God's own time; how the evil was overruled and used by God (Gal. iv. 22-26). 2nd. The change in the names. Abram, meaning "exalted father" to Abraham, "father of a multitude." Sarai, "contentious" to Sarah, "princess." 3rd. Renewal of the covenant (chap. xvii.) with the sign of circumcision, a ceremony signifying separation and purity; but ending as all the types did when Christ came. (See 1 Cor. vii. 18, 19; Phil. iii. 3.) 4th. The visit of the three angels. As Abraham accompanies them on their way he becomes conscious that one is "The Angel of the Covenant," Jesus Christ Himself (Mal. iii. 1).

The Cities of the Plain (v. 16)

Five small cities, situated, most likely, at the south end of the Dead Sea. Similar names exist in that part, also a great salt mountain, and many lime pits. The Dead Sea is supposed to have overflowed their site (Gen. xiv. 3), the south end being only thirteen feet deep, while the northern part is 1,300 feet. The Arabs still call it "The Sea of Lot." Nothing can live in its waters.

Abraham, God's Friend (v. 16-19).

Therefore, God confides in him, tells him his secret purposes. Refer to John xv. 14, 15. Who are Christ's friends? "I know Him." God knows us; can He praise us as He did Abraham?

God's Wisdom and Love in Judgment (xix. 29).

The devil was trying to get full possession of God's world, and had succeeded in making these people most awfully wicked. It was an unmixed blessing to the world, the only way to preserve the human race, that these sinners should be wiped out. A necessary act of judgment which saved much future suffering and dishonour to God. A surgeon has to use the knife, just to save one life, and we do not call him cruel. These Sodomites are held up as a warning. Read Eze. xviii. 23, 24; Jude 7. See what Jesus said about it (Matt. xi. 23, 24). And He will say the same to us if we do not value our privileges. Let us learn to hate sin and flee from it.

Abraham's Prayer (v. 23-33).

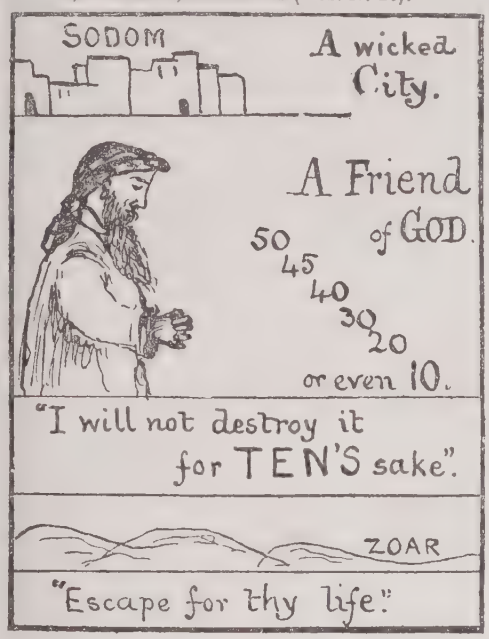
The first recorded prayer in the Bible. Requisites for successful prayer are—faith, nearness to God, humility, whole-heartedness (James v. 16), reverence for God, confidence, or boldness (Heb. iv. 16).



Intercession.

Abraham persistently pleaded for others, for the wicked (Luke xviii. 1). Six times the prayer was renewed, and each petition was granted, and more given than was asked, for Lot was saved, and his wicked daughters too! We have a great Intercessor, Jesus Christ (1 John ii. 1), who can "save to the uttermost," each one (Heb. vii. 25). Abraham's intercession was limited; he stopped at "five." We, too, must pray for others (1 Thess. v. 25; 1 Tim. ii. 1).

(The story may be continued to the doom of the cities, and the salvation of Lot.)

Seven Practical Lessons.

1. God's wrath against sin.
2. His wondrous patience with the sinner.
3. The punishment of all sin.
4. The value of truly righteous men.
5. The need of an intercessor.
6. The efficacy of prayer.
7. Encouragement to persevere in our petitions.

Paris City Mission.—The twenty-first annual report of the Paris City Mission is an interesting resumé of the history and work of this useful society. A paragraph from a typical report by one of the missioners reads:—"Every month brings us some new recruits. Seven years ago, when I commenced this work, I knew no one in the locality; now I have 300 families residing in seven different parishes who are our faithful adherents; nearly all were originally so-called freethinkers or Roman Catholics. To God be all the glory!" Mr. W. J. Lockie, 21, Ballater Road, Brixton, S.W., the general secretary, reminds us that the work began of course not in 1893, as by error we recently stated, but in 1833, when it was initiated by Mr. David Nasmyth.

Welsh Notes.

SPEAKING at a meeting in Barry in favour of Church extension, the Bishop of Llandaff paid a high tribute to the work done by Nonconformists in Wales. His lordship also declared that the zeal shown by Nonconformists had stimulated Churchmen to greater activity.

The quarterly meetings of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Calvinistic Methodist Association were held last week at Carmarthen. Rev. W. James, Aberdare, filled the office of moderator. The moderator-elect is Rev. J. E. Davies, M.A., of Jewen Chapel, London. The report on the state of Calvinistic Methodism in Carmarthenshire, given by Rev. T. Thomas, D.D., of Llandovery, was a satisfactory one.

The chief feature of the Association was the ordination of thirteen candidates to the work of the ministry. The charge was delivered by Rev. W. J. Williams, Herwaun, and the address on "Church Polity," by Rev. J. Evans, Abercarne. Two other important meetings were those set apart for the discussion of temperance and missionary work. At the former meeting a resolution was passed deploring the absence of temperance reform from the programme of the Government during the past session. On Thursday there were several preaching services throughout the day.

One of the best known of Welsh Congregational ministers, Rev. J. B. Jones, of Brecon, has just retired from the pastorate of Plough Church in that town. Mr. Jones is an ex-president of the Welsh Congregational Union. The pastorate of Plough Church is one of the most important in South Wales, by reason of the fact that it is frequented by the students of the Brecon Theological College. It should be also added that Mr. Jones celebrates this year his ministerial jubilee.

A Church of England Convent.

SIR,—I feel I must ask you if you can kindly make room for the following item of news:—"On July 17 the Colney Park Convent was opened by the Bishop of St. Albans." This institution was built at a cost of £40,000, is situated about three miles from St. Albans, and is in the hands of some West End Sisterhood, who insist upon "strict secrecy as to the objects of the undertaking." They are careful though to inform the public that "a person who once decides to enter upon the obscurity of convent life can never go forth from it." These are truly perilous times when a Bishop of the Church of England can unblushingly lay the foundation-stone and open a convent which, although Church of England in name, is precisely the same as a Roman Catholic convent. I regret that the Evangelical clergy are doing so little to stem the tide of Ritualism.

—Yours faithfully, J. H. Kelleway.

Fairleigh, St. Albans, Herts, July 31, 1901.

Among the Hoppers.

FOR the nineteenth time, Mr. John Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, and myself, are preparing to visit the hop-yards of Hereford and Worcester. The reports promise good crops on the 11,000 acres under cultivation in the two counties, and this will mean large numbers of pickers. The work was commenced by the late Mr. T. S. Heley, who met all the expenses; with the help of friends, we are now carrying on this branch of his work. Last year we were able to visit 127 different hop-yards, distributing good Gospel reading, and singing, and preaching the Word. As the yards are far apart, this involved walking 300 miles; but the blessing of God was ample reward for the hot toil. Tracts, &c., may be addressed, care of Mrs. Clissett, Stanley Hill, Ledbury, Herefordshire. William Luff.

Home of Hope, Gloucester.—Under one cover the reports for the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth years' work for the Destitute, Friendless, and Fallen are presented. The explanation of this is that the Home suffered a severe loss by the death of the head matron, while other difficulties ensued which disorganized, for the time being, the regular working of the household. In course of time, however, the normal state of things was resumed, and with a staff of earnest Christian workers fruit is seen in a true work of grace in the hearts of many of the inmates. Sixteen girls were admitted in the period under review, fourteen sent into situations, of whom twelve are doing well. Seventeen are now under the care of the Home. The regular income falls short of the amount needed to defray expenses, and the practical sympathy of those interested in such young girls is invited by the hon. superintendent.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE Pastoral Session of the Wesleyan Conference opened in the Brunswick Chapel, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Tuesday morning, July 30. Rev. Dr. Davison again presided. The lay representatives had disappeared, and their places were taken by some three hundred ministers, who now joined their brethren who had been members of the Representative Session. The solemn strains of the old hymn "And are we yet alive, and see each other's face," reminded the ministers present of the vacant places in their ranks. The fathers must have thought of the great leaders like William Arthur, whose "Tongue of Fire" still speaks, Benjamin Gregory, whose prolific pen has at last been laid aside, and Charles Garrett, whose mighty influence on behalf of temperance and social reform has not been spent, though his voice is now silent. Rev. H. Price Hughes and Rev. W. L. Watkinson were absent through illness. Dr. Davison chose as the subject of his opening address,

THE TEACHING OFFICE OF THE CHURCH.

With words of wisdom, the President urged upon his brethren the importance of looking to their sources of knowledge. He reminded them of the changes in thought that had taken place within their own lifetime. He declared that criticism had not impaired the substantial position of the Bible amongst them. It was as sacred as ever; but the appeal to it could not be made precisely in the same fashion as before. He did not think this was an age of denial, or of infidelity, but it was distinctly an age of inquiry. One of the most successful missioners during the Simultaneous Mission had said that he discovered a growing restlessness of faith among women. This was a most serious symptom, for it touched the very fountain-head of the life of the nation. He was no advocate of mere culture, or of pedantry, but he pleaded for hard thinking, careful study, and a thorough knowledge of the Bible. In these days they needed a higher training for their ministers. They could only hold their own by advancing. "I do not believe," said Dr. Davison, "that any man can teach who is not always learning." They needed

NO NEW GOSPEL.

Some called for the re-construction of theology. But they did not ask for it. Re-construction meant pulling down and building up again. What they wanted was the re-pointing of the old bricks and stones with new mortar. They needed the re-statement of the old truths. The old truth must be passed through the living organism of man's mind. They must, so to speak, not only have the pure gold, but they must make it current coin. The multitude did not want a theology made easy. They heard a good deal about the simplification of theology, but he would emphasize the thought of vitalization. When an organism was alive, every part was in its right place. As a Church, they had been kept so near to orthodoxy because they had been so earnestly engaged in Christian work; and if they were still to prove their orthodoxy it would be done by digging more deeply in the heart of Evangelical truth, getting more of it into themselves, and then vitalizing the truth they preached by making it more kindly, more human, and more practical. Dr. Davison pleaded for the union of devotion with learning. They had laid emphasis as a Church on religious experience, and they needed

A MORE THOUGHTFUL EXPERIENCE.

It was theirs, as ministers, to lead and guide others; and they might well ask, "Who was sufficient for these things?" With all reverence he said, God was sufficient. Paul said, "Sufficient as ministers of the new Covenant, not of the letter, but of the spirit." Everything they wanted was wrapped up there—sufficiency of insight, of spiritual aptitude, of practical and powerful utterance—the power to convince the conscience, to direct the mind, to sway the will, to draw and save souls—it was all there, and it was promised. "Faithful is He who calleth you, who also will do it." With such glowing words did the President incite his brethren to loftiest ideals of Christian teaching and service.

According to an arrangement incident upon the change in the order of the sessions of Conference, the President and Secretary for the Conference of 1902 were nominated on Tuesday. The choice fell upon of Headingley College, Chairman of the Leeds district, who is known widely as a theological writer, and combines with scholarly attainments deep sympathy with evangelistic and social enterprise. Rev. Samuel Chadwick has had no more ready helper in his mission work at Leeds than Professor Banks. Rev. Marshall Hartley was again nominated as Secretary, an office he will doubtless hold until, as a recognition of his enthusiastic devotion to the foreign missionary cause, he is called to the Presidency of the Conference.

Several instances of the growth of fraternal feeling and a deepening sense of have occurred during the Conference. When the news became known of the serious illness of the Bishop of Durham a letter of sympathy was at once sent by the Conference. Rev. Dinsdale T. Young spoke of the venerable prelate as the Bishop of all the Christian Churches, and the President spoke especially of the value of Bishop Westcott's last book. On the day the Bishop died a most kindly letter from his son was read to the Conference. The Bishop had been able to receive the message, and said, "They are kind, they are always very kind." Mr. Westcott said his father ever had a warm heart for Nonconformists, and amongst his closest friends had been Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, and Dr. Moulton, of Cambridge. When the tidings of the death of the saintly scholar reached the Conference, it was decided to send representatives to the funeral at Auckland Castle. Dr. Thos. Allen, the ex-President; Dr. T. B. Stephenson, and Rev. James Hope Moulton, the son of the late Bishop's old friend and fellow-reviser, were the brethren deputed to perform this sorrowful duty.

On Wednesday morning an unusual scene was witnessed. Rev. Dr. Brook, the President of the Assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches, paid a visit to the Conference. Standing by the side of Dr. Davison, he addressed the brethren in the kindliest words of greeting. He thought it a happy omen at the beginning of the new century that, for the first time, a President of his Church stood on that platform. He remarked that if in the years to come should be accomplished, one of the dearest hopes of his life would be realised. Those who remember the bitter controversies of the Reform agitation of half-a-century ago are in some degree able to estimate the remarkable growth of fraternal feeling in recent years.

Rev. Frank Ballard, M.A., B.Sc., recently the pastor of the Wycliffe Congregational Church, Hull, was heartily welcomed back into the brotherhood of Methodist preachers. When he left Methodism, he felt strongly the inconvenience of the itinerancy, but evidently he has yearned again for the fellowship and warmth of the Church of his early years. Three other ministers from other Churches were also received. Some forty brethren, who had rendered long and devoted service, this year found it necessary, owing to growing feebleness or temporary breakdown of health, to retire from the active work of the ministry. Amongst them are Revs. J. Cornelius Wright, who has travelled forty-one years; George S. Weston, who has travelled forty years; Richard Jenkin, chairman of the Exeter district, who has loyally served Christ and the Church for forty-three years; and Henry J. Pigott, B.A., after a missionary career of nearly half a century, the last twenty-eight years being spent under the shadow of the Vatican in Rome.

There was a large number of young men who offered for the work of the ministry, and 100 were accepted by the Conference as candidates. A most interesting conversation on the work of God took place on Thursday morning. Rev. Jas. Ellis told of successful personal work among working people, and said that he found that people would listen for the hour together to the Word of God, intelligently and earnestly expounded in the open-air. Rev. H. Arnaud Scott told a touching story of how that morning a working man, in great trouble, had sought his help in the railway carriage. Together they knelt and prayed as the train rushed on to the Conference city, and the troubled soul had professed decision for Christ. The working classes were not hostile to religion, Mr Scott urged, but they did not sympathise with all their arrangements and methods in public worship. Rev. W. H. Findlay, the new missionary secretary, deeply moved the Conference, as he told of the response of seven young ministers, university graduates, who had volunteered for a difficult and perilous post in West Africa, in response to the appeal of the Missionary Committee. Whatever education might do for their young ministers, it had not robbed them, at any rate, of the spirit of consecration. Rev. W. D. Walters, secretary of the London Mission, declared that the spirit of infidelity was practically dead among the masses of the people; but he deplored the neglect of family religion. Rev. Thomas Champness, in his inimitable way, told the story of a young open-air preacher who had been put into prison because he had violated some restrictive bye-law. The Conference heard with delight that Mr. Champness had gone to the village and vindicated the right to preach in the open air. During the Simultaneous Mission, that young man who had suffered thus for Christ, conducted special services in the Methodist Chapel, and many were won for Christ. That young man also had been received as a candidate for the ministry.

Considerable discussion has taken place as to the need for raising the standard of intellectual and educational fitness for the ministry. But there is no danger that the supreme qualification of spiritual life and power will be overlooked.

The Children's Hymn-Writer, Albert Midlane.

SOME weeks ago, in unison with the editor of the Christian Commonwealth and other friends, our readers contributed towards a gift for Mr. and Mrs. Albert Midlane, on the occasion of their golden wedding. The amount realized was about £50. We are pained to learn, however, that there was a need much greater than we supposed. Mr. Midlane is an ironmonger and has kept the same shop for fifty-three years. Increasing age, competition, and his having become security for a friend have resulted in his being compelled to compromise with his creditors, the liabilities being £500.

The Sunday School Chronicle awarded Mr. Midlane some months ago its gold medal for distinguished service to the Sunday school. We have not space to record the reasons for this recognition of valuable service to the cause of Christ, beyond the fact that his hymns, which are purely evangelical, are sung by all Protestant denominations. "There's a Friend for Little Children," "Upward, Homeward, Heavenward," "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," are familiar hymns, but not all who sing them are aware that they were composed by Albert Midlane.

The Daily Express has warmly espoused Mr. Midlane's cause in successive articles, and has opened a fund to which its readers are contributing. Many Sunday schools are making collections, and a slight effort over a wide area will remove this sorrow, and gladden the declining days of this faithful, useful, aged brother.

Many of his verses have appeared from time to time in these columns, and if each of our readers will kindly send us something, we shall, in conjunction with others, be able to free our dear friend and brother from his burden—and something more. 2 Cor. vii. and viii. were written concerning the privilege and duty of ministering to the saints.

Dublin Medical Mission.

ON Dispensary Day at ten o'clock the door is opened. Some of the patients are already waiting. As they enter they receive a numbered ticket, a prescription paper, and have their names entered by the porter.

Having seen the doctor, they hand in their prescriptions and bottles to the dispensary. Meanwhile other helpers have come in, and it is prayer-meeting time (10.45). The workers gather in an upper room, where a short time is spent in waiting upon God.

At eleven o'clock from fifty to seventy patients are gathered for the short service, after which they proceed at once to the consulting-rooms, where the doctors can follow up what has been said at the service. They may ask a worker to speak to a patient. One such instance comes before us now; he is a man who has run through about £8 in a few days, drinking. He was most attentive at the meeting. At once he begins to talk freely to the worker, and says, "The man (one of the doctors) who spoke this morning, was just talking to me; it made me feel so queer. It's quite true what he said; I know I will be LOST IF I DIE LIKE THIS."

He is shown how he can be saved, and told how he can have peace with God, and he exclaims, "That's what you all have here; the man that spoke to me had it in his face; that's what it is, I couldn't understand it." And so this poor man gives himself up to the Lord, that he too may have this peace. In the meantime the surgery is a busy place; you find the matron washing and dressing some loathsome sore; in the back surgery there is another lady worker similarly engaged, and you praise God that the power of the love of Christ can move refined and cultured ladies to soothe and sympathize with the outcast and the drunkard. Here they can point the hopeless to the One who "will in no wise cast out," and many in that place have learned for the first time that "God is Love."

A recent case was a militiaman, who was a heavy drinker. While his arm was being dressed he was told of the Saviour's love for him, and was deeply impressed; he took a Testament, and a few days later he said (speaking of justification by faith): "I do understand it all now quite well." His simple, childlike faith was very refreshing.

But we must leave the surgery. In the dispensary we find three or more qualified lady dispensers at work, making up and handing out bottles of medicine, ointments, plasters, linseed meal, and many other things. These ladies are all voluntary workers, as are most of the other workers.

By two o'clock the dispensary work is usually finished, and after lunch the doctors and nurses start on their rounds of visiting amongst the dirty and low tenement houses which abound in the city. In this way the remainder of the day is spent, and also the non-dispensary days.

Thus, during each week, about 400 patients are seen by doctors and nurses.

But while day by day this work is being carried on, and the Lord continues to bless, we regret to say his stewards are ofttimes forgetful of the great need of money in such work. At present we are absolutely without funds for salaries or daily expenses, besides having unpaid accounts in hand.

May I, therefore, commend this work to those who love the poor for Christ's sake.

E. Edith Figgis, Hon. Sec.

Hawthorn, Sidney Parade, Dublin.

Claremont Mission, Cricklewood, provides religious opportunities for railway employés and their families in the "colony" located on the borders of Cricklewood and West Hendon. Beginning with open-air meetings, the need of a mission hall for winter was felt, and this was obtained at a cost of £100; but it is proving to be too small, and a sum of £50 is required for enlargement of the hall, additional furniture, &c. The attendances reach from 150 to 200 persons, who, it is believed, did not attend any place of worship. The result of the work in the hall, in open-air, in cottages, in Sunday-school, has been very encouraging up to the present.

Mill Girls of Glasgow.

"DO you have many visitors during Glasgow Fair?" I asked a fisherman at Tarbert. "Indeed we do, miss. Just you wait till Friday, that's the most interesting day, for Mr. Buchanan and about 200 mill girls come down that day." "But where do they all stay?" "Why, in the schools to be sure. They make up beds and are themselves quite at home there for a week."

Nine o'clock on Friday night found Mr. Buchanan and his large family of white-faced girls gathered for prayers on the quay. As they sang their hearty songs, and listened to earnest words from the workers, many a visitor and many a resident joined the crowd and listened also.

Each day the workers had planned some delightful excursion, and the fishermen were determined to have their share of the entertaining, so they tidied up their boats and took huge cargoes of lassies for a sail.

Supper on Thursday evening was a lively time. The girls were full of fun, and in the wildest spirits, but at a signal from "the captain" there was silence, when he told them how glad the workers would be to have spiritual talks with any who wished. All joined in singing, "Let us with a gladsome mind, praise the Lord for He is kind," and then separated for their various dormitories, the workers waiting behind in the dining-room. By and by the girls began to return one at a time.

It was an intensely interesting sight, this very real after-meeting at the end of such a charming week's holiday. In the quiet of the country many a wild, rough, careless lassie had time to think of spiritual things, and the faithful words on the quay sank into prepared hearts. God's Spirit was, indeed, at work. That night about thirty decided for Christ, and the next day ten more followed.

"Ah," said a tired worker, "it's worth all the toil of these days to have so glorious a result."

The Scriptures for the Blind.

THE fifty-third annual report of Moon's Society for Embossing and Circulating the Holy Scriptures, and other useful books, indicates the extensive benefits which have accrued from the adoption of this system. It would indeed be difficult to estimate how many thousands of the blind have been cheered and comforted by the reading of the Scriptures for themselves. In the record of last year we read: "It has been found difficult to raise sufficient funds to continue this work in all its branches, yet God's hand has been signally felt during the trying time." Dr. Moon's type has been adapted to over 400 languages and dialects, and is now used by rich and poor in all parts of the world afflicted with loss of sight. More than half the readers are over fifty years of age; many are eighty, and some are over ninety years.

The publications now comprise, in addition to the entire Bible and a large number of single chapters and Psalms, 505 volumes of various kinds in English, and 266 in foreign languages. Including the books sent out during 1900, the total number of volumes issued by the Society from the commencement of the work is 230,667; and over 60,000 stereotyped plates have been prepared. No pecuniary benefit is, of course, derived from the sale of the books, as they are sold under cost of production.

Encouraging reports continue to be received not only from the eighty Home Teaching Societies formed throughout Great Britain, but also from those of Australia, New Zealand, and America. Further information will be gladly given by Miss Moon, Hon. Treasurer and Secretary, 104, Queen's Road, Brighton, Sussex.

A Converted Priest.—Among the recent converts of Christ's Mission in New York directed by Rev. James O'Connor (editor of the Converted Catholic), is a young priest, Father Teodosio Zotti. He has entered Mr. Moody's Theological School at Northfield, where practical testimony is borne both to his own diligence and the excellence of the instruction he is receiving.

About Books.

DELIVERANCES IN ASHANTI.

FEW chapters in foreign mission history are more exciting in their details than those which unfold the story of the evangelization of the Gold Coast of West Africa. We welcome a lively statement of the facts in Dark and Stormy Days at Kumassi, 1900; or Missionary Experience in Ashanti, according to the Diary of Rev. Fritz Ramseyer. (2s. 6d. Partridge.) In a recent issue we gave some account of Mr. Ramseyer's bold testimony, in which he has again and again been delivered from death by the manifest intervention of God. He belongs to the Basel Mission, and, in a preface to his book (which is translated by Miss Meyer from Rev. Paul Steiner's compilation), Professor Thomas Nicol, D.D., of Aberdeen, thus summarizes the facts:—

"Mr. and Mrs. Ramseyer have a record of endurance and labour for the Gospel to which even missionary annals have few parallels. In 1874 they were delivered from Kumassi by Sir Garnet Wolseley, now Viscount Wolseley, after four and a half years' captivity as the prisoners of King Kofi Karikari. Since then they have done valuable service to the cause of Christ in Abétifi, where they have established a prosperous mission. Four years ago, after the campaign of 1896, in which Prince Henry of Battenberg was taken ill and died, the way seemed clear to resume work at Kumassi, and the prospects of the Gospel were most encouraging. The missionaries were rapidly gaining the confidence of the Ashanti people when the revolt of the chiefs took place, and Kumassi was invested by the numerous hosts of the Ashanti tribes. How the missionaries took refuge in the fort, how they bravely sustained the perils and privations of the siege, and how, when face to face with absolute starvation, the Governor, Sir Frederick Hodgson, and Lady Hodgson, with part of the beleaguered force, broke through and made for the coast, accompanied on that perilous journey by the missionaries, is told in these stirring pages."

We trust the book will have many readers, and that the missionaries will enjoy the Divine favour and blessing in their continued devotion to the cause of evangelization in Ashanti.

Our Bible Students' Palestine Party is a travel diary by Miss F. J. Dolby. The illustrations are numerous and good. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

The Romance of Old London (1s. Dicks) is an interesting compilation by Edwin Oliver, admirably illustrated by W. Amor Fenn and Harry Evans.

Mr. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster Row, has issued an attractive card of Rules for Family Peace. It should be hung up in homes where there is apprehension of dispeace. (2d.)

A Treasury of Consolation; Poems selected by Albert Broadbent. (3d. Thomas Burleigh.) A choice booklet—one of a series, select in contents, and attractive in exterior.

Prisoners of Hope, by Samuel Wilkinson, is a collection of descriptive sketches of Jewish Russia, with a statement of its religious needs and claims. (2d. Mildmay Mission to the Jews.)

The Tongue of the Trees, by Rev. Henry J. Swallow (1s. Elliot Stock), is a series of illustrated papers on trees and tree lore. Scriptural allusions and applications receive special attention. The pages are readable and instructive.

The August issue of The Gospel Magazine gives a portrait and sketch of the celebrated Rev. William Romaine, rector of St. Ann's, Blackfriars, 130 years ago, and author of "The Life, Walk, and Triumph of Faith." (6d. Collingridge.)

The Bible Marker: A Course in Bible Marking, covering, in a simple and comprehensive system, the most important Bible topics, and comprising work for one year. By A. R. W. (1s. Marshall Bros.) A very useful little work; many will find it of real service.

The Rock of Ages: Being Twenty-four Sermons delivered at the Kensington Chapel, during 1900-1901, with Twenty-two Addresses to Children. By C. Silvester Horne, M.A. (2s. 6d. nett. Passmore & Alabaster.) These discourses have many attractions; they are instructive in substance and chaste in style. The pages know nothing of long measure; the talks to the children are hardly more than outlines. But if there is brevity there is intensity; and many a paragraph of this book has as much in it as an entire sermon of the "expanded" type.

Advice to Twentieth Century Juniors (4d. Horace Marshall & Son) has quickly reached a third edition. It supplies a series of counsels—commercial, physiological, social, ethical—which make it eminently suitable for distribution among young people of both sexes. The emphasis seems to be in the right place, with God and righteousness in the forefront

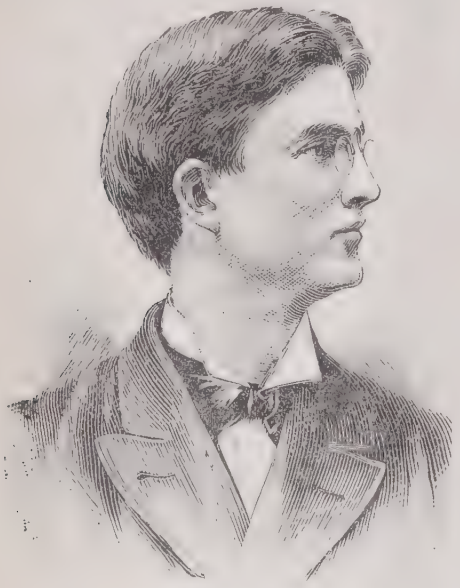
Evangelistic.

Glasgow Exhibition Services.

THE large attendances and good results attending Rev. John McNeill's open-air meetings, held near one of the principal entrances to the Glasgow Exhibition, have encouraged the United Evangelistic Association of the city to arrange for a further campaign. Advantage has been taken of the return of Mr. William M. Oatts from his tour round the world in the interests of Christian work among young men, to enlist his services. St. Andrew's Hall has been engaged for Sabbaths August 18 and 25, and open-air gatherings will be held each evening in front of Finnieston United Free Church, beginning on Monday, August 19. Prayer is asked for much blessing on these efforts.

Seaside Services.

I have had the privilege of spending a few days with Mr. Josiah Spiers at the close of his Children's Mission on the beach at Dunoon. It is just thirty-three years ago this month that our friend held the first of these seaside children's services on the sands at Llandudno, and it is pleasing to find that he is as effective as ever in attracting and interesting the young people. The great feature about the meetings held by Mr. Spiers is that even in the giving out of a hymn the children are sure to get the Gospel message clearly put before them, and the grown-up people crowd round delighted to hear the vivid preaching, and the pointed application of each story that is told.



MR. G. C. TULLAR, LONDON TENT CAMPAIGN.
From Photograph by Mr. H. Flett, 119, Cheapside, E.C.

There were two splendid meetings on the afternoon and evening of Sunday week, and nearly 500 at each of them, hardly a person leaving before the close. Mr. Spiers has now gone on to Carnoustie, where he labours during August.

Dr. Hewett, of the China Inland Mission, who was in the trouble in Shan-si last year, and was for more than four months in peril of his life, is gathering the children on the shore three mornings in the week and on Sunday afternoons at Port Bannatyne, close to Rothesay, and about 150 come to each meeting. There were nearly as many at Brodick, in the Isle of Arran, when I paid a visit to Mr. R. F. Drury, of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, who has been spending July there. At small places like these a children's service, if rightly timed (Mr. Drury's meetings were held at noon, after the bathing was over), attracts nearly all the people, young and old, who are to be seen on the beach, and it is possible in a few weeks' stay to know every child personally. Messrs. R. F. Drury and R. T. Archibald are to be during this month at St. Andrews.

I should like to be allowed to remind your readers what numberless opportunities exist during this month of August, and great part of September, for such work as this all round our coast, and at every inland resort. There is also much to be done by the distribution of Gospel literature, and the Committee of the Children's Special Service Mission will be only too glad to make grants of their Children's Picture Leaflets to any friends who are able to distribute them wisely at the seaside, at places where there are no services. Application should be sent to the secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission, 13a, Warwick Lane, London, E.C. It should be clearly stated how many leaflets are desired, and where it is proposed to use them. T. B. Bishop.

Mr. William Day has attended East Moulsey regatta, distributing Gospel literature. Large numbers of people courteously received the books offered to them. On Lord's Days, Mr. Day now visits Kew, whither thousands of people are conveyed by the new electric trams, and distributes Scripture portions.

Mr. W. Collard has visited Margate, conducting services on the sands. Securing the co-operation of the children, Scripture texts were outlined in the sand, and filled in with seaweed and stones. At the point where the meetings were held (nearly opposite the clock tower), the tide drives the people back towards the promenade, and the beach is therefore crowded.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

The London Tent Campaign continues to make good progress; from many quarters comes news of soul-winning, and of young converts, full of enthusiasm, setting vigorously to work to impress the masses outside the pale of church influences.

The chief feature of the past week's operations was the opening of the great tent at Islington, in the grounds of the Church Missionary Society's College. The site is an admirable one, admission being obtained from that very busy thoroughfare, Upper Street, Islington; and the local committee has made every effort to make the gatherings widely known. A large painted announcement, stretching across the street, attracts the attention of passers by, and the entrance through the Y.M.C.A. gateway, being arched with gas piping, from which flame some scores of jets, constitutes in itself an excellent advertisement of the campaign.

The tent presents an impressive appearance, seating as it does some three to four thousand persons. Every arrangement has evidently been made with the utmost care; a large staff of stewards, including many well-known local Christian workers, attend to the comfort of the audience, and devote particular care to anxious souls. A corner of the tent has been partitioned from the rest by canvas hangings, in order to serve as an inquiry room.

At the initial gathering on Saturday last, Mr. Leonard Weaver, who is the missioner for the Islington campaign, addressed a goodly company, consisting chiefly of friends and sympathizers, and encouraged them to look to God for great things as the outcome of the meetings.

On Lord's Day a prayer meeting at seven a.m. was a good commencement to a day of remarkable blessing. Large congregations came together at each service, and at night there must have been over two thousand people present.

A Gospel song service from 7.30 to 8 p.m. commenced the proceedings, and both at this and at the evangelistic meeting which followed a gracious spiritual influence was manifest. In the early part of the meeting Mr. I. H. Meredith, of New York, who has proved himself a thoroughly efficient soloist, sang "Oh, the clanging bells of time" very impressively, and Mr. Weaver appropriately followed with a powerful address on "Eternity." Dwelling with emphasis on the fleeting character of the things of time, the evangelist, with many happy touches and well-chosen illustrations, led his hearers on to consider the great question, "Eternity: where will you spend it?" The speaker's concluding words were of solemn invitation to the unsaved at once to seek the Saviour; and many responded.

CONFERENCE ON SOUL-WINNING.

A large number of tent-workers and converts met on Monday, at 11, 3, and 7. At the evening meeting it was calculated that from 2,000 to 3,000 were present. The proceedings throughout were conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver, but the direction and power of the Spirit were evident throughout.

Our American brethren were well in evidence. Mr. Meredith presided at the Bilhorn portable organ, and Drs. Broughton, of Atlanta; J. H. Elliott, of New York; and Morgan, of Boston, Mass.; as well as Dr. John Robertson, of Glasgow, were prominent among the speakers. The others were Miss Ward, Chinese missionary; Messrs. Sprunt, Charles Cook and Bewley Weaver.

The subject for the day was "Soul-Winning," and very many counsels of a most useful kind—suggested, illustrated, and enforced from rich, personal experience through years of fruitful labours in the Gospel—were poured forth for the instruction and edification of Christian workers.

Dr. Broughton began by declaring soul-winning to be the work of the Church, and when it ceased to accomplish this, it was time to disband. Equipment is necessary: (1) the soul-winning spirit; the spirit of revelation and of wisdom, which largely consists of common-sense. Soul-winning needs the best brains a man has got, and in this connection some curious illustrations were given of "how not to do it." (2) Sin must be swept out of our own heart, if we are to win other souls from sin. (3) We must realize that the sinner's doom is to endless woe. (4) We must seek from God a true sense of the value of an immortal soul.

Miss Ward emphasized the need of experienced service at home, preparatory to work abroad, and gave wise counsel from her own home and foreign life.

Mr. Sprunt enumerated, as the essentials to fitness as a soul-winner, consecration, separation, determination, expectation, realization.

Dr. Elliott's address in the use of the Word in evangelization was also most valuable. One of his points was illustrated by a story of a half-witted boy, who found and brought home a horse that had been hopelessly lost. Asked how he found him, he said that he sat down on a log to consider. He thought, if I was a horse, what would I do, and where would I go? He determined this, and went and found the horse there. This explained the term "horse sense" previously used by Dr. Broughton. You must put yourself in the place of the person whom you desire to win, and sympathy will guide you how to deal with him.

Dr. John Robertson had come 450 miles to be present at that meeting. His text-word was "Certainty." Be certain there is a field ordained by God for every worker. Paul could not go to Bithynia; that was Peter's field. A door certain will swing open there. There is a certain message for each. Augustine's was "Faith"; Luther's was "Justification." Certain; there is a certain qualification, a definite reception of the Spirit for service, and a certain and sure reward—the Lord's "Well done."

The evening meeting was addressed by Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. Bewley Weaver, and Dr. Morgan, and the great congregation separated after a most edifying day, full of promise for the remaining months of this year's Tent Campaign.

Messrs. Edwards and Levermore.

Mr. Samuel Levermore forwards some particulars of the Tent Mission in the United States undertaken by Mr. Rowland Edwards and himself:—"We have a tent seating 1,000 persons, and laboured in New Jersey for several weeks. The heat wave greatly interfered at first, but we are now (July 22) in the full swing of work in Coatesville, and there are already signs of deep and widespread blessing. The churches are really united, and the pastors help on the platform, and in the meeting for the anxious, at nearly every service. Our method is to definitely close the first service, and then begin another at which only the anxious and workers are expected to remain. Then, while the choir renders suitable hymns, the pastors and workers mingle with the people, and personal dealing becomes a general thing.

"At the large M.E. Church, under Dr. Wheeler, one Sunday morning, a large number of people came forward and knelt at the altar rails signifying their desire for the Spirit-filled life. Mr. Edwards preaches with power. We have a Gospel meeting in the huge steel works with 1,000 men at noon, a Bible talk at 4 p.m., and then the evening meeting in the tent. The ministers call the preaching 'A Revival of Puritan Theology.'"

At a tent mission now being held at Great Easton, Uppingham; there have been many seekers, and continued prayer is asked on behalf of the work.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Harvey have conducted a tent mission at Collier's End, Herts. Meetings were held both for adults and children, and blessing was given as the Gospel story was told forth.

A tent mission in connection with the Long Ditton Mission has been conducted by Mr. W. Collard, sailor evangelist. From the opening services, July 7, to the praise meeting, July 22, the interest was sustained throughout. Souls have been brought to the Lord, and blessing has come to the Christians. To God be the glory. T. and S. Cooke-Collis.

At Olney, Bucks, a large Marquee is being erected, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission, in Mr. Lord's meadow, for Gospel services, which will be conducted by Mr. George Andrews, of Willesden Hall, assisted by local ministers, who have expressed hearty co-operation, and a choir from the Congregational and Baptist Churches. This is the first time tent services have been held in the town, and prayer is asked that this mission may result in the salvation of souls.

A tent has been pitched in the Anniesland district, at the extreme west of Glasgow. Mr. Malcolm Ferguson, who is in charge, and who is receiving the help of different preachers, was for many years an evangelist in connection with the Lanarkshire Christian Union. He now occupies the pastorate in the district, so long occupied by Mr. W. D. Dunn. The mission, which has just begun, is likely to be continued for a number of weeks. Prayer for blessing on the work will be valued. Mr. J. W. Moodie, who was for six weeks with his tent in the south of the city, has gone to Dennistoun, at the extreme east. Several churches are co-operating in the movement.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on services at Hazelbury Plucknett, conducted by Mr. J. H. Roberts, in an Evangelization Society's tent.

That the Bayswater Convention, October 28-November 2, may be the occasion of much blessing to the metropolis.

Personalia.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has accepted the presidency of the Sunday School Union for 1902 in succession to Mr. George Cadbury.

Rev. Principal Forsyth, D.D., has gone to Switzerland for a holiday, prior to commencing his new duties at Hackney College.

Mr. John Hawkins, of Lansdowne Mission Station, Ntondweni, St. Lucia Lake, Zululand, on returning to his scene of labour after a year's furlough, engaged in a week's evangelistic tour in the chief Somkele's district by the Umfolozi River, and had large audiences and attentive listeners. Mr. Hawkins says: "The great need is for helpers; our hands are already more than full."

Mr. H. M. Barnett, who is known to many of our North London readers, was last week charged before a police magistrate with "Wilfully obstructing the free passage of the footway and carriage-way." The trouble arose through a Roman Catholic ex.-M.P., who lives close by, complaining that Mr. Barnett was denouncing his religion. The appeal was dismissed, but with instructions that the meetings at that place must cease.

We regret to hear that Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, Secretary of the Baptist Union, is seriously ill. The strain of the last few months, particularly in connection with the Century Fund, has proved too much for his strength, and since his return from the meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union he has completely broken down. He was to have gone to Newquay last week for his holiday, but he is quite confined to his room, and he has been compelled to cancel all his engagements.

Dr. Barnardo recommends H. S., in whom he is interested, and whom he sincerely believes to be desirous of becoming an evangelist, and of devoting himself to Christ's service. In order to do this the young man is hoping to be admitted to Mr. Moody's Mount Hermon School, Northfield, Mass., but he needs means for his support while there, and to pay the fees. Dr. Barnardo is glad to help H. S. himself, and heartily commends him to those Christian people who sympathize with such an object. The treasurer is Mr. James B. Wookey, 40, Powerscroft Road, Upper Clapton, N.E.

Miss Catherine E. Radcliffe writes:—"As I am leaving Liverpool on the Parisian on August 29 to go out to Toronto in accordance with Mr. Harry Frost's invitation (director of the China Inland Mission there) for a short time, may I venture to say how grateful I should be for the prayers of your readers that God's blessing may come down upon us in this new sphere of labour. The world-wide Evangelization Prayer Union keeps growing, its members are scattered over the world, and it is a great privilege to be linked together in prayer. The ladies' committee of the Liverpool Strangers' Rest ask for prayer and support, though now working along with the Seamen's Friend Society in the Gordon Smith Institute."

Rev. Dr. Barnes, of Emmanuel Church, Folkestone (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion), has been ordered by his medical adviser to take one year's complete rest. During the last six years Dr. Barnes has been enabled to build up a strong church, supporting its own missionary in the foreign field, and subscribing one-fourth of its entire income to home and foreign mission work. The church is a centre of active, aggressive Protestant and Evangelistic effort. Dr. Barnes' voice will for the next year be missed also from many of the Conventions for the deepening of spiritual life, at which, during the last two or three years, he had begun to be a frequent speaker. The work will be efficiently carried on by the assistant minister, and with occasional help from friends who have generously offered to supply the pulpit from time to time.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The new Church of St. James', Leicester, has been consecrated by the Bishop of Peterborough. The building, which will take the place of an iron church formerly existing on the London Road in connection with St. Peter's parish, has cost about £9,000, and will accommodate about 700 worshippers. It is situate in a rapidly growing part of the borough, and the plans will allow of future extension.

Rev. G. F. C. de Carteret, vicar of St. Paul's, Southwark, has accepted the living of Christ Church, East Greenwich, vacant by the death of Rev. G. Sale Reaney. Mr. de Carteret has done excellent work in some of the worst slums in South London, and his energy and ability well fit him for the care of a large parish like that of Christ Church, Greenwich. Mr. de Carteret's sympathies are entirely with the C.P.A.S., whose Ladies' Training Home is situated within the parish of Christ Church.

Sunday, July 28, was a sorrowful day for the attached band of worshippers at Eaton Episcopal Chapel, gathered together by the deeply appreciated ministry of the late Rev. C. A. Fox, through his incumbency of twenty-six years. Rev. F. S. Meares, who has been assistant minister for some years, and who has held on in spite of failing eyesight, gave the closing messages in the evident power of the Holy Ghost, and in spite of sorrow, the calm and peace of the presence of the Lord were much felt. The morning text was Matt. xi. 28-30, and the evening one was Phil. iv. 7. The offertory was to be shared with the Church Missionary Society. Disbanding breaks up much good work, a Sunday school of 180 children, &c. The prayer of readers is asked that they may become a blessing in whatever church they are led to join.

Congregational.

Two friends of the London Missionary Society have undertaken, as their contribution to the Chalmers Memorial Fund, the entire support of a new missionary to Western New Guinea.

Rev. Samuel Patton, who for the last fourteen years has been minister of Titchfield Church, Fareham, has accepted the Wardenship of the Moorhill House of Rest for Ministers, which is to be opened this month in the New Forest. The house is the gift of Mr. Anstie.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. D. S. Dakin to Deal; Rev. S. A. Gray to Regent Street Church, Barnsley; Rev. Cuthbert M'Evoy to Great George Street Church, Liverpool; and Rev. W. F. Durant to Portishead.

Baptist.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who was recently laid aside for some days by the excessive heat, re-occupied his pulpit on Sunday week, preaching special sermons on entering upon his eighth year of the pastorate of the Tabernacle.

The directors of the Baptist Missionary Society have appointed Mr. W. R. Kirby, of Edinburgh University, to succeed the late Rev. J. L. Rodger on the Congo, and accepted an offer of the service from Mr. Arthur Mayo, of the Pastors' College.

Rev. Ralph Holme has resigned the pastorate of the Walsworth Road Church, Hitchin, in order to take charge of the Bloemfontein Church, South Africa. It is hoped that from Bloemfontein as the centre, the European and missionary work in the Orange River Colony may be developed.

Methodist.

During the recent storms the lightning greatly damaged the roof of Springbourne Wesleyan Chapel, Bournemouth, so that the rain poured into the building. The whole of the south side of the new chapel which is being built at Totnes also collapsed, as the result of the action of the storms upon the foundation.

Mr. Price Hughes' medical adviser has decided that there is no adequate ground why Mr. Hughes should decline to remain chairman of the Second London District, if it is understood that during the coming Methodist year his activities should be limited to the September and May Synods, and to correspondence through the post.

The eighty-third annual Conference commenced its sittings at Greenbank Chapel, Plymouth, on July 31. The public services were commenced by a Sunday school and Christian Endeavour gathering. Rev. R. Pyke, president of the Plymouth Christian Endeavour Union, presided, and addresses were given by Rev. W. J. Mitchell on "How to Increase the Effectiveness of Sunday Schools," Rev. W. H. May on "The attractiveness of the Sunday School," Rev. G. Corin on "Live Endeavour," and Rev. R. E. Craddock on "The Necessity for Consecration."

Presbyterian.

There are many encouraging signs in connection with Presbyterianism in county Durham. The mission at Willington is being ably maintained by Mr. Jobson. St. John's, Hartlepool, and St. George's, Stockton, have been set on their feet by the untiring efforts of their ministers, and the congregation at Darlington was never in a more thriving condition.

The members of St. George's, Croydon, recently assembled in the Church Hall to take formal leave of their late pastor, Rev. A. N. Mackray, M.A., and to express in a material form their sense of gratitude for his fifteen years of faithful service in their midst. It will be remembered that Mr. Mackray was recently translated to South Croydon, where a new sphere of usefulness awaited him in connection with the first pastorate of St. Paul's, Croham Road.

Society of Friends.

A very interesting series of meetings has been held in a tent erected on the grounds of the new Friends' meeting house, No. 1, Avenue Road, Acton. William Noble was the chief speaker, with meetings for Bible study during the daytime, and special meetings for children on Friday and Saturday afternoons, as well as the adult school meetings for men on Sunday mornings, and for women on Sunday afternoons.

An old burial ground on Wrose Hill, Yorks, is the property of Rawdon Preparative Meeting, though the present generation of Rawdon Friends have only recently become aware of the fact. Having become aware of it, however, the Preparative Meeting proceeded to make use of the property in an interesting way, and arranged an open-air public meeting to be held on the spot. This took place on First-day afternoon, July 21. A large company that gathered there were Friends and adult scholars in large numbers from Greengates—the nearest Adult School—and Rawdon, and in smaller numbers from Shipley, Bradford, and even far-distant Yeadon.

Fallen Asleep.

Dr. Lazarus, of Benares, whose great kindness to the poor was proverbial, while he was deeply interested in the circulation of Christian literature. By conviction he was identified with the Baptists, but the missionary cause everywhere found in him a hearty sympathiser.—The death of George Swan, recently working at Hoshangabad, will be another serious loss to the Friends' Foreign Mission service. He died suddenly from sunstroke at Seoni Malwa on July 15. His work in Central India was much valued, his knowledge of Hindi being very good, and his service as teacher and preacher effective and winning.—Mr. Alexander McCrindle, at one time a prominent worker at the Doddridge Congregational Chapel, Northampton. He held the office of deacon of the church for many years.—Rev. Joseph Hirst, the doyen of the Wesleyan ministry. Mr. Hirst died at Douglas, Isle of Man, on Monday morning, from failure of the heart's action. He was admitted to the ministry at the London Conference in 1846.—Rev. Andrew Lang, M.A., of Holm, Orkney, from a paralytic shock. He was forty-one years of age, and had been in Holm six years.—Aged sixty-seven, Rev. F. H. Robarts, since 1883 pastor of Hillhead Baptist Church, Glasgow.—Rev. J. Hale Stephens, pastor of Beulah Congregational Church, Chepstow. Two years ago Mr. Stephens was president of the Monmouthshire Congregational Union.—Holme Lane Congregational Church, Bradford, has lost a valued worker by the death, at the age of eighty-two, of Mr. Abraham Elsworth, who was for over sixty years a member of the Church, and for many years deacon and treasurer.—Aged eighty, Rev. John Coker, rector of Tingewick, near Buckingham. He had held the living forty-six years.—At Durban, Rev. C. K. Cox, who had gone to Australia in the hope of benefiting his health, but became worse, and was on the voyage home.—Rev. J. Till, for the past forty-six years vicar of Gnosal, Staffs.—On Sat., July 27, aged seventy-nine, Mr. Charles Forder, of Soho Bazaar, a succourer of many.

Mr. Arthur Lewty, Chigwell Row, Essex, sends particulars of "an effort to secure regular Gospel services at Bourne Bridge, Essex, a hamlet, which forms part of a scattered parish, where the only places of worship are High Church." Gospel services recently held in the open air, and conducted by an evangelist of the Country Towns Mission, have received hearty encouragement. A friend has generously offered a plot of ground whereon to build a permanent structure, and it is hoped to erect a wooden building, but the friends find themselves unable to undertake this without outside help. Mr. Lewty will be glad to supply further information.

The Y.M.C.A. — The Italian Associations are to hold a congress in Milan, September 9-12. An interesting feature will be an exhibition of Y.M.C.A. publications in all languages—magazines, reports, rules, syllabi, photographs of persons and places, &c. Suitable contributions for the exhibition should be sent at an early date, addressed—Al Signor Segretario, della Associazione Cristiano della Gioventù, 10, Via San Vincenzino, Milano (Milan, Italy).

Friendly Mission, Portsmouth. — The institute of the Friendly Mission at Portsmouth has been the means of accomplishing much good work among the poor lads and girls of the district. Mr. B. Tilley writes from Fernlee, Campbell Road, Southsea:—"Our work among the very poor has been to assist such to rise above that level, and many have become bright and useful men because they were encouraged to start on the right road, and helped with a friendly hand. All the work is honorary. Efforts are being made to secure new and much-needed premises for the mission."

Sailors' Rest, Antwerp.—From the fourth annual report it is evident that this Rest continues to do excellent work amongst seamen who visit the port. The record speaks of 5,902 visits paid, and of 1,493 ships visited. Gospels and leaflets are distributed, Gospel meetings regularly held, a reading-room open daily, and various efforts made to win men to Christ. One, who had been brought up strictly in the Romish faith, was given a copy of the Scriptures, and came in many times to have passages explained, saying that he had never felt satisfied, and was surprised to read the many precious promises. After leaving for sea, he wrote from the nearest port. "When alone I often think of the good things you have told me, which are now working in my soul. Your time has not been lost, there has been progress, and if it is little it may, I hope, grow, and I become as you would like to see me. Include my name sometimes in your prayers.

Northfield Young Women's Conference

THE Northfield Young Women's Conference closed on Sunday, July 21, with addresses from several speakers, the parting words being delivered by Mr. Robert E. Speer, of New York City. All spoke of the great hope and inspiration that the Conference had created, and of its undoubted value. The general attendance has been greater than before. Over forty officers attended from American associations, and five from those in Canada; while large representations came from many states—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, &c.; some from far-away Nebraska, and even Honolulu. There were represented many institutions of learning in Maryland, Nebraska, Maine, Rhode Island, Ohio, Vermont, New York, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Minnesota, Iowa, North Carolina, Florida, and Massachusetts, and in Canada; and there is evidence of so much strength in the meetings that they seem destined to grow in both force and volume.

The nineteenth General Conference for Christian Workers opened on Thursday, August 1. It will continue till August 18. It is the concluding conference of the season; in some respects the most important, and promising this year to be better attended than any previous gathering. It will be addressed by some well-known speakers from at home and abroad: Revs. G. Campbell Morgan, Samuel Chadwick (Leeds), H. G. Weston, D.D. (Chester, Pa.), T. S. Hamlin, D.D. (Washington, D.C.), C. I. Schofield, D.D. (Northfield), H. W. Pope (New Haven, Ct.), R. A. Torrey (Chicago), H. C. Mabie, D.D., and A. C. Dixon, D.D. (Boston), A. T. Pierson, D.D. (Brooklyn), John Balcom Shaw, D.D., Chas. E. Jefferson, D.D., and Wilton Merle Smith, D.D. (New York City), George C. Needham (Narberth, Pa.), and Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor, of the China Inland Mission.

Several new features will be introduced this year into the Conference which will extend its scope and usefulness.

East London Nursing Society.—The thirty-third annual report of this Society shows that a wide and beneficent ministry is sustained in the East of London. Its object, which is to provide nurses for the sick poor in their homes, is carried out in full accord with medical and parochial authorities and medical men, from whom much assistance has been received. In the course of the year 5,028 cases were dealt with, necessitating repeated assiduous visits. The Society's operations are spread over three divisions, comprising thirty-four parishes. The gratitude of patients is often touching to witness. One nurse brought her box with fifty-four bright pennies, saved weekly by an old chronic rheumatic woman; and another tells how men and boys working in the docks come to her to have slight wounds dressed and afterwards bring pennies for her box. One man ran after her with quite a handful of coppers. Another said, "Now, where's your box, Nurse? I know you have one, for you nursed my mother, and she used to put something into it." Copies of the annual report will be forwarded to friends by the secretary, Mr. A. W. Lacey, 43, Rutland Street, New Road, Commercial Road, E.

The National Blind Relief Society.

A Heartrending Case.

A Blind Lady and her Husband, and their two daughters, who are Governesses.

Mrs. C. writes: "The mother of my late Governess, aged 68 (and husband, aged 78), entirely dependent on their two daughters, who are governesses. There is no hope of Mrs. ——— recovering her sight, and she suffers great pain. The daughters are unable to earn sufficient to support themselves and parents. The mother used to earn a little by needlework before she went blind. It is very hard on them all, as they have seen better days. Excellent references from doctor and clergy."

The Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

Notes & Comments

FOR the convenience of their correspondents and customers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott have opened additional premises at 30, Paternoster Row. This will enable Christian workers visiting the metropolis to inspect their numerous publications, which include Biblical, Protestant, missionary and temperance literature, as well as a large assortment of tracts and booklets for evangelistic and general use. Communications by post should, however, continue to be addressed to 12, Paternoster Buildings.

Silver Tongues. We are gratified to learn from our publishers that Rev. John Mitchell's offer of Silver Tongues (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) to ministers and others, on special terms, has been largely taken advantage of; and would point out that immediate application should now be made by any who wish to take advantage of the present opportunity. For the benefit of those who are in the habit of giving brief addresses to the children of their congregations, copies were offered to (1) 200 ministers, free, on application to our publishers (if sent by post, 3d. must be enclosed with application); and (2) to 150 Sunday school teachers, class leaders, or evangelists, at 1s. per copy (postage 3d. extra). These numbers are now nearly exhausted.

"A God of Deliverances." An important literature has already gathered round the sufferings of missionaries during the recent crisis in China. A real contribution has been made to the subject in A God of Deliverances (1s. nett. Morgan & Scott), in which Mr. Alexander R. Saunders tells "the story of the marvellous deliverances, through the sovereign power of God, of a party of missionaries when compelled, by the Boxer rising, to flee from Shan-si, North China." The eleven illustrations, and a clear route map, add much to the interest of the book, and enable the graphic writing to be clearly understood by the reader.

Prayer for Peace. More than once we have voiced the conviction of many of our readers that Christians should "with one accord" place the issue of the South African war before the God of Peace in earnest prayer. Both in public and private this subject has for months past been the burden of unwearied petition with many. An esteemed correspondent writes:—

> It is generally admitted that diplomacy has failed up to the present, and that the war also has failed to bring about peace. What about prayer? Would it be considered madness if one ventured to suggest prayer—"prevailing prayer?" I should like to propose that Christian men and women, the wide world over, unite definitely and systematically to pray for peace. Let us set aside a period—say three times daily, morning, noon, and night—to wait before God in private prayer. Quite apart from political opinions and views, let us make this the one subject of petition—that God will "give peace in our time!"

In other words, instead of criticising and discussing, instead of rebuke and controversy, let those who are the Lord's remembrancers arise and plead the cause of peace. To open public buildings for concerted prayer would be better than to crowd platforms with partisans, political or religious. It is not so much popular education on the question that is needed as a disposition to inquire of the Lord, and to seek his intervention and deliverance.

Rome and Sabbath Observance. Those of our readers who know how the Lord's Day is desecrated in Roman Catholic countries will scarcely need to be reminded of the way in which the Church of Rome makes the fourth commandment of none effect. Ireland affords only too abundant illustration of the sad effect on national life, in this respect, arising from the unscriptural teaching of the Church of Rome. In that distressful country, Sunday political meetings and demonstrations are an integral part of the national life. Priests are foremost in organizing and taking part in them, and the peacefulness of the Lord's Day is replaced by scenes of excitement, unrest, and drunkenness. Sunday, too, is the great day in Ireland for sports and excursions under the auspices of the Church. A typical outing is thus described in the Dublin Irish Catholic of the 10th inst.:—

> On Sunday last the Kilkenny branch of the Gaelic League held a grand Seilg to the historic monastery of Melleray, and the opportunity was largely availed of by the citizens in general, who look with extreme favour on the efforts of the League to stimulate a healthy national spirit, and to provide amusement and recreation of a sound Irish character. A special train left the city at about 8.30 a.m. with about 300 passengers, and a merry time was spent till the train steamed into Cappoquin, where cars of various kinds were requisitioned to convey the party to the monastery, which was reached at about 12 o'clock. Refreshments were here kindly provided by the hospitable monks, and the remainder of the day was occupied in all forms of amusements, including athletic sports, aeridheachta, and merrymaking of all descriptions.

The "conversion of England" is one of the dearest objects of Roman aspirations. But an England converted to the adoption of a Romish Sunday, with the sanction of religion thrown over Sunday excursions and jollifications, is a prospect which no true lover of his country can contemplate with satisfaction.

With Heart and Voice. Owing to the noble example set by the Queen in refraining from adopting the fashion of wearing the feathers of birds slain only for the sake of their plumage, it would appear that there has been a falling-off in the demand, and its consequent slaughter. A recent writer, however, states he heard a number of ladies, "with hats stuffed with beautiful feathers," joining in a place of worship in the singing of the old hymn,

> "Happy birds that sing and fly > Round thine altars, Lord, most High."

And the story may well illustrate the thoughtlessness with which many people join in the vocal praise of God, and in the hymns of penitence and of dedication, without any thought of the solemn import of the words or the act.

Criminals and Sunday-Schools. The chaplain of Glasgow Prison asserts that a very large proportion of the prisoners have been Sunday-school scholars.

> "Some," he says, "have been at ministers' Bible classes; others will volunteer the statement that they have been at the Foundry Boys' meeting; and one day I met a member of the Boys' Brigade. I have only to listen to my congregation on a Sunday at public worship, singing such a children's hymn as 'O come, let us sing to the God of salvation,' or other hymns set to the tunes which are most familiar to children, to find these sung with a 'go' in them, constraining me to say, 'Here are these singing their hymns learned in the Sunday school.'"

It would be very unfair to deduce from this that the Sunday-school is a failure. The condition of things is a vivid proof of the way in which the highest influences may surround a young life, and yet be outside it, so long as the heart is untouched. Instruction of even the best type should be made more subservient to the effort to win the heart for Christ, which is the right and proper end of all Christian service. It is a call to teachers to be very definite in their teaching; and to ministers to assume more responsibility as to the spiritual fitness of the teachers.

The Weak Link. The Church Times, in dealing with the fact that the Year Book of the Establishment shows that the Sunday School attendance gradually decreases despite the growth of the population, endeavours to trace the causes in the incompetence of the superintendents and the teachers, and the lack of satisfactory supervision on the part of the priest. The writer designates the Sunday School as "the weakest feature of the modern parochial system," and adds: "We need only study the use made of their Sunday schools by the Dissenters to see how great may be their influence when managed with skill and energy." He suggests various remedies for the unsatisfactory condition of things, the chief one being that the Catechism should be the base of all teaching, "whether or no the St. Sulpice method be employed," as "mere talks on morals could be supplied just as well in the Dissenting chapel." It may safely be said, however, that the Sunday School can be successful only so far as the Word of God is made the basis of the education, and so far as the the teachers are influenced by a desire to win souls. The "skill and energy" to which our contemporary refers are the outcome of that desire, and that being the object in view, God has blessed the means.

Family Prayer. In view of the revived interest which is being taken in the children of our Sunday schools, and particularly in view of the forthcoming great effort to win them for Christ, it would surely be an excellent thing, as it is undoubtedly a necessary one, if some simultaneous attempt were made to reach the parents to the need of family prayer. Children are so susceptible, that any good influence wrought upon them in the coming meetings must be sustained and developed in time, or there is the sad chance that it will diminish in force or disappear. Could the Children's Mission be made the occasion to point out to parents, in plain language, the terrible responsibility which rests upon them in becoming guardians of youth? Thousands of people send their children to Sunday-school who themselves rarely attend a place of worship; just there is a ground of appeal to them, and a link in their children. We know well that what we propose is delicate work, but it could be wisely done by means of a circular generally addressed to all. At least, we could ask, in the interests of the children, for daily Bible reading. It is indescribably sad to reflect that so many families are one before society, before life, before adversity, whilst before God they are divided—the children frequently aspiring towards God, and the parents, by word or deed, doing their best to stifle their aspirations.

The Decay of Modern Socialism. One of the oldest living apostles of Socialism, which a generation or so ago threatened to become a formidable force in our social politics, Mr. H. M. Hyndman, has withdrawn from the executive of the Social-Democratic Federation for a curious reason. He is disappointed with the waning of "that class consciousness and class antagonism, without which no good whatever could be done." The unsympathetic attitude of Socialists towards Christianity used to be a puzzle to many people. The reason is now clear. Christianity is founded on universal love—the negation of all class antagonisms. Modern Socialism, on the other hand, on the confession of one of its most distinguished leaders, is founded on class hatred, and cannot thrive unless that impelling force is strong at its heart. There can be no fellowship between God and Belial. There is, however, a higher Socialism based on a true reading of the law of love, which has never yet had full play even among the followers of the Prince of Love.

Known by their Fruits. In Bishop Westcott's last volume, which appeared almost on the day of his own death, a striking passage occurs, in which he pays a hearty tribute to the work done in India by non-Anglican missionary societies.

> In India, to take one example only, the non-episcopal bodies, as far as a conclusion can be drawn from the latest statistics to which I am able to refer, do apparently twice as much for missions as is done by our own Church and the Churches in communion with it. . . . We cannot refuse to recognise the presence of Christ among those who show the good fruits and love by which we are to know his disciples.

This test is Scriptural, adequate, and unanswerable. Those who can and do bring souls to a saving knowledge of the truth in Jesus are in the true apostolic succession of missionary enterprise. To have "souls for his hire" is the noblest guerdon of the man who would carry on the work of bringing the world to Christ.

The Bishop of Ripon on Preaching. Anything that Dr. Boyd Carpenter has to say upon the subject of preaching will always be heard with interest and profound respect. In his address to his clergy the other day he spoke about the preacher's attitude towards the modern questions which agitate people's minds, and counselled a via media between discussing these subjects and ignoring them in the presence of congregations. The Bishop concluded by exhorting his brethren to preach Christ. The whole subject is very perplexing. The preacher has to remember that the very Word which he expounds on the Sunday is challenged and denied in journals and in daily causerie. The people have the subjects of criticism and doubt thrust upon them day by day. How shall the preacher act on the Sunday in view of this situation? Shall he turn the pulpit into a platform of Christian evidence or what? In answer to such questions we must remember the examples of the Apostles. They distinguished between their congregations. To Jewish critics they proved their doctrine, "mightily convincing them." To others they proclaimed the same Christ, but after another manner. Thus St. Paul dealt with the Athenians and the Antiochians in two different ways, but his aim was one—to bring them both to Christ. And with modern congregations it must be the same. The worldling does not care about the Bible—criticized or not; he has no "difficulties" keeping him from God. He needs to be convicted of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, and the preacher must bear this ever in mind. But with others it is necessary to go slowly, Bible in hand, and fairly to face the questions which perplex. And, in our judgment, this can only be done effectively by making one service on the Sunday the occasion for thorough Bible exposition, as distinguished from ordinary preaching.

Sin and Evolution. We are glad to find Dr. Horton taking strong ground on the subject of "Sin and Evolution," and stripping one of the stupid fallacies of our time of its poor logic and worse doctrine. Since the theory of Evolution has become in some measure popularized, we have heard on every hand brave and learned talk about "sin" being merely an incident in human progress—a mere relic of the animal which we have not yet outgrown, &c. This baseless theorizing has spread from the savants to the people, until, as most Christian workers sadly know, it is far from rare to hear men support themselves upon the theory of Evolution as an excuse for their passions. To such Dr. Horton says, with firmness:—

> Sin is not worn out by evolution, and the race does not slough off sin as it emerges. The ape and the tiger in men die, but sin is not therefore gone. So far from sin being eliminated by evolution, the sense of sin becomes profounder and more radical as the spiritual development proceeds. In man, as he gets further from the beasts, sin intensifies—its burden increases, the cry for deliverance becomes more urgent.

It is the absolute fact of the sense of sin becoming more intense as men become more spiritual that destroys the airy theory of evolutionists concerning sin. When a man consents to lay aside the opinions of his fellows, and the flattery of his own heart, and to get alone with his conscience and his God, he must cry out, "God, be merciful to me a sinner."

Alcoholism in France. It is not so long since France was held up to us as almost an example in sobriety and self-control in the use of alcoholic stimulants. Some facts published in the Figaro, however, show that a sinister change has been passing over the habits of the people. The "growers" now number two-and-a-half millions, the retailers in cafés and drink-shops over half a million, and the off-licences have reached the appalling figure of 300,000. Since 1830 the consumption of alcoholic drinks has increased from ten to nearly fifty million gallons, the increase in population being only a fraction of this total. M. Jauvrais says in comment: "One might say of the twentieth century that it is truly 'the age of alcohol,' for never have we seen its consumption make such progress." A great temperance campaign is clearly as much needed in France as in this country.

Britain and Russia. A reassuring fact was brought out by the recent debate in the House of Lords—that the relations between this country and Russia are improving, and that the age-long rivalry which has been so disturbing a factor in international politics is gradually giving way to a better understanding. If these two great countries could agree on a common and beneficent policy, the peace of the world would be materially assisted. There are many internal disaffections and disabilities from which Russia suffers, and especially in the direction of religious toleration she is far behind other European countries; but progress in these matters would be helped, and not hindered, by friendship with Britain. We, too, should do well to put aside the ready suspicion which we have been too ready to show at every effort at expansion made by Russia.

The Settlement of Crete. It is good news, indeed, that real progress is being made in the government and social condition of that much-troubled island, Crete, under Prince George of Greece. The disarmament of the population has been continued, courts of law have been established, gendarmerie have been formed, and the whole machinery of local administration initiated. Crimes and turbulence have diminished, and the relations between Christians and Mussulmans show improvement. This island has been from time immemorial a seething cauldron of revolution and conflict. The "Concert of Europe" has done little good in other directions; if it succeeds in bringing about a state of stable civilization and progress in Crete, at least one good result will have flowed from its mutual jealousies and divided counsels.

Human Merchandise. The meeting at the House of Commons of the representatives of East End and other constituencies affected by the immigration of pauper aliens points to possible legislation on the subject, as it was decided to press the Government to move in the matter. It is probable, therefore, that Lord Salisbury's Bill of 1894 will be re-introduced. The question has been obscured by a mist of sentiment, possibly because most of the immigrants are Jews. Behind that cloud there are startling facts. Unhappily the Lords' Committee on sweating intentionally omitted the evidence telling against the influx of aliens, but it requires no testimony to show how the lot of English workers is embittered by the keen competition of the pauper foreigners hired by sweaters "for their tea and bread and butter, and one shilling per week." Owing to that influx the evils of overcrowding and the impoverishment of the poor are intensified. In the countries from which these foreigners come, their emigration is treated simply as an economic question, though for political reasons it may be made to appear a racial one. Legislation must come sooner or later, and whenever it is taken up care will be taken, we do not doubt, that in reducing the suffering at home it is not unduly increased abroad.

A Pleasing Blue Book. The criminal statistics, just published, for the year 1899 are less startling than, unfortunately, such figures generally are. The preceding year was a very bad one as regards crime, and it is, therefore, satisfactory to find in the twelve months in question the number of recorded cases of crime, 76,025, was lower than in any year since 1867. The compilers of the returns state that there was a general falling off in crime, a marked decrease in serious cases, but a growth in minor offences. It is difficult to understand this, as it is also stated in the report that drinking, gambling, and suicide are developing day by day. The part played by these potent factors in the production of crime is a simple axiom in social science, and we all know that where they flourish there must, of necessity be a plentiful harvest of crime.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.

But unto you that fear my Name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth and gambol as calves of the stall (Mal. iv. 2, R.V.)

THIS is a wonderful verse. It begins with fear, and ends with Christians so full of joy that they skip and gambol as calves of the stall. What is it that changes fear into ecstasy of joy? It is God's salvation, manifest as the rising of the sun with its beams of light—a salvation which results in perfect healing for the soul. Unless there is fear there will not be the healing. For those who have no fear, Christ has no healing. Do you fear God's name? My unconverted friend, you have got to face death and judgment. Men say: "We are wearied with so much talk of judgment." They argue, and think they are so much wiser than the Bible. "We ought," they say, "to do right because it is right. Ideal holiness is not the result of fear." It seems to me, the only holiness possible is that which is rooted and grounded in GOD.

NEED OF A DEEPER FEAR.

Many Christians we meet need a deeper fear. Do you Christians remember that the day cometh of the Lord's return? What is the day of the Lord's return to you? It ought to deepen in you a godly fear. Paul was always referring to "that day." That was the great harvest time, when he would begin to enter upon the reaping of all that he had sown on earth. How full his epistles are of allusions to "the day of the Lord." It shed a holy awe over his life.

Paul contemplates the possibility of mixed feelings among Christians on the day of the Lord's return. The question of heaven or hell is settled at the cross for the believer, and not at that day. There is no fear of hell for the believer. Yet the day of Christ's return will be a day of scrutiny and reward, and Paul speaks of some who will be ashamed at the Lord's coming. John says: "Abide in Him, that we may not be ashamed before Him at his coming." I cannot explain how there can be fear. Forgiveness will be real, and inexpressibly sweet when we realise how much there was to be forgiven.

"ASHAMED" AT THE LORD'S COMING.

There may be shame when that day bursts upon us, and the Lord comes. When the blessed dead are called back from heaven to assume their risen bodies, and stand before the Lord in company with transformed figures caught away from the business or street, how will it be with us? In that light of God, where the tricks of self-deception so easy on earth are impossible—when you realize the glory to which God has been calling you, and you are so ashamed that you held to the standards of earth instead of accepting the standards of eternity; when the mists of earth have passed away, and you see things as they are, in the body which was the sphere of your probation—how will you feel then, when you meet the Saviour, and, looking back, you realize the bearing upon the future of the past—misspent or well-spent—which lies behind? Some Christians will be ashamed in that day.

CONFIDENCE BEFORE THE LORD.

It is God's wish that none should be ashamed, but that there should be perfect confidence. We are to be found of Him in peace, without spot or blemish. That day should be the crowning day of joyous anticipation. Will it be so for us? Not unless we are living and walking in the fear of God. It is God's will that every Christian should meet the Lord with joy, and look with gladness to his coming. You cannot look forward with gladness unless you can meet Him with confidence, and you cannot meet Him with confidence unless your heart is established in holiness. You will be ashamed before Him if you are passing your time here, not in diligence, but idleness, not in separation from the world, but in conformity to the world, not "pressing towards the mark," but slipping back into ungodliness.

You ask, Can I meet the Lord with confidence? "Unto you that fear my Name." Jesus wants you to enjoy from this hour perfect soundness of spiritual health. You say, Is that really possible?

THE SECRET OF SPIRITUAL HEALTH.

Look at what John wrote in his third Epistle, to his friend Gaius:—"I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper, and be in health even as thy soul prospereth." Gaius enjoyed such spiritual health that John could desire nothing better than that he should be as successful in business as he was in winning divine favour, and with the smile of heaven his measure would be full. I fear many would shudder if I were to offer this prayer on their behalf, if I were to pray: "Lord, let that man's business ebb and flow as does his love to thee." You would not like your outward affairs, or temporal prosperity, to ebb and flow according to the tide of your spiritual life. Here was this ordinary man Gaius, his spiritual health so sound that John could make it the standard of good wishes on his behalf! God wants you to be a spiritually whole Christian. How? "Unto you that fear my Name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings: and ye shall go forth and gambol as calves of the stall."

THE BLESSING OF GOD'S SMILE.

Turn to Psa. lxxx., and you find three times over the prayer—"Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved." Salvation means, as you know, spiritual health. We shall get saving health when God's face shines upon us, and the light of heaven drives away the mists of earth. A Jewish proverb says: "When the sun rises sickness decreases." More deaths occur just before the sun dawn than any other part of the day. There are peculiar powers of physical healing in sunshine, and when the Sun of Righteousness shines into the human heart it brings spiritual health. It is an immediate and sudden blessing.

It is true that the sunrise is most sudden, and yet most gradual. You know how gradually the morning dawns, chasing away the darkness of night, awakening the birds with their songs and carols to welcome the king of day. Some souls do not seem to get beyond the dawn. They see something of the way of peace, and how far it exercises restraint from the vilest forms of sin. The dawn is chilly, but when the sun rises, sudden and immediate, we feel the warmth and healing which come on the wings of light, as they spread over the earth, carrying warmth, brightness, and healing.

SUNRISE IN THE SOUL.

Has there been a sunrise upon your soul? "Unto you that fear my Name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings." What does healing mean? It means that you can now have definite contact with the Lord Jesus Christ. He wants to enter your heart, just as the sunbeams come into your bedroom in the early morning. When He comes, He comes to heal. It is the fruit of his Passion. "By his stripes we are healed." It is the Holy Spirit entering the chamber of your heart, and preparing for the bridegroom. There is all the difference between a life lived in the cold light of truth and a life lived in the warmth of the Holy Ghost. Will you not say now, "Lord, I want to enjoy the spiritual health I ought to enjoy?" Otherwise, there is a perpetual disease in your soul. The peace of God does not keep your heart and mind.

The healthy man has a good appetite. You have lost your appetite and relish for the things of God. You do not enjoy the happiness of Jesus as you ought to enjoy it.

HEALTH AND WORK.

The healthy man can work hard, is full of vigour and activity. You have lost your love for souls. At one time you were all life to win others—you laboured and travailed in birth for souls, and you were proof against that flippancy and shallowness that is abroad to-day. The healthy man enjoys good spirits. The joy of the Lord at one time filled your heart. Has it passed away? If so, you are not spiritually whole. Jesus says: "Wilt thou be made whole? I did not die for you to live a strengthless, joyless life, groping your way as if there were no heaven above; I died that you might live and walk before Me with such perfect love that in the day of judgment you should have perfect boldness." It is his work to heal as it was his work to pardon Acknowledge your inability, confess his power; say with the Psalmist, "Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed."

OUR FOURFOLD CALLING.*

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, M.A.

"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Pet. ii. 9).

WHILE studying the prophet Malachi lately, I was very much struck with the exceeding contrast between the callings of God's people and their conduct, between the privileged position into which they were put and the poor performance they made of it in their lives. When you see a thing like that in the Bible, you can look out and see it also in God's people always. The one corresponds to the other, as face answers to face in the still water. How well you know how perfectly familiar it is to us to be disturbed and distressed by the evident contrast between the calling which we know is ours as Christians, and the conduct which follows our calling. We have known for the most part the wonderful calling in Christ, and the glorious blessings in Christ, but what about the wonderful life that is to be lived in Christ? Do you not feel for yourselves how often it is true that the calling does not correspond to the conduct of the Christian?

Every one of you who is a Christian in a real sense is partaker of a fourfold calling. You are a chosen generation, you are a royal priesthood, you are a holy nation, you are a peculiar people. But now mark this: "Ye are"—and then there is a gap. We are the first thing, and sometimes we do not become the second; whereas God's purpose is: Ye are in order that ye should be. He means these two to be connected. He connects them, and therefore they are possibilities, and not beyond our reach.

Look at these four things, and you will see that they represent four different aspects of the Christian. "A chosen generation": that tells you about a new birth. "A royal priesthood": that tells you about a new service. "A holy nation": that tells you about a new relationship to the world. "A peculiar people": that tells you about a new relationship to God.

A CHOSEN GENERATION.

First of all, then, Christians are a chosen generation. It is a matter of birth, and so we find ourselves starting with the old familiar Gospel texts: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." There is no round-about way, or side path, or second door; there is only one, and that is the way of birth. Here, at the outset, is the title which is put over all God's people, without exception: "Ye are a generation"—souls that have been born again in Christ Jesus.

I was sitting at a luncheon-table next an elderly lady, who said she was much interested in the subject of Keswick. As I also was interested in the subject, we began to talk about it. She said there were some difficulties about Keswick that she did not understand. I then remarked: "Let us begin at the beginning. First of all, do you know that your sins are forgiven?" "Oh, I wish I did!" she replied. I said: "If you have not begun, you cannot go on: that is quite clear." There was a very old friend of mine sitting at the same table, dear to many of you here, and who used to preside here sometimes—old Mr. Bowker—and he said—this is a good many years ago—"That lady wants to learn lessons of holiness, and has not yet found forgiveness of sins." And he added, "There are many like her." It is no use people wanting to enter God's service who do not know his salvation. He does not want people to go out as witnesses if they do not know. In a law-court, men are told to stand down unless they say, "I know."

A FAMILY SECRET.

Look at the second point in our subject. We are told, "Ye are a chosen generation"; not only a generation, but a chosen generation. Of course, that is the same word as elect; and election is a trouble to many people. Dear Theodore Monod once said, "Election is a family secret, which all inside the family know about, and those outside cannot understand." Is it not beautiful that it should be a family secret? And here it is attached to the family name—Chosen Generation. You were born into the family, and when you are there you find you were chosen to be born into the family. It is what God was always saying of his people. You see the thought in Deut. iv. 37: "Because He loved thy fathers, therefore He chose their seed after them." Again, Deut. vii. 7, 8: "The Lord did not choose you because ye were more in number than any people, but because the Lord loved you." Also, Deut. x. 15: "Only the Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and He chose their seed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day."

You must be elected to something, if you are elected. An election implies at once a purpose for the election. God never meant us to sit down and say, "I am elected," and then that was to be, so to speak, a full stop. And yet that is what people have done. There is no sense in that. How it ought to stir our hearts to say, "Am I a member of his generation? Then I am elected." What to? It is not a thing to trouble people outside. You have not got to label your churches outside that only the elect may come in, but when they are in the living Church you should let them know that they are in because God has elected them. Certain people make election a ground or reason for stopping outside, and they say, "I do not know I am elected." You had better tell them what a sharp American wit once said, "I never heard of anyone being elected who was not a candidate first." If people say they are not elected, tell them to be candidates, and to put their names down for election. God never puts election as a barrier to shut you out; it is always a blessing to shut you in.

GOD'S PURPOSE FOR HIS PEOPLE.

Now, then, a chosen generation. What to? Just look at it in a series of passages. Shall we begin with Rom. viii. 29: "Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate"—that seems to come to the same thing—"to be conformed to the image of his Son." That is the first thing. 1 Cor. i. 27-29: "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence." That is the second thing. Eph. i. 4: "According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love." 2 Thess. ii. 13: "We are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth." Look again at our Epistle, 1 Pet. i. 2: "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." These are God's purposes for you—elected to be conformed to the image of Christ; elected, and yet in yourself so weak and helpless, and foolish, that no flesh in you or in anyone else could glory except in God; elected, that you should be holy and blameless; elected, that you should serve God in obedience and sanctity.

You cannot come into the Father's family without at once coming into the Father's purpose. He has something for every child in his household to do; every several member of his mystical body, every several son and servant of his household, has something to do, is elected to this wonderful purpose of serving and glorifying God. It is a thing to be known. Then remember, it is a thing to be shown. Look at Col. iii. 12: "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, &c." Put on. This is to be shown. There is the uniform. If you put it on to-day, every one of you, every article of it, do you not think that when you go back to your homes people would see a difference in you at least?

A NEGRO LAD'S TESTIMONY.

A striking testimony was given by a little negro servant in that faithful missionary Moffat's life. There was a little negro lad brought to know the Lord. One day he came to Moffat in great distress because the watch-dog had eaten some leaves of his Testament, and he was weeping over it. Moffat told him it was not so serious a matter as he thought; he could get the lad another Testament. "Oh, it is not that, massa; there is more!" "What is it?" "Well, before I knew anything about that Book, when I hated someone I wanted to kill him; but when I got that Book into my heart, and when a person did me wrong, I loved him and prayed for him. I am afraid that now the dog has eaten some of that Book he will love his enemies and let the flock be eaten up!"

It was wonderfully simple. He did not quite discern the difference between the physical eating and the spiritual, but what a testimony he gave to the real results of finding God's Word more than his necessary food! What a witness that was that he was one of the elect of God, that He had caused him to put on such bowels of mercies, that when men hated and wronged him he could only love and pray for them, and he seemed to think that it needed no effort to do it!

A ROYAL PRIESTHOOD.

If there were no service to be rendered, there would be no need for priests. It was not until the tabernacle was set up that the priesthood was instituted. The service had to be defined and described in God's own words, and the priests had to be pointed out by God's own call. "No one took this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God." The position was not of man's earning or deserving, but of God's grace. We read: "Ye are . . . a royal priesthood"; we have not to wait for it; we are a Royal Priesthood, as well as a Chosen Generation. It belongs to the whole Church of God. There is not a single word in the New Testament to limit the designation to a certain portion of the living Church of Christ.

TRACE THE TERMS.

See where the phrase first comes from: Ex. xix. 5, 6, "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then . . . ye shall be a kingdom of priests and an holy nation." These words were spoken to Israel in the wilderness of Sinai. When this and other titles were given to the people they had all been under the blood, had come out of Egypt, and had crossed the Red Sea and been brought near to God. It was when these things had happened, and Israel knew that they had happened, that the Lord said, "If ye obey my voice ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests." St. Peter in the New Testament seems to have taken for granted that the Christians would obey God's voice and keep his covenant, for he says, "Ye are a royal priesthood." It is impossible for a soul really to enter into this service of royal priesthood unless it has, in the spiritual meaning of things, been under the blood, and come out of Egypt, passed through the Red Sea, and been brought near to God.

In Exodus the term is "kingdom of priests"; in Peter "royal priesthood"; in Rev. i. 6 you find in the A.V. "kings and priests"; and in Rev. xx. 4-6 "They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. . . They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." Here we have two things side by side—priesthood and kingship, kings and priests, or Royal Priesthood.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE!

If we really believe that we are going to reign with Christ, and that the title of royalty is given to us—then Noblesse oblige! Many a thing we ought not to do just because we are kings. Mrs. Amanda Smith, the coloured Christian from America, said twenty years ago, "I am a daughter of the King of kings," and her life was, I think, full of the marks of royalty. Let us notice some aspects of this priesthood, from Deut. x. 8: "At that time the Lord separated the tribe of Levi, to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, to stand before the Lord to minister unto Him, and to bless in his name, unto this day."

Here is a fourfold description of the priesthood; and first of all comes bearing the ark, which was part of the priestly service of the sons of Aaron. Now remember that when Saul of Tarsus was converted, Ananias was sent to tell him of forgiveness of sins, and the message of the Lord to his servant was that Saul was "a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear my Name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel" (Acts ix. 15). Recall also 1 Cor. vi. 19, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you." It is a wonderful calling, full of glory to the willing and obedient servant, and full of terrible awe for the unwilling and disobedient.

BEARING THE ARK OF GOD.

If an ambassador does disgraceful things, the name and honour of his King are affected; and so when one who is known as a Christian, called to bear about the Name of God, his body being the temple of the Holy Ghost, does mean or "shady" things, what is come to the priesthood of God, how is their holy crown cast off from their forehead, and the name of their Master dragged through the dust?

Between whiles, perhaps, the priests of old may not have been very careful; but when they had to bear the ark they would take great care to be properly garbed and cleansed. If we are true Christians, God's name is put upon us, and his Spirit is within us. Our duty, once and for all, is to arise and do the will of God, and not to see how close we can live to sin and its ways.

Christians assuredly need not go searching among the rubbish and filth of all the teachings and ways of this world. We must in every way avoid them. God's Spirit within us will enlighten us as to what we must leave off, and what we must leave behind. Many a soul has got into the mire by analysing the mire. We should keep above the mire. Day by day questions of conscience are arising; if we would bring them to the tombstone of the word, "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost," many of them would be solved in a moment.

"Let the peace of God be umpire in your hearts" (Col. iii. 15). Multitudes of things ought not to be named among us; and we are safer to let the Spirit keep us in his own holiness, going where He leads, and witnessing for Him where He puts us.

STANDING BEFORE THE LORD.

Secondly, the priests had "to stand before the Lord." When the Queen of Sheba visited Solomon, she said: "Happy are these thy servants which stand continually before thee." There is no place of happiness like standing continually before the Lord. What power it brings with it! Elijah, when thinking that he was the only man in Israel true to God, had to stand before Ahab and his wicked queen and false prophets. What gave him boldness to declare the judgments of God? "As the Lord of Hosts liveth, before whom I stand." He knew that God was before him, and between him and his enemies. I thank God the message came to me early in my life of service—"Remember, God is among your hearers." Other hearers are of little account. If we realise that we are standing before the Lord, we shall shake ourselves loose from many fears, and be saved from many perplexities.

Another step—"To minister unto Him," in the priests' office, of course. That is a wonderful calling! That which the ministering priests of old times had in type must be ours in antitype. They were water-washed and blood-sprinkled, clothed with the new garments of purity, girdled with the girdle of service, and adorned with the bonnet (or mitre) of intercession.

THE MINISTRY OF BLESSING.

The last step is "to bless in his Name." Perhaps this is the most blessed service of all. When Abraham was told "I will bless thee," he was told the smaller; and when "I will make thee a blessing," that was the larger. There are many Christians who are perfectly content with being blessed, and do not care much about being made a blessing. The soul bearing the ark of the Lord is expected to go out and bless in his Name continually—not merely in hours of active service, but in the silence of home life, and at times of recreation. I know one soul who said he was drawn to the Lord because he could be a Christian and be merry. It should be part of the work of blessing in his Name to lead other souls to Him.

It is told of Dr. Chalmers, the Scotch divine, that he always prayed for one of his people who was going wrong, and at whom he never could get by personal contact. At length, the man went to him, and said he was converted. "But I never spoke to you," said Dr. Chalmers. "No, but you looked at me, and with such pity in your eyes," rejoined the man.

"THIS HONOUR HAVE ALL THE SAINTS."

Remember that these things are not for a priestly caste—not only for those called to the ministry, but for every single member of the royal priesthood of God. I heard of a woman who was in great trouble, because bound as she felt by a certain sin. She was a Roman Catholic, and the priest chose to say he would not forgive her. She went away in bitter grief, and, like a lost child crying in the dark, called upon God that He would forgive her. The peace of God's forgiveness came into her heart, and she rose up rejoicing. She refused to go to the confessional, and after some weeks the priest looked her up, and she said: "Oh, sir, the sin you would not forgive, God has forgiven." The woman's neighbours saw the change in her life, and they said: "She has been a good woman since she left that church." Because she found the Lord, that woman became somehow a messenger of the Lord of Hosts, and her neighbours sought the word of truth at her lips; and she became a messenger because she had found her way into the Lord's Priesthood.

In 1 Peter ii. 5, we find another aspect of the priesthood: "To offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." While there are beautiful and glorious things in the service of the priesthood, yet the first thing is to offer up spiritual sacrifices. Note Rom. xii. 1: "Present your bodies a living sacrifice."

NOT DISOBEDIENT.

Rev. GEORGE WILSON.

"I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision" (Acts xxvi. 19).

ONE is burdened for you and for one's-self in view of the possibilities of a very great risk in this Convention week. It is to many a blessed time, with its holy fellowship, with its teaching and pleading of the Spirit, with its openings into the presence of our loving Father, and with all the possibilities of the future. And yet it is possible that many in this vast audience shall go through the Convention week, and never get a true Spirit-quickened vision of the Lord Jesus Christ; and if that is so, you had ten thousand times better never have come to Keswick at all. But one is burdened with a sadder thing than even this—the possibility that where the soul-searching, and the heart-correcting, and the life-enriching vision has been granted, we go away disobedient to the heavenly vision. If that is so, then the guilt and the disaster is greater than if there had been no vision granted at all. And let us remember that the visions that St. Paul saw, he saw in the open; they are seen by you and me wholly and only in the Word.

AWAKENING AND CONVICTION.

Let me turn to two or three of those wonderful visions to which the Apostle was obedient, because I think that a glance at them may help us individually. First, St. Paul was obedient to the heavenly vision that arrested him, that convicted him, that changed the whole current of his being, and adjusted his whole life toward God. In Acts ix. 3-5 and xxvi. 19 we have an account of the vision which led to St. Paul's entrance into the kingdom of God. But I desire for myself to see that what I have to do when entering into what is called the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ, is exactly similar to what I had to do when I entered into the kingdom of God through the strait gate of conversion. The Christian who comes here begins by asking God to arrest him—not to arouse him; that is a very different thing. Many people are aroused and not arrested, but the soul is brought before God to that position where it says, "I cannot go on till God deals with me, and He must deal with me now."

I say, the soul needs to be convicted, and I believe that many are confounding things that differ when they confound the awakened soul with the convicted soul. The awakened soul is really an enlightened soul, but the convicted soul is a soul that comes into acquiescence with God concerning its state in his sight, and we enter into blessing by that, and then we are dealing with God, and dealing with Him so that He will change the whole current of our being. I regret when people speak of a second cenversion, but I am not surprised at it. The change is so remarkable that sometimes enlightened souls cannot get any phrase to express the fulness of the change, but a similar phrase to what they used when they were brought to the Lord at first. There is no such thing, I need not say, as a second conversion. That here and now I must, like St. Paul, have a thorough-going adjustment with my God in relation to what He has to give to me, and to what He requires of me—that, I believe, is obedience to the heavenly vision.

ENLIGHTENED, EQUIPPED, EMPOWERED.

But, secondly, Paul was obedient to the heavenly vision that enlightened him, that equipped him, that empowered him for holiness, witness, and all aspects of service. "Behold, he prayeth" (Acts ix. 12), "and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight." Then verse 17: "And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and, putting his hands upon him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way that thou camest, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." Enlightened, equipped, empowered for witness and for all service. Brethren, we have come here for that, and if we miss that we miss everything. Keswick is but a week which we might call—"Rest and be thankful." But the journey is ahead of us, the battle is ahead of us, the world is outside of us, and our share in the evangelization of the world is yet to be done largely, and for that we need enlightenment, and equipment, and empowering.

THE ENTHRONEMENT OF CHRIST.

I should like to speak briefly of a third vision. St. Paul was obedient to the heavenly vision in which he saw his self-life crucified and slain, and his heart cleansed for the enthronement and reign of Christ. See in 2 Cor. xii. 1-10, a vision with a wonderful combination of realities in it; paradise, the third heaven, balanced by the thorn in the flesh, a vision closing with a sufficiency of grace, wholly grace, only grace, self and the self-life renounced and crucified, that the power of Christ alone might rest and work through his redeemed servant. I fought this truth till I was driven from my trenches with a crushed and broken heart. I stood up for the defence of the self-life in the name of a half-blind philosophy, and it was only when I saw that a Christian conqueror is a conquered man that I came to see that the place of the self-life was the place of the denied and the place of the Crucified.

THE BURDEN OF SOULS.

But St. Paul had another vision. He was obedient to the heavenly vision in which he saw the appalling condition of a lost world. He took up and carried to the last the burden, not of theological problems, but the burden of perishing souls. Herein lies one of the great differences between us and our fathers. We are burdened with problems; they were burdened with souls. And the dearth of conversions in the Christian Church and the slow progress of believers in the spiritual life, are, I believe, owing to this as much as to anything; we servants of God in the ministry are crushed with problems, and not burdened with souls. Oh, let us get this vision of Christ to-night. I love the truth, and want to know it; I want my creed, O God, to be like cut crystals, that I can stand by even to the last, and if need be, die by. But life is more than thought, and character and conduct bigger than creed. I want to take up, as St. Paul took up through this vision at Macedonia, the burden of a perishing world, and I never want to lay that burden down till my little work in life is over.

THE PRIZE OF THE HIGH CALLING.

The last word I have to say is: St. Paul was obedient to that heavenly vision in which he saw the finished course securing the Master's approval, in which he saw the mark for the prize of the high calling in his own perfect conformity and likeness to his Master, and in which he saw the prize itself in the gift of the crown by his Master.

Look Christ in the face, and say: "Master, what is my work for Thee? That I want to do, and that I want to finish, and Thou knowest so well the end of my life and the work that I have to do, that I believe with my whole soul that there is time for me to finish it, but not a moment to be lost, not a word to be wasted, not a single faculty to be misspent." The prize itself will be the crown of righteousness, which the Lord shall give to me, to you, and to all who "love his appearing."

Reclaiming Japanese Convicts

By Mr. TANEAKI HARA.

The following narrative reaches us from the pen of the "John Howard of Japan," a sketch of whose career we published (with portrait), June 16, 1898:—

WHEN I was labouring in a branch prison in the province of Kushiro, Hokkaido, the twenty-third year of Meiji, robbers and felons to the number of about 200 were brought there from Tokyo. I was much surprised to find one among them who had a New Testament. I wanted to know how he came by it, and called on him at once. He was tall and his face depraved, and I could easily see that he was a wicked and cruel man. I asked him first the cause of his having the Bible, but he made no reply. I learned that he was ignorant, and knew not even a letter. When I asked him again, he replied, "This book is my valued possession." The manner of his speaking made me more earnest to know what it meant. He said, "I am a great law-breaker, but heaven has not forsaken me, and delivers me from sin. I had been robbing and stealing much, but one day there was nothing to get, so I broke into a girls' school in Yokohama with my companion. There was a great cry that robbers had broken in. We went into one of the rooms, and there found a little girl sitting in her bed engaged in earnest prayer. We took many of her things, but she quietly raised her head and watched what we were doing; and when we took one of her dresses, she said, 'Grant me the privilege of keeping it myself, and you may take all the rest of my things. My mother gave this dress to me. It was woven by her own hands. There is nothing to me more precious than this.' It was not a valuable dress, so we put it on the end of a drawn sword and threw it at her. When we were going away, someone came after us, calling with a girl's gentle voice. We stopped and heard her say, 'Please take this book and read it.' It was only a book, and thinking it was no good to me, I threw it back at the little girl."

THE HARD HEART BROKEN.

When relating this to us his face became flushed, and he seemed very much ashamed; but he continued, saying, "I lay concealed next day in a secluded place; but the day after went to visit my accomplice. He had already been arrested, and a detective was then waiting in the house. When I called at the door a little old man came out and inquired my name. He told me to go with him to the police station, as he had something to ask me. I remember well the events of that day. I was exceedingly ignorant, but knew enough to understand that I was going to be arrested, and that there was no escape. I was taller than he, and had strength sufficient to enable me to escape easily; but I felt that he had some power which I could not resist. After a little while I found myself in a prison. It seemed as if I had just wakened from sleep. I was carried before the police officials the next day. The injured one, that little girl, was there, and after the cross-examination was over the superintendent of police showed me a book, and asked me if I had seen it before. He said, 'This is a religious book which was given to you by this little girl to make you repent of your deed, and to lead you in the right way. As soon as she heard you were arrested she came here to give you this book. There is no other wicked person so favoured as you are in the gift of this girl. Remember, therefore, the precepts of Christianity and repent of your sins.' I was then quite broken in my heart, but I did not know what Christianity was. However, I believed it was a religion of righteousness. That weak little girl's fearlessness and filial love pierced my heart very deeply. Therefore I have repented, and in order to reward her love I carefully keep this Bible which she gave me."

When he had finished his story, I returned thanks to God that his power, the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and the salvation of Christ, extend even to such a sinner, and then I persuaded him to read the Bible constantly. Also, I taught him the Japanese characters. Unfortunately the time came that I could not live near him longer, but I instructed him constantly by letter. I was much pleased to find by his letters that he did not forget to read his Bible. The letters were written better each time, and showed general improvement of mind.

There have been 365 men—all robbers and thieves—whom I have helped during the two years past. The number now in my home is sixty-two. Twenty-one others have made homes, and already have families. Some of these are in Tokyo, while others have gone into the interior. Among the 365 there are twenty-three who have committed offences a second time, and twenty whose whereabouts are now unknown to me. During this time eleven have run away from me. But eight-tenths of the whole number have regular and lawful occupations. This charity work is based upon the words of Peter, "Silver and gold have I none . . . In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." It is not by the power of money that I do this work, but I let them follow their own occupations. Though I have been helping such a large number I have not given them any money, but have allowed them to have only things which they earned themselves. Some are blind, deaf, and crippled, but all support themselves by their own labour.

I desire that those who read this will help my work by contributing to its support. I have charge of the superintendence of this work, and there is a committee of nine counsellors.

"Go-ahead Japanese Students."

THE work of the late Rev. John B. Brandram (C.M.S.) at Kumomoto, Japan, in the spiritual interests of the great numbers of young men students found at that educational centre, has borne good fruit. Among other undertakings, a house and land was secured as a permanent home for the Y.M.C.A. which had been formed, and it was with reference to this effort that Mr. Brandram wrote in the course of a letter which appeared in our issue of May 16: "So strongly did one friend interested in the work feel the need for action, that he advanced a little over £400, trusting that this money lent for Christ's sake will be subscribed by friends." Mr. Brandram passed away at the close of last year, just before starting home for England for a well-earned furlough.

Rev. Sheldon Painter, writing from Kumomoto, under date July 2, says:—"The work among students here goes on under God's grace as when Mr. Brandram was with us, and the Y.M.C.A. members are as much in earnest. We are expecting a return visit from Mr. Mott in October (D.V.), and he will be pleased to see the result of his advice re the formation of the home for students here. I do not think I shall be betraying any secrets when I say that the friend who advanced the purchase-money was Mr. Brandram himself, and his family cannot afford to give this sum of £300, which it was his intention to collect during his furlough this year.

"The matter is being taken up here by the Central Committee of the Students' Y.M.C.A., who propose to aim at raising £100, and to call the hostel by Mr. Brandram's name as a memorial to his devotion and work here. If the students succeed in raising this amount it will leave £200 to be raised, and towards this I have received one gift of £25. Subscriptions will be gladly received by my mother, Mrs. Painter, Milverton, Malvern; or they may be sent to the Brandram Y.M.C.A. Fund at the Church Missionary Society, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. We trust that friends will enable us to secure this hostel, and at the same time repay one who can no longer ask for himself."

The Indian Famine.

THE condition of affairs in certain districts of India constitutes an urgent call for our prayers and sympathy. As time passes, the situation necessarily becomes increasingly grave, and we regret to observe that the communications which we are receiving from missionaries in the parts affected are of a character calculated to arouse the saddest apprehensions.

ORPHANS AND WIDOWS.

Rev. H. Fairbank, of the American Marathi Mission, writes from Ahmednagar under date July 18:—"We hope and pray that there may not be the same failure of September rains this year. But even if these do not fail, there will be no abatement of the distress until the harvest comes. Every day the terrible condition of thousands is growing still more terrible. Relief camps are provided liberally by Government, and the numbers at these camps increase daily. But all the distress cannot be relieved in this way. Numbers, too, come to us for medicine, and we must give it to them. Another need that came out of the famine, but will not cease therewith, is that of providing for the hundreds of destitute children who came to us, and who are in our care to train up to Christian ideals, and for Christian service. We have 1,500 children on our hands in the Ahmednagar district alone."

Miss Fulcher, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, at Manmad, wrote on July 10: "We have had famine here again this year, and still have about 100 outside people being helped, beside all our own widows and orphans. There has been very little help received this year, England's thoughts are elsewhere, apparently; so now we are obliged to turn away in large numbers people who think us very cruel. 'How,' say they, 'are we to live until the grain is grown?' A question which is indeed hard to answer."

Mrs. E. H. Lawson, M.E. Mission, Aligarh, writes, in the course of an interesting letter, under date July 19: "Only this last week has the rain begun in these parts, and it is very slight. Famine has never ceased in some parts, and in the north of our own district acute distress prevails. We have over 900 orphan boys and girls and widows. The industrial work is growing; our boys are beginning to turn out good shoes. There will be no difficulty in getting orders for hundreds of pairs. We have one loom at work, and have ordered three others. This is the women's work, which is now on a firm industrial basis. We wish business men would become interested in our industrial scheme. If we can set it going, in five years we could support every worker here, and all the orphans."

A SERIOUS PROSPECT.

Dr. W. J. Wanless, American Presbyterian Mission, Miraj, writing on July 3, said:—"I regret to report that the outlook is much more serious than it was this time two years ago. Good rains have fallen in many parts of the Deccan, but in the native States of Miraj, Sangli, Jamkhandi, Jath, and Mudhol, the rains since June 1 have amounted to only a few inches. Very few of the farmers round here have ventured to sow, fearing the loss of the seed grain which they may need for food later. People are clamouring for work at less than half the usual rates. Coolies are glad to accept work at one anna (i.e., one penny) per day."

Mr. J. H. McNeill, Jungle Tribes Mission at Dohad, wrote on July 5: "The present condition of our people is anything but cheering; there is not much sign of the monsoon yet; a few local showers caused some of the more venturesome to sow, but the sun is withering up what has appeared above ground. Whenever the monsoon breaks properly, if it does so at all, we hope to proceed much on the same lines as last year, i.e., giving seed grain and the loan of bullocks to plough. In some villages rain has fallen plentifully, but in others not a drop. The clouds bank up in the morning, and scatter during the day, without any rain falling."

A Church in Tribulation.

Since the compulsory retirement of the missionaries from a great part of inland China, a deep and prayerful interest has been awakened in the suffering native church; and we give the following extract from a report of the Methodist New Connexion Mission at Tien-tsin, which is representative of the state of affairs among many other communities.

WHAT THE MEMBERS SUFFERED.

WHAT of our members all this time? It is impossible to give details of what they passed through. The very least they suffered, with but few exceptions, was banishment from their homes—destitute of food and money, loss of all their earthly possessions—including in many cases their autumn harvest, and the burning and destruction of their little homesteads—which even yet are not rebuilt. What is predicated of the faithful saints in Hebrews xi. was true of them: "Cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonments; they were stoned, sawn asunder (one of our poor women had her hands and feet severed from her body before she died). They were tempted (the choice was given to recant or die!), they were slain with the sword, they wandered in deserts and in caves . . . of whom the world was not worthy."

DEATH OR RECANTATION.

In Kai-ping circuit alone forty-five people connected with our mission were murdered, twenty-three of them in one little village named Ho-chwang, two in Hi-ping-fu, one at Chang-kih-chuang, one at Pao-kwan-ying, six at Pai-kia-tien-tsi. In Pai-kwan-tun we had eight martyrs, in Ku-yeh two, and in Lu-tai two, and in almost all of these opportunity was given to recant. To the honour of the Church in China and the praise of Almighty God, they "counted not their lives dear unto them," for they endured as seeing Him who is invisible. From the old man of seventy-four years of age to the little fellow at Pai-kia-tien-tsi, ten years of age, these people, when confronted with life or death, chose death with Jesus rather than life without Him! No, they chose what men call death! They have now the perfect life. Of those who remain many interesting facts could be told, but time and space forbid. Let it be enough to know that they had death staring them in the face, but would not deny their Master. By God's mercy in some remarkable way they were spared. One of our Jung-ping-fu elders, named Wang-pao, had seen his son of seventeen years beaten to death, but would not himself recant. Beaten and bruised, he was appealed to three times, "Will you recant now?" "No! No! not if you kill me," was his reply. Then, as an obdurate, obstinate fellow he was thrown into prison, and remained there about three months. Later, the Russian troops, led by a Roman Catholic priest, took possession of the city!

SOME WHO WENT BACK.

There were, however, some cases of apostacy, but, in comparison with those who remained faithful, a very insignificant number. Six or seven at Jung-ping-fu were induced to deny their Lord, and so escaped any suffering, but here is the strange thing about it—they have mostly returned to the chapels now, and evidently regard themselves as Christians still. From Ying-ho-Chang a company of members alarmed at the appearance of things, voluntarily went in a body to Lan-chou Yamen, and there handed in a declaration of having forsaken Christianity, returning to their homes to burn incense in the temples. These same people had previously asked the preacher to strike their names off the church register, but he refused to do so, placing the roll of membership before them and handing them pen and ink, telling them to erase each his name for himself. The reductio ad absurdum of this case now appears in the ringleader of this company charging the ringleader with neglect of duty, because, forsooth, he will not take any steps to secure for them repayment of the money they spent in journeying to Lan-chou to renounce their faith.

At Pai-kuan-tun four of our members recanted, and have not been near the church since. Two others, one of whom was formerly employed as a colporteur, after escaping the Boxer rising, have now embarked on a course of wickedness, and, in company with several Roman Catholics, are engaged in visiting from place to place, and by means of threats extorting money from Boxer families. At Tang-shan I am glad to report not a single case of apostacy occurred. The members have, since September, been regularly meeting for worship in the ordinary way, and on my last visit there, two weeks ago, there were fully seventy persons present at the ordinary Sunday service. At Chia-chi the preacher I sent found thirteen members regularly meeting for prayer. In every part of the circuit, except Pei-tang, the work has already been resumed for some time past. The scattered remnants have been gathered together, and as far as opportunity serves, the preachers are cheerfully engaged in "building up the waste places, and restoring paths to dwell in." M.

The Subjects of the Incas.

WHEN we say that there are 3,000,000 of aborigines in South America waiting for the first ray of Gospel light, the thought will strike most people that these comprehend all the uncivilized tribes of Brazil, the Chaco of Argentina, Patagonia, and Tierra del Fuego, wandering savages speaking scores of different languages. Such, however, is not the case.

We refer to the descendants of that once famous race, the subjects of the Incas, who, prior to the Spanish Conquest, were much farther advanced in civilization than they are to-day.

Speaking of the treatment that they received at the hands of the Spaniards, whom they welcomed with their characteristic hospitality, the historian, Las Casas, says: "The ills that were suffered by the Indians were so many and so great that it is impossible to conceive of them. They killed them, robbed them, and enslaved them, without necessity and without motive. For forty years they treated innocent creatures with the cruelty of hungry wolves, tigers, and lions, oppressed and destroyed them by all the means they could invent. . . . The inhuman policy of the conquerors has caused to die twelve millions of Indians. The greed of gold has been the cause of this horrid butchery. The conquerors have not known any other god, and, to fill themselves with riches, they have treated as vile refuse the people who received them as the messengers of heaven."

Since the conquest the progress of the Indian has been in the line of deterioration and moral degradation. Nor could it be otherwise. They are downtrodden by the landowners, who hold them as serfs; they are wronged by corrupt authorities, who always find in the right the man who has money; and they are oppressed by the clergy, who cannot drain contributions enough out of them, making them pay tithes long since abolished, and requiring of the children unpaid service on account of masses for their parents and relations long deceased.

The Gospel is the one and only lever that can lift them out of their misery, and that it can do so there is no question. What the Gospel has done for others, it can do for them. The only question is, Who will take it to them? Languages known to be dying out, and from the first spoken by smaller numbers of people, have been taken up. Will no missionary society give some attention to the three millions of Quechua Indians who speak one language, and one that can never die? A. M. Milne.

Home for Miners, British Columbia.—Away in the Far West the need is felt of a rest and refuge to which miners may resort after the toils of the day, free from the temptations and dissipation of the saloon, which, unfortunately, attracts and makes shipwreck of so many of this class. Christian workers have already attempted to reach these, opening their own homes to welcome such as would accept the invitation, with the result that a few have been rescued. By establishing a Home with a room for reading and writing, it is hoped to bring many more under good influences, and within sound of the Gospel or the power of sacred song. Those who desire to participate in this effort to bring back wanderers and prodigals, may communicate with Mrs. A. M. Fraser, 166, Donald Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

The McAll Mission.

IN May, 1893, the late Dr. McAll was called home after a very brief illness, dying at Auteuil, Paris, where he had resided for many years. It was arranged that the burial should take place in the cemetery at Passy, near by, and in the same grave in which were the remains of his late helper, Rev. G. Theophilus Dodds. It was afterwards felt to be a mistake thus to have arranged the interment, as, though the matter was settled with the full consent of Mrs. McAll and Mrs. Dodds, further examination proved that it was not possible to erect a suitable memorial to Dr. McAll over that grave, the existing memorial to Mr. Dodds, which was subscribed for by the people of the Paris halls, occupying all the space of the tomb.

It is now proposed to erect a suitable memorial elsewhere. Mrs. McAll purchased a plot of land in the Cemetery of Père la Chaise, close to the spot where the work was originally commenced. It is now greatly to be desired that the remains of Dr. McAll should be removed there, and a memorial stone erected, which may record his name and his ardent longing to win France for Christ. Under these circumstances, it has been thought by some of Mrs. McAll's friends that by bringing the matter under the notice of those who were personally acquainted with her husband a sufficient sum may be raised to cover the expenses of re-interment, and of the stone, for which it is estimated that about £160 will be required. The treasurer of the undertaking is Mr. W. M. Kirkus, Garsdale, Lodge Lane, Princes Park, Liverpool. Should more than is required be received, the balance will be given to the funds of the McAll Mission, in France.

Madrid Orphan Schools.

SINCE my dear husband was taken home our eldest son has been called to carry on the work which he began. He had been working with him for the last four years, so that all goes on as formerly, when the pastor had to leave us on his many and arduous journeys in order to gather the money for his varied works of love.

A few days ago the widow of a teacher from the country who had heard of what my husband had done for a poor lad who came to us many years ago, and is now Director of the Provincial Institute of Caceres, came to ask if we could receive her boy of fourteen. She is unable to do anything at present for his maintenance, but hopes that when she gets the small pension to which she is entitled she will be able to pay the half of the £12 a year which his maintenance will cost us.

Another application reached us on Saturday from a poor Protestant family in the south, to receive their son free of charge and to educate him for the work of the Lord.

A little motherless girl was brought to us a few weeks ago, and thus far her father, though full of the best intentions, has done nothing towards her support.

During the last two months we have received four lads in the Orphanage, whose mothers pay the small board required. We expect at least three new boarders for the secondary school in the beginning of September.

In the other branches of the work we can also see encouraging signs of progress. Our Spanish fellow-labourers have shown us much sympathy and affection in the sad days through which we are passing. J. E. Fliedner.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.—A meeting was held on the day of the Crystal Palace fête, in the Skating Rink, at which the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke presided, and spoke of the encouragement given to temperance workers by the widespread interest manifested in the Children's Bill. Miss Large, of Raratonga, who had spent nine years in the South Sea Islands, described her temperance work among the British sailors entering the ports. Miss Wright, of Mansfield, took for her topic the newly-formed Teachers' League, which is now being worked by the W.T.A.U. on the lines so successfully followed on behalf of nurses and deaconesses.

To My Larger Congregation.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

I HAVE written to the readers of The Christian from many parts of the world, but never from the midst of scenes quite so fascinating as these. On this exquisite afternoon we are steaming along the coast of Asia Minor towards Smyrna: above us glorious sunshine, around us the blue Ægean, as blue as fancy could paint it, and as smooth as a sea of glass. On our left the coast along which St. Paul walked till he was taken up at Assos, and on our right Mytilene (Acts xx. 14, 15). One would hardly be surprised to see come on board this vessel a little group of Hebrews, the central figure of which would be the great Apostle, with Aquila and Priscilla, Timothy and Luke, in loving attendance.

It certainly has been a most interesting trip, not only because of the extreme beauty of the Mediterranean, but because of the association of nearly every point with classic or Scriptural incident. The Bay of Naples was full of memory of the Apostle's journey to Rome. Capri was the palace-home of the Emperor Tiberius; Stromboli was as active in those days as it was when we passed it in the evening twilight, and every five minutes there was an irruption of lava; the Euroclydon burst on us without warning, as we were coasting along the southern promontories of Greece, though without deflecting us from our course, as it did the Alexandrian corn-ship.

I shall never forget the view of Athens in the sunset; one could almost discern Mars Hill from the deck of the steamer; there, at least, were the noble outlines of the Propylæa, and the Piraeus, between them Hymethus, and yonder the Bay of Salarius, where the Greeks defeated Xerxes (supposed by some to be the Ahasuerus of the Book of Esther). The moonbeams shone gloriously on the waters, which were once bathed with the life-blood of the slaves who were driven into battle by the whip, and of the heroic Greeks fighting in full view of home. Thence we sailed for through the Dardanelles and the Sea of Marmora. Yonder was Troas, where Paul dreamed of another invasion of Europe, and there the point where Xerxes built his bridge of boats, and there the scene of Leander's swim to visit Hero; finally, Constantinople—the fairest scene in the world! Oh, that first view! As we slowly sailed in sight of the city, the day was dying in perfect splendour. Scutari and the buildings where Miss Nightingale nursed our soldiers on the right; and on the left, the city with its three quarters. Stamboul on the one side of the Golden Horn, and Galata and Pera (the European quarter) on the other. Those on deck pointed out to us the buildings of the old Seraglio, the Mosque of San Sophia, the Palace where the Sultan's brother is kept in close confinement, the Palace of the present Sultan; but what pen can describe those crowded mosques, minarets, palaces, public buildings, gardens and parks; the shipping in the Golden Horn, and nearer, the variety of costume, of Turk, Greek, Jew, European, Sister of Mercy, Greek priest, closely-veiled women, and workmen of various trades. We spent seven hours in visiting the various sights, but over them all the shadow of Islam, the espionage, the fear. We were followed by a Turkish soldier, until the harmlessness of our intentions became apparent; and as we made the round of San Sophia, with the eyes of 200 students upon us, and closely watched, we could not but commit ourselves to God, that by no mistake we might arouse the fanatical hatred with which the Mohammedan regards the Christian.

It is most interesting to remark the strenuous endeavours which have been made to obliterate the Christian emblems from the walls of San Sophia. Under the Moslem symbols are the clear outlines of the Cross. Yonder is the Madonna, and there a Greek text. In spite of all that has been done, the great building is still more Christian than Moslem, and looks, not towards Mecca, but towards the East. But in all the world there cannot be anything more magnificent than the porphyry columns from Baalbec, and the green marble columns from Ephesus. The walls are covered by tesselated work of the richest description, and the whole building is waiting for restoration. On one of the columns is the mark of the hand of the conquering sultan, who, 400 years ago, directed that 12,000 Christians should be massacred within these walls. He dipped his hand in the martyr blood, and left the impression on the stone, and surely that blood has never ceased to cry to God.

I cannot speak too highly of the kindness shown to us at the Home of Rest in Smyrna, founded by Mrs. Constantine. May God reward his servants for their refreshing welcome!

The late Bishop Hellmuth.

A LIFE of no ordinary interest was brought to a close on May 28 last through the death of Dr. Isaac Hellmuth, formerly Bishop of Huron. Born at Warsaw, Poland, over eighty years ago, and of Jewish parentage, he was trained along the most approved Hebrew lines. The best schools and teachers were sought out, in order that his secular and religious education might be as thorough as possible; and the proficiency which he early acquired in Biblical and Talmudic, as well as other branches of learning, fully repaid and reflected credit on the pains bestowed on his upbringing. Sent in 1837 to the University of Breslau, he added much to his attainments, especially in the departments of classical and Oriental scholarship.

Among the professors at Breslau at that time was Dr. S. Neumann, a Hebrew Christian, who exercised great influence among students of his own race attending the university. In the case of Mr. Hellmuth, this contact led to a careful study of the New Testament, to an examination of Christian teaching, and ultimately to his full and humble acceptance of Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour. This step naturally changed the whole trend of his career, and after his baptism at Liverpool in 1841, by Rev. H. S. Joseph, he spent three years in a close and earnest study of Christian theology. Proceeding then to Canada, Mr. Hellmuth carried with him many letters of commendation, including one from Dr. Sumner, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, and was ordained in 1846 by Dr. Mountain, Bishop of Quebec.

Eight years were spent in educational work as rector of Sherbrooke, and at Bishop's College, Lennoxville, as professor of Hebrew and Rabbinical Literature, and later as principal. Circumstances having called for the establishment of Huron College at London (Canada), Bishop Cronyn placed it under the presidency of Dr. Hellmuth, who was also made Archdeacon of Huron. His energy and wide outlook led him to open the Hellmuth College for boys, which so conspicuously met a want in the community that it was followed in 1869 by a similar institution for young ladies.

In 1867 Dr. Hellmuth was appointed rector of St. Paul's Cathedral, and at the same time to the deanery of Huron. An important recognition of the esteem in which he was held was his election in 1871, by a large majority in the diocesan synod, to the position of Coadjutor to the Bishop of Huron, with the title of Bishop of Norfolk, and with the right of succession. The death of Dr. Cronyn in the following year placed him in sole charge of the diocese.

Dr. Hellmuth's enthusiam in the cause of education led him, in 1877, to bring forward a scheme for the establishment of a Western University in connection with Huron College. He paid more than one visit to England for the purpose of enlisting support on behalf of this institution, but before he left Canada, in 1883, he had the satisfaction of knowing that the diocese could rely on its own resources in the matter. His own private means were used unsparingly for the furtherance of higher education, as well as on behalf of other good causes.

There was widespread regret throughout the diocese of Huron when Dr. Hellmuth resigned his position, and announced his intention of returning to England. For about a year he assisted Dr. Bickersteth in the duties of the diocese of Ripon, was rector and rural dean of Bridlington from 1885 to 1891, combined with the perpetual curacy of Bessingby from 1888. Appointed by the Colonial and Continental Church Society to the chaplaincy of Holy Trinity, Pau, he remained there for a few months, afterwards accepting the rectory of Compton Pauncefote, Somerset. In 1899 he was, however, obliged by failing heath to retire from active duty.

Bishop Hellmuth received the degree of D.D. from Lambeth and Lennoxville, and that of D.C.L. from Trinity College, Toronto. He was the author of "The Genuineness and Authenticity of the Pentateuch," "The Biblical Thesaurus," and "The Divine Dispensation," works for the writing of which his early training in Hebraistic and Jewish literature qualified him in a special manner.

He was a staunch Protestant, and a warm supporter of the Evangelical section of the Church of England, while at the same time living in true brotherhood with those from whose opinions he differed. His well-stored mind and sound judgment led many to seek the benefit of his wise counsel. He married, first, Catharine, daughter of the late General Thomas Evans, C.B., who died in 1884; and, secondly, in 1886, Mary Louisa, second daughter of Admiral the Hon. Arthur Duncombe, and widow of the Hon. Ashley Carr-Glyn, who survives him.

The Bishop leaves, by his first marriage, a son and a daughter.

An Important Movement.

THE Hebrew Christians of all denominations in London have taken the important step of forming a Hebrew Christian Alliance, with which the old Hebrew Christian Prayer Union has been incorporated. A large general council and two working committees have been established, and a larger consulting council is being formed in the provinces and abroad. Rev. Maxwell M. Ben-Oliel has been unanimously elected President, Revs. Dr. Rosedale, LL.D., and Isaac Levinson (Secretary of the British Society), together with Mr. Marcus Bergmann (Translator of the Bible into Yiddish), Vice-Presidents; Rev. Aaron Bernstein, B.D., Treasurer; and Rev. S. J. Deutschberger, B.A., and Mr. Henry Barnett, Hon. Secretaries.

Combined and energetic action is to be taken to bring the Gospel to bear upon the Jews and Jewish movements, especially upon Zionism. Meetings and services are to be held in the various mission halls and churches in the East End, and addresses and lectures given by Hebrew Christians in connection with the great festivals and fasts of Judaism. An address is to be presented to Dr. Herzl and other leaders of the Zionists, expressing sympathy and goodwill.

Rev. Len. G. Broughton, D.D.,

OF ATLANTA, GEORGIA, U.S.A.

DURING a visit of a few weeks to this country, which is now coming to a close, not a few of our readers have enjoyed the pleasure of becoming personally acquainted with Rev. Dr. Len. G. Broughton, of Atlanta, Georgia. In the course of his brief career of eight years in the ministry, he has won for himself a high place among aggressive evangelistic workers in America, and his name has become known also in this country as that of one whose methods are conspicuous for originality and crowned with the true success which marks the man "sent from God." When it was the writer's privilege a few days ago to meet Dr. Broughton, he found himself in the presence of a man not anxious to speak of what he had done, but with a testimony to give of the goodness of the Lord and of what He had wrought through the instrumentality of his servant.

Dr. Broughton was not educated for the ministry from the outset. His first intention was to be a physician, and he holds the degree of M.D. from the University of Kentucky. Ten years ago, however, he was laid hold of by the love of Christ so completely that from that time forth all else had to take an entirely secondary place in his life. He became a preacher in season and out of season; and though his message was a simple one, it was in the power of the Holy Ghost. Step by step the path of duty and privilege was opened up, until it was felt by himself and others that he had indeed found his proper sphere when he was invited in 1893 to undertake the pastorate of Calvary Baptist Church, Roanoke, Virginia. Four years of steady, faithful work followed, during which there was built up one of the largest evangelical congregations in the state, the members received into church fellowship for the first time, on profession of their personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, numbering no fewer than four hundred.

A wider field was opening up before the young preacher when the invitation reached him which led to his transference to his present charge in Atlanta, Georgia. The circumstances of the new congregation were not altogether promising. Although surrounded by the residential portion of the city, the building was small and unsuitable. In six months it was found inadequate for the accommodation of the people who came; and, after serious deliberation, the somewhat unusual step was decided on of dividing the congregation. Led by the pastor, a colony of about 250 of the younger members left the parent congregation, and migrated to the centre of the city. They were not people of wealth, but they had a deep sense of being in the line of obedience to the will of God, with a determination of purpose fitted to carry them over many difficulties. Before even a building fund had been opened, they made themselves responsible for the purchase of a large and valuable piece of land, and for the erection of what is now the Baptist Tabernacle, with seating capacity for 3,700 persons.

The foundations of the work were laid in much prayer and waiting upon God, and He has honoured the faith and consecration of his servants. Now the actual membership is about 1,000, and including the outside missions the children under instruction in the Sunday schools number 2,000. During this period of a little over three years about 500 persons have been baptized; and the congregation is now regarded as the largest in the southern and middle sections of the United States, as well as one of the strongest in the whole country. Besides an assistant in the pastorate, a lady missionary, who gives her whole time to the work, is specially charged with the care of the young people, and one of the most satisfactory features of the whole organization lies in the way in which the hearts of the children are really laid hold of for God, and the boys and girls, with comparatively few exceptions, accounted for in the adult congregation.

Asked about his experience of the sense of parental responsibility, an unusually grave look came over Dr. Broughton's face as he confessed frankly that this was one of the most serious questions he and other ministers had to face. The rate at which life is lived in America prevents parents from even knowing their own boys and girls as they ought to do; and among Christian people the state of matters in this respect is still far from satisfactory. In the Tabernacle, however, a special effort is made in the Sunday schools to make up for this lack as far as that can be done by outsiders; and the pastor testifies with gratitude to the very early age at which a real and intelligent interest is manifested in spiritual things.

REV. DR. BROUGHTON.

Closely bound up with this question of the care of the young is that of the observance of the Lord's Day, which is more and more being recognised in America as being of vital importance. Corporations and other public bodies readily grant leave for the holding of entertainments and other means of disturbing the rest and quiet of the day; but in very many cases the Churches are able to exercise a powerful restraining influence, and to prevent people from putting into force even powers where perfectly legal. With gratitude Dr. Broughton testifies, that while there still remains much to be desired, in Atlanta they have "nothing like the London Sunday" for distractions and business.

The problem of the crowds of careless young people frequenting street corners and other public places, is a serious one in Atlanta as it is elsewhere; and special efforts are made so to adapt the evening services so as to attract these as much as possible. Subjects are announced in which they are known or likely to be interested. Public questions are freely discussed, and Dr. Broughton intends to begin in September a series of addresses dealing with the experiences and impressions of his present tour through Europe. At these evening services the audiences average 3,500. The music is made as attractive as possible, the well-trained choir of about a hundred voices being supported by an orchestra of fourteen instruments. Hymn-sheets are printed for every service. The address is informing on the subject announced, while at the same time it is gathered round a "red hot" preservation of the Gospel. An after-meeting quickly follows, to which about a thousand people usually remain, and a fifteen minutes talk is given on personal salvation. The seed is the Word of God, and the seal of the Spirit is set on the effort in souls brought into light and liberty of the truth as it is in Jesus.

The work is deep. More conversions have taken place among grown men than among any other class. At the open-air services former gamblers and drunkards are always ready to tell of the wonderful way in which the grace of God has been manifested towards them. In addition to all that is going on at the centre—and there is something in progress every day and every evening—four outstations are maintained, and converts find full scope for their efforts. The Sunday morning services are specially devoted to the instruction and upbuilding of the flock of God; and in addition there is a weekly training class for Christian workers, in which the Bible is systematically studied, and help given in the conduct of Christian work generally. It is hoped that this may grow into a regular training school with a trained faculty. The Tabernacle stands for more than a mere denominational creed. No point is found to have so much power in the securing of righteous life and conduct as the preaching of the coming of the Lord.

A special season of refreshing is the annual Tabernacle Bible Conference and School of Methods which meets in March. In addition to the congregation itself, large crowds of Christian workers gather in from the surrounding country. Along with noted leaders belonging to the States, Rev. F. B. Meyer took a prominent part in the proceedings this year, and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's engagement to be present, if the Lord will, on the coming occasion is hailed with deep satisfaction. While conversions are expected and granted at all times, an extra time of ingathering has each year been seen in the autumn, when a special mission is held, and the help of outside evangelists enlisted.

Dr. Broughton is enthusiastic in specific temperance work, holding that the Bible touches a man's politics just as much as his prayers. The Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian denominations in Georgia have a joint committee, whose aim is to secure the election to the legislature only of such men as are pledged to vote for prohibition. Already 121 out of 132 counties in the state enjoy prohibition, and it is hoped that a general measure may be secured in the near future.

The affairs of the Tabernacle are arranged on a thoroughly business-like footing. Financial matters are under the care of the twenty-six deacons, and last year the contributions for all purposes amounted to 12,000dols. While the work has been mainly carried on among the masses of the people, the Lord has in connection with it graciously touched the hearts of several of the leading men in the city, and they have been very liberal in its maintenance. There is a well-arranged business room, with a regular short-hand-writer and typist, who is available for the preparation of reports, as well as for the conducting of correspondence and other clerical work. In addition to a missionary and station in China, a home is maintained for helpless and infirm women and children, and plans are complete for the opening in autumn of a Christian Nurses' Training Institute for home and foreign missionaries. An important item in the week's business is the publication every Tuesday of Dr. Broughton's sermon on the previous Sunday morning.

Dr. Broughton impresses all who meet him as a man of striking personality. To use his own words, he will allow neither man nor church to build a wall of conservatism round him. He has been a keen observer during his visit to this country; and while not putting his own views forward too readily, has given utterance to several shrewd criticisms of British methods and ideas. Of the vigour and freedom with which open-air work is carried on here, he speaks in the very highest terms; but he cannot understand why the same liberty should not be carried into the regular indoor services in larger degree.

"His."

By A. S. BOOTH-CLIBBORN, Amsterdam.

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for He shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. i. 21).

THE SECRET OF PURITY, PEACE, AND POWER.

IN this mighty promise-command which came straight from heaven through an angelic messenger every word counts. We cannot afford to lose one. Nor can we afford, if any one word has a natural priority, to overlook that fact. And yet it is to be feared that this is habitually done nowadays, and with sad consequences to Christianity.

In the wielding of this all-important passage the strongest emphasis is generally laid upon the word save, whereas it ought to be laid upon the word his, as a little reflection will render evident. "He shall save his people."

This might seem to be a small matter, and yet it may be sufficient to account in large measure for the powerlessness and the non-apostolic character of much of the Christianity of the present day, and to give the answer to many of those individual questionings and complaints which we hear: "Why am I so weak? Why do I know so little of the fearlessness and the fire of early Christianity? Why am I not saved 'from' sin? Why am I not regularly under the Pentecostal power and enduement?"

The custom has too much prevailed of putting the question of one's own or others' salvation before that of absolute loyalty to Christ. The glory of God is greater than the salvation of souls, just as the whole is greater than the part. The question of being Christ's, of being "His" in the full sense of the term, is of infinitely more importance than the question of what we or others shall obtain thereby. "Hallowed be thy name" must come before every "forgive us." "Thy kingdom come" must precede every "give us." "Thy will be done" must take precedence of every "deliver us." "The kingdom" must come even before "the power and the glory." "In the beginning, God"

MUST BE THE FIRST PRINCIPLE

in all our religious life as well as the first line in our Bible. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be added unto you."

The Divine order has, therefore, placed the ownership before the salvation. When the King has his own, then the salvation is inevitable, and the "all things" are assured. When Christ is the Alpha he is also the Omega. There is no more to be added. He is all.

Salvation is by faith. And full surrender and entire obedience are but forms of faith. And when we, with calm sober resolution, accept that God is what He is, and treat Him as we cannot but treat Him when we know Him, then doubt vanishes as a thing of the night. When we have sought Him in his Word with all our hearts, in order to know Him as He is, there is, so to speak, a backbone of faith in us which all the forces of earth and all the powers of hell cannot bend, much less destroy.

The weak-kneed, feeble, doubting condition of which so many complain may be traced to want of right teaching and right practice in this respect. There is something radically wrong when Christianity

IS NOT TRUE TO ITS TYPE.

People trouble far too much about their own souls and their own lives. Certainly the apostles did not. They had "laid aside" that weight as well as every other. They looked death in the face daily with calmness. They sang in the stocks. They counted not their lives or anything else dear unto them. They did not keep themselves; they were "kept by the power of God."

The true Christian is saved from selfish fears and selfish sorrow and selfish suffering. The only thing he would fear would be to deny his Master in any form, or to put the word or will of man above that of his Lord. His passion is the glory of God, and this necessarily leads him to win souls.

The more of Christ we have the more cross we have. Spirit-taught souls learn this early. They reckon with this fact all along. They do not expect to have the smile of God, and that of the world or worldly-minded Christians, at the same time.

What boundless joy comes often in moments when the cross is the most painful—and what a feeling of perfect security in the midst of danger. How real then does Psalm xlvi. become, with its triumphant "therefore will we not fear."

Two kinds of awakenings are reserved for the two classes of Christians. Both are sad. But the sadness in the one case is pure. It is not for self, it is for the precious cause of Christ which is dearer than life. It is that of the Christian who at conversion took for granted that an absolute religion was the only real kind, and that there could never for a moment be a question of refusing God anything, and who resolutely set forth to act out the "HIS" to the uttermost, literally laying down friends, home, money, life—all, and never allowing entrance to one doubt about one word of God, or about the absolute rights of Christ, the Saviour King, or admitting any disloyal anxious care about material things.

Then the awakening! To realize that compromises with worldly wisdom or popular tides of prejudice or passion may be admitted, that "allowances must be made," that "we must not be too extreme," that "people cannot live at that level"—and to find such disloyal, God-dishonouring ideas received as current coin. Then perhaps the hour of agonizing perplexity quickly followed by the triumph and the perennial joy. "They loved not their lives unto the death; wherefore, rejoice ye heavens."

But the other awakening—how sad!—that of the Christian who, having perhaps been converted on an inferior level, or, who having begun well, with the principle of true faith and uttermost faithfulness to God, has at last to awake to find that such coin cannot pass in currency either on earth or in heaven.

How much better to begin by being his, his alone and for ever. Those who did so can testify that it has blessedly simplified matters. It is true they have had to learn further on in their soul's career that it is always (as in the case of their Lord) their acts of greatest loyalty to God, or truest devotion to man, which have brought upon them the greatest suffering—all unmerited—and that this will always be so. They have thus had the honour of drinking the cup of which He drank, and have found that it renewed their strength as giants. The Comforter having shown them that it was indeed his cup, they took it up with gladness and faith.

Be his, and all doubts will vanish. It is solemn indeed, but it is blessed. It is absolute, it admits of no alloy; no plausible pleas of "interests of State," or of Church, can ever affect their loyalty to Christ. It is the secret of Pentecost. The 120 saw clearly in that upper room that they had either to be his or to be heathen. There was no choice. The light was too great. And to return to a dead Judaism meant spiritual death.

And there is no such thing as sanctification and fire baptism without being his, his only, to be, to do, and to suffer all the will of God. But thenceforth can be allowed for a moment to render imperfect the soul; sacrifice becomes a privilege, and religion a pleasure. Christianity is never true till this is so.

They had up to that hour lived for their salvation, and the result was failure. But now they lived for Him, and were certain of success, knowing that He lived evermore for them. In his blessed example, in his life, death and resurrection, they had seen what it had meant to be God's, and now they decided to be his even as He was the Father's. It had been his last prayer before Gethsemane. Their failure—who had lived for what they could obtain; his success—who had lived for what He could win for his Father; his triumph, even in and over the cross of shame and the grave of exile—showed them what a God Jehovah indeed was, the utter absurdity of all doubt, and the utter criminality of all reserves.

Oh, the blessedness of being his! This is the secret of that strength of character, that power for suffering, that unflinching loyalty to truth, that soundness of mind and view, that holy equilibrium, that absolutely unconquerable something which God gives to those who have settled once and for ever, the question as to whether they could live at all without Him, or be ever satisfied without being his, HIS, HIS, as Lord over all, blessed for evermore.

Sacrifice—a Privilege.

No mortal tongue can e'er describe
The freedom of the soul,
When passed beyond all earthly bribe
To God's complete control.
All things are his, yes, life and death,
Things present or to come;
In Christ he draws in peace each breath,
In Christ arrives at home.

Baptized with fire for holy war,
To nothing can he hold,
For Christ alone to shine afar
Through Christ in danger bold.
The power of God his life receives
To bring on earth his heaven;
To him who Jesu's Word believes,
Jesus Himself is given.

When such a King our souls doth choose,
And offers us his throne,
Surpassing strange that we refuse
To be our Lord's alone.
Oh, never speak of sacrifice,
Where all is privilege!
How strange that "dross" should e'er entice
To such a sacrilege.

Arise, the holy bargain strike,
The part give for the Whole;
Oh, reason not with one dislike,
But trust Him with your soul.
All things are yours when you are his,
And He and you are one;
A boundless life in Him there is,
Whence doubt and fear are gone.

"Prayed In."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

EVA LORNE entered the drawing-room on the New Year's evening to meet the guests, who, according to custom, had been invited to her home. Stephen Lorne was a solicitor of good repute, and his house was a rendezvous for all society lovers. His wife was a centre of the fashionable circle, and a charm to all. Wealth and enjoyment seemed to be the god they worshipped, and appearance and general deportment became the subjects of supreme interest.

But for the past two months a new influence had come about the proud mistress of Wellesley Hall. Across her way had chanced to pass one who was an ardent worker in the Sunday-school, in whose company she spent several hours.

"You would indeed make such a good teacher, with your winsome manner, if only ——" said Eileen Elder.

"Only what?" quickly said Eva. "Speak frankly, I love candour."

"If only your soul were filled with God's Spirit," answered Eileen, "and for that I have been praying ever since I first met you." With a smile of almost contempt, Eva dismissed a subject "so absurd," as she called it.

Scarcely a week later, an old friend of her father met her, and after a conversation he ventured to remark:

"I have a great wish about you, Mrs. Lorne. Your father was a godly man; he craved for you the best things. I wish to see you using all your talents and graces for Christ, and for this I pray most earnestly, and shall continue to pray until——"

Here Eva interrupted. "Oh, dear, what? Really, Mr. Crawford, you trouble me."

"Until you are prayed into the kingdom and service of my Lord and Master," he added, as though not heeding her remark. From the day of meeting this Sunday-school superintendent, a great power swayed her being. She could never tell how, any more than the flowers can tell how the sun calls them into beauty and fragrance. The things that had charmed her began to lose their fascination, and a desire for the real and true pleasures grew stronger and deeper; until she, the worldly woman, turned to the Bible for counsel and light. And it was not long before her soul awakened into a new life, in which Christ was Lord and King. Her husband was amazed, but seeing her joy and intense earnestness, he WOULD NOT CHECK OR THWART HER.

With all the eager desire for her guests to understand her new-found blessing, she received them that evening. The brightest of all present, she soon found it impossible to keep silence without being false to herself and Christ. The early part of the evening passed with music and singing; then suggestions for cards, and talks about theatres became the order, till Eva Lorne could no longer maintain silence.

Gracefully stepping across the room, she attracted the gaze of admiring friends; then gently spoke in the hearing of all:—

"Perhaps you will pity me, yet I must tell you the truth. I cannot go to the theatre again: card-playing and balls I now resign. Do not start in blank amaze, I am only parting with these things to take larger gifts of real and lasting enjoyment. I could not explain what has happened; but all is changed, and my life henceforth belongs to Christ."

"What next!" gasped one dazzling woman in the room.

"Dear, dear!" sighed another. The chatter was resumed, and music followed, but no one proposed either dance or cards. Eva was brighter than any, and all declared afterwards that, whatever it might be, she evidently had the best of it, and none could be vexed with her.

. . . . .

Six months later a young woman, lay dying; now and again she listened, and then put her tired head back on her pillow.

"Mother, I know she will come; I feel her prayers are helping me. It is well she was prayed into the Sunday school."

"What do you mean, Nellie?"

"She told us, mother, it was the superintendent and a teacher who knew her, who by prayer drew her in, and the love of Christ constrained her. She always seems to bring a message from heaven." At that moment Eva Lorne, the subject of their talk, appeared. A richer glow than ever shone on her face.

"Nellie, the class sent loving words of cheer to you. We surround you with prayer. Shall I read you our afternoon lesson?" Eagerly the girl drank in each word, and followed the soul-lifting prayer. "Teacher, I see the difference now. When I was in that other class, the teacher said she came because she had been asked. Sometimes she was late, and often quiet and dull, but you seem all on fire with love to us and to Jesus. I think the prayed-in teachers are the best, don't you?"

"I do, Nellie dear; it is such difficult and responsible work, it should be entered by prayer and consecration." Turning and taking the sorrowful mother's hand, Eva comforted her, and talked of the re-unions of heaven.

. . . . .

The wintry sunshine gleamed out over the grave, as they laid the gentle scholar to rest, a few weeks later. The class of eighteen girls stood near with the teacher; and when the last act of love was performed, they accompanied her to Wellesley Hall, for Nellie had left a parting message. Assembled within the spacious room, Mrs. Lorne took out her class-book.

"I SHALL PUT A STAR BY NELLIE'S NAME,"

she said, "for she will ever shine among us, as a bright example, and we cannot cross her off. Now I have her own message to read." With eyes constantly dim from tears, she read the note written two days before the beloved girl died.

"Dear Fellow Scholars,—When you receive this note I shall have passed away from you all, away from time into eternity. I thank God for a teacher so full of love to Jesus that it overflowed to us, and led me to receive his salvation. It is all joy and glory with me, and I want you to know it too. Some of you do begin to feel your need of Jesus; will you tell Him so, and then tell teacher, and make her glad? I am very weak; rejoice for me when I go home to Heaven, and make sure you all come to me there.—Your loving friend, Nellie."

For a little while no one could speak. Eva laid the note down, and knelt for prayer, saying as she did so—

"Will those who yield themselves to Christ fully now, say so?" Quietly and earnestly each one said "I do," and a prayer of devotion took them all to the Saviour. The teacher's heart throbbed with thankfulness, and it was a hallowed hour they spent together.

The consequence was soon seen, for each one became a missionary to find another, and the superintendent received the large class into the new room appointed for Eva Lorne. "Ah, my friend," he said to her after school, "my wishes and prayers have been answered, and now your husband is coming to help with our young men."

"I know, and I am truly thankful; there is no difficulty that prayer cannot remove, for Jesus said, 'If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.'"

. . . . .

Wellesley Hall was lighted with new cheer and joy as another New Year's Day came round. There were some present who were there on that day when Eva startled them by her frank confession, for they had felt the power of her Christian life. The old friend and superintendent and Eileen Elder, with other workers, spent a long-to-be-remembered evening, and that night the master of the house gave himself unreservedly to the service of the Lord.

Welcome Home, Canning Town.—"Wherefore also we make it our aim, whether at home or absent, to be well-pleasing unto Him" (2 Cor. v. 9, R.V.), was the text for the month given out Tuesday, July 6, by Miss Child at her Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, to be remembered by them in the various ports to which they are bound. Mr. W. Luff commented acceptably on the text, after which a Christian soldier, a Russian sailor, and others gave interesting testimonies.

Not Afraid of Evil Tidings.

By LAURA S. SOOLE.

Authoress of "Disappointment—His Appointment," "Meant unto Good," "Acquiescence," &c.

"He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed trusting in the Lord" (Psa. cxii. 7).

"Whose hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely and shall be quiet from fear of evil" (Prov. i. 33).

"Not afraid of evil tidings"—Help us, Lord, in peace to rest,
Fixed on thine unfailing promise, though suspense our faith may test;
Shrinking not from any lesson Thou in tender love may'st teach,
For Thou knowest how to answer prayer for those beyond our reach.
(Matt. xv. 26-28.) (Luke vii. 7-10.)

"Not afraid"—because Thou lovest all our dear ones more than we,
And "the end from the beginning," in their life-plan Thou can'st see.
Troubles which we would have spared them may be blessings in disguise,
Working out a glorious future, though now hidden from our eyes.
(John xiii. 7.) (1 Cor. iv. 17.)

"Not afraid"—though war or tempest, pestilence or fever's breath,
Threaten those united to us with a love as strong as death:
"Covered in the day of battle"—shielded from all evil things,
Are the souls whom Thou dost shelter, 'neath the shadow of Thy wings.
(Psa. xci. 5-7.) (Psa. cxl. 7)

"Not afraid." Yet Lord Thou knowest love is strong and faith is weak,
And our hearts too often tremble with a dread, we dare not speak;
Only to Thyself we breathe it, knowing Thou dost comprehend
All the fears and sad forebodings that with faith and hope contend.
(Psa. lvi. 3.) (Lam. iii. 56-58.)

Then in hearkening to Thine answer—words of comfort, peace, and rest
Fill our hearts with sweet assurance—"God is Love"—his will is best;
Should the heaviest tidings reach us, can they really "evil" be
If our loved ones are safe anchored, tossed no more on life's rough sea?
(1 John iv. 16.) (1 Thess. iv. 13.)

Shall we doubt that Thou hast given Life beyond the life we craved—
That our prayers are fully answered—Thou eternally hast saved?
Help us trust, then, O our Father, whatsoever tidings come,
That reunion will be granted, here, or in our Heavenly Home!
(Psa. xxi. 4.) (John vi. 39.)

Protestant Press Agency.

DEAR SIR,—It cannot be too generally known that there is in existence a subtle and deep-laid scheme to muzzle the Press in the interests of Popery. The English Church Union has a "Press Committee," charged with the duty of writing to the Press in defence of Ritualism and bastard Popery. The Papists have a "Catholic Truth Society," and "Apostolate of the Press," for the object of tripping up unskilful Protestants, of controverting statements, and of making Popery look attractive and innocent. Then there are various organs, some of which deal in scurrilous abuse and misrepresentation, and so deceive the public, and prejudice them against Protestants, but all working towards the same end, viz., the obscuration of the Gospel of Christ. And over and above these, there are Papists on the staff of nominally Protestant papers.

Under these circumstances it behoves all lovers of the liberty of the Press to rally round the Protestant Press Agency, of which I am temporarily the president. If some of your readers will help us by donations and subscriptions we will be glad. If others will send us newspapers containing matter requiring answers that will help the cause. If others will help us by writing themselves to country papers that will be a good thing.—Yours, &c.,

The Wesleyan Conference.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Wesleyan Conference closed its sessions in Newcastle-on-Tyne on Wednesday, the 7th inst. During the last days, considerable attention was given to the appointments of ministers in the circuits for another year. Between 700 and 800 ministers, by reason of the triennial system of itinerancy, change circuits each year, and it will be easily seen that the claims of the circuits on the one hand are not satisfied, and the special fitness of the ministers on the other, fully considered, without great patience and skill. This year further difficulty also arose because of the readjustments that were made necessary by the appointment of several circuit ministers to departmental office. Rev. John S. Simon, the chairman of the Bristol District, was taken from circuit work to fill the vacancy in the governorship of Didsbury College, caused by the lamented and early death of Rev. James Crabtree. The important appointment of the superintendency of Wesley's Chapel, City Road, was left vacant by the transfer of Rev T. Ferrier Hulme, M.A., to Kingswood School, as successor in the Governorship to Rev. Wesley Brunyate, who also died during the year. These and other cases caused considerable difficulty in the stationing of ministers. Eventually Rev. Dr. Wenyan, the famous Chinese missionary, was appointed to Wesley's Chapel, and Rev. Thomas Rippon became Mr. Simon's successor in Bristol.

ORDINATION SERVICE.

Thirty young brethren, who had already served a probation of four years in circuit work, in addition to their term of training in one or other of the colleges of the Connexion, were solemnly set apart for the work of the ministry in an Ordination Service, conducted by the President of the Conference in the High West Street Chapel, Gateshead. Dr. Thos. Allen, the ex-President, delivered an eminently powerful and practical charge to the newly-ordained ministers. He took as his text Col. iv. 17: "And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry, which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it." He urged upon the young men before him that they should have a definite and lofty conception of their holy calling. The ministry was a Divine institution, and the true pastor received his call directly from Christ.

Dr. Allen guarded his hearers against any sacerdotal theory of the Christian ministry. Their theory of the ministry excluded the doctrine of apostolical succession. Such a doctrine, as held by High Churchmen, was external and mechanical. But they believed that those men who had been chosen by Christ, qualified by the Holy Spirit, and solemnly set apart by their brethren for ministerial service, were in the true and spiritual succession. Dr. Allen proceeded to give practical advice in regard to self-discipline, mental culture, and the development of the spiritual faculties. He urged the faithful and systematic study of the Bible.

After dwelling upon some of the human conditions of a successful ministry, Dr. Allen solemnly warned his young brethren that self-deception was much easier than they often imagined. While pursuing their professional routine they might decline in grace, until they were left with their gifts and habits, and with little else. Possibly that was the reason why so many ministers lacked the power to convert men. The Spirit of the Lord had left them, and they knew it not. "Brethren," said the ex-President, "let us judge ourselves as we pass on through life, so that we may not be condemned with the world at last!" An impressive charge was closed by a quotation from Dr. Dale, showing that generous impulses, exhausting labours, natural powers, and learning would achieve nothing without the gift of the Holy Ghost.

LABOURERS WHOSE TASK IS O'ER.

The obituary service in memory of ministers who have died during the year was marked by much solemnity and deep feeling. The list of the honoured dead was a long one, and contained the names of some of the most distinguished ministers of modern Methodism. In all, thirty-six ministers had died during the year in Great Britain, five in Ireland, and six in the foreign mission field. The touchingly appropriate hymn was sung, "Come, let us join our friends above," and the names of those who had crossed the flood were slowly read by the secretary of the Conference.

The President said death had been busy in their ranks. He had taken the ripe shock of corn in his season, and the early-ripened and maturing grain. An unusually large number of names had been removed by death from the Legal Conference—including the first name and the last, William Arthur and James Crabtree, the oldest and youngest members of the legal hundred. Then one after another of the members of the Conference rose and bore testimony to the services and qualities of those of the departed ones whom they had personally known. Many pathetic references were made. The three names around which many loving tributes gathered were those of the ex-Presidents, "highly honoured and warmly beloved"—William Arthur, Benjamin Gregory, and Charles Garrett. Rev. J. T. Slugg spoke of Dr. Gregory's rich intellect, in which logic, poetry, and philosophy, were all suffused with a holy passion. William Arthur's great gifts, and splendid service to Christian missions, and to Protestant and Evangelical truth, were fully recognized. Many were the testimonies borne to the unique influence of William Arthur's "Tongue of Fire." Rev. Thomas Champness recalled with what eagerness he read it in his old missionary days in West Africa. Dr. Watkin, the Australian representative, said that they would find it in the libraries of local preachers and ministers all over the great continent from which he came. Dr. Allen spoke of a conversation he had many years ago with a leading Congregational minister, who told him that on the Sunday after first reading the "Tongue of Fire," and when preaching under its influence, twenty members of his congregation were led to join the Church.

Dr. Stephenson rejoiced that he had been permitted to be associated with Charles Garrett in temperance work. His tender heart made him passionately indignant against the woes and sorrows wrought by the liquor traffic, yet his advocacy of the temperance movement was with a sanity, reason, and candour that was an admirable example to all who felt strongly on the question. Rev. Thomas Champness said that Charles Garrett belonged to his calendar of saints, and quoted the touching saying of a working-woman in Lancashire: "We will have to go and hear him; nobody dries our tears like Charles." A wonderful blessing came to the poor, the distressed, and the sorrowful when Charles Garrett climbed the pulpit stairs.

Many testimonies were borne to the fine qualities of James Crabtree, Wesley Brunyate, and John R. Hargreaves. Old missionary labourers like John Malvern, who preached the Gospel in Fiji in the old cannibal days, and Charles Roberts, who did a great work among the Zulus, were not forgotten. Time failed for the tributes which many brethren would have gladly paid to others of the departed, fellow-labourers whose names are written in the Book of Life.

Chelsea Preventive and Rescue Homes. —Year in and year out for fifteen years past have these Homes been caring for young girls, the subject of misfortune or moral peril. The experience gained by the committee emphasizes the importance of the section of the work represented by the word Preventive. More "preventions" simply means fewer "rescues," and it is an incalculable benefit to society as well as to the individuals concerned that the fifteenth annual report can record thirty-six preventive cases dealt with. Where it is too late to achieve this, then the rescue of a young life is attempted, and the report tabulates under this category no fewer than 138 young persons assisted. Some of the instances given are as pathetic as they are saddening, while on the other hand much encouragement and stimulus to faith are to be derived from the results of former years' work. The report, a copy of which will be sent on application, invites kindly sympathy and compassion with poor girls who go astray, and prayers for blessing upon the efforts put forth to protect and to save them.

Discharged Prisoners—First Offenders

THE forty-first annual report of the St. Giles' Christian Mission is entitled, "Living Witnesses," the witnesses in question being magistrates, judges, and others who hold office in the service of the State. As regards what is being done to enable discharged prisoners to regain an honest footing in the world, and also to remove boys—who appear in court as first offenders—from criminal surroundings, Mr. William Wheatley is fortunate in having influential friends to testify to the genuineness and magnitude of the work he has in hand. In a recent number of the Law Magazine, Colonel Sir C. E. Howard Vincent, M.P., tells of something which took place at Scotland Yard—the headquarters of the police force—some years ago, when he was himself Assistant Commissioner:—"Room upon room of unclaimed prisoners' property—or rather property found on prisoners and not claimed upon discharge, as likely to lead to awkward inquiries—remained stocked year after year. The Home Secretary at length approved of its being sold; it realized a considerable sum; and this formed the nucleus of a fund for the assistance of discharged prisoners." This was very carefully managed, and one of those who chiefly assisted in the distribution was Mr. William Wheatley. Speaking of the more general work of the latter, Colonel Sir Howard Vincent adds: "His success has been extraordinary, not only in obtaining employment for hundreds, not only in redeeming hundreds from a life of crime, but also in winning the approval and cordial co-operation of every criminal judge and magistrate in the metropolis."

SAVED FROM PRISON TAINT.

This branch of the St. Giles' Mission is more widely known than that which has to do with ordinary service among the poor of West London; and it is this branch in which Sir Howard Vincent is chiefly interested. It was, no doubt, this which suggested the Probation of First Offenders Act, which the Colonel succeeded in placing upon the Statute Book fourteen years ago. It is remarked that the passing of this measure "greatly increased Mr. Wheatley's work." A far larger number of young First Offenders had to be taken from the courts, and five homes have to be maintained for their training. According to Colonel Sir Howard Vincent's own reckoning, the Act has, in the course of twelve years, conferred benefit on 100,000 persons in England and Wales alone; they have been "saved from the taint of prison, and the State from the expense and trouble of maintaining them." While tens of thousands of pounds are saved, close on ninety per cent. of the cases are found to do well, the subjects being young persons who in former days would soon have reappeared in the courts.

EMPTYING THE GAOLS.

There is no method so effective for the prevention or the lessening of crime as that of turning offenders into honest citizens. The Report before us shows that all the old methods, which have ensured success in the past, have been continued. In the prison itself, at the prison gates, in the breakfast-room on the morning of discharge, in the boys' homes, those who are carrying on this work earnestly believe that nothing short of an acceptance of the Gospel can really bring about the transformation that is desired. During the year 1900, a total of 6,161 discharged prisoners were assisted in various ways to make a new start, and thus regain an honest footing in the world. By preventing the reconviction of such, the cost of maintaining the prisons is lessened, and what is shown under this head in the annual Reports of the Commissioners of Prisons is as striking as it is satisfactory.

Recently more earnest efforts have been made to get into touch with and win the sympathies of probable employers of men who have fallen after being educated to serve in responsible positions, the general result being more encouraging than might have been expected, situations being found for a considerable number.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 18. Acts xi.

PETER was carefully questioned about his entrance into a Gentile house, and his partaking of food there, so strict were the lines of Jewish caste. He sheltered himself under the evident Divine sanction, first of his vision, and secondly of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which had so evidently sealed his words. Let us be daring for God, and be brave enough to follow the cloud when it leads the onward path, though it should make us singular and lonely.

While this remarkable step was being taken in Cæsarea, a not less remarkable movement had been inaugurated in Antioch, the gay, beautiful, and Paris-like city in the north. This was due, not to an apostle, or deacon, but to a few anonymous disciples. On reaching Antioch they preached the Gospel to the Greeks (R.V.); the hand of the Lord was with them in evident blessing, and large numbers were converted. Their theme was the Lord Jesus, their power was the Holy Spirit, the result was in great numbers of conversions.

The choice of Barnabas by the mother-church was eminently wise. Note what he was, what he saw, what he said, and how he felt, and what followed. Well is it for the Church that has men so sincere, so simple, so ingenuous; these are the men to send out on commissions of inquiry and report. In earlier days he had known Saul intimately, who was now quietly, in his home at Tarsus, waiting for further direction, which came through the lips of Barnabas; and so was formed a tie that was to have far-reaching results. Barnabas did a greater deed than he realized, when he introduced Saul to wider service.

MONDAY, August 19. Acts xii.

This chapter is a monograph on the power of prayer. It was the only thing that was left for the Church to do. They could exert no direct influence on the tyrant Herod, whose action was generally approved by the Jewish people. There was no resource but to pray. It was unceasing prayer (5), which continued far on into the night before the day of execution. It was importunate prayer. Yet it was not altogether believing prayer, for when they saw him they were astonished. And herein we may receive great encouragement, for sometimes we are not able to pray the prayer of faith, which believes that it receives. Sometimes we can only lie down in our helplessness and intense desire before our God. We ask again and again, without ceasing, but we cannot be sure of a favourable reply. When that is the case, we may still trust that an answer is on the way, coming down the street, and about to knock at our door. "If we believe not, He remaineth faithful; He cannot deny Himself."

God's answers are never too soon, but never too late. He tests our faith as He keeps us waiting, but his angels arrive in time. Oh for such perfect peace as Peter had, who on the eve of death was sleeping peacefully between his keepers, and thought that he was dreaming, as the doors opened before him. That iron gate has troubled a good many of us before we came to it, but when we reach it, it also opens. Go forward, Christian soul; nothing shall stay thy course, when God bids thee go free. Angels help us whilst we are dazed; but when our own judgment is clear enough to guide us, they leave us to consider matters for ourselves. It is good when servant girls love prayer-meetings, and detect the voices of God's servants, but they should not leave them standing too long on the door-step.

TUESDAY, August 20. Acts xiii.

This also is one of the greatest chapters of this book. It seems as though the Holy Spirit had left the mother-church to some extent because she had centred herself again in Jerusalem, and seemed careless of her great commission to the Gentiles. Here, on the other hand, the Church at Antioch was set on knowing God's will about the vast heathen lands; it had even set apart days of prayer to ascertain the Lord's will; and therefore the Holy Spirit was able to communicate the next step in the great work of world evangelization. Henceforth the Church at Jerusalem recedes more and more into the background, whilst the Church at Antioch is the focus of the light that began to stream over the world.

"Separate me." What a word is here! The Spirit of God speaks as the Supreme Ruler of the Church. Missionaries are set apart by their fellow-believers; but they are called, and sent forth, by the Divine Spirit, who also accompanies them, guides them in perplexity, empowers them in moments of crisis (8), and bears witness to their words (xiv. 3 and Heb. ii. 1-4.)

The first sermon preached in this tour is full of interest. It was addressed to the men of Israel, and those who were proselytes from heathenism; showed that the work of Jesus was in a direct line of succession with all the foregoing history and religious records of the chosen people; and proclaimed forgiveness and salvation through the risen Lord. The results were prodigious—of indignation and rejection by the Jews, of eager acceptance by the Gentile proselytes, of the definite decision on the part of the Apostles to turn to the Gentiles, and of the rapid spread of the Gospel through the entire district. If the disciples were filled with the Holy Spirit so shortly after their conversion, what should not be our experience? (52.)

WEDNESDAY, August 21. Acts xiv.

May not missionaries, and indeed all Christian workers, take encouragement from this chapter? All the persecutions and struggles through which the Apostles and their disciples were condemned to pass, only turned out for the greater furtherance of the Gospel. Then, again, they stayed in each place as long as there was audience granted, though they were quite prepared to move when the door was closed against them. And, better than all, there was a definite and remarkable testimony given by God to the Word of his grace.

It is supposed that the trance of which the Apostle Paul speaks in 2 Cor. xii., when he was caught up into the third heaven, may have taken place while he lay there stoned—truly it would be like our Father to give, as the anodyne for such treatment as he was enduring, visions of which the glow should linger for fourteen years after. The guerdon of that awful scene outside Lystra was the winning of Timothy, who was an eye witness (2 Tim. iii. 10, 11).

The closing verses of the chapter (26, &c.) tell of fulfilled work. It is good when we are able to fill the chalice of opportunity up to the full, with earnest service. But notice how much stress they laid on the Divine co-operation. God had worked with them, and it was by his hand that the door of faith had been opened.

THURSDAY, August 22. Acts xv.

The object of this strong Judaistic clique was to keep the Christian Church as a branch and annexe of Judaism. They had no objection to men believing in Christ, so long as they passed through the ordinance of circumcision and obeyed the Mosaic law. We know just what Paul said to these proposals. The Epistle to the Galatians must have been recited in argument, over and over again, many years before it was actually penned. We can hear him saying, "Behold, I, Paul, say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing" (Gal. v. 2, 3, &c.).

The solemn meetings held to welcome the two missionaries, showed how much importance was attached to their work; and the subsequent meeting called to consider the question which had brought them to Jerusalem was in the highest degree momentous on the after-history of the Church.

There are one or two points alone that can be noticed here. First, they rehearsed what God had done with them (4); then they rehearsed what God had done by them (12). Also, special stress is laid on the Lord's work in and with his servants (17). We are also taught that the present age is an eclectic one, and that the history of the development of the Church proceeds on a preconceived plan (14-18). The leaders of the Church did not hesitate to declare their love for the beloved Barnabas and Saul, although by nature they must have inclined to the more conservative view (25). Notice, also, that the Holy Spirit is expressly mentioned as one with the Church in the decision arrived at (28). How good it is when the decision of a church only expresses the deep counsels of the Spirit! Probably we know this only when we wait before Him in silent prayer. His voice is never heard in divided counsels.

FRIDAY, August 23. Acts xvi.

It is interesting to see how the Apostle received the heavenly guidance. In the sixth verse he felt prohibited from going to the left into the western province of Asia Minor. In the seventh verse he felt equally prohibited from going to the right into the northern province of Bithynia. There was no alternative, therefore, but to go straight forward to the sea coast. Try the doors down the long corridor; if they are shut, go on, and dare to believe that one will at last open, though it be across the sea to an unknown continent. Paul was so devoted to God's work that it haunted his dreams.

Dr. Andrew Bonar used to say quaintly that the man of Macedonia turned out to be a woman. Truly the beginning of the Gospel in Europe was a day of small things—a meeting of a few women by the river side, under the shadow of the trees, but God's greatest trees spring from very tiny seeds. Here, again, the Lord did the opening of the heart. What a contrast between the demon-possessed girl and Lydia, the matron, who had come across from Asia to sell her wares! What a contrast between her conversion, like the opening of a flower to the sun, and the conversion of the gaoler amid the terror of the earthquake! What a contrast between the singing of the Psalms of David in the cells by the two prisoners, whose backs were still smarting from the scourge, and the oaths with which the walls generally resounded. Art thou in the stocks to-day, pray and sing praises, God will be thy very present help. Thou shalt win thy gaoler, and set up a memorial testimony for thy God.

SATURDAY, August 24. Acts xvii.

Slowly Paul made his way among the great cities of Greece. He was sowing seeds, of which others were to reap the harvest. His one theme was the risen Lord, whether amid the less or the more cultivated (3, 31). When in India I was struck with the testimony I had to the wisdom of making this the main topic of evangelization, not to discuss the Deity, the Incarnation, or the Atonement of our Lord, but to announce his resurrection, to which the whole Church gives witness.

In each of these earlier experiences there was a tiny nucleus, who had been prepared by the Spirit of God, and who became the centre of the Church life of after days. Is not this still the secret of the successful missionary? The Gospel should be so proclaimed that it should act as a magnet does, attracting the steel filings—here a Cornelius, there a Lydia, a Dionysius, or a Damaris. What a beautiful tribute is paid in passing to the Bereans! It is not to be wondered at that many of them believed.

The sermon on Areopagus has often been quoted as an example of the wisdom of words, which are of none effect, and it is certain that no church was formed in Athens, as in other cities. But after all, there is a judicious adaptation of your address to your audience, which cannot be wrong, if only your motive is pure, and your intellect is subordinated to the use of the Spirit of God. It was eminently wise to take a text from a wayside inscription—an example which we do well to copy.

"Pussy" or "Pusette."

THESE are the dear, pet names that were given to the Princess Royal of England when she was quite a little girl. As she grew up, her royal parents, Prince Albert and Queen Victoria, would call her Vicky. It was by this name that her brothers and sisters spoke of her mostly up to the time of her marriage.

I like pet names very much, and I think young people are glad to feel that they have a special name that has folded in it a good deal of love and kindness.

Of course you have all heard that in the evening of August 5 God took England's Princess Royal to Himself. She had married a German Prince, Frederick William of Prussia, who afterwards became the German Emperor, and was known as Frederick the Noble.

For some years before our princess died, she was always spoken of as the Empress Frederick. This was after her husband's death. Latterly she had suffered from a very terrible and painful disease. But she was so patient and brave through it all that everybody who knew her loved her, and tried to soothe her pain and to help her to bear her suffering.

We in England mourn for her with a real sorrow. Our King Edward, too, her brother, is very much grieved, for he loved his sister most sincerely. She was Queen Victoria's eldest child, and although after her marriage she visited England only occasionally, she would never forget Windsor or Osborne, where so many happy days were spent as a child.

Many stories are told of her childhood, and you would like to hear some of them, I am quite sure.

She was a great favourite with her father, Prince Albert. He spent a hour or more with her every evening, in order to see what progress she was making with her lessons, and whenever it was possible the Queen would hear her offer her evening prayers. Don't you think that is very beautiful? Her mother was so anxious that "Vicky" should love God and delight in reading her Bible.

But, however amiable and beautiful princes and princesses may be, they have wilful ways like other children. They are even known to take real pleasure in doing things that are forbidden. It was sometimes the case with Princess Pusette.

She was very fond of calling the doctor who attended Her Majesty by his surname, dropping his title. Meeting the physician she would say, "Good morning, L——," or "How do you do, L——?" When she did this in the Queen's presence, her mother rebuked her, and then positively forbade her doing it again, adding, "If you do so in my hearing, you will be sent to bed at once, no matter what the hour may be."

A few days later, Her Majesty was in the nursery when the doctor was announced. Pusette ran to meet him saying, "Good morning, L——!" and then noticing a stern expression on her mother's face, she added, "and good night, L——, I'm going to bed, now!" The doctor pleaded for her to be excused, but the Queen herself saw that the punishment was carried out.

One day when the Queen and her children were present at a review, the Princess dropped her handkerchief from the carriage. The gentlemen-in-waiting made a rush to restore it.

"Why were you so careless?" asked her Majesty. "I did it on purpose," was the reply. "I wished to see those gentlemen running after it." That was quite enough. "Vicky" was lifted to the ground and made to pick up the handkerchief herself.

Her childish self-importance was seen in her dislike to her mother calling her "Missy." She would even remind the Queen that she was "the Princess Royal of England!"

But her many excellent qualities were still more apparent. Of all his children the Prince Consort had the deepest affection for his first-born. He once wrote to a friend, "Vicky has the brain of a man with the heart of a child." Indeed, she impressed all who knew her in her young days as being a gifted child.

When she was in her fifteenth year she met with an alarming accident. She was sealing a letter at the table, and was all at once in flames. One lady attendant was, happily, seated at the table; another was in the room giving Princess Alice a music lesson. They sprang at once to her help, and put out the flames with the hearthrug. But her right arm was severely burnt from below the elbow to the shoulder.

Alluding to this in a letter, her father said: "The poor child showed very great self-possession and presence of mind at the time, and great courage under the pain."

You must not think from some of these stories that the Princess was of an overbearing or mischievous disposition. Far from it. She was at all times loving and gentle, as those who were most with her were wont to testify. And it is very evident that she did know and try to serve Jesus as a child. It was this that made her strong and brave, patient and amiable, when trouble and pain and death came to her home.

Now she is in the presence of her Lord in the Father's house, through the merits of Jesus Christ, and with many loved ones gone home before her.

Personal.

Several of my young friends are anxious to help Mr. Albert Midlane, the author of the hymn, "There's a Friend for little children, above the bright blue sky." Perhaps some of you know he has had business troubles, which leave him at an advanced age without means. The Editor of The Christian has already expressed his readiness to receive gifts, and if any of you would like to help, I will forward what you send.

Many thanks for lavender bags, and also for heather.

Maggie Reid, John MacMurray.—Thank you for your interesting letters.

Violet Hatch.—I wish you every success in your examination.

When your birthday comes during the quarter, you may continue in the same division until the next quarter.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, August 18.

God's Requirements (Deut. x. 12-14).

TO fear the Lord thy God. Love casteth out fear that has torment—the fear of the slave, of the disobedient child, of the foe. He that continues to fear has not been made perfect in love. But love produces fear. Those who love one another with a deep and passionate affection cannot, dare not, hurt one another's feelings, or inflict needless pain. There is a sensitiveness for the feelings of the heart that is next your own that is an absolute safeguard against the unkind act or word. And when we have come near to Jesus, near enough to see his face, we find it impossible to cause Him needless pain, such as will bring a shadow like that which Peter's denial caused. And if we do fall, our sorrow is caused not by our dread of the consequences, so far as we are concerned, but as they affect Him. "He that sinneth hath not seen, neither known Him."

To walk in all his ways. It is good to know that his footsteps are a way to walk in (Psa. lxxxv. 13, R.V.). He hath left us an example; that we should follow his steps (1 Pet. ii. 21). We are created unto good works, which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them (Eph. ii. 10). What a comfort it is that we have not to cut and hew our pathway through the tangled brake, that our Forerunner has preceded us, that the Breaker has gone up before us. When He putteth forth his own sheep, He goeth before them, and the sheep follow, because they know his voice. Let us not turn to the right or left after our own crooked and evil ways, as suggested by our own minds, but be faithful to the barriers which shut in the narrow path.

To love Him. This is not natural to the human heart. Our dispositions are selfish, self-centred. Love centres them in God, so that He becomes the Author and the Beginning of everything. Probably most of us make the mistake of supposing that love is altogether a matter of the emotions—something which we feel intensely, as St. Bernard in his well-known hymns. But love does not begin so, but by making God's will, God's pleasure, God's glory, our aim and purpose, after years (or less) have been spent in directing the aspirations and aims of the soul towards God, the feelings may catch fire. It is blessed when they do; in the meanwhile, let it not be forgotten that we can love God with the mind.

To serve the Lord thy God. For our example in this, let us turn to the life of our Lord, who was pre-eminently the servant of Jehovah. "Behold my Servant, whom I have chosen; mine Elect, in whom my soul is well pleased." His first recorded words were, "I must be about my Father's business." Amongst his last, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do."

To keep the commandments and statutes of the Lord. I am not sure that we have learned the lesson of obedience, not only in things which we can understand and see the reason for, but in all. That a certain thing is forbidden is not always a sufficient reason for refusing to entertain it against the solicitation of desire. But notice that clause, "For thy good." There is nothing arbitrary in the Divine prohibitions and injunctions. God ever seeks our good in all his statutes.

Let us ask the Holy Spirit to create in us a heart which shall fulfil these blessed precepts, not because it must, but for love's dear sake. "Write all these, thy laws, in our hearts, we beseech Thee."

International S.S. Lesson.

August 25, 1901.

Abraham and Isaac (Gen. xxii. 1-14).

Golden Text—Heb. xi. 17.

Introductory.

ABOUT twenty-five years have passed since the destruction of the "cities of the plain." Soon after that event Abraham moved southward from Mamre and lived in Gerar, the country south of Gaza. There Isaac, the long-promised son, was born, when Abraham was 100 years old. "Isaac" means laughter (xxi. 6). Then Ishmael and Hagar had to be sent away to a new home, which grieved Abraham, but God said it was right. Abimelech, king of Gerar, came to visit Abraham, who told him how his servants had taken possession of the wells which Abraham's men had dug. Abimelech knew nothing about it, and was sorry. Thereupon a covenant of friendship was made between them. The name of the place was called Beer-sheba "the well of the oath." Abraham planted a "tamarisk" tree there, a hardy evergreen, to commemorate the event, and lived there a long time, learning to know God as "the everlasting God." There are still three wells near the ruins of Beer-sheba: one is dry, but the largest is now 40ft deep.

The Trial (1).

The word "tempt" means prove or test. God tests people to make them better; He never tempts (James i. 12, 13). The devil tempts (Matt. iv. 3). Everything is tested before being used, e.g., ships, cannons, bridges, ropes, &c. God knew all about Abraham, but He wanted to strengthen him, and set him as an example to all in the future (Heb. xii. 11). Also it might have been to teach him about the great sacrifice of God's only Son, by which alone the world could be saved, and make him understand how it was that through him "all the families of the earth should be blessed" (Gen. xii. 3). Some are tested by troubles, others by riches, or temptations, or selfishness, &c., but all God's children have to be tried.

Moriah (2).

See Deut. xvi. 2, 5, 7. This hill was about forty-five miles from Beer-sheba; the temple was afterwards on this mountain, which is north-east of Zion, overlooking the valley of Kedron. It is now covered by a Turkish mosque.

The Sacrifice (2, 13).

All the nations round about where Abraham lived were accustomed to offer human sacrifices, so the idea of it would not be strange to him. There is scarcely a race on earth who have not tried to appease the anger of their gods by such offerings; so impressed on every conscience is the thought that sin can only be atoned for by death. God's way of testing Abraham's faith was not shocking to the general religious ideas of the times. The sacrifice required was that of Abraham's will; that being yielded in trustful obedience, God taught him the truth of the substitution, and that God did not require human sacrifices. The whole incident prefigured Christ's offering on the Cross, his sacrifice in the place of sinners (Heb. x. 10). There is a double type, the Father not withholding his only Son (John iii. 16); and the substitution of the ram, Isaac then typifying humanity.

Abraham's Obedience (3).

He was certain that even if he killed Isaac, God would raise him to life again because of his promise (Heb. xi. 17-19).

Mark the promptness, no hesitation; his persistence, for three days they walked on; the surrender of his dearest object. Note Abraham's words: (5) "We will go and worship, and come again to you"; (8) "God will provide a lamb"; the name given to the place, Jehovah-jireh, a fresh revelation of God's character and the renewal of the promise in fuller terms (15-18).

Lessons.

God always provides at the right moment.
Trust Him fully, in spite of appearances.
Obey Him implicitly.
Sacrifice our faulty wills to his perfect will.
Consecrate to Him our dearest and best.

Open Door in Egypt.

THE people of Egypt are in a state of transition, as it were, passing out of the seventh century into the twentieth century at a bound. All that is modern, or included in the magical word "civilization," is eagerly sought after by them. Religious liberty has been granted to them. Fierce fanaticism and bigotry are dying down. European infidelity is capturing the hearts and minds of many of the younger men.

The need for a widespread distribution of the Scriptures, and a full preaching of the Gospel was never so great as it is to-day, and the opportunities for reaching the nine millions of Egyptian Moslems are innumerable. The missionary has free access to all parts of the land, and is accorded a hearing by all classes of the people.

The missionaries of the North Africa Mission in Egypt have specially sought to carry on itinerant work so far as workers and funds have permitted. The Council is now desirous of developing this itinerant work, and have requested Mr. Walter T. Fairman, who has already been labouring in Egypt for four years, and who is now home on furlough, to return to Egypt in October, leaving his wife and two children in England, in order to do this. Seven or eight months will be spent in itineration, and it is hoped that Mr. Fairman will be able to reach all parts of the Delta.

It is calculated that £160 will be needed to meet the expenses likely to be incurred by Mr. Fairman and a helper in this work. The magic lantern possesses great attraction for the fellaheen, and the gift of one, fitted for the acetylene light, would be most welcome. Any of the Lord's people who desire to help in this work by their gifts can forward the same to Mr. Fairman, care of N. A. M., 21, Linton Road, Barking, Essex; or to the office of The Christian.

A Song of Praise.

O Lord! around thy glorious throne
We bow the knee,
To sing thy saving power alone,
And worship Thee!

We praise Thee for thy pardoning love,
The grace divine,
That did our grievous bonds remove,
And made us thine!

We praise Thee for the bliss supreme
Thy people share;
The sunshine gladdening with its beam
Thy House of Prayer.

We praise Thee for the hope divine,
The assurance blest,
That cheers us, e'en tho' foes combine
To mar our rest.

We praise Thee for the joys unseen
We yet shall know,
When clouds no more shall intervene,
Or storm-winds blow.

Accept our worship, gracious Lord,
Thy grace outpour
On hearts that wait with one accord,
And Thee adore.

Our spirits wilt Thou richly bless,
Who life hast given;
Our only source of righteousness,
Our hope of heaven.

Clevedon, Somerset. Wm. Kitching.

Seamen's Rest, Port Said.—After twelve years' constant labour at Port Said, Mr. and Mrs. Locke have come to England for rest and change. Mr. Locke writes from 3, Hermitage Villas, Child's Hill, N.W.:—"A few days after our arrival in England Mrs. Locke and our little boy, Reginald, were sent to a smallpox hospital, where they have been for over six weeks, during which time myself and baby Walter have been closely quarantined with our relatives. These circumstances have hindered us from getting out the usual report and statement of accounts; but as the value of the work is well known to so many of our friends who have personally had fellowship with us at Port Said I may briefly state that we are desiring to pay off £130 arrears of rent and £72 balance of account on the steam launch, due in October. We will be pleased to have opportunity of seeing friends, and interesting any in this part of the harvest field. We left Port Said in the midst of a revival amongst the men of H.M.S. Rupert, which has resulted in about thirty confessing Christ, and through the testimony of these several of our merchant sailors have also decided. Mr. Gilder, with the cheerful help of the young converts, is faithfully holding the fort."

Notes from New Zealand.

In a recent letter from Dunedin Rev. George Wainwright (formerly of Bournemouth) says:—"I came here at the beginning of May to fulfil a three months' engagement at the Hanover Street Baptist Church, over which Rev. A. North (now of Calcutta) was pastor for about eighteen years. The strong, earnest, aggressive missionary church he has left behind him is a splendid monument to his faithful work. Mission causes have been started in all the districts around Dunedin, some of which are now separate churches, and doing good work. The Baptist Missionary Society of New Zealand has now six workers in Eastern Bengal, four of whom have gone from the Hanover Street Church, one of them being Dr. North, the son of the former pastor. These facts will show that zeal for foreign missions does not cripple a Church for mission work at home.

"There is in the city a Missionary Training Home for lady candidates for missionary work. This was started two years ago by Mrs. Driver, and has now six candidates in training. The Home is interdenominational in character, and candidates are welcomed from any evangelical church. Mrs. Driver is ably assisted in the work by her husband (trained for the ministry in Mr. Spurgeon's college) and by several ministers and leading Christians in the town. The annual meeting of the Home was held on June 10, and was of a hearty and enthusiastic character. A farewell meeting to one of the candidates was held last week in the Baptist Schoolroom. The meeting was large and enthusiastic, and Miss Inglesby's parting message was simple and clear and tender and strong. She goes for further training in hospital work in Sydney, then to Eastern Bengal.

"A very interesting meeting was held the other week to bid farewell to Mr. James Todd, who goes at the invitation of Mr. Torrey, to undertake work in the Bible Institute, Chicago. All denominations were represented. Mr. Todd described himself as belonging to the Inclusive Brethren. Certainly all the churches seem to have included him, for he had won the confidence and love of all. As a Bible teacher he excels, and has left his influence upon every Christian organization in the town."

Welsh Notes.

During the past two months the Cardiff and District Temperance and Band of Hope Union have held a series of open-air meetings in various parts of Cardiff. These meetings have been attended by some 10,000 people, and hundreds of pledges taken. It is hoped to commence a series of lantern meetings in the open air.

It is announced that the Nonconformist ministers of Denbigh and Flint intend holding a summer school of theology. Judging by past experience, these gatherings are not likely to become very popular in the Principality. At any rate, one or two experiments of the kind, made only a few years ago, have not been repeated.

At the recent diocesan conference of Bangor the Bishop made a pronouncement on the temperance question which will hardly commend itself to temperance workers. One of the Bishop's suggestions was that drink sellers should be consulted as to the best methods to adopt in the way of temperance reform. At the same conference Canon Trevor, of Machynlleth, declared himself in favour of prohibiting the sale of drink for certain periods to habitual drunkards.

The annual conference of the English Calvinistic Methodist Churches of Wales is to be held this year at Merthyr. This conference differs from the general assembly of Calvinistic Methodists in that it has no legislative powers. The Conference sermons are to be preached by Rev. P. T. Forsyth, M.A., D.D., Principal of Hackney Congregational College, and Rev. P. Prys, D.D., Principal of Trefecca Theological College.

One of the most interesting events in the religious life of the Principality was the re-opening of Llanddowror Church, Carmarthenshire, a few weeks ago. The church is historic as being the scene of the labours of one of the most distinguished clergymen the Welsh Church has ever produced. The name of "Griffith Jones, of Llanddowror," is a familiar one in Wales. At the re-opening services Dean Howell spoke of this distinguished clergyman as the forerunner of the great revival which took place in Wales during the eighteenth century.

Irish Notes.

The annual convention for the deepening of the spiritual life has been held in the Methodist Church, Bangor, co. Down, and has been well attended.

United open-air meetings are being held each Sunday evening at Whitehead, a watering-place on the co. Antrim coast. The services are unsectarian, and are conducted by Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Methodist ministers. The attendance is usually very large, and the attention of the audiences all to be desired. The effort is attracting widespread interest, and cannot fail to do good.

The Belfast Central Mission continues to do an excellent work. According to its eleventh annual report just issued it carries on Sunday schools, Bible classes, open-air work all the year round in half-a-dozen centres, arab work, rescue work, mothers' meetings, tent services, and midnight meetings for drunkards. It has 480 in church membership, and an average attendance on Sunday afternoons of 1,500, and on Sunday evenings of 2,200. Moreover, during the year a balance of £2,000 due on the site of the Hall was paid off, and altogether the Mission is prospering under its superintendent, Rev. R. C. Johnson, D.D., and his assistants.

In many places in the south and west the Roman Catholic priests are assuming a dictatorial attitude they never thought of formerly. This is especially the case in Limerick, where a "Father" Tierney, who some time ago incited the mob to assault Dr. Long, has protested against a local regatta because it was to be held on the evenings on which some Roman Catholic services were arranged for. His words were: "I protest against Monday and Tuesday evenings' proceedings, and to make my protest practical I intend to have the city bands out on Monday and Tuesday evenings to parade the streets of the city, and then to march up to the church; and I call upon the members of the Confraternity to support me in this protest, and come to their meetings in their thousands, to come to listen to their own bands playing, not "God Save the King," but "God Bless our Pope, the Great, the Good," to leave the boat-racing on Monday and Tuesday evenings to the sour faces, and their 'shoveen' Catholic friends, the friends also of Tommy Atkins and his band." This protest had its effect. The committee of the regatta apologized, and promised not to offend again, and Father Tierney graciously withdrew his censure! The name "sour faces" by which Protestants here are designated is worthy of note, and is symptomatic of the intolerant spirit with which Protestants have to contend at present in various parts of Ireland.

Oxford Letter.

Oxford Schools are now over, and the Modern History and Greats Lists are out. Many eager eyes have scanned them during the last few days, and while some will be disappointed at the results obtained, many a hard worker will have reaped the fruit of his toil. When we remember that a good position in the list means, in most cases, a position of influence, we are struck with the far-reaching effects of the schools. Surely it would be well for our Universities to be remembered in every prayer-meeting throughout the country.

The Bishop of Ripon was the preacher at the morning service at the church of St. Mary-the-Virgin last Sunday. The sermon was especially for the extension students. The Bishop took as his text, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." Speaking of thrift and prudence, he said that unless there was a spiritual corrective they would end in a corresponding vice. Prudence would develop into niggardliness, and thrift in miserliness. Character alone could save a virtue from becoming a vice, a spirit which was alive to the true significance of life and its responsibilities. The test of character lay in the use made of fragments of time, and yet even here the use was but a means to an end, and that end to give to life its true significance.

Oxford is rapidly becoming the home of conferences on social, economic, and philanthropic questions. Some of them may perhaps be "lost causes," but all have some purpose to serve. Already this year we have had the British Conference of the Y.M.C.A. and that of the Photographers of the United Kingdom. The other day delegates from the poor law guardians of the city and county met here to consider the better treatment and accommodation for pauper imbeciles and epileptics. And this week, in addition to the University Extension Students, we have the Annual Conference of the National Association of Teachers of the Deaf. The great advantages of teaching these to converse by means of lip-reading, instead of by the fingers, was forcibly shown by the President in his address, and the hope was expressed both by him and by Sir William Markby that they might live to see them carrying off the honours of the university.

American Notes.

Last week Mrs. Carrie Nation was fined 100dols., and sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment, in the District Court at Topeka, for "disturbing the peace and dignity" of that city during one of her Sunday raids last Spring. Although appeals were made to the County Commissioners and to the Governor for remission of costs and a pardon, both were refused. Whether this form of revenge on the part of the liquor men will aid their cause, remains to be seen.

There is a church in Columbus, the capital of the State of Ohio, whose pastor, Dr. Widger, feels sure he has solved the problem of maintaining successful services through the summer by means of a roof garden on the top of his church. Dr. Widger's church has been open a year. He is a contractor's son who studied architecture before he entered the ministry, and he designed the church building himself. The roof garden takes the place of a second storey to the church, and is reached by stairs in the two towers at the sides of the church entrance, and has the same seating capacity, 2,000, as the church auditorium.

The religious Marmion of the hour in New York just now is Rev. Joseph Jones, temporarily in charge of the Cremorne Jerry McAuley Mission (in the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Ballou), on Thirty-third Street. This Mission is in the heart of what is known as the "Tenderloin" district, which enjoys the reputation of being one of the most dissipated sections of the town. Three blocks from the Cremorne Mission is one of the most notorious dance halls in that notorious quarter, called the Haymarket, closed during the day, but where dancing (and drinking) takes place all night. Mr. Jones commenced operation by enlisting the sympathy of the Chief of Police. At the first meeting, the hall was packed to the doors. The addresses were given by Mr. Charles L. Smith, the secretary of the Naval Branch of the Y.M.C.A. in Brooklyn, and Major Hilton, in charge of Dr. Parkhurst's Mission House on the East Side. The only sentiment that drew any applause from the congregation was spoken by the latter, who said, "Some of you may ask why we come here instead of going to a church. One reason is that many of them are shut. Perhaps, however, this may be the beginning of a movement in which the theatres may open their doors for the Gospel on Sundays; then, perhaps the churches will begin to take their vacations when the devil takes his." The addresses were listened to with close attention to the end, and six persons held up their hands for prayers at the close.

New York, July 30. Roger Martin.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. is at present responsible for three open-air evangelistic meetings weekly. One is held on Saturday evening, and the other two, in different parts of the city, on Sunday evening. This is in addition to the usual indoor meeting on the Sabbath, which is carried on all the year round.

The current issue of the Young Men's Journal, the organ of the Cape Town Association, contains the following interesting note:—"Some of the younger men amongst the Boer prisoners of war at present on the Island of St. Helena have felt the need of a Y.M.C.A., and forty of them have united together and established a branch."

The Scottish Holiday Camp at Scalpsie Bay, Island of Bute, organised by the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., has proved a complete success in every sense. The numbers booked have been quite up to anticipations, and during the Glasgow Fair week many had to be refused for lack of accommodation. The number resident in the camp during that week was between ninety and 100. Family worship has been conducted daily morning and evening, while recently the large marquee was filled with an audience of over 100 for a Gospel service. Similar camps have been arranged by other associations in various parts of the country. The Y.M.C.A. Seaside Homes are also again proving of great benefit to young men during the present holiday season.

Postal Employes in South America.—"El Correo Evangelico," the little four-paged Gospel paper in Spanish for postal employés, circulating most months in various parts of "the neglected continent," has been widely used in the dissemination of the Gospel message. A letter from Buenos Ayres, after mentioning that owing to the inadequate support from home, the July issue had to fail, tells that in some of the fever-stricken places of North Argentina, where most people have never heard the Gospel, and where it is so difficult for colporteur or missionary to penetrate, "El Correo" carries through the post the glad tidings. Mr. C. L. Smith, 35, Eltham Road, Lee, S.E., will be glad to supply particulars.

Obituary.

CANON BRENAN.

THE sudden death of Rev. Canon James Eustace Brenan has been announced from Ulwick, Norway. Canon Brenan was an Irishman, and a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. In 1869 he came to England to become secretary of the London Jews' Society, in which in after years he continued to take a warm interest. In 1873 the trustees appointed him to the vicarage of Christ Church, Ramsgate, where his bright services and capable preaching attracted a considerable congregation. After an incumbency of nineteen years he accepted from the Simeon's Trustees in 1892 the vicarage of Emmanuel Church, Clifton, a well-known Evangelical stronghold. Canon Brenan worked cordially with the Bishop of Bristol in the Church extension scheme.

MR. GEORGE T. EDWARDS.

The death, at an advanced age, of Mr. George T. Edwards, removes an earnest Christian, who was well known to many as an active district secretary of the Bible Society. Mr. Edwards joined the Society's staff in 1850, and superintended the Northern district for thirty-five years, during which period he was also engaged on many tasks of interest. In 1867 he took charge of the work of Scripture distribution at the Paris exhibition. By permission of the Emperor of the French, and the Commissioners, he was able to have a depôt erected, from which nearly 200,000 copies of the Scripture were distributed. An an outcome of an interview with the Emperor Alexander II., greater facilities were given for the circulation of the Bible throughout the Russian Empire. Not the least interesting of his experiences was to address the first meeting ever held on the Society's behalf in Rome, in 1869, the last year of the temporal power of the Popes, and he would sometimes gleefully relate that the collection consisted of Papal coins. Mr. Edwards, who settled at Redhill in 1885, retired from active service in 1895.

MR. CHARLES FORDER.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Charles Forder, late of Soho Bazaar, who departed this life on July 27, aged seventy-nine, and was interred in Rotherfield Churchyard. His later years were spent in Mayfield and Crowboro', Surrey, where he endeared himself to many by his sympathy and helpfulness. His Christian pilgrimage of more than half a century is ended. God's Word was a lamp to his feet, and a light to his path—his meditation by night and by day; he esteemed it more than his necessary food. He fed upon it, he appropriated it, he was guided by it, he preached it, he lived it. The Word of Christ dwelt in him richly; he heeded the Master's voice, and followed Him.

As a fruit-bearing branch, Mr. Forder bowed to the pruning, and glorified God in his adversities. He assuaged his own sorrows by relieving those of others; his left hand knew not what his right hand did. I have been privileged with his friendship and affection, and by his prayers for forty years, and know something of his beneficent life, and think it not unlikely that hundreds whose burdens he has borne, and whose pathway he has brightened, have now welcomed him into everlasting habitations. I recall his words of many years ago, when enjoying a holiday together. "Oh to live to make men feel the power of this Book"; and again, "I cannot visit where I may not take my Lord!" and how appropriately, courteously, and winsomely he presented the Gospel of Christ; how incessant were his little acts of kindness; how completely he obliterated himself in the service of his Lord.

He was much loved by rich and poor, and many a prosperous man to-day obtained his start through his assistance. When reverses came, it made no change in his inward serenity—"A mind at leisure from himself to sooth and sympathise." His last days were full of agonizing pain. CHARLES SNELL.

About Books.

EVANGELICAL DOCTRINE—BIBLE TRUTH.

FROM time to time vigorous attempts have been made, as it were to "capture" Bible truth and allocate it to systems and theories that are largely extra-Biblical in character and content. Quite recently Anglo-Catholicism, under the very respectable designation "Church Doctrine," made such an endeavour. The object was propagandist—to bring Bible-loving people into association with ideas and parties that cannot easily be reconciled with Scripture truth.

This is made clear and ably exposed in a volume now before us, Evangelical Doctrine—Bible Truth, by Rev. C. Anderson Scott, M.A., of Kensington Presbyterian Church. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). In a series of chapters, well informed and well written, the author places in its proper light the type of religion that refuses to be known as Protestant, while it deals very largely in the dogmas and practices of Rome. He discusses Baptism and the Lord's Supper, also the Church and its Ministry, at once developing the teachings of Scripture and refuting the errors of Baptismal Regeneration, Eucharistic Sacrifice, and Apostolical Succession.

The chapters are in the form of letters addressed to an Anglo-Catholic; in that way the book came into being. The writings of "Catholic" authorities are made the basis of discussion; and a sincere purpose runs through the book, which, as the preface states, has been written "in the earnest desire to guard and fortify those who are in danger of being led into serious error."

AN EVENTFUL LIFE.

FOR a number of years past, Rev. A. J. Harrison, M.A., B.D., has enjoyed a reputation all his own as an evidential writer and lecturer. His experiences have been peculiar, and to hear or read of them could not but be diverting and instructive. From his book, An Eventful Life: Adventures, Incidents, Inferences, it would appear that from his youth up he has been a remarkable character, as well as the subject of peculiar experiences. In the words of the preface, this is "the story of a fighter, optimist, sceptic, preacher, priest, and missioner, and a record of lessons learned under these varied aspects."

From the ever-in-mischief days of youth to the quite recent years of a singularly eventful life, we find in this autobiography much that engages sympathy as well as much that qualifies endorsement. Passing from the sublime to the ridiculous, the author occasionally exhibits a flippant tone. He says kind things of the Methodists (of the New Connexion), among whom he once laboured; though they will hardly accept his description of Methodist motives, work, and organization. He is the candid critic of the Church of England, of which he is now a "priest."

"After thirty years of glad hard work," he is at present "rather lonely." He says: "Recent developments in connection with the English Church Union have 'scared' me away from the High Church party; the publication of the Encyclopædia Biblica leaves it uncertain whether the Broad Church has any distinctively Christian creed at all; and the Evangelicals, as a whole, have hardly as yet sufficiently freed themselves from anti-Catholic prejudices." Here and there we have noted statements and sentiments with which Evangelical Christians can have no sort of agreement. (6s. Cassell & Co.)

The new volume of "The Century Bible" is Romans, edited with introduction and notes by Alfred E. Garvie, M.A., B.D. (2s. T. C. & E. C. Jack.) Students will find this a very useful work.

Immortality is a sacred song, by Mr. Leonard Weaver, with pianoforte accompaniment by Mr. G. H. Sharpe, Mus.Bac. There is a harmonized arrangement by Mr. G. Day Winter. The song is intended for use at funeral and memorial services. (1s. net. From the Composer, 25, Park Avenue, Willesden Green, N.W.)

Many will read with interest a pamphlet entitled Brief Sketch of the Life and Labours of John Nelson Darby, compiled from Reliable Sources by W. G. Turner. (4d. T. Weston, 53, Paternoster Row.) The pages contain many allusions to prominent teachers and workers during a considerable portion of the nineteenth century.

As a companion volume to "Jesus is God," Rev. F. C. Spurr has written Jesus Christ To-Day (2s. Stockwell). In the course of seven chapters he surveys the redemptive work of Christ, and the action of the Saviour upon the life and thought of our time. The motive of the pages has been to glorify God, and they will assuredly prove helpful to many.

A number of short stories contributed in former years to the British Workman by Miss Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler have been gathered together under the title of the first, The Angel and the Demon (1s. 6d. Partridge). They do not run in any conventional groove, but wholesome lessons are driven home in a direct, incisive way. The volume will fill a useful place among young people of more thoughtful type.

Studies in Leviticus. By Rev. Hubert Brooke M.A. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) A valuable work, succinct in exposition, and practical in application. Those who have heard the author's Bible Readings on Leviticus, will know the great worth of these studies; and by making them widely known they will be assisting the cause of sound doctrine, which is very helpfully presented in these pages.

Harry White: Missionary to the Congo, is a deeply interesting memoir by Rev. J. E. Roberts, M.A., B.D., of Union Chapel, Manchester. (1s. 6d. net. Alexander & Shepheard). The man and his work alike demanded some such record as this; and the biographer had thrown much sympathy into the story of his friend's career. The missions of Central Africa have engaged the devotion of some of the best of men; and among these Harry White deserves to be remembered. The pages afford a good idea of the man and the missionary, and we trust they have many readers.

Thoughts in Past Years. By Edward Henry Bickersteth, D.D., late Bishop of Exeter. (3s. 6d. Sampson Low & Co.) Here are eighteen sermons from among the many preached by Bishop Bickersteth during a ministry of fifty-two years. Accompanying the discourses are some of the many choice hymns and poems which have from time to time come from the same spiritual pen. One of the sermons is a study of Milton's "Paradise Lost"; another describes the faithful ambassador of Christ in terms suggested by Bunyan's famous delineation in the Interpreter's House scene of the "Pilgrim's Progress." From first to last this is a beautiful book, everywhere bearing traces of the grace and charm of its distinguished author.

Mr. C. J. Thynne has done well to issue a popular edition of a book which was welcomed with much satisfaction on its first appearance thirty-five years ago: The Religion of Redemption; or the Doctrine of Man's Ruin and Christ's Salvation: A Contribution to the Preliminaries of Christian Apology. By R. W. Monsell, B.A., late pastor of the Congregational Church of Neufchatel. (2s. 6d. nett.) There are few works available to-day that cover so large a ground in such a suggestive manner. Scripture is opened up with care, and ancient and modern theologians are quoted in great profusion. The main headings indicate the scope of the work: Human Guilt and Misery, Redemption, Appropriation of Redemption, Individual Christian Life, Collective Christian Life and History. Students will find much that is helpful in this substantial volume.

SHOULD I GO TO THE THEATRE? A question of vital importance. A timely pamphlet by Arthur H. Stockwell. (1d. Stockwell, 2, Amen Corner.)

A SHORT LIFE OF ANNE ASKEW, by Mary E. T. Stirling. (2d. Church Association.) A well-compiled story. We trust it will have many readers.

MEANINGS AND METHODS OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE is the title of a new volume of sermons to be published this autumn by Allenson. The author is Rev. Harry W. Clark, of Woking.

JESUS CHRIST, THE TRUE GOD, is a good booklet on a grand theme. It should be circulated among those who doubt the Foundation Truths of the Gospel. Every page is complete, so that the booklet may be cut up into tracts. (6d. per doz. Partridge & Co.)

Raphael Tuck and Co. have added several new series to their picture postcards. The publications this month are ROYAL RESIDENCES, FISHER LIFE, SEASIDE STUDIES, ENGLISH LAKES, an additional set of ROUGH SEAS, and a further instalment of the popular COUNTY series.

IN THE CIGARETTE PERIL OF YOUTH (1d. Sunday School Union) are gathered together the papers contributed to the Sunday School Chronicle by Mr. Arthur Mee, as the result of a special investigation of the subject. The mental, moral, and medical aspects of the evil are presented so clearly as to make the booklet suitable for wide-spread distribution.

Among the Hoppers.

MARDEN SHELTER, KENT.

THE forthcoming hopping season will be the seventh of the hop-pickers' shelter at Marden, Kent, where tea, coffee, and food are provided at nominal prices, for some thousands of hoppers. Among other efforts put forth, the sick are cared for, and lost children befriended. The shelter is a useful counter-attraction to the public-houses, Miss Julia Smart, hon. sec., Howland Road, Marden, Kent, will be pleased to forward last year's balance-sheet, and particulars of the work.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

A number of London City missionaries are taking part in the Gospel effort among hop-pickers in response to appeals for workers which have been received from local friends. As many of the missionaries are qualified for rendering first aid to the wounded, their presence in the hop-gardens, where accidents are plentiful, is doubly welcome.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

DURING the month of July the services in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, were taken by Mr. Arthur Klein, B.A. This was Mr. Klein's first visit. God blessed his efforts, and he has promised to return early next year for another mission. The Sunday gatherings in the Great Hall were well sustained, and the week-night audiences in the large tent were above the average; on some nights there was only standing room. Mr. Klein is a ready speaker, and full of earnestness. At the after-meetings many were dealt with who desired to give themselves wholly to Christ. Mrs. Klein sang very sweetly at some of the meetings, and helped her husband considerably with those made anxious by the preaching of the Gospel. The believers have much cause for rejoicing at the visit, as his discourses to Christians were a great help.

Mr. Chas. Cook's Work.

On August 7 Dr. Broughton and Dr. Cressy, of the United States, were present at Mr. Chas. Cook's service in Hyde Park, and were delighted to witness so large a gathering, and such earnest attention as was accorded to Mr. Cook's address. Dr. Broughton said: "I have heard of these meetings as long as I can remember, and made up my mind to see them as soon as I landed in this country." On Friday evening last, a special meeting was arranged, when Rev. Dr. John Robertson, of Glasgow, was the first speaker. Looking upon the large congregation, he said that he felt this was one of the most important pulpits he had ever occupied. Rev. Dr. Morgan, of Boston, U.S.A., followed, and told of the conversion of a lady who was brought to the Lord at these meetings, and whose son is witnessing for Christ in America. Dr. Morgan gave an impressive talk, and spoke of the pleasure it afforded him to take part in these well-known services. Rev. Dr. Cressy also spoke, and this memorable service was closed by Mr. Cook with a brief address on Decision. A number of seekers came forward, and Mr. Cook handed to each a copy of "Precious Truths."

Mr. Richard Spragg in Somerset.

In the course of an interesting letter on his recent itinerations among villages in Somersetshire, Mr. R. Spragg says:—"I have concluded eleven weeks' missioning in Somersetshire, and give thanks to God for the way in which He has been pleased to make his power manifest in the salvation of souls. We had some remarkable cases. One old man who was formerly most harsh even to his friends is now a joy to the home. He is often saying, with tears of joy, 'Bless the Lord.' Another friend, although he had been long connected with a place of worship, was crying on his deathbed, 'I have trifled with salvation; I have never accepted Jesus, and I shall be lost.' I was admitted by his beloved wife, a Christian, to speak to him, and on the fifth time I saw him he rejoiced, for the first time, in the Lord. He went on rejoicing till two o'clock in the morning, when he passed away, singing, 'Safe in the arms of Jesus.' A relative of the friend referred to was spoken to, and she, also, was led to accept Christ. Another striking case was that of a young lady who was so distressed that she was unable to eat or drink. When driving with this lady and another, I pulled up at the road-side, saying, 'We can go no further, Miss, until we have a Gospel meeting.' I first sang a hymn, and then spoke to her of the love of God. She sprang up and said, 'This is what I wanted.' I have had the privilege of baptizing her and nine others at Martock. There were cases of blessing, too, at Over Stoney, a place for which I would humbly ask prayer."

Mr. William Forbes, who has been preaching at Ramsgate and Margate, held a tea meeting for theatrical women at the latter place on Friday last.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the Children's Special Service Mission, experienced a season of blessing at Dunoon during July, especially during the latter part of the month, after recovery from loss of voice. The evangelist is now at Carnoustie, where, as at Dunoon, many gather to hear the Gospel.

The Gospel singer, Mr. J. R. D. McAusland, has just completed a mission in Tain in connection with the United Free Church. It was remarkable to see the place filled night after night, especially during the fine weather, with so many outdoor attractions. Mr. McAusland's visit has given a stimulus to Christian work.

Messrs. Pullinger and Gray, of the Open Air Mission, have visited Martock (Somerset) and neighbouring villages. Gospel services were held daily, and permission was given for midday services to be held in the stone work sheds at Hamdon Hill, where good meetings were held with the workmen. The Gospel message was delivered in word and song, and the efforts put forth were much appreciated.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

The work at Greenwich continues with unabated interest, and many of the unsaved have been led to Christ. On Lord's Day last Mr. William Grove commenced a week's mission, which closes the campaign in the district. The meetings were full of interest and blessing, and all the workers are looking with expectation for a reaping time during the final gatherings. The Weaver Brothers had a glorious time in this tent during the previous fortnight; large numbers attended the meetings, and many have come to decision.

At Canning Town, during last week, the meetings were very encouraging. Notwithstanding that it was Bank Holiday week large numbers attended each night, a good proportion being working men, and at every service the hearts of the workers were cheered by men and women accepting Christ as their Saviour. The work seems to be deepening, and there is a great desire among all the workers that it should continue for at least another month. A correspondent writes: "On Thursday evening we had a most interesting Children's Service, reminding one of some of the gatherings at the 'Edinburgh Castle,' when Dr. Barnardo invites the street children to their annual feast. Hundreds of poor children came together, unwashed, and many of them very badly clothed, scores with bare feet. It was with some difficulty that quiet was obtained, but Mr. A. Garstin, who conducted the service, secured marked attention right through his address. He most simply and touchingly appealed to the hearts of the children. We noticed many of the rough boys and girls weeping, and at the close of his address it was a delightful sight to see some forty or fifty of the older boys and girls clustering round him, some of them saying, 'May I come to Jesus?' We are full of hope for the future meetings. The brass band of the Y.M.C.A., under the leadership of Mr. F. Payne, is rendering invaluable service, both inside and in the open air."

The closing services at Walthamstow were conducted by Mr. R. S. Bradbrook on Sunday, August 4. The subject of the afternoon meeting was "Prayer," and in the course of a heart-searching address the speaker urged upon his hearers the importance of this sacred duty and privilege. In the evening the tent was well filled with an expectant crowd, and the solemn address of Mr. Bradbrook on the words, "And the books were opened," was graciously used by God. Many came boldly out to the front and confessed Christ. Both meetings were full of power and blessing.

With commendable spirit and enterprise the excellent local committee at Lavender Hill made every preparation for the opening of the tent by Rev. Dr. Elliott, of New York, and Mr. R. S. Bradbrook. The gatherings have from the first been of a most encouraging character. There were seekers at every meeting. Dr. Elliott's quiet, earnest addresses, together with his congenial and happy disposition, have proved a great attraction. A long list of services has been arranged for this tent, including women's meetings, men's meetings, children's services, Bible readings, and lectures. On Saturday last Mr. Bradbrook conducted a children's service, the subject being, "Sea Signals, and what We may Learn from Them." At the close of the address quite a large number of children intelligently decided to trust Christ. The meetings for adults on Sunday last were marked by spiritual power. At the afternoon gathering Dr. Elliott spoke on "The Christian Attitude Toward Amusements." The meeting at night was one to be remembered, scores of people standing round outside the tent, and many in the aisles, during the whole of the service. The powerful address of Dr. Elliott was listened to with the closest attention. During the after meeting quite a large number were seeking the Lord. Miss E. Angel is the soloist, and her singing of the Gospel was with power. This is the last week of Dr. Elliott's stay, as he returns almost at once to New York. The prayers of many friends will follow him and his wife to their home and work across the Atlantic.

Mr. Charles Cook and Mr. Frank Weaver were the missioners at the opening of Leyton tent. A goodly company assembled on Sunday afternoon last, and in the evening the tent was full. A remarkable scene was evidenced at the close of the address on "The Foolish Virgins." Over thirty persons came forward and gave in their names as being anxious to accept Christ. These were all dealt with, and were also written to early on Monday morning by Mr. Cook, books and leaflets suitable to each case being despatched. Dr. John Robertson takes the services this week.

Islington tent continues to be the scene of a remarkable revival of interest in evangelistic work. On Saturday afternoon, a band of workers got together, and headed by a brass band and banner, with two rows of silk-hatted gentlemen in front, marched through the district, inviting everybody to the limelight lecture in the evening. The result was that an audience of over 2,000 people listened to Mr. Leonard Weaver's interesting talk. Pressing home the evil effects of the liquor traffic, he called on all present to give up the drink, and a show of hands resulted in 100 people promising to be done with strong drink. On Sunday morning at seven over 100 attended the prayer meeting. At eleven o'clock Mr. Weaver addressed a congregation of men, numbering 1,500, Mr. J. H. Meredith sang effectively, "My Mother's Prayer," and at the close fifty decided to serve Christ. The afternoon brought another great crowd to the tent, over 2,000 being present. A powerful address ended with good spiritual results. The evening service was one long to be remembered. The tent was crowded out. Mr. Weaver was helped by some friends from across the Atlantic, Mr. Anderson, who works in connection with Mr. Wannamaker at Philadelphia, and Rev. S. G. Neil, of the railroad Gospel car, taking part. The service was well described by the last-mentioned evangelist as "a royal time." Certainly it was most impressive, and many were glad to accept the invitation to seek salvation. Very many names of inquirers have been taken, and there is every prospect of continued blessing. The choir renders valuable help, and Mr. J. H. Meredith sings the Gospel, while many Christian workers in North London, to whom the tent has already become a rallying place, support the evangelists with earnest prayers. To all appearance the mission might well be continued for months.

Mr. Wooldridge has pitched his Gospel tent in the centre of a crowded population in Bow Common Lane, E. Our friend has both tact and power to arrest the attention of the people; his earnest addresses, together with his singing, are arousing much attention. H. Bridger.

Mr. Hugh Morris, the Lanarkshire Christian Union evangelist, began a tent mission at Bellshill, N.B., on Sabbath, July 28, when a large concourse of people gathered under the canvas. The word was with power. The mission still continues, and the word is clearly preached to increasing audiences. Those who love the Gospel have had cause to rejoice in the fact that it is still "the power of God unto salvation."

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.—Till Aug. 18, Camberwell; 25, Winchester.
Mrs. Baeyertz.—Paisley, Sept. 8.
Mr. John Coates, with Ross Bible Carriage, The Sands, Weston-super-Mare, till Aug. 28.

Personalia.

Mr. Hermann G. Harris (of Alexandria) wishes it to be known that he has severed his connection with Dr. Dowie and the Zion Church.

Rev. S. G. Neil, chapel car missionary from the United States, is in England on a brief stay. He is at present addressing meetings in connection with the London Tent Campaign. He tells a marvellous story of the Gospel work carried on on the American railroads.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost has been invited to visit Manila for the purpose of organizing the religious work among the large English and American population there. It is probable, in any case, that Dr. Pentecost will retire from the regular pastorate with a view to undertaking evangelistic work.

"Witnesses Unto Me."

(Acts i. 8.)

Sent from above, Himself our life and glory,
Here as his witnesses, our path his cross;
Light be our tread, and pilgrim-told our story,
How for Him now we count all else but loss.

Filled with the brightness of Himself in heaven,
Strangers on earth, and portionless below,
Cheer'd by his love—not orphans or forsaken;
Borne in his heart, the road we onward go.

Friends of the Christ, our earnest expectation,
Here to hold fast and magnify his Name,
In this poor scene of woe and degradation
Rising superior to our former shame.

Little in strength and weak our best endeavour,
E'er to maintain his Word and Name and Cross;
This be our joy, 'mid sorrow, trial, pressure,
Waiting in patience for his well-known voice.

W. T. Turpin, M.A.

Work Among Lepers.

ALTHOUGH the interest in such work is always pathetic and sad, it is satisfactory to note that the Leper Home, conducted at Jerusalem by the Moravian Brethren, is growing in usefulness. Last year closed with fifty inmates (fifteen Christians, thirty-four Moslems, one Jew), being seven more than the previous year. The arrival of one patient is thus described in a letter from Mr. La Trobe:—

Over the hillside comes a man with a sack on his shoulders, and enters the courtyard of the Home. Without a word he shakes out the contents of the sack on the ground, and then runs away as hard as his legs will carry him. He has no mind to bear that burden back again, and this is the only place where such an object can be deposited. What is it?

There lies a woman groaning, in the last stages of dirt and disease—a leper! She is at once undressed and shorn—the clothes and hair must be instantly burned—washed, put to bed, and lovingly tended, till death comes to end her sufferings, in her case happily soon. Whether her dulled senses could take in the words of life, I cannot tell, but surely such ministry as could be rendered, and was gladly rendered, conveyed to her heart some message from Him, for love of whom our Home, "Jesus Help," is kept open and effective.

Building operations and the excavation of a water cistern have led to an expenditure of £500. The address of the treasurer (Mr. H. O. Essex) will, after August 31, be 32, Fetter Lane, London, E.C., instead of The Square, Fairfield, near Manchester.

The Mission to Lepers in India and the East reports the opening of six new centres, making sixty-two in all. The number of asylums is now twenty-seven, three having been recently added. There are a number of aided institutions, and the work is now being carried on in co-operation with twenty-one churches and societies. In the midst of disappointments there has yet been cause for deep gratitude in the spiritual blessing vouchsafed. There was an exceptional increase in expenditure, bringing it up to £13,507 3s. 3d., but the income was large enough to meet it and leave a balance of £471 7s. 1d.

Aiyansh Settlement.

THE work of Rev. J. B. McCullagh, of the C.M.S. Mission at Aiyansh, British Columbia, among the Indians, continues to make good progress. In a recent letter, Mr. McCullagh writes:—"With regard to our Aiyansh Settlement Scheme, I find many of our young men making strenuous efforts to procure cattle and agricultural implements this year. It would please me immensely to be able to help each one who thus starts to help himself, as I was enabled to do in two cases last year. We ought to have our ten-acre allotments laid off this year.

"Another industry I would like to foster is that of brick-making. Nothing would conduce more to the health and comfort of our Indians than the substitution of open fire-places for stoves. Box stoves in close rooms under Indian mismanagement are a source of continual ill-health.

"Next, I would mention the boys I have in training. They are pretty well instructed now in the art of printing, &c., and some are getting strong enough to tackle heavier work. I would very much like to perfect their instruction now in carpentery, joinery, and cabinet-making, so that by-and-by they may be able to furnish their own and others' homes with civilized conveniences. I want a thoroughly well-equipped workshop for this purpose, where the manufacture of doors, windows, and various articles of household furniture can be taught, also a little tinsmith and blacksmith work. All this I can impart to the boys myself without the aid of a trades instructor. I estimate that £300 or £350 would suffice to erect the building and equip it."

The Nepal Frontier.—Messrs. Paynter and Grundy, of the Indian Christian Realm Mission, accompanied by a party of workers, have recently taken two interesting tours, one to the Nepal border, and the other to Gungolihath. In their Nepal trip they were turned back at the frontier by the Nepalese soldiers. During a protracted tour in Nepal itself of two workers, one a Nepalese convert, the other a Kumaoni, opposition was met with. A building has been secured at Berenag, viâ Almora, N. India, which makes a suitable headquarters for the Mission.

The Churches.

Church of England.

By the will of Rev. J. B. Anderson, late rector of Larling, near Thetford, the sum of £3,000 is bequeathed to the British and Foreign Bible Society.

In consequence of the death of the Bishop of Durham, the meeting of the Diocesan Conference, which it was intended to hold at Sunderland in October, has been indefinitely postponed.

At St. Augustine's, Highbury, where Rev. Robert Catterall is vicar, collections amounting to £1,810 were received on Sunday, July 28, towards the renovation of the church. A sum of £1,000 only was asked for by the vicar.

Rev. Chancellor J. Allan Smith has accepted the living of Hay, Breconshire, about to be vacated by Archdeacon Bevan. During his seventeen years' residence in Swansea he has done much to provide for the spiritual needs of the town, and the crown of his work was the rebuilding of the parish church. He will be greatly missed at Swansea.

Rev. Percy Baker has received a cordial welcome from the parishioners of Ellacombe on entering upon his duties as vicar. Mr. Baker said they had a right to expect him to prize above everything the word Evangelical in the sense that it means a man with a message for the good of the souls of his fellows. He asked for their prayers, assistance, and support in winning souls for the Master.

The Bishop of Hereford, addressing the boys of the Leeds Grammar School recently, on the occasion of the prize distribution, warned them against much of the literature which now floods the bookstalls. Young people nowadays, he said, waste a good deal of their faculties, and to some extent deprave their taste, by reading worthless trash; and he asked them to live their leisure moments in the company of great books and great lives.

Rev. G. C. Williamson has issued an encouraging report of the work at Holy Trinity, Bordesley, during the past year. The services have been well attended, and there is no diminution recorded in the number of communicants. All the parochial organizations have maintained a high level, and are in an efficient state. "It is alone owing to the cheerful whole-heartedness of the people," says Mr. Williamson, "that the work, imperfect as it is, still, by the blessing of God, preserves its pleasing character."

Congregational.

Rev. John Eames has been elected pastor of the church at Lewisham in succession to Rev. J. Morlais Jones, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union.

Rev. C. H. Hickling, who has announced his intention of relinquishing the pastorate of Withington Church at the end of September, is not retiring from pastoral work, but has promised to superintend the directly Christian work at the Polytechnic, Regent Street, W., during the coming winter.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have resolved that their memorial to Revs. James Chalmers and Oliver F. Tomkins, who were murdered at New Guinea, shall take the form of a special fund of £2,500, to provide for five years a missionary to labour among the cannibal tribes who committed the massacre. If more money be raised, the additional amount will be used to provide a steam launch for use in the western section of the New Guinea Mission.

Baptist.

The chapel at Keppel Street, Bloomsbury, W.C., a landmark of Nonconformity through the last century, is shortly to be demolished in connection with local improvements. The end of the present year will therefore see the congregation gathered elsewhere.

Revs. Dr. Lorimer, J. Bradford (of Leytonstone) and W. J. Avery, are among the speakers and lecturers this week at the British Chautauqua summer gathering at Aberystwith. Mr. Percy Webb is acting, as usual, as hon. director. There are good numbers present.

Vernon Chapel, King's Cross (Rev. D. H. Moore), is to be closed for three Sundays for renovation, heating and ventilation improvements, and the installation of electric light, at a total cost of about £500, of which sum £230 has been raised up to the present by the congregation, which is now entirely a working-class one. The congregation is uniting with that of Arthur Street Chapel during the alterations.

At Halesowen, Rev. George Dunnett has been conducting open-air services with limelight views, selecting those streets or yards through which no wheel traffic passes. A sheet is suspended across the street, and by the use of the oxy-hydrogen light the hymns and Scripture scenes are thrown on the sheet. The services commence each night about nine o'clock, and continue for an hour. The people bring their own seats. The services are to be continued during August.

Rev. Dr. McLaren has issued an urgent appeal to the churches for the completion, before the close of the tenure of his office, of the Twentieth Century Fund, which, he says, "lies very near my heart." He points out that out of the £250,000 which it was proposed to raise, £180,000 has been promised, and £109,000 actually paid. In order to raise the balance of £70,000, he urges that a vigorous canvass of every person in the Baptist churches and congregations should be made, and especially of those who can only afford to give small sums. Individual appeals will, he thinks, "do more than the most eloquent platform speeches."

A resident at Watersfield, near Pullborough, Sussex, Mr. S. Edwards, seeing the very small provision made for the spiritual welfare of the people, after consultation with friends resident in the village, determined to build a suitable chapel for worship, so that those in sympathy with Baptist principles might come together in church fellowship. This movement was started only a few months ago, and, with the help of friends, has been brought to completion. The building, suitable in every way for the purpose, will seat about 200 people, and the total cost has been only £250. On August 5 it was opened for worship, Dr. Usher (Tunbridge Wells) preaching from Gal. vi. 10.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. A. Johnson to Studley, and Rev. J. Wolfenden to Glossop Road Church, Sheffield.

Methodist.

The new President of the Bible Christian Conference, Rev. John Luke, is a native of Penzance, where he was born in 1849. He entered the ministry in 1871, his first pastorate being at Chatham. He soon became known as one of the most powerful preachers in the denomination, his services being much sought after. Mr. Luke fills the position of President for the second time.

Rev. W. H. Heap, after six years' work in connection with the Wesleyan Central Mission, Manchester, is leaving to undertake circuit work. "For a time," he writes, "I seek the quieter sphere of circuit life. The Manchester Mission is too large a work—its activities are too varied, and its responsibilities too onerous—to carry a passenger. The failure of one man's health means the possible breakdown of others, by reason of burdens added to the toil of those who are already working at full pressure."

A notable event in connection with the meeting of the Wesleyan Conference in Newcastle was the stone-laying ceremony at the Westgate Hill new Mission Hall. The new hall will be the largest Wesleyan building erected in Newcastle since the building of Brunswick, the new Conference church. The main hall will have seating accommodation for 1,000 people. Below it will be a smaller hall, which will seat exactly half that number. There will also be a number of class rooms. Sir Wm. H. Stephenson laid the first stone, and in doing so regretted the absence of Mr. Bainbridge, the father of the scheme, through illness.

Society of Friends.

At the meeting for suffering, recently held, on the nomination of the Peace Committee, a large number of Friends were appointed as delegates to the International Peace Congress at Glasgow in Ninth-month.

At the Leinster Quarterly Meeting, lately held at Enniscorthy, a solemn and prayerful spirit prevailed. In considering the state of the Society in Leinster province, a free and kindly interchange of opinion took place, not only as to the cause of the slight diminution in the number of Friends, but also as to how best to win souls for Christ. In the concluding meeting for worship, several practical addresses were given, and the large company separated under an increased feeling of responsibility and desire to promote the glory of God in their different localities.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. DAVID THOMAS, M.A., of Howgate Church, Penicuik, died very suddenly in his study on August 2. He was born in Ayrshire in 1840, and was ordained in Penicuik in 1867.—Aged seventy-seven, Dr. LITTLEJOHN, Bishop of Long Island, one of the leaders of the Episcopal Church in America.—Aged seventy-nine, Rev. ROBERT HAKE, late Vicar of Aylsham, Norfolk, and Canon and Precentor of Canterbury Cathedral.—Aged seventy-one, Dr. J. C. WATTS, an ex-President of the Methodist New Connexion, who, during the forty years of his ministry in this country, was held in high esteem by his Church, and was successively entrusted with the offices of classical tutor at Ranmoor College, and editor of the Connexional periodicals. His power as a preacher was exceptional, and his name will long be held in affectionate memory in the Potteries, where he laboured for many years.—Rev. SAMUEL ELDRIDGE, pastor of Throop and Moordown Congregational Church, in the Western Division of Hampshire, aged fifty-eight. Mr. Eldridge was ordained to the Congregational ministry in 1869, and spent his whole ministerial life as the pastor of the quiet country villages in which his church was situate.—At Ballyhobridge, Clones, Rev. ROBT. KENNEDY, Presbyterian minister.—Mr. GILBERT M. MCCAULEY, a prominent worker in American Y.M.C.A. work. He was for thirty years an active member and director of the Harrisburg Association, and was also most active in his church, an elder, Sunday-school officer, and teacher.

The Romanization of Ireland.—Professor Mahaffy, of Trinity College, Dublin, writing in one of the monthly reviews, takes a gloomy view of the future, under what he designates as "the Romanization of Ireland." His testimony is based largely upon the results which have promptly followed the application of Mr. Balfour's Local Government Act, results which were anticipated by most of those who are familiar with the subtle methods of Rome in the Sister Island. Mr. Mahaffy states definitely that as the councils consist almost entirely of Roman Catholics, all appointments in their gift are, "with the rarest exceptions," given to Romanists, and that no young doctor seeking office has the slightest chance, whatever his testimonials and acquirements may be, unless he has been trained in the Medical School approved by the priests. Even when the Crown strives to hold a just balance, the Professor says there will be a gradual pressure brought to bear against Protestant promotions. Mr. Mahaffy insists that as a result of the development of this system, "in the course of the next fifty years the whole country will be under Romanist influence." Such a result can only be brought about by those who mistake the interests of Rome for the interests of Ireland. Yet how widely separate the two are!

Miss Gladstone in Southwark.—In the course of next month Miss Helen Gladstone, daughter of the great Premier, intends to take up residence in the University Settlement at Nelson Square, Southwark. She has given up her high educational work at Cambridge in order to prosecute a practical social effort among the industrious poor of Blackfriars Road and Borough. As warden she will be the head of a band consisting of sixteen members and students, all of whom are earnest workers in the cause of social reform. Women and children are their chief concern, spending their time in visiting, nursing the sick, teaching cripples, providing country holidays, and generally striving to make the lives of the people happier and brighter. Miss Sewell, who now retires on account of ill-health, has been warden for many years.

Sailors at Zanzibar.

IT is now more than ten years since the Strangers' Rest was started at Zanzibar, and by each mail tidings of blessing reach us. But this week it has been unusually interesting and encouraging. Mr. Knapman writes and tells of a man-o'-war there in the harbour, with 270 hands on board, and out of that large number of Englishman there was only one who professed to be a follower of Jesus; he had been converted by the consistent living of a shipmate, and now it is his one great desire to be used of God on this large ship in the same way. Mr. and Mrs. Knapman were very busy among these men, visiting them on board, and holding services for them at the Rest when the men were allowed on shore. For such a work as this an unlimited supply of good illustrated literature is needed.

The missionaries also tell us of the happy service amongst the Arabs and Swahili, for whom so little Gospel work is done. The native population much appreciate the open-air meetings, after which there are always inquirers.

The missionaries ask for the prayers of God's people, that his Holy Spirit may be given for each department of the work. Many of the Europeans have been suffering from black water and other fevers, but Mr. and Mrs. Knapman are in fairly good health, which is a cause for much thankfulness. At the present time there seems to be a great need for aggressive and systematic work among the native population, and, to undertake this successfully, additional helpers and increased funds are necessary; a most interesting and important sphere of labour awaits those who are free to serve the Lord on that distant island. Mr. Theodore Isaac is the hon. sec. of this mission, and will be glad to send further details, or the annual report; his address is, 163, St. George's Street, London, E.

Chinese in Borneo.

IN the island of Borneo, a new colony of Chinese Christians was recently visited by Bishop Warne, of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, who relates the following striking incident. After preaching (through an interpreter) on Sunday morning, the Dyak people crowding around almost nude and with their long hair falling loosely over their backs, the Bishop asked that any non-Christians who had accompanied Christians from China, and who desired to become Christians also, would stand. Eleven men responded, whereupon the Bishop remarked to the Christians, "You know these people, I do not; you will live with them, and I will not. I must, therefore, throw the responsibility upon you. Will you see that these are trained up as Christians?" The entire community showed their willingness so to do by raising their hands.

During the day the candidates were questioned by several Chinese local preachers to whom the duty was assigned, and the nature of the obligations they were entering into was explained. In the evening the eleven men, together with one woman and two children, were baptized into the Christian faith. The Communion was administered, and the new members left in the care of a supernumerary member of the Foochow Conference who had come over with some of the Chinese. Thus the Gospel works both in China and in the very heart of the great island of Borneo, where was established an organized Christian community in association with the Malaysia Mission Conference.

A New Lancashire Bishopric.—Canon A. T. Parker has announced his resignation of the rectory of Burnley, which he has held for nearly fifty years. Canon Parker was patron as well as incumbent, and under the provisions of the Burnley Rectory Act of 1889 the next rector will be also suffragan bishop. The income of the living is nearly £5,000 a year; the Act provides that £2,000 a year shall be paid to the new bishop, and the remainder appropriated to the endowment of six new churches in Burnley, three of which have been already built.

BLINDNESS AND DEFORMITY.

The Rev. T. C. writes:—

During all the long period of my experience of forty years as parochial clergyman, I do not think that I have ever met with a sadder case than that of L. B. It is not only that she is totally blind, but painfully deformed. She has an abscess on the brain which affects the intellect. Life must indeed be bereft, in her case, of almost every pleasure and alleviation. It is a pitiful sight to witness such utter helplessness, and then feel how powerless one is to mitigate any of the many sad features of the case. The mother is a struggling widow, and her youngest child is consumptive.

Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Hon. Sec. The National Blind Relief Society, The Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will thankfully receive subscriptions, or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME, ORPHANAGE, AND REFUGE.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Vice-Patrons—
Rear-Admiral H.R.H. The DUKE OF CORNWALL AND YORK, K.G., and the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS, &c.

Increased FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of The Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 185 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 70 seaports in every part of the world.

Seventy-one Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and 96 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1900—£49,166.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing-Room Meeting Collections, &c., should be sent to Commander W. Dawson, R.N.

The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

A Lesson in Tactics. In The Times report of the Naval Manœuvres there occurs a sentence which is capable of a wider application than that originally destined for it. Speaking of certain weaknesses which he had observed in the disposing of certain ships, the correspondent with the "B" fleet says:

A method which works in clear weather will not work in a fog, nor will any method work in the abstract without due regard, in the concrete, to the resources and observed methods of the enemy.

With the relation of this to naval warfare, we, of course, have nothing to do here; but the principle enunciated is one which all who war "the good warfare" need continually to take to heart. Evil is protean in its various forms of manifestation, and the weapons which may slay one of its forms are often powerless in touching another of them. Yet some good people, never having learned this before, think to rout the enemy—so changed in method—with the weapons of an older day. One weapon remains ever the same, i.e., the Word of God; but apart from this we mean those weapons which, under the direction of the Spirit of God, are allowed to be of our own forging. One of the marks of David's warriors was that they "had understanding of the times." The servants of Jesus Christ today also need that characteristic. We need to know "the resources and observed methods of the enemy," and, guided by God, to act accordingly.

How to Approach the Bible. Principal Forsyth contributes to last week's British Weekly a valuable discussion of the question, "Ought we to treat the Bible like any Other Book?" He meets the question with a direct negative. He starts with the striking remark, "Every book belonging to the literature of power as distinct from that of science must be approached with the appropriate sympathy." The special attitude we should take to the Bible is the mood of faith, "as personal surrender."

It was faith on the part of its writers that produced it. It was faith on the part of the Church that selected and preserved it. It is faith that is its native air, in which it expands, reveals, and bestows its true soul.

The idea that we should approach the Bible with an "unprejudiced" mind is as impossible as it is absurd. We cannot properly approach the idea of justice with impartiality. We ought to be prejudiced in its favour. And in approaching the Book of Books it is our duty to have that open, receptive, appropriating feeling which is the soul of faith. Only so can its message be understood and its secret mastered.

The Unification of Life. Thousands of lives are spoiled for want of a unifying principle into which all our scattered forces can be gathered, and from which they may all radiate again. The Apostle tells us that the man of double mind is unstable in all his ways. This double-minded man, in the estimation of St. James, is not a hypocrite, but simply a man who lacks a unifying principle in his nature. The contrary of this is the man of whom the Psalmist speaks—"his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord." There are many Christian people who draw sharp and well-defined lines in their lives, dividing brusquely between sacred and secular, pleasant and sour: living, as it has been described, "in watertight compartments," each of which is separate from its neighbours. Such persons are never really free in the sense of Christian liberty. What is wanted is a central principle of action to which all things in life shall be vitally attached, and among whose diverse movements there shall ever be the most perfect harmony. Then, there will never really be the sense of incongruity, even though certain things at the first view are not related to each other. This central principle is given by St. Paul—"Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Actions moved by that principle can never be discordant. The unifying of life in this way simplifies everything, and floods the soul with continual peace.

Juvenile Smoking. An important step has been taken by the executive of the Scottish Anti-Tobacco Society, of which Captain J. E. Christie, retired governor of Edinburgh Prison, is president. A memorial has been signed by no less than 206 members of the medical profession in Edinburgh, headed by Professor A. R. Simpson, M.D., urging that the use of tobacco by children of tender years is dangerous, and that means should be adopted to check a vice which is extending amongst both sexes of the youth of the country. The list embraces four professors, many lecturers, examiners, and specialists in lunacy and other branches of the medical profession. The memorial runs as follows:—

We, the undersigned, members of the medical profession and others interested in social questions, have no hesitation in expressing our belief that the practice of smoking among young boys and others of tender age is detrimental to the constitution by producing indigestion, and by interfering with the growth and development of the frame.

Further, we dread that the practice of cigarette smoking, occasioning as it does an urgent thirst, leads to the frequenting of ice-cream shops, and other objectionable places where alcoholic liquors may be had. Under the circumstances, we think it highly advisable that the Legislature should adopt means to regulate the sale of tobacco, in any form, to lads under sixteen years of age.

This is one of many pressing questions affecting the future manhood and womanhood of our land, and loudly calls for Parliamentary attention. Meantime, Christian workers should take every opportunity, by kind rebuke, to teach the young the peril of indulging in the practice.

The Grocer Publican. After a prolonged discussion upon a proposal to petition Parliament for power to bring the grocers' licences under police supervision, the Flintshire Police Committee finally decided a few days ago to ask for the entire suppression of such licences. The chairman not only attributed to the facilities afforded by the grocery establishments the serious increase of drinking among women, but also asserted that in the North Wales district those licences were productive of even more harm to the community than the public-houses. This view was supported by the other magistrates. In many parts of the country similar opinions have been expressed by the local authorities, but, unfortunately, it seems impossible to influence the Government to look at any question affecting revenue, except from the lowest point of view.

Brewery Profits. It is instructive to hear or read the impressions of visitors to this country on our social affairs, even if it be at the same time humbling to learn of the astonishment with which others realize the gigantic proportions of the drink traffic. On Sunday evening, when preaching in North London, Dr. Cadman, of New York, spoke out frankly, as others have done, and gave utterance to a solemn warning on this subject. The temperance sentiment is making progress in the community, but we may easily regard this with too great complacency, and thereby be tempted to relax our efforts. The announcement that one brewing company (Guinness's, of Dublin) has, during its past financial year, paid £120,000 more in duty than during the previous twelve months, is one to be seriously pondered.

Drink and Lunacy. The report of the Commissioners in Lunacy for the year 1900 has just been published, and the figures show that the number of lunatics in 1900 of which the Commissioners had notice was 107,944, an increase of 1,333 for the year, as against an increase of 1,525 for 1899, and 3,114 for 1898. As the average annual increase for the past five years has been 2,300, that of last year must be considered small, but the Commissioners have warned the local authorities to look far ahead and provide ample accommodation, "as experience shows that it would be imprudent to reckon on the maintenance of the low rate." This is a gloomy prospect, but the increase in lunacy runs on parallel lines with the development of the drink traffic, with its attendant crime and poverty, and is proportionate with the amount of the National Drink Bill. There has, fortunately, been a slight falling-off in the latter, hence the decrease in the former. As a grant of 4s. per week is made from the National Exchequer to the local authorities towards the support of each pauper lunatic, and the State bears the cost of the criminal lunatic, it is easy to see how the fluctuations in the number of patients affects the taxpayer and the ratepayer.

Infant Mortality. The remarkably plain speech of Dr. Reid at the recent meetings of the British Medical Association ought to bear some practical fruit. He charged the high rate of infant mortality largely to the account of mothers who "are ignorant of the very essentials of infants' diet;" and particularly to those who, either of necessity or from choice, leave their children in the hands of professional food-suppliers, while they themselves work all day in factories. It is a sorry reflection that, despite our systems of education, thousands of girls undertake the terrible responsibilities of marriage without possessing any knowledge (and often heart) which will enable them to guard the proper development of the children that may be born to them. There is nothing more solemn than the responsibility attached to maternity, and there are few things more lightly embraced—especially among the lower classes. And yet the issue of maternity is the base upon which both State and Church rest. Need we wonder at wildness in the State, and such slow growth in the numbers of additions to the Church, when the foundation of all is so persistently threatened?

Educate the Girls. Dr. Reid thinks that it is hopeless to educate the present generation of mothers, and that our chance is in teaching the principles of health in elementary schools. For our part, we believe that a radical alteration is necessary in the whole system of youthful education. True education cannot be confined to the mental faculties; it must embrace the entire life, and in particular it should take special note of the sphere into which the pupil is likely to enter. To us it seems a crime to send boys and girls out into the world, taught in everything except the sacred functions which the Creator has destined for their bodies. Youths and maidens are thrown out into life to discover for themselves, often shamefully, what ought to be taught them by competent teachers. One of the most necessary things in English life to-day is the wise, modest, and godly training of girls in all that pertains to their life, actual and prospective. If this were done, we should soon behold a change in the practical conceptions of motherhood and its consequences. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world"; but many hands need to be seriously taught the art of truly rocking the cradle.

The Growth of Gambling. Eleven years ago a Committee of the Northern House of Convocation issued a lengthy report on the growing prevalence of gambling in this country. The report concluded in this hopeful strain:—

> It is not unreasonable to hope that a frank recognition of an evil which has increased alarmingly during the last decade, and strenuous efforts to cope with it, on the part of Christian people, may, during the next decade, do much to mitigate its virulence. The dawn of the twentieth century may then witness adequate laws against betting and gambling, generally approved and universally enforced, and honest trade and wholesome recreation freed from the feverish excitement and baneful practices which are now too frequently associated with them.

The dawn of the twentieth century has come and gone, and the evil has become doubly intrenched in the habits of the people. All attempts at repressive legislation have been defeated during this decade with humiliating results, and many are growing very doubtful whether much good can be done that way. The true remedy seems to lie, as it has been well put, not so much in lessening the number of gamblers, as in increasing the number of Christians. The spirit of gambling is the incarnation of selfishness, and the only real antidote to it is to bring home to the heart of man the claims of the Gospel of Love.

Indecent Publications. In connection with a case at Lambeth Police Court last week, the Public Prosecutor made an earnest appeal to newspaper proprietors to assist the authorities in their efforts to put down the traffic in indecent photographs and literature, which, he said, could not be carried on were it not for the advertisements. He held in his hand a number of advertisements, some of which had appeared in journals of the highest respectability, though they spoke for themselves, and could bear but one interpretation. This is a request which we endorse most heartily. We know from experience that the task involved is no light one; and that in order to defeat the wiles of the enemy a continuous and rigid scrutiny of advertisements must be exercised. But the saving of the growing generation from this blighting influence is of the utmost importance; and if by means of it they can be preserved from any taint of evil, no proposal can be classed as unreasonable on account of difficulty. Indeed, we know that the matter only requires to be mentioned in many quarters to receive the most loyal support.

Illustrated Papers. Coincident with this we have received from a correspondent an appeal to respectable newsagents to discountenance the sale of the numerous illustrated papers which pander to prurient and impure appetites. This also means the surrender of remunerative business; but there are many dealers all over the country who already decline to handle the unclean thing, and we feel sure that as the facts become more widely known their number will grow. It certainly lies in the power of newspaper proprietors and sellers to do much to advance the movement against uncleanness.

White Slavery. An agitation is at present going on in South Lincolnshire which deserves the closest attention on the part of all interested in the true wellbeing of children. In different parts of the country it is the practice of school boards, in arranging holidays, to do so at times when the children find employment in the lighter parts of harvesting work. Mr. M. R. Thorold, who has been for twenty-one years chairman of the Long Sutton School Board, declares, however, that in that district the system has been reduced to a species of white slavery, and quoted at a meeting an instance of a girl of nine who, before holidays began, was sent out to pick peas at four o'clock, and had to go from the field to school without food, except the early breakfast before commencing work. Other members confirm the statements, and quote similar cases. The charge is made that a number of boards arrange the holidays during harvest, not because of the poverty of the people, but in order to cheapen labour for the farmers, some of whom compel parents to send the boys and girls into the fields. Every attempt to revive the old oppression of children must be strenuously resisted, and it is well that as much light as possible should be let in on practices such as those referred to.

The Labourer and the Land. As a contribution to the study of the causes which have helped to depopulate the villages, and of the necessary remedial measures, Earl Nelson has published a statement of the satisfactory results which have followed his small allotments scheme, as carried out upon a portion of his estates. He states that he never enclosed any commons, and that before Mr. Jesse Collings propounded his famous "Three Acres and a Cow" theories, he had put those principles into practice upon a large scale, by leasing small allotments of three acres at rents of 50s., he himself providing fences and cowsheds. The gratifying results have been simple and evident, and "for twenty years," says the Earl, "I have had the rents regularly paid." Naturally he regards the small holdings system as "a direct means of keeping the labourer on the land and making him more independent." At the same time, he is of opinion that nothing will really stop the exodus to the towns but the provision of good cottages in good repair, a good wage for a good day's work, and some fixity of tenure.

An ex-Priest's Indictment. Perhaps no more forcible attack upon the methods of Rome in these islands has been made of late years than Mr. McCabe's "A Century of Proselytism," which appears in the current number of a leading monthly review. The writer was formerly a priest, and also spent ten years in a monastery, and, therefore, writes from behind the scenes. Dealing with the modern developments, he disputes the accuracy of the figures of the Catholic Directory as to the growth of Romanism, and disposes of the misleading statements as to the hierarchy, "that can find its way into St. James'," the number of priests and chapels, &c., making it clear that there is much wilful exaggeration. Naturally he places the Irish dispersal and the Tractarian movement in the front of the factors in the admitted increase, built up largely by the "plotting in the confessional," and the activity of Catholic women. After so much boasting on the part of the Romanist authorities, it is somewhat startling to read of the numbers of chapels built on borrowed money, now hopelessly in debt, and the swarms of priests not working in parishes, but cooped in seminaries and monasteries. Mr. McCabe asserts that the growth is vastly exaggerated, just as the leakage is underrated, and he charges the bishops and priests with wilful neglect of the poor, "rotting in the slums," while they are looking out for rich perverts.

The Worship of Saints. A fresh step in the Romeward movement in the Anglican Church has been registered. The Church Times has openly advocated the "worship of saints" under certain conditions and limitations. The argument that the practice grew up in the early Church, and among some of the holiest members of it, and that God would not have suffered the practice to gain such ground if it were futile and vain, is one of the most extraordinary ever invented. If it were true, it would equally apply to every abuse that has made the Roman Church a byword, and would justify every ecclesiastical iniquity ever perpetrated. The cause that can stoop to such pleas must be a poor one indeed. It is no use to buttress up this particular Romish practice by this or any argument. It has been discredited hopelessly; the attempt to revive it in a "purified" form would only end in the old idolatrous evils being revived.

The Best of Books. Publishers complain that of late years there has been a great falling-off in the demand for books of a religious tendency. It would appear, however, that as regards the Bible there is a growing development of interest not only on the part of the so-called ordinary reader, but also on that of the scholarly student and the artistic collector. At the present time three publishers are engaged in producing special issues of the Word of God, each appealing to a distinct class of purchasers. The first is of a costly kind, illustrated by great living artists, and, by reason of its price, within the reach of comparatively few; the second is an "Art Bible," published at a cheaper rate; and the third, announced within recent weeks, is to be in many volumes, edited by the most capable commentators. These are simply business speculations, quite outside the region covered by the great Bible Societies. Despite the fact that it is attacked on every side, and decried and discredited in many quarters, the Bible still remains the most popular book in our language.

Romanist Political Influence.

In connection with the new Factory Bill, a fresh illustration has been afforded of the serious extent to which Roman Catholic influence is brought to bear on Parliamentary legislation. The Bill as originally drafted was practically unopposed, and has been fairly described as "a sensible, practical, and beneficial measure." The invention and adaptation of special machinery have led, with other causes, to the growth and development of steam laundries, until it is felt that their regulation is not sufficiently provided for by the existing Factory Acts. In clause 103 of the Bill such restrictions were laid down as seemed desirable, and various changes introduced in Committee were generally accepted as improvements. A difficulty emerged, however, when the proposals were examined in the light of their probable effect on the laundries connected with RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

In order that those in charge of benevolent institutions might have their arrangements hampered as little as possible, a sub-section was introduced, making special provision with regard to inspection. Opposition to this sub-section was soon found, however, to be very strong. That the regulations would have restricted the freedom of managers was apparent from the outset, but abundant evidence showed that where the institutions are under Protestant control, these would have been cheerfully submitted to, and general inspection hailed as a real boon. But this would have meant the regular visits of Government inspectors to convent laundries; and, after unavailing attempts to meet the wishes of the Roman Catholic members, it became clear that the principle of inspection itself was the cause of the objections taken, and nothing short of the exclusion of such laundries from the operation of the Act would meet the demands made.

From its very nature the Roman Catholic Church is an instance of imperium in imperio in every country in which it does not hold absolute sway. Its prelates and priests are ever on the alert, keeping a jealous watch over public movements which can in any way be taken advantage of for the furtherance of the interests of the Church, or which may threaten the security of its position. In this way they afford a striking contrast to the members and leaders of our Protestant Churches, whose attitude in the matter of Roman Catholic aggression is far too commonly one of tolerant indifference, arising from culpable ignorance of the actual facts.

THE EXCUSES PUT FORTH.

It is surely time that our people should be expected to take at their true value such arguments as that "the nuns considered themselves responsible to Christ alone for the souls committed to them"; and, indeed, it is little short of a barefaced attempt to obscure the real issue, when such a statement is made in connection with regulations which only sought to deal with hours of labour, and conditions of work during these hours. Another indication of the spirit of this opposition may be found in the statement of Mr. Dillon, that a lady connected with a convent had recently said to him, "For God's sake, save us from inspection if you can; it will increase our difficulties; but if we are to be inspected, let us have male Government inspectors." The whole trend of modern legislation has been in the direction of allowing the work of women to be inspected by members of their own sex; and it seems fair to question whether a proposal that women workers in laundries should be inspected by men rather than women, is not made because it is likely to be less efficient, or because men are likely to shrink from prosecuting inquiries which a woman could do without scruple.

AN IRRELEVANT PLEA.

It was altogether out of place for Romanist members to ask the House not to weaken the hands of those who were rescuing fallen women; but such talk was freely indulged in, and undoubtedly had its effect in producing "the great surrender" which the Government has made. The Roman Catholic Church does not scruple to sanction the use of means which are more than questionable if its aims can be advanced thereby. Into this discussion matter altogether irrelevant has been introduced; and while we do not think any member of the Ministry was deceived, the fact remains that a Government, as strong as that now in power, is confessedly allowing the perpetuation of certain evils rather than press a question involving Roman Catholic interests and exciting Irish prejudices.

Fierce descriptions of recent exposures regarding the treatment of workers in French convents as "lying charges," can only carry weight with those ignorant that the facts in question were made public as the result of such inspection as it was proposed to establish in this country. Much of the talk indulged in during the discussion of the Royal Declaration simply took for granted a total lack of acquaintance with the facts of English history. In the case of the Factory Bill a victory has been won by the Church in the time of reaction following on that which the Protestants gained over the Declaration. In all three cases, as in all controversy with Romanists, the real danger lies in ignorance of facts and of history. The battle is not over, and it is of the utmost importance that every new generation of our people should be educated on the subject.

A Summer-Day Meditation.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE land of the Bible is a constant confirmation of the language of the Bible. For example, those of us who have crossed the valley of the Jordan, or have climbed from that valley up to Jerusalem on a hot day, have found the journey a very weary one. There is no shelter from trees; from the bare earth or stones the rays of the sun flash with intolerable brightness, and pierce our eyes like bayonets.

But on the torrid road we come upon a company of travellers reclining on the shady side of a huge overhanging rock. At once we recall that passage in Isaiah where the ancient prophet describes our Lord as "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." This is a fruitful text for a summer-day meditation.

"BLESSED BE OUR ROCK!"

Jesus Christ is a shelter for all his redeemed ones from the devouring heat of the divine displeasure against sin. That holy hatred of sin would be a "consuming fire." Thanks and praises be evermore for Christ's atoning sacrifice for our guilt, so that God may be just, and yet the Justifier of every one who accepts and trusts that atoning Saviour. There is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus. "Blessed be our Rock!" A part of every true Christian's religion is walking; another part is working; another part is watching; and sometimes it is weeping. In the midst of such experiences, our souls find a sweet repose in Jesus.

After the hot walk of a week with its toils and its temptations, we reach the blessed Sabbath, and then we sit down awhile among the green pastures and beside the still waters. That is our feeding time; and if we lose that we have no strength for either hard work or sharp fighting. That is our resting time.

The Christian who allows himself to venture into the week without his Bible-food, and some quiet communion with his Master on the Sabbath, as surely robs himself as the toiler who goes to his day's work without a wink of sleep, or the soldier who goes into battle without eating his rations. In these times of heated over-driving and money-seeking, one of the greatest dangers to Christians is that they fail to make the very most of an indispensable Sabbath. No wonder they give out when they neglect the "shadow of the great Rock" in this wearing, wearying world.

HEAVENLY REFRESHMENT.

A third thought suggested by this delightful passage is that the shadow of Jesus brings great coolness to our feverish spirits. Our tempers often get ruffled. Some provocation has set us on fire; we need cooling down, and a look at that patient, forgiving Saviour who when He was reviled reviled not again, may shame us out of wicked irritation.

It was a wonderful comfort to me when, after a toilsome clamber from Jericho under a broiling sun, my guide and myself found shelter under a great wayside rock. The change was so delightful; the protection was so complete; for we had been in absolute danger of sunstroke. Similar to this is the experience of the soul that finds shelter under the infinite love of a pardoning and protecting and purifying Jesus. Oh, the breadth and the depth and the height of the love of Christ that passeth knowledge! The broken law of God shot its condemning fires upon our heads; now we are delivered from the curse of these violations. Every step in sin brought the sting of conscience; here we are at peace with ourselves and at peace with God. There was no joy in travelling over the hard, flinty path of disobedience, but

> I came to Jesus as I was,
> Weary and worn and sad,
> I found in Him a resting-place,
> And He has made me glad.

"How do you manage to live here?" inquired a minister of an old poverty-stricken pilgrim, as he sat in his forlorn and leaking cottage, that was not much better than a hut. The aged man had his Bible on his knee, and replied: "Sir, I am sitting under the shadow of Jesus with great delight, and his fruit is sweet to my taste." This would have been a weary land to him; the journey was hard to a footsore pilgrim; but he could find repose under the cool shadow of the Rock, and wait until his name was called to go up to his heavenly home.

THE ROCK OF AGES.

Divine mercy provided this shelter for us. Man builds his showy mansions—often but a vestibule to the grave. Fashion rears its noisy house of mirth. But he who built snow-crowned Hermon, and placed the great cool overhanging rock on the hot highway from Jericho, has provided the soul's sweet, safe resting-place in Jesus. As man cannot make, so man cannot move this Rock of Ages. Caravans of pilgrims have halted beside it, and found shelter from the torrid heats. The Psalmist, when he had fled from his foes, found refuge there, and sang, "The Lord liveth!" "Blessed be my Rock!" Devout Hannah in her prayer exclaims, "Neither is there any rock like our God!" John the beloved—happy in his Patmos exile—is overheard talking to himself, and we listen to his cheery words: "Now, little children, abide in Him; he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in Him and He in us. Hereby we know that He abideth in us by the Spirit which He hath given us."

A soldier cannot be always on the march; he must renew his strength in rest. Life would wear us out if we did not sometimes find that our "strength is to sit still." Some of you are tired out, and want to bathe your aching heads in the cool stillness beneath the everlasting Rock. Some of you are footsore, and need a bit of rest. Many of you with weary limbs and weeping eyes have struggled up a hard and flinty pathway, and are ready to cry out, "O blessed, loving Master, just let me come in under the Rock!"

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

THE BLESSING OF FAITH.

By Preb. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE, M.A.

Blessed is she that believed; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord (Luke i. 45).

THIS is chronologically the first of those remarkable beatitudes which are frequently placed before us as betokening the blissful existence of those whom God has "much graced;" and those that are much graced are described as "blessed." The original word used to be, in classical language, confined especially to the gods of the heathen; and it is really only transferred to man when we come to receive the teaching of the Holy Ghost, and when that Spirit brings before us the marvellous joy, the wonderful bliss, and unspeakable privileges and powers of those whom God has favoured.

This beatitude is first conferred upon the Virgin Mary, of whom Elizabeth speaks as "the mother of my Lord;" but it is not confined to her. It has been passed from her to all who, like her, believe and receive what God would bestow; and the question that is before us, as we gather in these assemblies, is whether we, too, may take this wonderful beatitude, this word "blessed," to ourselves in all its fulness. It means "blissful," "joyful." Sometimes we should say "happy," but that word is not a felicitous word as applied to New Testament teaching, because it really imports that which haps or happens. The consequence is that we find "happy" but rarely used in the New Testament.

THE BLESSED OF THE LORD.

We are to be something deeper than happy if we are to be the blessed of the Lord in every sense of the word. It was given to her who believed to see a performance of the things which were told her from the Lord. It was unspeakably blessed for her that she should bring forth into the world that wondrous Child; but Elizabeth does not say, "Thou art blessed, because of the Child that shall be born of thee," but "because thou hast believed."

This gives us an opportunity for considering the real blessedness of the Virgin. It brings before us a field for self-examination, by which every-one of us can say whether we can take our place among the blessed. So many come to Keswick and say they are waiting for "the blessing"; so many dwell upon hopes and prospects, saying, "I have missed the blessing," or "I have received the blessing," or "I am earnestly waiting for the blessing." Ah, friend, you had far better take the Blesser, for when you get Him you will get the blessing.

Some ask, "What do you make of verses 28 and 42 in the same chapter? Surely we have there the salutation given to the Virgin twice repeated, 'Blessed art thou among women.'" There the original word (eulogêmenê) is totally different from the makaria ("blessed") of our text; and in that distinction the chief force of this utterance lies. The Greek word in verses 28 and 42 means "blessed" as from the side of the Donor—God Himself. The man that is blessed in that sense is one richly endowed by God; whereas when we turn to the other Greek word, and still translate it by our English word "blessed," less felicitously represented by the term "happy," we find ourselves face to face with the experimental. Here it is blessed from the side of human enjoyment. The one thing is God's donation, the other is man's acceptance and realization. In the one case, it is God as the Giver, who takes us into his treasury, and bestows upon us what He is pleased to grant as God; in the other, we are speaking of personal experience and enjoyment. Then may we be described as "blissful," when we have accepted, as the Virgin did, what God is pleased to say, and when, if the time has not yet come, we expect the performance of whatsoever has been said to us from the Lord.

You will observe that on the Virgin's part there was a direct acceptance of the revelation made to her—she took what God bestowed, and the reason why so many of us who claim to know something of the unsearchable riches of Christ are not blissful, as the Virgin was, is because our part has not been performed. The moment the angel told her that she was to be the mother of God's own Son, she bowed her head and said, "Be it unto me according to thy word," and from that moment there was acquiescence in the word of God, acceptance of the provision of God. There was joy and rest of soul in the fact that God had dealt with her, and she now had received of God what He was pleased to bestow. The whole mischief of our lives to-day is that we have not given, in the way the Virgin did, our adhesion to God's provision, and accepted what He has been pleased to reveal to us. Surely if the Virgin could be blessed in those dim days of difficulty and doubt, you and I ought to be far more blessed than she when we remember our position according to Eph. i. 3, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." Here the Divine provision is set forth. We are blessed—we are not waiting to be blessed—with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ.

GOD'S PROVISION—FAITH'S ACCEPTANCE.

There can be no further provision upon God's part; but there must be acceptance on our part, and the instant acceptance of the provision of God brings with it the assurance of being "blessed," or blissful, restful, joyful, thankful, calm, assured, and ever resting in what the Lord hath said. We sang just now—

There is peace in believing whatever betides—
Is it for me? Is it for me?

Is it not idle folly for a Christian to use such words as these? We Christians get into the habit of singing hymns without recognizing what is involved in the words. People flatter themselves that they have done their duty before God, when they leave the tent and say, with regard to the question of that hymn, "I fear not." How shall we answer to God for that? "Whosoever will, let him take," and "he that believeth hath," and "he that believeth not hath made God a liar." I think we do not deal with ourselves as reasonable men and women, upon these solemn occasions, when we spend much money and much labour, and give up our time to come to these Conventions that we may be dealt with by God the Holy Ghost Himself; and then mock our own souls, and really insult our God (if I may speak to you without giving offence individually) when we sing such words as these, and flatter ourselves that our part of the thing is done by going forth to say, "Is it for me?" For whom is it, if it is not for thee? God never singled out one man for blessing above his compeers and fellows. God's revelation is universal—"God so loved the world," and "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

The Gospel does not mean the mere pardon of sin, and the hope of entering heaven when you die, by an archangel carrying you safely to God's throne. The Gospel means salvation; good tidings mean deliverance from sin, and life everlasting—the life of God lived in his creature. It is for this that we are made: to ask God what He really has said; and the moment we hear what God the Lord hath spoken, we should be blessed because we believe, for there shall be—or, as the margin has it, "that there shall be"—a performance of those things which were told you and me from the Lord.

THE PATTERN OF SIMPLE FAITH.

Let us now look for a moment at the way in which a man blessed by God in provision may become blessed in realization. The whole thing is wrapped up in the case of the Virgin; and I think we cannot do better than look at her, remembering how entirely false is the position accorded to her by those who do not understand the Gospel of grace, and the true privileges of faith. They who look upon the Virgin Mary as being their one intermediary and intercessor with God, will find, I fear, in a multitude of cases, that, instead of the blessing which they might look for through her as the great pattern of simple faith, they will have her rise up against them in judgment one day, not to bless them, but to condemn them; because, when she is offered, as she is in Scripture, as a pattern of simple, childlike believing, they try to turn her into a god instead of a sister.

What does she say to us? She is presented before us as simply blessed, because she believed what the Lord sent to her as a message. Could anything be more marvellous than that she, of the lowest position, was to be the means of bearing One who should be called the Son of the Highest, who was to inherit the throne of David, and become King of the whole world? Mary's mind would go back to Isa. ix. 6, 7, and she would lean upon the sure word of prophecy. If Mary could rest upon the word of prophecy, what shall be said of ourselves? We have the actual facts, and a knowledge of the ever-present indwelling Spirit of God. We marvel that the Virgin was allowed to see the travail of birth, but "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given." If Mary may bear the Child physically into this world, you and I may have Him spiritually always. "Those things" include "the glory which Thou gavest Me;" yet we find Christians relegating the thought of glory to the far beyond. The glory we have now, but its greater development and perfection will be hereafter.

THE TWO RACES OF THE EARTH.

As we look back upon the history of the earth, we find two races. One woman commenced the human race. Eve disbelieved God's word, and she became the mother of all who died in sin. Another woman believed the things which were told her from God, and in a mysterious sense she became the fountain head of another race—the race that lives for evermore. The one woman brings into the world a whole race of them that perish by sin; the other woman becomes by God's grace to us the fountain head, as it were, of a race that never perishes, of a race that knows nothing of death, of a race that lives by the resurrection life of Christ and by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, to the glory of God the Father for every moment of eternity. One honoured God by fulness of faith, yet was only a feeble sinner; the other dishonoured God by doubting his word when she was living the life of perfect innocence in Eden.

THE FULNESS OF BLESSING.

Shall we not take to ourselves the fulness of blessing that can come by simply believing what the Virgin believed? Elizabeth says to Mary, "Blessed art thou," and immediately she breaks forth into song, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. For He hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden, for behold from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed." The Child was not born, but she doubted not.

The word "performance" in the text is very beautiful; it is complete, entire carrying out unto the end, with no failure. You say: "My Lord, I am waiting for thy blessing, and wanting it; but I am so weak." That is exactly the one whom the Lord would choose. The lowly village maiden is singled out by God for his precious and marvellous purpose. He will take you and me, if we only give ourselves to Him. Into the human He passes the Divine, that the Divine may come forth, before all the world, as the power of God unto blessed salvation.

THE GIVER AND RECEIVER.

I close with this thought, trusting my words will not be misunderstood. There is a limitation even to the Divine and Omnipotent One, when He is pleased to impose it upon Himself by certain facts or considerations. If God chooses to say (and we can see the reasonableness of it) that in order to certain issues there must be the combination of two, then the Divine omnipotent as He is, has limited Himself, and He cannot perform or bring about the issue alone. That is to say, if there must be a Giver and a receiver, the Giver, though He be omnipotent, cannot bring about by Himself the issue which depends upon reception by another from Him.

Now, what is God going to see to-night in this assembly? A man is saying: "I cannot resist my passions. I am born with appetites, and must indulge them." A woman is saying: "I am placed in difficulties; I have needs and trials; and it is so, with regard to my circumstances, that they make it practically impossible for me to live this life of perpetual communion with and enjoyment of God." Then God is false, and we had better tell Him so, for the Lord God Almighty is saying to everyone of us that Christ Jesus came into the world to be a Saviour, and to save to the uttermost. I know only two occasions mentioned in the New Testament where that striking expression occurs—God can save to the uttermost. One is in Heb. vii. 25, and the other in connection with the poor woman who was bowed down by her infirmity. She was right down in utter helplessness; God was above, all-helpful. Which will you take? God is able in any case that you can bring to Him. You have to choose the one position or the other; you and I have to answer to God for this solemn opportunity for spiritual decision. Blessed is the soul that believeth now, for—let us thank God!—there shall be a performance of those things which have been told from the Lord.

OUR FOURFOLD CALLING.*

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, M.A.

Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light (1 Pet. ii. 9).

OUR Gracious Sovereign, King Edward VII., has many titles. He is King of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperor of India, &c., and they are now endeavouring to frame a title that will imply his headship over our loyal brothers in the various colonies of the Empire. So, title after title belongs to the same man, and every one of them brings something fresh of dignity, and honour, and responsibility, and advantage, and so forth. No title is without its meaning. We have found that God puts upon his royal children, the princes and princesses of the household of the King of kings, various titles; and these we ought not to be content to consider, as it were, in the lump, but one by one, in order to ascertain what they mean. We began our Bible Readings with "A Chosen Generation," the heavenly birth into this glorious family of God. Then we introduced "A Royal Priesthood," showing the call to the service of God. Now we pass to the third title:—

A HOLY NATION.

Note that these titles explain a work proceeding from within outward, and that is always the way with God. The world thinks that spiritual fruit is gained the other way—as if by tying apples to the branches of a tree. God teaches us that fruit must grow from inside, or it is not really fruit at all. First of all, as a sine quâ non, we must be "born again," and then, when we are born again, we must enter upon personal service in the Royal Priesthood. What follows? As we are truly his, we have a different relationship to all the rest of the people of the world. We have been separated from them, and God calls us a Holy Nation. The title belongs to everyone who has come to Jesus Christ—"to whom coming, as unto a living stone . . . ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house" (4, 5).

NOT "THE" BLESSING, BUT MANY.

We are "blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus." Some people are seeking for the blessing; but I am satisfied that there are as many blessings as there are people hearing me. The prayer of the Apostle is "that we may apprehend that for which we have been apprehended of Christ Jesus." We have been apprehended to be a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people. Let us ask God to make real to us the titles put upon his people.

Look first of all at the Nation. We call a set of people a nation when they are united by certain bonds and severed from those who have not those bonds. We call ourselves British, and the moment we say that, we imply that we do not belong to any other nation. When a person is naturalized in a country, he loses his rights in the nation to which he formerly belonged; there is union and severance. It is the same in Divine things, and Scripture tells us what the uniting bonds and the severances are.

BONDS AND SEVERANCES.

Look at Lev. xx. 24-26; "I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it . . . I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people. . . . And ye shall be holy unto Me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine." Again, note Acts xv. 14: "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." This statement was made by James to the Council of Jerusalem, to explain how it was that the old Jewish limitations were broken down, because a new state of affairs had come. There is a severance distinct from that which made Israel separate from the nations; God took from the Gentiles a people for his name. These may be of any nationality, and represent many races, but every one of them, having come to Jesus, belongs, apart from other relationships, to God Himself, who has called them to be a holy nation.

THE POINTS OF UNION.

Look at the points of union. 1 Chron. xvi. 20-22 says: "They went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people. He suffered no man to do them wrong . . . saying, Touch not mine anointed," &c. Every nation has its own separate locality; Israel went from Egypt, from the nation of the Amalekites, from Edom and Moab and Ammon—from nation to nation, these being united as sets of people by the possession of common localities.

In Deut. xxxii. 8 we find nations united in another way—by the possession of a common inheritance. "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel." The people not only lived in common localities, but they possessed common inheritances.

In 1 Sam. viii. 5 we read that Israel went to Samuel, and said, "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." There was a common government; each member of any one nation was under one and the same government. In Acts xxii. 25 you will find the Apostle Paul, when being taken for scourging, inquired: "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?" Thereupon the centurion told the chief captain: "Take heed what thou doest; for this man is a Roman." Paul insisted on his rights of citizenship as a Roman, and by those rights his nation was distinguished.

Once more, nations have common interests. We talk of the commonwealth or commonweal, because all united in a nation have common interests. The old Greeks, in times of conflict, said that if any man remained neutral he was not worthy to be a citizen at all, and they turned him out.

"WHICH THINGS ARE AN ALLEGORY."

See how these different points of union are true for us as members of a holy nation—the Church of Christ.

First, there is a common abode; we are all "in Christ." There is a common locality and home, where God's holy nation can always be found.

In the second place, it is in Christ that they have their common inheritance. To the Colossians the Apostle speaks of "the inheritance of the saints in light"—a common dwelling-place, mansions, or abiding places "in Christ Jesus." The inheritance of the saints is the joint possession of all members of the holy nation.

Look closer, and, in the third place, you see that they are under one government: "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." This not only connects all the members, but it distinguishes them from all other people. The great distinction is that they call Jesus Lord.

Fourthly, they have common rights of citizenship; their citizenship is in heaven. They have common interests, and so closely are they united that if one suffers all suffer, if one is honoured all rejoice.

The whole nation is a family, also a body. We prefer that our own nation should have the best of things; still more that our family should be blessed; and most of all do we wish that our own body and soul should be in health.

UNREALIZED POSSESSIONS.

Many of these blessings may be ours, and remain unused. They are the right of Christians, and yet Christians do not take the trouble to find them out—do not explore their inheritance. They go about like a man with an inheritance which is barren and unproductive, while if he took the trouble to search, he would find below the surface iron, and coal, and silver of great value. The world mostly sees the barren surface, and says Christianity is a poor kind of life—giving up the joys and taking on the miseries of life. But if we began to tap this wonderful inheritance of ours, what glorious treasures should we enjoy!

We need to put this to the test—that we are brethren and sisters, of one common family, under one Father, having one Lord, possessing a common inheritance, having the same rights of citizenship, also the same future home in the glory. It is better to be on friendly terms now than to begin when we get up there!

"BE YE HOLY."

Now as to the character of the nation—Holy. In God's Word we find nations distinguished by various epithets—foolish, hypocritical, sinful, strong, cruel, and so forth. Out of all nations God has chosen a people whom He calls a Holy Nation. He takes the members of that nation one by one, and having lifted them from the mire of sin, unites them to one another; and he calls that nation "holy."

Every Christian is called to be a saint. Things that are holy are separated unto a special use, and separated from all other uses. There is a severance from, and a severance to. What other nation can say, "O Lord our God, other lords beside Thee have had dominion over us: but by Thee only will we make mention of thy Name" (Isai. xxvi. 13)? We need not serve other masters any more; and if we take up the position God will make it true in us. If we are Christ's, we are holy, and have not got to make ourselves holy.

Holiness has been explained as contact with God: "Whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy." We may be unfaithful, but God is not. That which has been given to Him, He keeps. No one shall pluck us out of our Father's hand. What a wonderful blessing—indwelt by the Spirit, upheld by the Son, and enclosed in the Father's hand. That is holiness.

Years ago a man, who was being examined for the post of Scripture Reader, was asked: What is holiness? He replied, "I suppose a holy man is a God-possessed man." That was a good answer. Brought into contact with God, the consecrated man belongs to Him. That does not mean a super-eminent condition of piety. In the New Testament, nine times out of ten, holiness is used irrespective of spiritual attainment, and the babe in Christ is called a saint, equally with those who are full of faults.

HOW SHALL WE BE HOLY?

In 1 Peter i. 15 you read, "Be ye holy in all manner of conversation"—or manner of life. If you have been a gutter child, and translated into the King's palace, you must live as a King's child; you must leave the ways of gutter children, and no longer make mud-pies. You will be surprised how soon you will find no pleasure in such deeds!

How shall we live a holy life? In 2 Cor. vi.

* Notes of Bible Readings. The first two of the series were reported in our issue of August 15.

14-16 the Apostle asks a series of questions. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"

Examine the questions: What common possession is there between righteousness and unrighteousness? None; they can never overlap. How many Christians seem to think that they can—that things can be right because they are not quite wrong, and not wrong because they are partially right. Where the one thing begins, the other ends. There is a perpetual test for us.

Again, what common interest is there between light and darkness? And remember this is personal, for "ye are light in the Lord." There is no common interest; the moment the one comes, the other goes. Further, what common language is there, what symphony or agreement of sound, between Christ and Belial? Or what common lot between the believer and the unbeliever? The one has an inheritance above, the other, at his best, has one upon the earth. Lastly, what common consent is there between the temple of God and the idol? "Ye are the temple of the living God."

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

Having right theories, we want right practice. Some are like people having a magnificent telescope, by the help of which they want to see the distant worlds. Instead, however, of looking through the telescope, they spend their time looking at it. The precious truths of God's Word are things to be looked through—things to be put into practice. "Having therefore these promises (as a lever that can lift us), let us cleanse ourselves from all defilements of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

A PECULIAR PEOPLE.

Coming to the designation, A Peculiar People, we are in presence of the real purpose, according to Scripture, for which God redeemed us. If you ask a number of Christians why they have been saved, you will get many different answers; and frequently you would find persons unable to give any answer at all, but that they have been saved—apparently to sit down saved for the rest of their lives! In some cases, you might think they were saved that no one might know of it! Of course, men and women are saved in order that others may be saved too. Therein we find the one purpose of God's saving grace. Christ gave Himself, not only that He might "redeem us from all iniquity," but also to "purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works" (Titus ii. 14). And we have our fourfold calling, "that we should shew forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter ii. 9).

PECULIAR—NOT "ODD."

Look first of all at the phrase, "a peculiar people." Needless to say, peculiar does not mean "odd" here. In some ways it is quite right for a Christian to be odd—not, however, to make himself odd in order to be thought so. It is quite right to be like one who was described as "most peculiar," on the ground that he had never been heard to say an unkind word about anyone else! Peculiar is here to be taken in its own sense, as derived from peculium, a man's private property or possession, as distinguished from all else.

When telling his people that he had laid up enormous quantities of treasure for the building of God's house, David says (1 Chron. xxix. 3): "Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house," and so forth. The same word underlies the expressions, "proper good" and "peculiar" and "peculiar treasure," as found in the Old Testament (Ex. xix. 5, Deut. xiv. 2, &c.)

GOD'S PRIVATE PROPERTY.

God's people are to be a people for his own private possession, in the sense in which no one else can interfere. We have many possessions in common with others, in some cases with thousands of others, as of streets and public places. In our homes we have joint possession with the rest of our family; and none of these things are exactly ours alone. You can, however, speak of some things as your very own, and say that no one else has any share or right in them at all. Is it not wonderfully heart-touching that God should say that about his people? All the world is his, and He owns all that is therein; but, while others may share his dominion over the world, He is not content that any should do so as regards his peculiar people? They are intended to be absolutely his, and his altogether and alone.

Over and above the fact that God made us all, and that we are his creation, we are his by purchase. He has redeemed us to Himself (Acts xx. 28; Eph. i. 14). After making us, He took the trouble to redeem us, in order that we should be his—altogether his. In Isa. xliii. 20, 21, we read: "I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen. This people have I formed for Myself; they shall shew forth my praise."

THE RIGHTS OF POSSESSION.

When God takes us, and says: "This is my proper good," that means at once severance from other people's possessions. To be for the Lord's use alone, we must be severed from the use of others. Observe the words to Israel in Deut. vii. 2-6: "When the Lord thy God shall deliver them (the seven nations) before thee . . . thou shalt make no covenant with them, . . . neither shalt thou make marriage with them; . . . ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves," &c. It was a drastic severance, and the explanation is given: "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself"—a people of his own possession—"above all people that are upon the face of the earth." We are to be his in an exclusive sense—really his, and for nobody else at all.

Because they were a holy people, chosen to be a peculiar people unto the Lord, Israel was commanded not to conform to the nations, not only in their marriages and fellowships, but also in their mourning. God claimed the right to control these matters, and He claims the right still—to have a voice in our marriages, and in our mournings: and in neither are we to be subject to the world's laws, but to the laws of God alone.

MAN'S PROFESSION AND GOD'S COVENANT.

In Deut. xxvi, 17, 18, we read, "Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways; . . . and the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as He hath promised thee." That is very remarkable and encouraging. The Lord says to the people to whom He offered the title of "peculiar" forty years before—"The Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people." They were so all along, but it was never manifested; they had not accepted the offer; they did not profess themselves to be God's peculiar people.

"Hold fast the profession of your faith without wavering," has its counterpart in God's covenant whereby his laws are put in our hearts and written in our minds. If we would be blessed by his covenant, we must profess it to be ours. How do we profess that? Of course, with our lips. From time to time Israel had to say, "I profess this day that Thou art the Lord my God;" and to make it practical they brought tithes in their hands; in the face of the world, they paid rent for the possession they enjoyed.

If tenants under earthly landlords do not pay, they are turned out. One wonders why God does not turn out those who withhold his due. When we hear that missionary societies have only just enough to pay their way, and sometimes are in arrears; and when we look at home works and see the lack of needful support, we cannot but deplore the extent to which God's people neglect to lay aside the rent of their possessions, due in acknowledgment of Him who is Lord of all. Only by a jealous regard for God's right shall we roll away the reproach that is on the Church to-day—that every good work is behindhand in the matter of support.

THE LORD'S PORTION.

God asks for a demonstrated profession; and if people say they are the Lord's, and that all their money is his, let them show it by marking off the first share as devoted to the work of God. Once a nation did that, and if you work it out, you will find that the honest Israelite gave to God practically one-fifth of his income. I do not see why we should not deal with the Lord in a business-like manner; it may be a tenth, or it may be nine-tenths, but we should aim at a definite amount.

Turn to Mal. iii., and note in verse 14 the condition of affairs under which the prophet lived. If in times like that, when men call the service of God a vain thing, we speak often one to another, the Lord will hearken. What followed? "A book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his Name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up my jewels," or peculiar treasure, my private possessions. Can there be any more blessed prospect than to live a life under a consciousness that God delights in us, that we are the joy of his heart—that He is keeping us now, and will by and by wear us as his jewels?

Railroad Evangelism.

AGAIN and again the fact has been demonstrated that the world's spiritual education and development are not to be accomplished by any one particular process, and it is a distinctive principle among Evangelical Churches that they encourage variety of method in effecting world-wide evangelisation. Never perhaps was variety of means and method more clearly acknowledged than at the present moment, and while missionary steamers plough the rivers of Africa, chapel cars speed across the prairies and over the mountains of Western North America, carrying the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and bearing the precious seed of the Kingdom. The value of this new method of reaching frontier destitution cannot be over-estimated. Settlers who make their homes in a new country have their farms, roads, and schools to build. The church house too often comes last, and the delay in providing places of worship means the decline of religious zeal.

Only those who are familiar with the conditions of life out in the West can realize the need for

CHAPEL CAR WORK.

In a book entitled "Twenty-five Thousand Miles of Chapel Car Service" Rev. S. G. Neil relates his deeply-interesting experiences. In company with his devoted wife, Mr. Neil has consecrated his energies to a difficult form of labour, and no costly church house bears a more telling witness to the necessity and efficacy of the blood of Christ than this car, which graces a switch in the midst of shanties and huts. The chapel car work is under the auspices of the American Baptist Publication Society, and its marvellous efficiency is conclusively shown by the fact that as a result of its missionary enterprise during the past nine years eighty churches have been organized, sixty-nine meeting houses secured (of the value of 85,000dols.), sixty-seven pastors have been settled, 168 Bible schools organized; and no fewer than 1,750 souls have professed conversion in the meetings held in the chapel cars. The remarkable developments of the work commend it as a form of missionary effort which might be adopted by societies in other lands, seeking to respond to the great commission—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Rev. S. G. Neil's address is 316, North Eighth Street, St. Louis, Mo. He is at present in England, assisting in the London Tent Campaign.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 25. Acts xviii.

THROUGH what changes the life of Paul pursued its way! Here, for instance, we have the prolonged ministry at Corinth, with its friendships and its strong animosities, with the rejection of Jew, and the enthusiastic loyalty of Gentile, with its popular tumult and its inward resolutions and vows—Corinth, Ephesus, Antioch—traversing the blue Ægean, fulfilling his vow, as any other true Israelite in the Temple, itinerating over the old ground, strengthening the disciples. All so human, yet so divine; so ordinary, looked at from one standpoint; so transcendent, because infilled by such a noble Divine Spirit, from another. The life of the Apostle has always been to me, not only as a flying buttress to the temple of our faith, but an inspiration. Why should we not all live so as to strengthen all the disciples? (23.)

Ah, but we must ourselves be strong. Strong, not because of the traditions of our ancestors, not because of a mere educational impulse, but because we have seen Christ for ourselves, and because we daily renew our contact with God in Him. Do you sometimes have your hours of dark questioning? Be strong, pure, sweet, good; the vision of Jesus will become clearer to you. In the act of helping others, you will feel the rock stronger beneath your own feet.

God has many messengers. Apollos is quite different from Paul. Do not set one against the other, but learn something from each. Let not your love for the teacher who of all others has been helpful to you, deprive you of the help that others may bring.

MONDAY, August 26. Acts xix.

The first question that the apostle would address to any company of believers to-day, would probably be the same as he put to the twelve disciples at Ephesus. He knew that twelve men baptized with the Holy Spirit would be more than a match for the whole power of devilry and sin, for which Ephesus was notorious. Paganini once broke all the strings of his violin, save one, in the presence of a great and expectant audience, and said, "One string and Paganini." With how much greater reason, may we not say, one man, or twelve men, and the Holy Spirit?

You may be a good Christian, and have received the Holy Spirit as the power of inward regeneration and illumination, but He is capable also of energizing your nature, so as to make you the medium of mighty spiritual forces. Oh, yield to Him! John's baptism is negative; you need the positive. It is good to be freed from the power of sin, but covet earnestly that divine infilling, that enthusiasm of love, that power with God and man, which made Pentecost the beginning of a new era.

Three signs of revival were granted at Ephesus. (1) Special miracles wrought through the hands of Paul, because in that age of the world men were more affected by what they saw in the physical, than in the moral or spiritual sphere. (2) The hatred of evil men, who were afraid of losing their influence, as in the case of the sons of Sceva, or their wealth, as in the case of Demetrius. (3) The destruction of idolatrous and obscene objects and books, by those who had come under the power of the truth. Oh, that such signs were more prevalent to-day!

TUESDAY, August 27. Acts xx.

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians should be read with the introductory verses of this chapter, as it reveals the apostle's inward mind at this juncture. He seems to have been less impressed with the imminent peril from which he had been rescued, and more solicitous as to the condition of the Church at Corinth, to which he had already addressed his first epistle in the earlier days of his Ephesian ministry.

Into how small a compass the evangelist crowds the three months' ministry in Greece (3), where he visited again the scenes of his memorable first journey. In a few lines only he enumerates the companions of his return journey, and before we are well aware we are back again in Troas, and hurrying towards Jerusalem (16). That lonely walk of the apostle's across country whilst the vessel was rounding the headland (13) has always a fascination, as being probably the last long walk he was to have for four or five years. How often he would recall it in the after days of his confinement! But even then the shadow of coming disaster lay dark on his soul (23).

Of the thoughts that filled his soul at this time we have some record in his address to the Ephesian elders—the recognition that there was an appointed course for him, and the resolve to fill its opportunities to the brim; the consciousness that he had received his ministry directly from the Lord Jesus; the satisfaction of being clear of men's blood; the thankfulness that he had not laboured for the fleece, but for the flock; the anticipation of dark and perilous times; the measuring of life by loss, by giving, rather than by gain—all these thoughts were his companions.

WEDNESDAY, August 28. Acts xxi.

Weaker souls dread peril, and seek to dissuade the heroic servant of Christ from his purpose. But God leads him on, he hardly knows wherefore or whither. If self-preservation were the supreme law of our life, of course we should refrain. But we are called to bear witness for the word of the living God, not only in Jerusalem, but in Rome; not only before the Sanhedrim, but before Agrippa and Festus; before Nero and his court "that all the Gentiles may hear." We have no right to cast our lives away, but there are times when the interests of God's truth, of the Gospel, and of human need are so imperious and commanding, that we must make it our prime aim to serve them. Then a deeper current holds our keel, and impels us forward, than is realized by those who look only on the superficial and outward. We are impelled by a divine impulse. We are the instruments of a supreme purpose.

Lover and friend may advise, persuade, and threaten the certain results of persistence; but there is a point beyond which they may not go. The spirit has received its marching orders from above, and it may not be rebellious, or turn away back. Then the only comment that can be made is, "The Lord's will be done."

We cannot but think that the advice given the apostle by James and others was far from being wise or strong. It seemed at variance with what the apostle had so clearly stated in his Epistle to the Galatians. The course they pressed on him savoured somewhat of temporizing and expediency. But God overruled it for the achievement of his eternal purpose. How often He overrules our honest mistakes!

THURSDAY, August 29. Acts xxii.

What a sermon! His pulpit, the steps that led from the Temple level to the castle of Antonia. His audience, the frenzied crowds that filled the Temple area, but were calmed to attentive audience as they heard the venerable Hebrew speech. His text, the personal and real interposition of the living Christ, to arrest and convert him. Here was a fact, which to the apostle was the greatest of all facts, that he had seen Jesus Christ, and been transformed by what He saw and heard.

To the story as we have studied it in the ninth chapter, the apostle adds a more detailed account of that memorable interview in the Temple when he had questioned the advisability of the Lord's command that he should leave Jerusalem, and had received his final and irrevocable commission to go to the Gentiles. It is marvellous to be permitted to overhear that dialogue! How close and intimate are the disciple's relationship with his Lord! God allowed Abraham, and Moses, and Jeremiah, to reason with Him. He does not crush down our intelligence. It is his own word, "Come, let us reason together." But there is a point beyond which we may not go, but must accept without question the instructions of our Captain. "Ours not to make reply."

A free-born Roman was Paul. More than once he stood upon his rights, and they helped him, as at Philippi. There are advantages in our membership in family, municipal, and national life, of which we need not hesitate to avail ourselves—but they cannot carry us very far. Ultimately we are compelled to step out in faith on the unwonted water, because the Master says, Come.

FRIDAY, August 30. Acts xxiii.

Are you in peril, torn as Paul was between conflicting parties—the Sanhedrim, the Zealots, and false friends? Be of good cheer; others have gone this way before. Only do not trust to your own understanding, nor suppose that for your ingenuity or tact you can navigate your tiny boat in such seas. Hand over the management of all your matters to God; He will give you favour with a Claudius Lysias, and find you an escort of soldiers if needs be. The very air is full of unseen helpers. No weapon that is formed against you shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment shall be condemned.

What consolation came to this troubled man in the night-watches, when the Lord Himself stood by him, and gave him the unmistakable promise, that as he had borne witness on those Temple-steps to all his people, he should have an equal opportunity of bearing witness in Rome (11). This was exactly what he had desired years before, when writing to the Church at Rome (Rom. i. 1-16). But he had never realized that he was to have a free passage at Cæsar's expense, and the most public opportunity possible of delivering his message. To think of it, that a poor, persecuted Jew should be able to preach the Gospel to the Emperor of the world!

And, often afterwards, when it seemed as though his life must be forfeited, either by the violence of man or the perils of the ocean, he must have stayed himself on these words: "Thou must bear witness in Rome." What a life-buoy such a promise is, amid surging waves!

SATURDAY, August 31. Acts xxiv.

Paul always sought for the one ray of light in murky skies. He saw how he might count himself happy in the darkest hour of his life (10).

He was manly and strong—there was no trace of pusillanimity, no attempt to carry favour by soft words (13, 14). He unveiled the honest secret of his soul's inner life, and told how a man might carry a clear and unblemished conscience (16).

He appealed to commonsense and righteousness, as between man and man (19, 20). But when Felix came, who had made a study of "the Way"—the term by which the early Church was generally recognised—he changed his strain. Here was one who knew of Christianity from an intellectual standpoint, who had studied it as a system, who had no doubt discussed it as unworthy of practical consideration, because he was open to receive bribes in the administration of his high office—on him, therefore, the apostle opened the full batteries of personal remonstrance and appeal. He forgot himself, forgot that his life might be dependent on the verdict of Felix, forgot that he might use the opportunity to plead for himself, and concentrated all his heed and care on the salvation of this one weak and craven soul. It was his one chance of reasoning with him of righteousness, self-control, and coming judgment. Oh, for more of this self-forgetfulness, this oblivion of personal interest, if only we may arrest the deterioration of another. It was abortive. Felix trembled and procrastinated, but at least Paul's hands were clear of his blood. Let us thus faithfully deal with our fellows.

North London Convention.—This annual assembly is arranged for September 23-27 inclusive. The gatherings will be held in St. Peter's Church, Devonshire Street, Islington, and the speakers include Revs. F. W. Ainley, J. A. Bevan, C. Musgrave Brown, G. C. Grubb, E. W. Moore, and others. Further particulars will be supplied, and accommodation provided, on application (with stamped envelope) to Miss Copeland, St. Peter's Vicarage, Duncan Terrace, Islington, N.

A Fruitful Life.

THE LATE MISS ELISABETH HOOPER.

ON Sunday, June 9, at Auckland (N.Z.), there passed away to her heavenly rest, a servant of the Lord who was never well-known in England, but abroad, and specially in New Zealand, was greatly beloved by a large circle of Christians, and even by many of those who might hardly lay claim to that title in its full sense.

Miss Elisabeth Hooper was the eldest child of a retired naval officer who settled in a Somersetshire village, and, while he was a centre of blessing to the whole neighbourhood, devoted his main energies to the rearing of his children in the fear of God and the love of Christ. The influence which he thus wielded over them was one which endured throughout the nearly sixty-nine years of which the life of the subject of this notice consisted, and was mighty through God in producing the remarkably Christ-like character and work for which she was distinguished and loved.

After her father's death in 1861, Miss Hooper began a life devoted to Christian education, for which she had been quietly preparing herself in the village which was her home. After a short interval she opened a school for English girls in the Parc de Neuilly, a suburb of Paris. To this step she was moved by hearing that there was no high-class school for English girls in Paris except the convents, where, of course, their Protestant convictions would not long remain untampered with. And the step was made possible, or at least easy, by her fluency in the French language, which was only one of the many acquisitions which she owed under God to her father. The school rapidly reached the classes for which it was designed; and for some years it laid the foundations, deep and strong, in the minds and hearts of many, of Christian life and activity in many lands. It has been a great joy to the writer of this notice, who is Miss Hooper's brother, in the course of a long missionary service in India, to meet with many, themselves missionaries or holding other positions in that land, who have not only remembered Miss Hooper's teaching with the deepest affection, but have exhibited its lasting effects in their own lives and influence for the Master on their neighbours.

In 1869-71 two things occurred which largely affected the rest of Miss Hooper's life and work. In 1869 she, failing to find the Christian fellowship for which she longed in the Church of England in which she had been brought up, sought and found it in that section of "the Brethren" who regarded Darby as their leader in spiritual things. She held with them until a few years ago, when she transferred herself to that division of the "Brethren" which is commonly distinguished by the name of "Open." Yet, in the best sense of the word, she was always "open." She was never "exclusive" to any whom she was quite sure from God's Word that He did not exclude; and she always loved, and as far as possible worked and worshipped with, "all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

In 1870 occurred the Franco-German war. She left Paris before the siege began, and when it was relieved she returned to find her school buildings untouched. She was planning to re-open the school, when the Communistic rebellion broke out, and by only two hours she escaped the fate of being involved in its horrors. When it was subdued, she returned to find her school-house a ruin—hardly more than the foundations left. Feeling that it would be a long time ere English parents would send their daughters to Paris again, and being now quite as familiar with French as with English, she resolved to seek a sphere in some other French-speaking land, and fixed on Vevey, in Canton Vaud, Switzerland, as the future scene of her labours. There she continued till 1885 to work on the same lines as she had done at Paris, and to exercise an ever-increasing influence not only over her pupils, but also over her neighbours in that beautiful region on the shore of the Lake of Geneva; but with this advantage, that the population was Protestant, and there was not that crass ignorance of God's Word which had so appalled her in Paris.

Meanwhile she had taken charge of the writer's seven children; and in 1885 she formed the plan, for their benefit, of emigrating to New Zealand. She fixed on Cambridge, a healthy township about 100 miles south of Auckland, as her place of residence.

MISS ELISABETH HOOPER.

Here she rented a farm, and afterwards bought one. While her main object was to start her nephews in life, she could not possibly confine the light, which burnt brightly within her, to the limits of her own farm. And so, as they, one after another, left her motherly care and went out into the world, she found more and more time to work for her Master among her neighbours. True, a constitution, never strong, had been greatly weakened, first by twenty-five years of incessant teaching, and then by physical labours which she had not expected, but which colonial life necessitates.

But all her powers of body and mind had long been laid at the feet of her divine Lord; and so, as years went on, and she became freer from mundane cares, her life seemed to shine more and more with the light of Christ, and more and more she became a centre of attraction to souls, or rather a channel to lead them to Him. Belonging, as she did, to one of the smallest branches of Christ's Church, she never had the opportunity of addressing crowds; but private houses, and even denominational buildings were gladly opened for her expositions and applications of the Scriptures, which were unusually full of power and of grace.

But perhaps it was with children that she excelled most; and for this service the schoolrooms of even the most conservative churches were thrown open to her. Here she used to hold the little ones, as it were, spellbound, by her loving yet powerful manner of teaching them. That there was something in her very countenance, expressive as that was of a heart full of the love of Christ, in which children (and many adults, too), "saw as it had been the face of an angel," seemed proved by an incident which took place last year at Cambridge. A little one had for the first time attended her children's class in one place, and afterwards the little girl asked another lady, whom she knew better, "Was that Queen Victoria?"

But apart from teaching, Miss Hooper's constantly going in and out among her neighbours, often in great physical weakness and suffering, helping them, encouraging them, advising them, and praying with them, endeared her ever more to them, so that when she died, even though the funeral synchronized with the visit of the Duke and Duchess to Auckland, a great number gathered round her grave. It should also be mentioned that foreign missions lay very near her heart, and she was always inculcating on others the duty of supporting these. In August of last year she privately mooted among her friends the idea of a public sale for the support and Christian up-bringing of some of the children left orphans by the Indian famine; and such was the respect in which she was held throughout the whole country side, that the idea was widely taken up, support came in from all quarters and from miles away; and by "the good hand of her God" upon it, a day of unclouded sunshine (October 17) in Cambridge, amid torrents of rain all round, enabled her to realize over £70, by that one sale, for the Indian orphans.

Miss Hooper was continuing her "work of faith and labour of love" unremittingly, and with apparently more than usual brightness and power, when suddenly, on the morning of June 5, she had an apoplectic seizure, and in four days was at rest with Him whom she had served so long and so faithfully.

Troubled Hearts.

"He is faithful that promised" (Heb. x. 23).

To-morrow may bring sorrow, disappointment hard to bear,
A throng of fretting troubles, and a load of anxious care;
But the Lord who loveth sparrows will love to hear my prayer—
"Faithful is He that promised."

His hand will hold to-morrow, though I know not what it brings,
Upon the stayless rushing of its swift, impetuous wings;
I know not, I am trusting, and my spirit gladly sings,
"Faithful is He that promised."

O Jesus, only Saviour, what sweet love there is in Thee,
No ocean is so wondrous as thy love's deep, unshored sea;
It bears me onward, homeward, and my restful song shall be,
"Faithful is He that promised."

Thirty Years' Open-Air Work.

MR. CHAS. COOK IN HYDE PARK.

IT is now thirty years since a popular movement opened the way for public speaking in Hyde Park. Immediately the beautiful stretch of green sward in the vicinity of the Marble Arch became the general resort of oratorical champions of many secular causes.

The opportunity for presenting the Gospel to the pleasure-seekers in the Park was deeply impressed upon the mind of a young man actively engaged at this time in commercial pursuits, who had been brought to the Lord a few years previously at a prayer-meeting in that notable centre of Christian activity, Stafford Rooms, W. If political and social questions could attract public attention, surely the glorious truths of the Gospel would rivet the interest of the crowds who spent their leisure evenings, and particularly their Sundays, amid the picturesque surroundings of this fashionable park. So reasoned Mr. Chas. Cook, the young man in question, and accordingly with characteristic energy he devoted himself to the Gospel cause. The first Lord's Day on which the Park was opened to speakers, Mr. Cook was there, almost alone, declaring the unsearchable riches of Christ. With crisp, clear-cut sentences, and a happy turn of epigrammatic expression, and, above all, an intense earnestness in which the messenger was lost sight of in the message, Mr. Cook at once secured a respectful hearing.

Week by week the audiences increased, for the crowds found, albeit to their evident surprise, that the truths of the Gospel were of absorbing interest. Gradually this al fresco religious gathering became well known, and the mass of attentive hearers around Mr. Cook's little stand far transcended the motley groups who congregated round infidel lecturers, and contenders for various political shibboleths.

Best of all, however, the fervent words spoken in the power of God wrought conviction in the hearts of many. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," and during this first summer's preaching there were no fewer than 200 converts. Steadily the work went forward, and in order to keep the converts together and maintain evangelistic operations in the district, the Marylebone Music Hall, a building seating 1,000 people, was taken. Here, too, a large congregation of non-church-goers came together, and the soul-winning work made good progress.

HYDE PARK HALL OPENED.

The following year saw another important development. Mr. Cook and his friends had been earnestly praying for a hall near Hyde Park, into which inquirers might be gathered, and where Bible teaching and spiritual counsel could be given to the converts, who were developing into a zealous and compact force of mission workers. A Church of England clergyman had fitted up some premises as a hall, where he intended to commence an evangelistic campaign. Local difficulties arose; the Bishop's veto stopped the arrangement, and the hall, ready for occupation, was therefore tenantless. Providentially it was offered to Mr. Cook, who immediately secured it, and named it "Hyde Park Hall." Enlarged three years afterwards, it has been in use ever since, and has witnessed many remarkable scenes as the headquarters of the work. Another interesting feature was the hiring of a "dancing academy," where meetings were held throughout the year, part of the premises being also used, on week days, as a temperance restaurant.

An important advance was made when the Metropolitan Music Hall, a huge and popular place of amusement, seating 2,000 persons, was rented for Sunday evenings in the winter. Only three years since, the Hall was rebuilt in modern style, and enlarged to accommodate half as many people again, but in spite of an increased rental Mr. Cook maintained his position, so that, during the winter months, large congregations of "outsiders" have heard the Gospel.

A REMARKABLE GATHERING.

The open-air service in Hyde Park remains, however, the chief feature of Mr. Cook's many-sided operations. It is usually considered the largest regular gathering of the kind in the world. On Lord's Day evenings the meeting is held in the centre of the Park. It draws a congregation computed at over 3,000 people, the majority of whom remain during the greater part of the service. The central position renders the meeting a convenient rallying place for the most fashionable, as well as some of the most degraded, districts of the Metropolis. Belgravia, Mayfair, and Kensington, are all close at hand, with Oxford Street, that "strong-hearted stepmother" to many homeless, erring ones, and the terrible Piccadilly, where vice flaunts unabashed almost from midday to midnight. The audience is drawn from many sections of the community: men of influence and artisans, society ladies and shop girls, professional men and out-o'-works, mingle in the concourse. There is abundant testimony to the spiritual character of the assembly. Pastor Frank H. White, who has laboured for so many years in the vicinity of the Park, quotes the words of a leading minister: "That meeting reaches more of the outside masses in one Sunday than I do in twelve months." Mr. W. R. Lane's view is that, "No evangelistic service reaches so many unconcerned, unsaved people as this." Mr. Cook long enjoyed the cordial support of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who on several occasions welcomed the evangelist to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and also preached for him. Dr. Talmage specially asked to occupy Mr. Cook's platform in the Park, and in 1892 had a record audience.

CONVERTS FROM MANY LANDS.

The fruits of these thirty years' services are not to be expressed in statistics; but some idea of their character and extent may be gathered from a few simple but eloquent facts. Seekers representing upwards of twenty nationalities have been brought to Christ at one time or other; the regular ministry, home and foreign missions, the London City Mission, the Colportage Association, and other bodies have received men converted here, whilst acceptable evangelists are in many lands who were awakened in these meetings.

Mr. Cook has met with converts in many parts of the world. During a tour through the United States and Canada there was but one place out of all the cities, towns, and villages visited in which the evangelist did not meet with some who had found Christ in the Hyde Park or the theatre services. A striking feature is the care which is taken to follow up the impressions made in the meetings. Mr. Cook has written letters of spiritual advice to no fewer than 15,000 anxious souls.

SOME STRIKING TESTIMONIES.

The following letter, written by a lady to Mr. Cook, is doubtless characteristic of many cases:—"Twenty-five years ago my father, a French gentleman and a confirmed sceptic, was crossing Hyde Park, and stayed to listen to the Gospel. Smiling at the simplicity of the message, he passed on, but again was seen at the meeting ridiculing the preacher. Living in Bayswater, he had occasion to cross the Park almost nightly, and when next he passed near the meeting he was struck by an illustration of the preacher that, as Ulysses was known by the bending of his bow, which he alone could accomplish, so Christ is known by his works. The truth of the deity of our Lord was then set forth, and the infidel went home to think. When next he appeared, it was as an earnest inquirer. My father lived for many years after, and died a triumphant death, sounding the praises of the Saviour whom he had accepted at the Hyde Park meeting."

Another letter reads: "During the special six weeks' consecutive meetings held in Hyde Park, my husband and myself, my sister and her husband, and fourteen other relations and friends were all brought to Christ; and since then at the theatre services and at Hyde Park Hall, several of our children have also been converted."

In seeking to benefit others, Mr. Cook has likewise had rich cause for rejoicing in his own home, for his four eldest children take active part in the work, his son-in-law and other relatives are numbered among the converts.

While bearing the burden of these important undertakings, Mr. Cook has occasionally found time for a brief holiday, but these have usually been spent in visiting the prisons of Europe, America, and of North Africa, delivering the Gospel message to many dark souls, and distributing New Testaments

It is satisfactory to find, after so long a continuance, that the Park services are as fresh and bright as ever. The admirable singing of the choir remains one of the chief features, while the preaching of the story of Redeeming Love is received, as heretofore, with earnest attention. In spite of so many years' work, Mr. Cook's health permits him to labour energetically, but it seems desirable that he should now engage more frequently, as opportunity may offer, in indoor preaching or evangelistic missions. The question of engaging the Metropolitan Theatre for another winter's services is also one which presses heavily upon our friend. It would be cruel to deprive the congregation of the gatherings; moreover, if Mr. Cook does not secure the building at once, it will be taken by a secular body. The financial burden, however, is no light one, and calls for the sympathy and fellowship of those who desire the maintenance of a fruitful work, and to recognise in a practical way the long and faithful toilings of a devoted evangelist. Mr. Cook's address is 6, Frithville Gardens, London, W.

Pauperism in England and Wales.—The return of paupers for the last half year shows that the number of persons in receipt of union relief on January 1 last amounted to 801,460, or one in every forty of the entire population. The proportion in London was, however, still larger, one in thirty-seven. Although there is a small falling-off in the vast army of paupers, the figures are painful, taken in connection with the periodical outbursts over the development of the national revenue, and also in connection with the swelling figures of the nation's Drink Bill.

"At the Eleventh Hour."

A TRUE INCIDENT.

By LUCY A. BENNETT.

OF the many strong and sound reasons for seeking salvation "while it is called to-day" (Heb. iii. 13) there is none, perhaps, stronger or more solemn than this, that the heart grows harder and the conscience less impressible as the years pass by.

The cases of conversion at extreme old age, or even in middle life, are, we fear, rare, as compared with the number of instances in which young life is won for Christ.

And yet, it is blessed to know that our God is almighty, and that there is no case too hard for Him; a fact which is always true, and may always be relied upon; and which is strikingly illustrated by the following true incident:—

A Christian friend was asked by another worker to accompany him to the house of a very aged person, who appeared to be totally destitute of interest in Christ. Together the two messengers of the Gospel went to the one-roomed cottage in which the poor creature dwelt—a room which never was too clean—and found the object of their visit lying upon a bed on the floor, in one corner, from which she could see window, door, and all that was in the room. This was quite necessary, for she was deaf, as well as exceedingly old—rather over a hundred, it was said, at the time of my friend's first visit.

A DISCOURAGING RECEPTION.

Very wisely and very simply did the visitors seek to set forth the Gospel in such a way as to win this poor dark soul to the Saviour, afterwards engaging in prayer on her behalf; but the spirit in which the message was received may be judged from the fact that, when going out of the door, they had the pain of hearing the coin which one of them had left in her hand thrown angrily across the room.

No notice of this was, however, taken by the visitors, and from time to time my friend subsequently went alone to see her, always setting before her the way of salvation, and praying with her and for her. She got better in health, I suppose, for she was able now to sit up, but she showed her reluctance to hear the truth by adopting the practice of smoking a pipe during these calls; and after a little longer she would lie down and smoke when my friend went in. Moreover, she insisted that she was "so very deaf," that it was quite useless to talk to her.

Many would undoubtedly have been discouraged, but it was laid upon the heart of this good man to continue in earnest prayer and patient effort on behalf of this very aged person; and, he says, "My heart was set upon making her hear the good news of salvation through the atoning merits of the Lord Jesus, in the hope that she would be enabled to believe and be saved."

Suppressing, therefore, all sense of personal discomfort, the visitor used, after that, to kneel down beside the prostrate form of the aged smoker, and putting his mouth near to her ear, he loudly proclaimed his simple message; always using the very simplest and most direct language at his command, and always closing with prayer, which was offered in the same manner and in the same position.

LABOUR NOT IN VAIN.

Months passed away before any perceptible change came about; but after a while the poor woman omitted the use of the pipe, and began to sit up during the visitor's calls. Next, she admitted that she could hear without the voice being raised as much; and soon it became evident that she was really interested in those truths—so great and precious—which had previously been distasteful to her. Great hope was now entertained on her behalf; but illness set in, and, at her advanced age, it was necessary to remove her to a distant place; consequently my friend saw her no more.

Time passed on, and one day he received the news of her death; but had the satisfaction of learning that she had been visited in the new neighbourhood by another Christian, who had reason to believe that she died trusting in the Lord Jesus. On being asked if she knew Mr. E——, she seemed pleased, and stated that it was through his visits that Christ had been made known to her.

This simple incident should surely be an encouragement to all who are labouring for Christ under untoward circumstances, showing as it does, the wonderful, soul-renewing vitality of the "incorruptible seed" which God gives to his faithful sowers, and from how unlikely a soil the glad harvest may be gathered.

May the brief recital be used also by the Divine Spirit to lead some poor aged one, who hitherto has rejected God's message, to seek the same mercy, and to trust the same redeeming and forgiving love, which is, indeed, love to the uttermost.

To My Larger Congregation.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The Ægean Sea.

LAST night, returning from Constantinople, we stayed at Smyrna. As we steamed up the noble piece of water, at the head of which the city stands, my attention was called to one lonely cypress, standing on the slope of the mountain, just above the clustered houses, which rise tier on tier from the water's edge. "That," said my friend, "is the spot where, after the ordeal of the wild beasts, Polycarp's body was burnt, and afterwards his ashes buried. His tomb is there." What a sight that burning must have been! It must have illuminated every point in this vast natural amphitheatre; yes, and beyond, for all the centuries have been ruddy with that glow—Polycarp, the friend, in early life, of the Apostle John, having as a young man sat at his feet, and heard him speak of Jesus; who gave such exact explanations to Irenæus of there being four Gospels, and detailed the reasons which led St. John to write the fourth; who told the Roman Prefect that he had served the Master for eighty-six years, having experienced nothing but kindness at his hands, and refused to deny Him.

We held a meeting at the Sailors' Rest. There ought to be such a blessed resting-place in every port on the Mediterranean, and throughout the world. What a haven of rest! how good for sailors, strangers, and travellers like ourselves! One missionary lady told me that it was impossible to say what Mr. Gabriel is to all the Christians and English-speaking people of the city. He was kindness itself to us. Rev. R. P. Ashe, one of the English clergymen, formerly of Uganda, came to greet us; and we had a happy little gathering in the "Corner Room," which was crowded by Christian Greeks, for whom the devoted Greek pastor, Rev. Dr. Moschou, interpreted. The Turkish Missions Aid Society is doing well to enable him to hold his own; and the B. & F. Bible Society may be congratulated on having such a depôt, and such a capable representative, whom I also visited while at Smyrna.

When I am enjoying lovely scenes, I cannot help catching up my blotting-pad, paper, and pen, which are always at my hand, and describing them for others. This is, I suppose, the same kind of faculty as sketching, but I lack that faculty.

At this moment our keel is laying back, as a ploughshare might, furrows, right and left, of perfectly still blue water. It seems as though a solid soil of blue were being cleft. Such blue as this Ægean yields is beyond description. I know now why Homer, whose home was here, so often refers to the purple sea. As our course is due south, on our left is the near coastline of Asia Minor, lofty hills (perhaps I might call them mountains) rising sheer from the water's edge; and on our right is Samos, terraced with vineyards, and with deeply indented shores. The sun is in afternoon glory. A white sail or two gleam brilliantly in the sunlight. The narrow straits between continent and island seem somewhat extended, for my heart is feverish—when we turn this promontory, and can look westwards over the wide stretch of ocean, we shall see Patmos. This is almost the climax of my pleasure. The perfect climax would be to spend a week there. Just to think of making a party one summer to read the Apocalypse on the Isle of Patmos; but I should have to exclude everyone who had written a book, or invented a system, of interpretation—and then who would be left to accompany me! O thou Apostle of Love, we understand thy longing for the meetings of the Church at Ephesus, the great city, whose site lies away behind us on the receding coast, which the veils of an exquisitely light vapour now conceal.

A VIEW OF PATMOS.

Yes, there it is. I ask one of the officers, to make sure; he does not know: what is Patmos to him? I ask the captain, who courteously invites me into his room, and shows it me on his map. Yes, that is Patmos. It lies too far away on the horizon to allow us to form an idea of its contents; but probably it is but sparsely inhabited by a few families of Greek peasants, who till the soil, and tend their vineyards, but on whose eyes never breaks the light of that face, which is as the sun when it shineth in its strength. These were the scenes on which the seer of Patmos often gazed, thinking much of the Seven Churches which had been his charge, as they lay there, behind those noble coastlines.

At Troas Mr. G. C. White, of the American Missionary Board, met us. He, too, is going to the Conference at Beyrout. The scene of his labours is Anatolia College, Marsovan, near the southern shores of the Black Sea. This institution is fifteen years old. Some 250 students are constantly receiving a first-class education there, and going forth as pastors, evangelists, teachers, and business men. In many cases members of the latter class have become earnest preachers of Christ, opening their houses to Gospel services and founding little churches.

My friend is a highly-educated man, an enthusiast in his work, and full of interesting information about the archæology and ethnology of these Eastern lands. We had a pleasant study together of Gen. x., and a talk about the vast remains of the metropolis of the ancient Hittite empire, two days' journey from his home.

Miss Dodd, of the American College, Constantinople, one of twenty-eight teachers, is also of our party, and my two friends are kindling in my heart some of their own deep love for the Turkish people, presenting their character under quite new and unexpected lights. Now for Beyrout!

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.—On Bank Holiday, Dr. A. M. Neatby presided over a gathering of sailors of different nationalities, at which a time of real blessing was experienced. On the following Thursday a young man testified in public that at that meeting he had given his heart to the Lord. Another said on Friday that it had been his first visit, but the Rest would henceforth be home to him when in London. A sailor, converted at the Rest a few weeks ago, remarked before going to his ship, "I have indeed received a new life. This is the first time for years I have come on board sober." One with whom the Spirit of God had been long striving, tried and again to lead a better life, and failed. Conversion was a new story to him, but he laid hold on eternal life with the grip of a sinking man, and wrote afterwards to say that that day would ever be a red-letter one in his experience. A new sitting-room, recently furnished, is being greatly appreciated by the sailors. Miss Cleaver (resident deaconess) would be grateful for gifts of books, games, &c., to make the room attractive.

Other Lands.

The Opening of Ecuador.

From an interesting account which has reached us of the opening of Ecuador to the Gospel, we give the following extracts:—

BEFORE the memorable year 1895, Ecuador was perhaps the most conservative and priest-dominated country in South America. It fully earned the name given by one of its own benefactors, Luciano Coral—of "a vast convent, within whose walls are heard nothing but the ringing of bells, and in which no smoke rises but that of incense." Rome was paramount. It had for a time effectually shut the door of liberty of worship, of conscience, of speech, and of the press. It refused admission to the Bible, and busied itself in burning any copies found in the land. Coral writes: "The ancient Concordate made Ecuador a slave of the Vatican, impeded progress, was the cause of the greater part of the misfortunes of the republic, rendered futile the laws made to restrict the corruption and scandals of the bishops and clergy—having deprived the civil courts of the right to judge them."

EXCLUSION OF THE BIBLE.

In 1838, the then agent of the American Bible Society (Mr. Isaac Wheelwright) was prohibited from circulating the Scriptures. Year by year the power of the Church seemed to increase rather than diminish. In 1888 Rev. A. M. Milne (the present agent) wrote to the Bible Society: "This portion of our field we have not thus far been able to bring under cultivation;" and quoted from the President's Message to Congress a description of the country as "a state wholly and alone devoted to the service of the holy Church." One of the customs' laws forbade the importation of books and periodicals unless sanctioned by the Jesuits. Yet, in the face of all this, Mr. Milne added, "We feel sure that the time is coming when, by Divine power, the door will burst open."

Seven years longer the workers had to wait; but, although clerical councils and governments could prevent men from preaching, they could not stop prayer. The eyes of the more thoughtful Ecuadorians were gradually opened to the illogical position of Rome, and to the oppression, injustice, and corruption of the system. Men began to realize how far Ecuador was lagging behind the other nations of the world. Almost the entire immigration consisted of "padres" and "hermanas de caridad" (sisters of mercy). One speaker gave the names of thirty-four orders, and said he would not give the others for fear of tiring his hearers.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

Their desert of conservatism was compared with the gardens of liberty in other lands. Extreme measures were adopted to suppress inquiry and the free expression of opinion; but the movement spread until there was a complete state of revolution, and when General Alfaro took the reins of government, the door was open. A counter agitation on the part of the priests failed.

By the new law the Romish Church continues to be the religion of the State, and the priests have perfect liberty so long as they do not interfere in the affairs of the State. The Government secured freedom to all, and now that the door was opened it had to be entered. Colporteurs were sent, and the priests were up in arms; but, notwithstanding many clerical prohibitions, good sales of the Scriptures have been made.

In an interview with the President, Dr. Wood (American Methodist Episcopal Mission) and Mr. Milne met with much sympathy. Now the normal schools at Quito, the capital, are under the control of four Methodist missionaries (supported by the Government), who are free to preach the Gospel on Sundays, and missionaries are settled at Cuenca and in other parts of the country.

ROBERT F. ELDER.

Among Burmese Lepers.

THE occasion was the opening of a new ward in the Home for Lepers at Mandalay. Though the beds were not ready, it was found necessary to use the new ward as soon as the building was complete, as the others had been overcrowded for some time, the inmates rolling themselves up in rugs and sleeping on mats on the floor. The new ward looks very attractive, with its white plastered walls, and cut-stone floor. There is no lack of ventilation, for, besides the numerous windows, there are three large doors, all opening to the outside. It is a very neat building, over fifty feet in length; broad and lofty in proportion, with brick walls and a shingle roof.

On a table at the far end is a white cloth with a Bible lying upon it. The great gong, which has been used to summon the lepers, ceases, and the superintendent enters the room. Asked what hymn they would like to sing as the first in the new ward, there is a pathetic significance in the selection, "No. 41"—"The Great Physician now is near." Alas! never on earth will they know the healing power of the physician; the utmost that can be done is to alleviate their pain. The men are on one side, women and children on the other, all squatting in true Burmese fashion. The women come from their own ward, natives of India from theirs, and one Madrasee woman from a little hut in which she lives alone. The Chinamen, too, live together in a similar hut. One of them who has recently come into the Home, and can use his hands, has been plying his former trade as a carpenter, and has been entrusted with the making of the cots for the new ward! Among the women you may notice one who has flowers in her hair, and has adorned herself with all that a Burman considers necessary for the beautifying of the body. Poor thing! What a mockery it seems; and yet it is a very real pleasure to her in her otherwise prosaic life.

HELP FROM NEIGHBOURS.

The lepers have their pets in the Home, as the dogs and sparrows which are to be found in more than one ward testify, while the pictures on the walls, gifts of food, fruit, &c., at various seasons, and presents of clothing from time to time show that the appeals for help on their behalf have been heard and responded to by many friends. The people of Mandalay and the district have strengthened and encouraged those engaged in this work, and by their regular contributions of money, and presence at some of the "special occasions," have betokened their sympathy with the work done in their midst; indeed, it is through the generosity of a late resident of Mandalay that this new ward has been built. Help reaches us from many quarters; England and India assist us liberally, and to Scotland we owe a debt which cannot be easily discharged, for it was owing to a visit paid to this city by Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, of Edinburgh, that the Home was affiliated, some ten years ago, to the Mission to Lepers in India and the East, which has from that time materially assisted the Home by support for lepers, and sympathy and help in many ways.

LOVE OF TOYS.

The Burman lepers are like children in their love of toys, especially dolls, and no one having once seen their pleasure at Christmas, when dolls, whistles, trumpets, &c., were distributed, can forget the scene. On one occasion some of the men begged earnestly for dolls, and one woman who received a little mirror pleaded that it might be exchanged for a doll, while a box of bricks was regarded as such a treasure that it was put under the care of the head-man of the ward, to be carefully kept by him and produced at stated times for the delectation of all.

Further information may be obtained from Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, of Edinburgh.

Liquor Traffic in South Africa.—A branch of the South African Alliance has been formed at Pretoria for the purpose of promoting State control of the liquor traffic. It is stated that Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Milner are giving the matter their sympathetic attention.

Free Libraries in Burmah.

FOR half a century past the spread of the Gospel in Burmah has been the aim and the inspiration of Mrs. Ingalls, of the American Baptist Mission, whose devoted personal labours, during that long period in the district of Thongze, about 100 miles north of Rangoon, Lower Burmah, have been fruitful of blessed results. Free libraries have been, through her instrumentality, established for the employés of the Burmese State Railways.

It is an interesting story that she writes. It began by the loan of one book, "Brighter than the Day," which, with the Bible, was the only book she had after her house had been burned down. When, in the course of her missionary activities, she was distributing tracts, the driver of a train appealed for English reading, and this one book was loaned time after time to drivers, firemen, guards, and others. Then came permission to allow books to be received and exchanged by the keepers of the refreshment rooms. An empty brandy box did duty for a while, but was soon replaced by the gift of a large bookcase, which became the home of the lending library. Afterwards, a separate building was erected, and a librarian appointed.

Other centres have subsequently been established, and, with grants of books and gifts of periodicals from friends in the United Kingdom, a wide circle of readers of good literature has been formed. To such contributors Mrs. Ingalls expresses her gratitude for past co-operation and sympathy; and this with a lively sense of favours yet to come! The need is for periodicals, Christmas cards, calendars, illustrated journals, and newly-published books of high tone and character. Mrs. Ingalls adds that she has had the joy of seeing, as some of the results of her labours, an improved condition of living, a reformation of the men whom she has sought to influence, as well as in some cases undoubted conversion to God.

Through seasons of discouragement and success, through cloud and sunshine, she has been sustained in her efforts during forty-five years of widowhood, and has had evidence that the sowing of the good seed of the Gospel has not been in vain. Converts have been won from Buddhism, and priests have humbled themselves before the crucified Redeemer, and become witnesses for the truth. During the year two new chapels have been erected and some new schools. The churches not only support their own pastors, but also send contributions to other lands—China, Africa, and Japan—the hearts of Christian disciples being moved by the Holy Spirit to send out the light to others still in the darkness of heathendom.

The C.M.S. Village, Clarkabad.

STEADY progress in many departments of work is maintained at Clarkabad, the C.M.S. village near Lahore, which, it will be remembered, was established as a place of refuge for converts from heathendom, where they could be safe from the persecution of relatives, and earn their living by farming, or at the other industries which are maintained.

As the village began to develop, it was thought best to establish in its midst orphanages and schools for boys and girls, and there are now two flourishing schools. In connection with the boys' school and industrial work, it is aimed to provide a good Christian education in the vernacular, and a thorough knowledge of some industrial trade, whereby each lad will be able to earn his own living in the near future, and so, in no sense, become a burden to the Christian Church, as so many have in the past. At the present time carpentering, metal work, tailoring, shoe-making, and gardening, are being taught, and it is hoped to start weaving and carpet-making.

Mr. HERBERT B. CLAXTON, the superintendent, is now in England, seeking to raise £1,000 in order to provide necessary tools and fittings for the new workshops, and also to erect new buildings, which are urgently required.

Porta Pia Revisited.

By Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

PORTA PIA is one of the most famous gateways in the world. As is well known, old Rome was surrounded by strong high walls, parts of which are still standing, and Porta Pia is one of the entrances on its northern side. But when we call it a gateway, we must not think of any modern construction to park or palace that goes by that name. Porta Pia is an enormous structure of stone and brick. It is a fortification in the wall. There were military and customs offices, guard-rooms, and accommodation for many soldiers, besides storage for arms and ammunition inside its buildings. It is called Porta Pia because it was begun in 1564, when Pio IV. was Pope, and finished during the pontificate of his successor, Pio V. The designer of the gateway was Michael Angelo.

Porta Pia owes its fame to the fact that it was by a breach made in the walls of Rome, a few hundred feet to the west of it, that the Italian soldiers entered the Eternal City on September 20, 1870. The beneficent results that flowed from this event to Italy, and to the world, it is impossible to estimate. The Pope's temporal power was destroyed—we believe, for ever. The worst Government that the world had ever seen, and which had made Italy "a garden of Eden, without the tree of knowledge and without the tree of life," was for ever ended. The Pope's infallibility just bestowed upon him, was discredited, for he said that St. Peter would drive back the Italian soldiers. He used to lament, too, that he had only Providence on his side; to which Lord Clarendon replied, "Providence has worked miracles during the last ten years, but they have all been in favour of Italy." The entrance of the Italian troops put an end to the reign of ignorance, cruelty, despotism, anarchy, immorality, and irreligion; and inaugurated the reign of knowledge, constitutional liberty, order, law, morality, religion. The first to enter Rome after the victorious Italian soldiers, was a colporteur with a waggon full of Bibles.

When I was in Rome last Easter, I went on pilgrimage to Porta Pia on the morning of Sunday, March 31. I thought it a far more worthy object of pilgrimage than the Holy Door, or the Vatican, or even the Pope himself; and was delighted to see again the old monuments erected to commemorate the 20th September, and some new ones that had been added when, in 1895, its twenty-fifth anniversary was celebrated by Rome and the Italian nation.

The street that leads out of the city to Porta Pia—one of the finest in Rome—is called Viâ XX. Settembre. Thus the day and month are kept before the minds of the people. On passing through the gateway the first thing one sees is a pedestal of granite, surmounted by a gilded figure. It is a monument to Victory, erected in 1895, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the breach in the wall of Rome, and it bears on one side the words, "Roma Redenta" (Rome Redeemed), and on the other these words, "When to the universality of right twice Romanlike asserted, fate added the public opinion of humanity, by this breach, Italy re-entered Rome." This pedestal is opposite where the breach in the wall was made. The broken-down thick wall has been replaced by a thin one, built somewhat back so as to leave a recess in front. This is railed off, and planted with flowers and shrubs. The wall itself, to which are attached three separate monuments, serves as a background. The centre one contains a list of the forty-eight Italian soldiers who fell fighting the Papal mercenaries. The fate of Rome was sealed once the French bayonets were withdrawn. The Pope knew it, and the Italian Government besought him not to resist, as it would simply cause needless shedding of blood. But as Pio Nono was desirous to kill some Italians, he gave orders to his mercenaries to resist until a breach was made, and their own lives in danger, when they were to give up. Thus "the butcher of Italy," as he is called, added to his crimes.

Italian Evangelical Church.

THE season of trial through which the Italian Evangelical Church is passing is proving to be the most severe which it has ever experienced. "On the other hand," writes Rev. Cav. S. Fera, "it is also true that abundant encouragement and consolation have come to us from the Lord."

In order to inform friends in this country of the present state of affairs, a declaration has been drawn up and signed by twenty-seven pastors and evangelists, in which they solemnly declare:—

(1) That no re-organization or change has been made or proposed in the Italian Evangelical Church. The Church is to-day, as it has been for more than thirty years, founded on Jesus Christ as its only Head and Lord, and with the Holy Scriptures as the only rule of faith and morals, living by faith, and working through faith in God and in his providence for the evangelization of Italy.

(2) That the administration of the Church is constituted on the principles adopted in 1870, that is (a) the General Assembly is the supreme authority or high court of the Church; (b) in the time intervening between one Assembly and another, the Evangelization Committee (elected by the Assembly) is the representative and administrative authority (Article 105 of the General Rules), and exercises executive and administrative power according to the "Fundamental Statute," to the "General Rules," to the decisions of the Assemblies, and to the precedents of the Church, being responsible only to the General Assembly; (c) and while each congregation is established on a basis of independence, as indicated by Article, 5 the workers of the Church, according to Article 60, are dependent on the Evangelization Committee.

(3) That the present Evangelization Committee was regularly elected by the General Assembly held in 1900, and, therefore, we trust it fully, while it remains responsible for all its acts only to the next General Assembly.

(4) That—and for this we take a solemn engagement—by one accord and in peace as one body, we intend to stand firm and adhere to the Italian Evangelical Church—the Church of our hearts—which is the ideal of the martyrs of the faith and of Alessandro Gavazzi, to the attainment of which Rev. Dr. John R. McDougall has co-operated with us, and the grand motto of which is, "Italy for Christ."

Statistics published in July show that the Church consists of thirty-five congregations, with five others in process of formation. The communicants number 1,815 and the catechumens 502, with twenty pastors, ten evangelists, one Bible-woman, three workers on trial, thirty-five elders, seventy-five deacons, and twenty-five teachers. In the twenty-four Sunday schools, 1,302 boys and girls are under the instruction of sixty-three teachers. A special effort is made to secure the placing of the Scriptures in the hands of the people, and in twelve months 868 Bibles and 2,588 New Testaments were sold or given away.

One cause of the serious financial difficulties has been the steady decrease in contributions from America. The treasurer of the Church is S. V. Cecchi, Esq. (Messrs Haskard and Co., Limited), 18, Via Pietrapiana, Florence.

Y.M.C.A.* Work in India.—Writing from Bombay in March, Mr. Oliver McCowen, Y.M.C.A. Organising Secretary in Burmah, reported the establishment of a Young Men's Boarding House, in which British and Eurasians live together on the happiest terms and under Christian influences, and told of blessed work among young men in the public hospital. A still wider field for work exists among the native young men—the Hindoos, Buddhists, Mohammedans, and Parsees—of whom 3,000,000 are familiar with the English tongue. There are far more students in India than in Great Britain and Ireland. Of these intellectual men, the late Sir Charles Aitchison said, "We are rapidly raising up in India a class of young men as highly educated and cultured as the generality of the young men who leave the schools and colleges of England . . . men of the press and of the pen . . . with whom rests the control of the destinies of India. Their influence, whether for good or bad, is very great, and must be increasingly felt." Among such men the Y.M.C.A. missionary secretaries are at work. To the native Christian young men of India the Y.M.C.A. has also a distinct and definite mission. To India's own sons must we look for India's evangelization. Urgent appeals have recently reached us from Poona and Singapore, in both of which cities special funds are being raised for the maintenance of local workers.

Notes from Northfield.

East Northfield, Mass., August 6.

THE General Conference for Christian Workers, planned to be held here August 1-18, opened last Thursday evening. There was a large attendance, increasing in numbers daily. The registers at the hotel and school buildings indicate arrivals, not only from New England but from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska, and Texas.

At the opening, Mr. Moody announced, as the pivotal thought for the Conference, the words from 2 Cor. ix. 8: "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work."

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan followed with a powerful address based on Matt. xiii. 51, 52, in the course of which he said, "I believe we are just on the borderland of one of the most marvellous spiritual movements the world has ever seen."

On Friday evening, Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson spoke from Heb. i. 2. His opening words gave the keynote to the whole address: "There is no indwelling of the Holy Spirit without the indwelling of the Word of God, in connection with spiritual faithfulness in all life's duties."

The following morning the speaker was Rev. Samuel Chadwick, from Leeds, who is the latest accession to the ranks of Northfield speakers. The address was from Mark x. 27, "With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible." The burden of the message was to show the tremendous power of man when linked, as he may be by faith, with the omnipotence, the eternal strength of Almighty God. The address was with power—true, hopeful, and uplifting, one that created a desire to hear the speaker again.

The series of addresses in the auditorium has been continued by Dr. Pierson, Rev. G. C. Morgan, Rev. Samuel Chadwick, and Dr. H. G. Weston, whilst Round Top services, children's meetings, &c., have filled up the day.

A Musical Institute is now being held under the direction of Prof. D. B. Towner, of Chicago, its object being to deal with the subject of music in its relation to Christian work.

An Institute for Christian Doctrines is also held, a series of addresses on the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith being delivered by Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey of Chicago.

A Young People's Institute, lasting from August 13 to August 18, will be held, as for several years past, under the direction of Mr. John Willis Baer, a "side line" which is always a source of much attraction at Northfield.

Monday, August 12, is a day to which many Christian workers are looking forward as one of the best kind of pleasure and profit. It is the day fixed at Northfield for Missionary Day, and will be devoted to the consideration of Missions in the broadest sense of that word.

A Post-Conference course has been arranged under the direction of Rev. G. C. Morgan and Rev. Samuel Chadwick, by whom lectures will be delivered daily. This will continue from August 19 to 26.

Soldiers' Home, Secunderabad. — Describing the work of the Wesleyan Soldiers' Home at Secunderabad, the annual report says: "When the men come in scorched with the blazing sun, and fagged out with long marches and bivouacs in the open, they troop to the Home for the chief comfort their lives hold, and turn to the meetings in the little church, as to water from the well at Bethlehem. There is a vast amount of informal and spontaneous religious effort in every regiment, which, as a rule, centres itself in the regimental prayer room, and the very inertia and temptations of a standing camp drive together bands of Christian men who, when in cantonments, seek, at the churches which help them most, the fellowship and enheartenment they need. Night after night at sundown Anglicans, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Wesleyans meet on the outskirts of the camp, and with 'Moody and Sankey' to lead their praise, tell out the glorious Gospel to their comrades. Rarely do the men come back to barracks from such an outing without bringing news of some from whom Satan's shackles have dropped off, and who have entered into the liberty of Christ." Rev. Benjamin Pratt is now chaplain in charge.

French in Soho.

ANYONE familiar with the sad lives of the over fifteen thousand French inhabiting Soho, knows how great is the need there for the Gospel. The writer, recalling his own work amongst the poor in Paris, has no hesitation in saying that the needs of Soho are proportionally as great. The fact that these people are in the midst of our Gospel-lit London is of but little use to them, for so few have any knowledge of English.

The "Mission Française," formed a year or so ago, is situated in the heart of this needy district. Its devoted founder and director, Fernand Bignoneau, first laboured amongst his compatriots in Soho by preaching the Gospel in the open-air, and at the "Maison des Etrangers." But the seal of the Holy Spirit on these efforts soon made it evident that a permanent work should be established. A suitable place was found, where the discarded ball-room of one of the old Elizabethan houses in this quarter serves as a hall, and two smaller rooms for the missionary's own accommodation. In this hall, in addition to the gatherings for Christians, and the weekly prayer-meetings, the Gospel is faithfully proclaimed every Sunday evening. Young converts and the sick are visited in their own "homes," and every morning at ten M. Bignoneau deals with inquirers and all desiring instruction in God's Word.

Quite a little band of Christians has now sprung up, whose zeal and love cheers one's heart. Some of these have been called upon to suffer persecution for the name of Christ. Very brief notes of a few of them will serve to illustrate this :—

(1) A member of a band of anarchists and thieves, over whose life of crime in the city of his adoption we are obliged to draw a veil. Now a convert of some months' standing, who has recently led a brother anarchist to the feet of Christ.

(2) A spiritualist medium. Now a missionary in the North of France, suffering great persecution for the name of his Master.

(3) An officer of the Belgian army refused to attend a meeting, but accepted an invitation to tea. Was earnestly dealt with, and definitely accepted the truth. Has since led two Belgian friends to "like precious faith."

(4) A valet, imprisoned for an attempt to rob his master. Converted in prison, through the reading of a New Testament given him some time previously by M. Bignoneau. Has been used of God to lead another valet to the Saviour.

(5) A French lady. The interest of this case lies in the fact that the testimony of this convert has been blessed to four members of her family.

Though for the most part exceedingly poor, if not in debt, it is gladdening to notice with what self-denial the young Christians give in support of the work. An annual rental of £52, with gas bill, and sundry other expenses, call for much faith and prayer. Through the help of one dear servant of the Lord, the work has continued thus far, but the Lord has seen fit to withdraw this helper, and the faith of his "little flock" is tried to the utmost.

Communications should be addressed to M. Fernand Bignoneau, Mission Française, 10, Carlisle Street, Soho Square, London.

Aylesbury and Bucks Evangelistic Village Mission.—During the past year the work of this Mission has gone on and prospered, and the Lord has been pleased to own the preaching both of the regular workers and of visitors, and all alike have had the joy of seeing souls brought into the light. Colportage and mission work has been done in nearly a hundred villages and hamlets. An additional worker (Mr. Fisher) has been added, and prayer is asked on behalf of himself and his wife. There is a debt of £100 on the premises at Aston Clinton, which it is most desirable should be cleared off. Some of the mission stations meet all their own expenses, but at others the people are poor and cannot do this, though they do their best. Many of the helpers are themselves converts of the Mission, who at much personal sacrifice travel long distances in all weathers. The honorary manager is Mr. J. E. Taylor, Bible Depôt, Aylesbury.

A Right Step.

PERHAPS if all medical officers of health were as bold and fearless as Dr. Hope, of Liverpool, who has ceaselessly drawn attention to the terrible slums in that city, the solution of the question of the housing of the poor would be within a more reasonable distance. Owing to his labours, and the efforts of a few other energetic and sympathetic men, a scheme is now being prepared by the Corporation of that city to sweep away the 6,400 houses unfit for habitation, in which, however, a population of about 60,000 persons finds insanitary and unhealthy refuge. The cost will be over a million, but, as has been urged, the value of the improvements is not bounded by any nameable sum of money. As a set-off against the outlay there will be the improved health, and the purer morals of a large section of the inhabitants, to whom a clean and religious life will be made more possible. The example is one which might with advantage be followed by the authorities of most of our large manufacturing towns.

Saving the Children.

THE recently published report of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, states that the Crown has no fewer than 16,000,000 of youthful subjects. Myriads of these are in happy homes, where childhood is what it ought to be, but, unhappily, some of them are wards in the High Courts. Some are in its prisons. Others are in reformatories and industrial schools. Others are under baby-farm inspectors. Many, happily, are in homes of charity. Still more are in workhouses and infirmaries of their unions. Yet still more are in what is worse for them—homes that have gone to the dogs, which are nurseries of ill-natured, ill-nurtured humanity.

This "human capital," as it is termed in the report, represents a very large proportion of our future adult population, and its proper education and training is, therefore, of vital moment to the well-being of the nation. It is startling to find that during the twelve years of the Society's existence there have been 23,150 prosecutions of cruel parents, and that the punishment inflicted upon them amounted to 4,000 years of imprisonment. Yet this is only one side of the excellent alleviative work on behalf of the little ones done by this much-needed Society.

Work among Hop Pickers.

DEAR SIR,—During September tens of thousands of the veriest home-heathen in our land will be gathered in Kent for hop-picking. The change of life from stuffy rooms to huts and tents, the eating of unripe fruit, and the drinking of impure water, the casualties incidental to strange work and surroundings (sprains, cuts, burns, &c., &c.), necessarily cause a good deal of physical suffering.

For the third year we are arranging our Medical Mission work amongst these poor despised folks, who seem so helpless amongst strangers, away from the hospitals, dispensaries, &c., to which they are accustomed to turn in time of sickness.

I appeal for the services, during September, of two Christians doctors with a love for souls, and of at least six Christian ladies who have had some training in nursing, or dispensing at hospitals, medical missions, &c.

The work is a real home-missionary one, and Christian eyes can only look on these lost multitudes through pitying tears. Who will say, "Here I am. Send me"?—Yours faithfully, J. W. C. Fegan.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark Street, S.E.

Miss Rose May Moore, who has for eleven years laboured quietly but effectively in the Herefordshire hop-gardens, aided financially by local friends, finds herself obliged, for the first time, to ask for wider support. She has been assisted by the sons of Preb. Webb-Peploe (to whom she is well-known) and other clergy, and having given largely of her own means, and death having removed some of her erstwhile supporters, she hopes that other friends will come forward to support her in an arduous and difficult but encouraging and important work. Miss Moore's address is King's Pyon, Weobley, Herefordshire.

Open-Air Preaching in Ireland.

THE following details of the work now going on in connection with the Open-Air Mission in Ireland will interest the readers of The Christian, many of whom have often aided in this effort to reach our countrymen. An earnest and active member of the mission writes on July 29 :—

"We have had several remarkable meetings lately, and every prospect of still better times. On Sunday at ——, a large provincial town in the centre of Ireland, a large crowd gathered and listened reverently to the story of the Saviour's love! What wonders seven years have wrought! Then tumult and violence on every appearance of street preachers; now, a man under the influence of drink attempts to interrupt us, but is taken away by two men in the crowd, and even a few children making a noise are ordered away. At the close of such a service this month, a clergyman standing by me said: 'I cannot understand how clergymen can be content to preach within doors when such congregations as I see around await them in the market places of country towns. After living and preaching thus for some years here, I meet only with kindness and good wishes from people of every class and creed.'"

A worker writes from another town: —"Accompanied by a local clergyman, we took our stand in the market place. The people soon formed a compact ring—in some places five deep. At one time a man crossed the ring, and with great vehemence ordered the people to leave us; but this, our only interruption, served to draw them more to us. Having preached and sung until we had no more strength, we reluctantly came away." And another :

"Among those attracted by our singing to-day was a young man with whom we had a long conversation after a previous meeting. He remained throughout, and listened with the most intense interest. A striking feature of this meeting was the large number of young people, all apparently eager to grasp our message."

The above may be taken as samples of meetings we have held during past months in a very large number of towns, including Maryborough, Mountmellick, Naas, Monasteraden, Clones, Tullamore, Ballybay, Monaghan, Newbridge, Kildare, Athlone, Portarlington, &c. We believe that the preaching of the Gospel thus has brought light and comfort to some hearts that were weary with sin.

Those who wish to aid the work may write to Mr. George Williams, Hon. Secretary, 13, D'Olier Street, Dublin; or to Captain R. Wade Thompson, J.P., Hon. Treasurer, Clonskeagh Castle, Dublin.

The Y.M.C.A.

A NEW Association has been formed at Dalton-in-Furness.

The Taunton Y.M.C.A. has agreed upon an extension scheme. The committee has acquired the premises known as 46, St. James' Street, which adjoin St. James' House, the present home of the Association, and decided to adapt the same for the use of the youths' department. Various structural alterations are also to be carried out in the present premises in order to provide a new social hall, reading and recreation rooms, &c. Both buildings will be fitted with electric light throughout.

During the past ten years more than 5,000 students have passed through the educational classes of the Liverpool Central Y.M.C.A. The total number of entries last season was 669. Under the Union of Institutes Examination 137 candidates were presented who worked 167 papers, 131 of which were satisfactory to the examiners, whilst seventy passed First or Second Class, and one came out seventh in Distinction in the entire Union of over 200 Institutes. Under the London Society of Arts Examination for the past year, the students gained 84 per cent. of passes in all subjects, as against 75 per cent. gained by thirty-four of the largest institutions in the country, each presenting fifty or more candidates. The Association presented fifty-five candidates who worked fifty-seven papers, with forty-nine of which the examiners were satisfied

What Flowers to be Like.

By Rev. John Mitchell, Author of "Silver Tongues."

BE like the sunflower, which always turns its face to the sun. No attraction that may come along will tempt it to look round. If we, who are Christians, were as persistent in fixing the eye of faith upon the Sun of Righteousness, how much brighter and happier we should be! and more people would be attracted to Christ. Alas! how ready we often are to look away at other objects which allure us, and thereby lose the reflection of his image. Then it is as if a light of the world had gone out and left men in darkness.

Do not be like a hyacinth, which is hastened into flower for one short season, and never blooms again. Before making a Christian profession be sure that you have really given your heart to Christ, and that you are trusting Him. Many people are religious who have never given their hearts to Christ. They have not received the Holy Spirit, and hence all their profession is in vain. They may, for a while, be like real Christians, but the flower of their profession will wither and die. Those who are young Christians have much to learn of Christ and his Word. They cannot learn everything at once. There must be growth in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ. To stand fast in the hour of temptation they must be rooted and grounded in the faith. Although conversion takes place in a moment, and we are made Christians, that is only the starting point, that we may reach the goal.

Be like the pure white lily. God wants to save us from sin that we may be pure and Christ-like while we live. Do not think, as many do, that He only wants to save us that we may not perish, but go to Heaven when we die. What would the world be if it were not for the pure hearts and lives in it? If all were taken to Heaven when converted, there would be no preachers, and no places where the Gospel could be heard. We are saved to be preachers. But that does not mean that we must all stand in a pulpit or on a platform and give addresses. It means that there are many ways of preaching the Gospel, and each one has his gift from God. All are not gifted alike. We should not have houses to live in if all workmen had the same work. There must be architects, builders, bricklayers, carpenters, and others all doing their part to make houses for us. While we may only hear the names of the architect and the builder, the other men are quite as useful and necessary. So in the great spiritual house, or temple, God is building of living souls. There must be public preachers, teachers, visitors, tract distributors, and many others, each doing his part, whether his name is spoken of or not. God notices and keeps a record of all workers; and often He most honours those who are least known. Let each one do the part for which he is fitted, and to God be the glory!

"If you cannot be the watchman,
Standing high on Zion's wall,
Pointing out the path to heaven,
Off'ring life and peace to all;
With your prayers and with your bounties
You can do what heaven demands;
You can be like faithful Aaron,
Holding up the prophet's hands."

Do not be like the rose camelian lily, which, although white to look upon, the inside is "full of unsightly cells and tissue." Now I do not say that is any fault in the lily, for the cells are very wonderful things, but I am not giving lessons in botany, I am taking illustrations to make Gospel truth clear. God does not look on the outward appearance to see what we are, He looks in the heart and seeks purity there. If the heart is right the life will be right. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." May we all have—

"A heart in every thought renewed,
And filled with love divine;
Perfect and right, and pure and good;
A copy, Lord, of thine."

Be like the ivy, ever climbing upwards. We are told, as Christians, to set our affections on things above. "Things above" are certain and can never disappoint us. Many people set their affections on things below which cannot satisfy them. Then, unexpectedly, some calamity comes and all is lost! They are plunged into deepest grief. Heavenly things are in the keeping of Christ and can never be lost. The more we set our affections on Christ and think upon heavenly things, the happier and holier we shall be. Two little boys were at play. A lady spoke to them, and when looking at their toys said, "These are your treasures, I suppose!" "No, ma'am," replied one of the boys, "these are our playthings, our treasures are in heaven." Can you, my reader, say that your treasures are in heaven?

Do not be like the sensitive plant which closes up at the slightest touch, unless it be at the slightest touch of sin. What a great deal of sorrow is caused by people who are always ready to think they are slighted and take offence. Often nothing of the kind is intended, and sometimes what is said or done is meant for their good. And if it should be a real slight, be brave and let it pass. Do not make yourself and others miserable over it. Those who are very ready to take offence are known and disliked. Those who are meek and forgiving are general favourites. "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

"Twelve Years."

At "twelve years" old the Saviour stood
Within the temple fair,
Amongst the learned of Israel's land,
Assembled there.

At "twelve years" old the daughter dear
Of Jairus passed away,
And at the Saviour's word was raised
To greet the day.

"Twelve years" the suffering woman spent,
Her life all ebbing fast;
She touched the Saviour's garment's hem,
Her suffering passed.

"Twelve years." How many children dear
Ere then the Lord have known,
And some in peace and holy joy,
To Him have gone.

And many a child around us still
At "twelve years" old is found
Rejoicing, though so young, to know
The Gospel's sound.

True wisdom's ways are better far
Than gems and glittering gold;
But, oh! how sad to be unsaved
At "twelve years" old!

2. "Blessed is he whose trangression is forgiven" (Psa. xxxii. 1).

3. "Thou hast set our iniquities before Thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance" (Psa. xc. 8).

4. Fools (Prov. xiv. 9).

5. "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people" (Prov. xiv. 34).

6. "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins" (Isa. xliii. 25).

7. John, seeing Jesus coming, saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world (John i. 29).

8. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. v. 20, 21).

9. Rom. vi. 23.

10. Christ "his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness" (1 Pet. ii. 24).

11. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9).

12. "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land" (2 Chron. vii. 14).

13. "If ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses" (Mark xi. 25, 26).

SUNDAY, August 25.

DAILY PRAYER: (Psa. xxxiv. 1-22). "I will make it the rule of my life to pray every day."

HOW strange that it should be necessary to weave this resolution into our pledge, as though there were a danger of intermitting the blessed duty of prayer! Does it not prove the waywardness and untowardness of our hearts? Surely if we could have admittance at any moment into the presence of the sweetest woman, the richest benefactor, the wisest counseller in the world to obtain any assistance which the moment required, it would not be necessary to pledge ourselves to go; we should be only too glad.

Or if at any moment we could obtain the help of some departed saint or holy angel, it would not be a duty but a pleasure to avail ourselves of his help. How strange then it is that we need to make rules, and aid ourselves by carefully formed habits, for the exercise of prayer. But God's door stands always open even to our reluctant feet, and He meets us as we cross the threshold, saying, "Ask, believing, and it shall be given you."

But perhaps we do not pray, because we are not sure that prayer has greatly helped us. In this, David's experience, as related in this Psalm, is marvellously at variance with ours. He had brought himself into enormous peril by going to the country of the Philistines. He was recognized as the great champion of Israel, who had slain Goliath, and in his soul anguish he turned to prayer.

In this Psalm he praises God for his deliverance, which he ascribes to answered prayer. "I sought the Lord, and He heard me." "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him." "They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." "The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth." The whole Psalm is redolent with the praises and thanksgivings for help which had come in answer to prayer.

I never shall forget my first experience at the age of twelve. I had promised to take a school-fellow some foreign stamps. I hardly know why I had made the promise, but I knew that he would expect me to be as good as my word, when I met him at school the next morning. All the evening I was in an agony, and prayed incessantly for help. There seemed no hope of my being able to fulfil my promise, but as I left my room in the morning, it occurred to me to ask my father, which I did. He looked at his letters, and for once had quite a bundle of foreign correspondence, from which I speedily took quite a number of rare specimens. How my heart thanked God. I have had many very remarkable answers to prayer since then, about all kinds of things, and can set my seal to the statements which David makes.

Prayer does not speed unless we observe carefully the conditions of it, which are (1) reverence and humility; (2) faith in God's Fatherly interest, and desire to help; (3) earnestness; (4) reliance on the mediation and intercession of our Lord; (5) the assurance that if our Heavenly Father does not do the exact thing we have asked, He will answer our prayer somehow, and in a better way than we had suggested. No doubt in heaven we shall have to praise Him quite as much for our unanswered, as for our answered prayers. Make it the rule of your life never to see the face of man till you have seen the face of God.

A Blind Tea Party.—Nearly 2,000 blind people in London are on the books of the National Blind Relief Society, who once a year are entertained to a tea and concert. Owing to a lack of funds there has been no treat for the last two years; but it is hoped that during the coming autumn the would-be guests will not hope in vain for this one day of gladness. The secretary, Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, will be glad to communicate with friends desirous of assisting in providing this enjoyment for the afflicted, which is estimated to cost £140

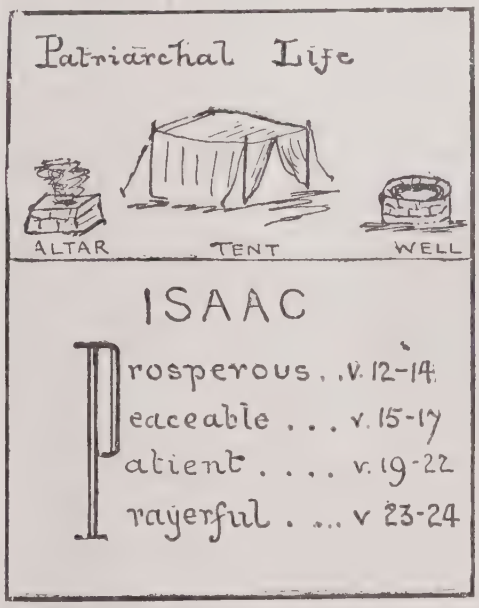
ISAAC, THE PEACEMAKER (Gen. xxvi. 12-25).

GOLDEN TEXT: Matt. v. 9.



SARAH died at the age of 127, and was buried in the Cave of Machpelah which Abraham bought. Isaac mourned much for his mother, so his father sent his most trusted servant to fetch a wife for him from among his own people, for Isaac must not marry a Canaanite. When Rebekah came, Isaac was comforted. The beautiful story is in chap. xxiv. Isaac was forty years old when he married. Abraham lived thirty-eight years after this, and died at the age of 175; his sons buried him in Machpelah. To Isaac were born twin sons, Esau and Jacob. A famine arose, and he was about to go into Egypt, but God told him not to do so, and renewed to him the promises made to his father. So he stayed at Gerar.

ISAAC'S PROSPERITY (12-14).

Isaac had inherited all his father's possessions, and his wealth continually increased because God blessed him (Prov. x. 22). Note, that Isaac used the right means to prevent famine—he worked as well as prayed (Rom. xii. 11). A hundredfold was a very rare increase in those parts. Isaac's prosperity was not unalloyed, it brought the world's enmity (John xv. 18, 19).

PHILISTINES' ENVY (14-16)

The Philistines inhabited the plains on the sea coast from Gaza to Joppa, they were descended from Mizraim, the son of Ham (Gen. x. 13, 14)—the same race as the Egyptians. Jeremiah prophesied of their destruction (Jer. xlvii.). They were a strong, warlike people, and kept up a rivalry with the descendants of Abraham for about 1,000 years after Isaac's time. Their kings were all named "Abimelech." Eighty years before this there was an "Abimelech" who had dealings with Abraham. Envy soon leads to malice. It was envy which led to our Lord's crucifixion (Matt. xxvii. 18; 1 Cor. xiii. 4; Titus iii. 3). From "Philistine" came the name "Palestine."

THE WELLS (18-22).

In Oriental countries wells are of special importance, and good springs invaluable. Isaac needed a great deal of water for his numerous flocks and herds. Digging a well gave a sort of ownership to the land around; to prevent this, the Philistines had filled up Abraham's wells after his death. Abimelech requested Isaac to leave his country, so he went to Gerar, and cleared out the wells again, but when he found a new spring of "living water," then the men of Gerar claimed it, and they would quarrel and fight with Isaac's servants. Wells were so important that they were always named. What name did Abraham give to his well? (Gen. xxi. 31.) Isaac named his first well "Strife, or Contention"; the second, "Spite, or enmity;" the third, "Broad places, or room." There was a meaning in all names in those days.

ISAAC THE PEACEMAKER (22-24).

Isaac had not his father's strong, rugged character, his nature was gentle and meek; he lived a pure and upright life, and rather than quarrel yielded up his rights. It takes two to make a quarrel; we had better suffer a wrong than do evil. Isaac, like Christ, conquered by meekness, and acknowledged that God had guided him. Anything we gain by might and not right, we cannot call "Rehoboth"; but when God opens the way we shall surely prosper. Isaac did not complain because of his troublesome enemies; he patiently moved away, and acknowledged God's guiding hand, controlling and over-ruling all.

THE REWARD (24, 25).

We only read of the Lord appearing to Isaac twice, in verse 2 and here. The world's envy and hatred are more than compensated by the consciousness of God's love and presence. Compare the promise with the one our Lord Jesus gave (Matt. xxviiii. 20). These blessings are Isaac's for his father's sake, and he takes his father's God to be his.

PRACTICAL POINTS.

1. Troubles arise from prosperity as well as from poverty. 2. The great evil of envy. 3. The peace of mind caused by meekness and gentleness. 4. The duty of avoiding quarrels. 5. Nothing to fear if God be with us. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.'

Irish Notes.

A LIFE-LIKE marble bust of the late Rev. Dr. McMullen, subscribed for by a few of his friends and admirers in this country, has been erected in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, London.

A very successful tent mission has been conducted by Messrs. McCrea and Bennett, students of the Methodist College, Belfast, who have been giving their vacation to this kind work at Togherdoo, co. Fermanagh; and a similar mission has been held by Rev. James Kirkwood at the Birches, near Portadown.

The Irish Presbyterian Board of Missions has now forty colporteurs under its care, and these sold during the past quarter about £350 worth of books. The Board has also nominated Mr. George Wilson, a licentiate of the Belfast Presbytery, and a son of Rev. A. J. Wilson, of Malone, as a missionary to India. Mr. Wilson was the most brilliant student of his years during his college course, and won a great many honours and literary distinctions. The Board has likewise accepted Mr. J. B. Hanna, of Bangor, co. Down, as a missionary to the Jungle Tribes, India. A lady member of the Presbyterian Church has intimated to the Board that she will bear the expense of a missionary to the foreign field, and most of the Board's missionaries are returning to Manchuria, with regard to whose future, so far as its evangelization is concerned, high hopes are entertained.

During the summer months under the auspices of the Belfast City Mission, a couple of Gospel tents have been working with signal success in different parts of Belfast. Several people have professed conversion.

Welsh Notes.

THERE are indications that increasing attention is being paid in Wales to open-air work. The Free Church Councils especially are showing commendable activity in this direction. The efforts they have made to bring the Gospel to the people have, on the whole, met with gratifying success. It is worthy of note that the councils have been wise enough to appoint trained speakers to carry on this branch of Christian work.

In connection with the British Chautauqua now in session at Aberystwyth, one of the most interesting and important meetings was the one held on the afternoon of Sunday, August 11, when Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, America, preached the Chautauqua sermon. The great American preacher discoursed to a very large congregation on modernizing ancient Christianity. The sermon was really a plea for progress in the religious world.

The annual meetings of the Young People's Christian Union of Wales were held on August 12-16 at Llandrindod. This important association consists of a number of young people's societies established for religious purposes. The movement is as yet only in its infancy. At the first meeting on Monday night Professor Levi, of Aberystwyth, read an able paper, entitled "A Defence of Christianity." Another paper of considerable value was the one read on Tuesday by Rev. J. M. Jones, B.A., of Aberdare, on "The Young Man and the Bible." On Wednesday, in addition to an address by Rev. C. Davies, Cardiff, on "Bearing the Yoke," Dr. R. Williams, of Cwmavon, spoke on temperance. One of the most important meetings of the series was that held on Thursday evening. This was addressed by Dr. John Clifford, who delivered an address to young people with all his usual force and earnestness. The concluding meeting, on Friday, dealt with the subject of the present war, and at this also Dr. Clifford was the principal speaker.

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM JONES, HAY.

A DEVOTED Christian, widely known in the Principality, has passed away in the person of Mr. William Jones, of Hay, Breconshire. Mr. Jones was for many years secretary of the Hay auxiliary of the Bible Society. A Welsh scholar, and an earnest worker, he was a link with the olden days of the great Welsh revival. He was familiar with the history of the leaders, and possessed a store of reminiscences gathered from persons connected with the old worthies. Mr. Jones' death is a severe loss.

MRS. LINLEY.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Linley, widow of the late Thomas Linley, at the age of eighty-three years. She was for thirty-eight years engaged in public Christian work. For fourteen years she had charge of the orphan boys in connection with the work of the late Rev. W. Pennefather at Barnet and Hackney, and for twenty-two years was matron of a home belonging to the Rescue Society, London. She retired from her much-loved work at the age of seventy-seven years, and lived and died at the residence of her eldest and only surviving daughter.

REV. DR. A. B. MACKAY.

News has reached Brighton of the death of Rev. A. B. Mackay, D.D., who for eight years —from 1871 to 1879—was minister of the Queen's Road Presbyterian Church. On resigning the charge of this work, Mr. Mackay proceeded to Montreal, Canada, where he became pastor of the Crescent Road Church, a position which he held at the time of his death. He studied at Edinburgh University and the Presbyterian College, London, and was ordained in 1869, being appointed minister of the Presbyterian Church in Worcester. In 1871 he went to Brighton to succeed Rev. Peter Maclaren at Queen's Road. His ministry there was a most successful one, and he was a very popular preacher, the church being invariably crowded. Then in 1879 came the call to Montreal, where the rest of his arduous and honourable career was spent. On July 25 he was suddenly taken ill, and died from heart failure in less than an hour. Dr. Mackay was fifty-nine years of age, having been born in Montrose in 1842.

MISS HELEN RICHARDSON.

A cablegram from Bombay last Saturday announced the departure of this handmaid to wait for the coming of the Lord among them that are fallen asleep. For more than ten years she had laboured in Bombay among young women, both Eurasian and native, who had fallen, and she had a Home containing some twenty to thirty of these, many of whom have become Christians and useful members of society. Miss Richardson had also an industrial work among professedly Christian women, some of them Roman Catholics, who were out of work, and whom she employed in sewing, getting orders from the Government and other sources. These women heard the Word of God read and explained daily. Miss Richardson's Home (inaugurated by Miss Orlibar) was a rendezvous for prayer, where at her monthly gatherings missionaries and religious teachers of all denominations, societies, nationalities, met together to wait upon the Lord. Her influence with native teachers was great. Possessed of considerable private property, Miss Richardson used all for the Master, and depended on Him alone for the large outlay of her work. For some years the work has been affiliated with the Turk and Central Indian Hill Mission. Our beloved sister was taken ill with fever about the middle of July, At first she went on labouring in spite of her suffering; but at last had to yield. The last accounts by letter were that she was better and out of danger, when the cablegram arrived announcing her departure. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord . . . for they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them." L. B.

REV. THOMAS RICHARDSON.

Many all over the world will learn with genuine sorrow of the death last week of Rev. Thomas Richardson, vicar of the parish of St. Benet, Mile End, E. Born at Lancaster in 1830, he was ordained when twenty-four years of age, the different spheres in which he laboured being all in London. For five years at the beginning of his career he acted as chaplain to Messrs. Copestake, Moore, and Co. in Cheapside. Thereafter he laboured successively at Lambeth, Southwark, Old Jewry, and St. George's-in-the-East, being translated thirty years ago to the church in Mile End Road in connection with which his name was so well-known. As founder and conductor of the Bible and Prayer Union, Mr. Richardson's name was a household word to very many who had never seen his face. The membership of the Union is now over 300,000, and in the daily intercessions he and his work were often remembered. Mr. Richardson was known as a staunch Protestant, and took a prominent part in the working of various societies, aiming at the maintenance and propagation of evangelical principles.

BISHOP W. R. NICHOLSON.

When I first visited these United States, a very youthful evangelist, I bore a letter of introduction to Dr. Nicholson, then rector of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, Boston. He received me very cordially, tenderly, fatherly. I found him glowing with the blessed hope of our Lord's personal return to earth again. Soon thereafter, the first Bible Conference was inaugurated in the house of the late Dr. Gordon, a form of Bible study which has swollen into a mighty stream of Christian life and experience. Precious is the memory of those days, when Bishop Nicholson, Dr. A. J. Gordon, Dr. Henry M. Parsons, and others like-minded, rang out the whole full-orbed Gospel of Christ. The vital doctrines of grace and of glory received due attention. A quiet, deep revival swept the city. From that beginning until he finished his course, my departed friend responded to every invitation, when at all possible, to speak at our Bible conferences. He was a chief central figure at the great inter-denominational meetings of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. The profound addresses which he delivered on those occasions have become historic. He was in heart and soul thoroughly unsectarian. His modesty kept him often in the background, when his gifts would have placed him in the front. Jealousy and selfishness were foreign to his very nature, and he was no respecter of persons. Though remarkable for spiritually-mindedness, he was perfectly natural at all times. A true pastor, and a thoughtful shepherd, he never placed the fodder on a high rack beyond the reach of sheep and lambs. He abhorred flippancy when dealing with God's Book, and delivered God's message as one who had come out from the presence of the Shekinah. G. C. N.

REV. H. UFFMANN.

The work among the lepers has suffered a heavy loss by the death of Rev. H. Uffmann. During nearly forty years of missionary life in India, Mr. Uffmann only paid two visits to Europe, both combined amounting to less than two years. He was a missionary of Gossner's Evangelical Lutheran Mission, and was an earnest soul winner. He passed away at Bielefeld, in his native Germany, at the age of seventy, on August 11, succumbing to an affection of the heart, from which he had been suffering since his return to Europe in April last. Mr. Uffmann's name must ever be associated with the Asylum for Lepers at Purnlia, Bengal, which he founded in 1887 on behalf of the Mission to Lepers, and has since superintended. Mr. Uffmann's devoted labours among these poor outcasts have been signally blessed. The Institution now shelters some 600 souls, of whom over 500 are Christians. His self-sacrificing efforts on their behalf were warmly appreciated by the lepers. On his recovery, two years ago, from an attack of brain fever, brought on by over-work, their gratitude found expression in a gift of £10, which they managed to make up out of their poor allowances, in order that he might get away for rest and change. Although Mr. Uffmann had the sorrow of losing one of his own daughters by leprosy about the time when the asylum was established, he was nevertheless singularly fearless in his daily intercourse with the lepers, and it was a touching sight to witness him moving in and out among them, or fervently pleading with them in the large well-filled church of the Institution.

American Notes.

MISS FRANCES S. MOODY, of Bath, Maine, has given an island, about sixty acres in extent, to the Young Men's Christian Associations of the States of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. It has been known heretofore as Crotch Island, but will in future be called Moody Island. The Inter-State Y.M.C.A. camp for boys has been located there the last two summers.

There is much shipbuilding done in the Prohibition State of Maine, and it is stated that when the new cruiser Cleveland is launched at Bath water will be used instead of champagne. At Thomaston this week a four-masted schooner is to be christened with sparkling water from a celebrated Maine spring, which is the property of one of the owners, who all object to wine on any occasion. When the six-masted schooner, George W. Wells, was launched at Camden last year, twelve white-robed maidens scattered bushels of snowy blossoms over the ship's bow; and on another occasion of the same kind a flock of white pigeons was let loose, after the Japanese custom.

There is a city in Illinois, called Hoopeston, which has never had a saloon. The population is 4,000. The Mayor's salary is 50 cents (two shillings) per annum, and each of the Councilmen is entitled to half that sum; no fees are accepted. The town has paved streets, waterworks, electric lights, a well-organized fire department, and more and better sidewalks than any other city of its size in the State, while its citizens like to boast that liquor does not contribute a single dollar towards the cost of these improvements. Roger Martin.

New York.

Scottish Notes.

THE annual report of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A. shows that the number of the branch fellowship meetings is now 191. A surplus of £63 on the accounts of the year enables the deficiency with which the year began to be reduced to £480.

The Hope Trust has just completed another year, during which every department of the work has been prosecuted with vigour and success. The agents have visited and delivered Protestant lectures in nearly all the important towns and villages throughout the land, and the attendances at the lectures have been highly encouraging. Much interest has been evinced in the subjects and the Protestant question generally. In Edinburgh, eighteen meetings for the instruction of children in the principles and practice of total abstinence have been held every week from September to June. Two children's churches and two Bible classes have been successfully carried on during the same period. The distribution of Protestant literature has been regularly and systematically continued.

At the opening meeting of the annual Conference of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, held in Glasgow last week, Mr. Hutchison (Fechney School, Perth, chairman) delivered an important address, in the course of which he contrasted the position of the schools of the present and the past thirty or forty years. They were started with the view of training the children of lapsed and criminal classes, and the evils which had then to be combated were much the same as now—namely, laziness and lying. The wise men of these days thought the best way to do that was to train the hands and hearts of the little ones, and teach them habits of industry, to bring the Gospel of Christ before them, and inculcate the principles of a higher and better life. The order of the day now was to cram the head and harden the muscle. Both were good in their way, but they had to be kept in their own place, so as not to shut out that which he had mentioned. As to the religious element, neither Church nor State said very much about it. Their directors appointed them, and placed their trust in them, to see that that part of the work was faithfully performed. The tendency to-day was a slighting of this, because it was said not to pay. It did pay, and whatever creed they were working for, let them be faithful to the children, because that was the thing that would pay in the long run.

About Books.

A JEWISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

A WORK of great importance, and calculated to mark an epoch in religious history, is—The Jewish Encyclopædia: A Descriptive Record of the History, Religion, Literature, and Customs of the Jewish People from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. The opening volume—Aach-Apocalyptic Literature—is the first of twelve, and contains over 800 pages, double column print. When completed, the work will aggregate 8,000 pages, with about 2,000 illustrations, many of them coloured. It will represent the combined work of more than 400 writers, European and American, produced under the direction of an editorial board of leading American scholars and Hebraists, Jewish and Christian.

This great enterprise owes its origin to Dr. Isidore Singer, its managing editor, whose immediate collaborateurs include some of the most active exponents of Jewish thought and the most distinguished authorities on Biblical antiquities of America. This, however, must not be regarded as implying that the work is an American product, except in an editorial sense. A world-wide scholarship is engaged upon it. Dr. Singer is a graduate of the University of Vienna, and he had much to do before he succeeded in associating a publishing house with his ambitious scheme; not until Germany and France failed him, did he cross the Atlantic and secure the co-operation of the publishers of the noble "Standard Dictionary." Thenceforward no time was lost, and, thanks to splendid organization and energetic administration, a beginning has been made which promises to provide students and scholars, whether Jewish or Christian, theological, philosophical, literary, historical, or antiquarian, with information on a thousand subjects regarding which hitherto only indifferent instruction and help have been readily available.

The articles are written on the principle of the widest possible induction of facts. The Old Testament is combined with universal history. What the Talmud has to say is carefully adduced, the fanciful legend as well as the sober statement; and the New Testament is also allowed to make its contribution to the many subjects explained and discussed. Here are synoptic headings of two articles:

Aaron.—Biblical Data: His Function—Becomes Priest of Israel—Rebellion of Korah—Death (by Prof. McCurdy, of Toronto). In Apocryphal and Rabbinical Literature: Typical Signification—Moses and Aaron Compared—Death of Aaron (by Rabbi K. Kohler, of New York). Critical View (by Prof. McCurdy). The first two sections cover two columns each; the third is within a column. There is a brief bibliography of the Apocryphal and Rabbinical Literature.

Aaron's Rod and Aaron's Tomb are separate captions; and thirty columns following are filled with records of other Aarons named in mediæval and modern literature.

Abraham.—Biblical Data: Birth and Wanderings—Birth of Ishmael—Birth and Sacrifice of Isaac (by C. J. Mendelsohn, of Philadelphia). In Apocryphal and Rabbinical Literature; Prototype of the Jewish Race—Propagator of the Knowledge of God—Opposes Idolatry—His Birth—Breaks Idols—As a Philanthropist—Prophetic Vision—Supreme Test of Faith—Abraham's Death—True Type of Humanity (by Rabbi Kohler, of New York). In Mohammedan Legend: "Great, Greater, Greatest"—Prominence Given to Abraham—Mohammedan Midrash on Abraham (by Professor Richard Gottheil, of New York). Critical View: Etymology—National Significance—Character—Relation to History (by Professor C. H. Toy, of Harvard University). The entire article covers fifteen columns.

Other articles on Abrahamic Tradition and the Abrahams of Jewish history cover as many as sixty-three full columns.

These synopses will afford some idea of the comprehensive character of the work. There are articles on topics little suspected—e.g., Agnosticism, Æsop's Fables among the Jews, and Alcoholism; and of course articles on Agricultural Colonies, the Alliance Israélite, Alchemy, Almanac, America (as connected with Jewish history), Angelology, Anti-Semitism. Some of these are very long and detailed; and the same may be said of the linguistic articles. These features indicate the work as one that cannot but be of great service in a religious or reference library. As might be expected, the treatment goes wide of eclectic intention or individual conviction; the purpose is encyclopædic, and estimated from this point of view the undertaking deserves warm commendation.

This work has no predecessors with which it can fairly be compared. Jewish scholars have welcomed it on all hands. Christians who would drink deeply into Jewish life and thought, and follow the history of the people in their early glory or latter-day dispersion, will find the volumes of great service as well as peculiarly interesting.

Elaborate measures have been taken to ensure accuracy and completeness. Not only is the encyclopædia being produced, as intimated, under the direction of a board of learned Americans, but those scholars are being assisted by a board of consulting editors representative of all phases of Jewish thought and practice, also by a foreign board of consulting editors composed of recognised authorities of Jewish lore in Europe and the old world generally.

The articles are signed, and accompanied by succinct bibliographical statements. The work is sold by subscription; the set of twelve volumes to cost £17 8s. in cloth, and bound editions proportionately more. (Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

"A GOD OF DELIVERANCES."

ONLY those who have given special attention to the subject have any proper idea of the importance of the literature which has gathered round the missionary massacres and sufferings in China last year; and there is a danger, because a number of others have already appeared, that such a book as a A God of Deliverances (1s. nett. Morgan & Scott), by Rev. Alexander R. Saunders, may be overlooked. It tells the story of the way in which a company of simple-hearted men, women, and children, faced a journey of 860 miles through a country beset with merciless and bloodthirsty foes, and under such conditions as made success, humanly speaking, utterly impossible.

An excellent map enables the reader intelligently to follow the narrative step by step, and to recognise the places at which miracle after miracle was wrought on behalf of the party. No merely natural hypothesis is sufficient to explain how life itself was sustained as the fugitives were hunted from place to place without proper food or rest. They were driven along the roads by howling mobs. They were robbed, stoned, clubbed, thrown to the ground, and belaboured with sticks, bricks, or anything else their assailants could lay their hands upon. They were spit upon, buffeted, and subjected to every conceivable indignity; but they proved God's grace sufficient to bear all unmurmuringly for Jesus' sake.

When their clothes had been stolen till they were almost naked, early release by death seemed to be assured from sunstroke, if in no other way. They had known persons die in this way through merely crossing a courtyard without sufficient covering for the head; yet they themselves were to go on ten days bareheaded and exposed to the full fury of a midsummer sun; and the sun did not smite them. At one point we read:—

> Three times that day we were stopped by angry mobs, who threatened to put us to an instant death if it did not rain, and they stood with their clubs ready to do the deed, while we lifted up our hearts to God. Be it said to the glory of God, who heard the prayer of Elijah, that while we prayed the rain came. On one occasion the rain was not enough to satisfy the crowd, and we again lifted up our hearts, and it came then in such a downpour that our tormentors had to flee for shelter, and we were allowed to go on.

It was the purpose of God that some should glorify Him in death as others in life; so we find along the route the places marked where two little ones and three ladies were finally delivered out of all their troubles.

The Christian gifted with the seeing eye will be able to annotate many of the Scripture promises from this volume.

The first part of Pictorial Britain and Ireland (6d. net. Cassell) bears out the high terms which were used in the preliminary announcements of this important addition to popular collections of photographic pictures.

Friends of Mr. J. C. Smith, of the Soul-Winning and Prayer Union, Newport-on-Tay, will be glad to read, in his new book, Holidays for Jesus, a chatty account of ramblings in Canada and the United States in 1900. Mr. Smith is pleasantly discursive, and makes many an experience a plea for the introduction of suggestive comment or apt quotation. The work is copiously illustrated. (1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. J. P. Matthew, 17, Cowgate, Dundee.)

Mr. Augustine Birrell will publish during the coming season (through Mr. Elliot Stock), a new volume of Essays, uniform with the first edition of "Obiter Dicta." It will contain, among others, articles on "John Wesley," "The Ideal University," and "The Reformation."

Two useful booklets for believers are Our Times, by Ethel R. Boddy, a word of consolation and encouragement (1d. Bemrose), and Personal Pentecost, by Gerald Coultas, which has now reached a third edition, and has a prefatory note by Rev. C. G. Moore. Mr. Coultas writes pointedly and with earnestness on a great subject. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

The death of Signor Crispi gives an added interest to the letter from him which appeared in the July number of The Leisure Hour. In that letter the Italian statesman criticized severely the Duke of Norfolk's statements about himself, in connection with the temporal power of the Pope. A fine portrait of Signor Crispi with his autograph, accompanied the letter.

Bright Evenings for the People.—The popularity of the lantern lecture as a medium of instruction and pleasure was never greater than it is to-day. Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode have again improved upon their idea of obtaining the services of popular writers to prepare lantern lectures. A copy of a lecture is sent with slides, for a small fee, to societies, schools, organizations, unable to pay large sums to lecturers for their personal service. Conditions and terms will be sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope, by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, Great New Street, London, E.C.

Evangelistic.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

SO far as attendance and general interest is concerned, the London Tent Campaign remains unaffected by the advent of the holiday season.

The work in the tent at Canning Town goes on with increased interest nightly. Mr. J. T. Vine has been wonderfully encouraged in his ministry here, quite a number each night deciding for Christ. Prayer is asked for the closing nights of this week.

Mr. W. Grove commenced his week's mission at Greenwich on Sunday, 11th, and the workers have been much cheered by the continual stream of blessing that has followed his ministry here. The meetings have been well attended, and quite a number have decided for Christ. This tent closed on Monday, 19th, and will be opened at Deptford (where the Lord gave such wonderful blessing last year) in the course of a few days. A large band of workers at Deptford are rejoicing in the thought of the return of the tent to the same spot. Will the Lord's people pray that a still greater harvest of souls may be reaped in this great work on the old spot that was the scene of such great gatherings last year? The site is in Evelyn Road, right at the bottom of High Street.

Meetings at Clapham Junction have been very well sustained during the past week, and many anxious ones have sought and found the Saviour. On Friday, Dr. Elliott, of New York, gave his farewell address to a large audience, and at the close of the meeting the people thronged around the genial doctor to express their gratitude for his services and to wish him and his wife "God-speed." On Saturday last, Rev. S. Graham Neil, of the American Railroad Mission, came upon the scene and gave an interesting account of his remarkable work in America in connection with his "Chapel Car." On Sunday morning he addressed a men's meeting at 11 and spoke again at 3 p.m. The evening meeting was a most inspiring one, by 8 p.m. the tent was filled in every part, and large numbers standing outside. Mr. Neil, who, with Mr. R. S. Bradbrook continues the mission this week, delivered a very impressing address on "Paul before Felix," at the close of which many came forward desiring to know the Lord. A mighty work is being wrought in this district.

The labours of Dr. John Robertson and Mr. Frank Weaver at the Leyton tent have been abundantly owned of God during the past week. The earnest and soul stirring addresses of the Scottish preacher, together with the Gospel in song, have made lasting impressions. On Saturday afternoon Mr. R. S. Bradbrook addressed a large gathering of boys and girls, some fifty of whom were afterwards dealt with as inquirers. Mr. Bradbrook also spoke to a large audience at night. On Sunday the Weaver Brothers commenced a mission which lasts until Friday. All the meetings on Sunday were well attended, and many cases of conversion were recorded.

The growing popularity of the Islington centre has been evident throughout the week. Quite 3,000 have gathered night after night to hear the Gospel in speech and song. On Sunday morning there was a large assembly of men to hear Mr. Leonard Weaver's talk on "A gang of robbers." The most definite and impressive part of the service was when he spoke earnestly of the sins of the life of this great city, and urged complete abandonment, pleading for pure lives. The response at the end was most encouraging, quite a large number deciding henceforth to take their stand in Christ's strength for better, holier lives. In the afternoon Mr. Weaver again addressed a large congregation in the tent, about 1,500 being present, and in the evening the grand wind-up for the day took place—bringing to a close a series of meetings of wonderful power and interest. The tent was crowded, and there was a specially good response to the appeal for decision at the close of the address. Monday evening's meeting in the tent was distinctly a period of power and interest. At the commencement, before the preaching began, many asked to be remembered in prayer, showing the spirit of inquiry present in the gathering, which bore fruit at the close of the service, when many inquirers came forward, and were dealt with. Dr. Broughton, of Atlanta, U.S.A., was the preacher on Tuesday night, and his address on "Prisoners of Hope" was one of power and impressiveness. The closing appeal elicited a very hearty response, quite a large number deciding to accept the message of hope which the preacher had brought. Mr. Weaver resumed the conduct of the mission on Wednesday night, and each successive evening the interest has been maintained. Mr. Meredith's solos have touched many hearts, and prepared the way for the Gospel.

The Tent Campaign Committee are at present confronted with serious liabilities, which it is essential should be discharged immediately. The bank account is now overdrawn to the extent of £1,400, and besides this £300 is required to meet urgent claims.

Rev. John McNeill in Philadelphia.

The promoters of the Presbyterian Tent Mission in Philadelphia have secured the help of Rev. John McNeill. They have six large tents in different parts of the city, in which the work has been most encouraging. Mr. McNeill began on Sunday, July 21, in Bethlehem Church, preaching an eloquent and powerful sermon to a crowded congregation. He preached again in the afternoon, and in the evening took the service in one of the tents, which was crowded to its greatest capacity, and five or six rows of people surrounded the tent. The deep interest and fervour of the audience gave promise of valuable results following Mr. McNeill's labours in Philadelphia. After a week he was to proceed to Winona to take part in evangelistic work there.

The Railway Mission.

In connection with our Gospel tent much blessing has been given at Doncaster, where from fifteen to twenty thousand men are employed by the G.N.R. and G.E.R. Large numbers gathered night by night, while on Sunday the tent proved far too small to hold the people who flocked to hear the Gospel. Every evening, prior to the tent service, the workers held open-air meetings in various parts of the town where the railway men dwell, and after a short, earnest Gospel message, gave hearty invitations to the tent. On Monday and Thursday afternoons we had special meetings for women, while on Sunday mornings there were gatherings for men only. At the children's meetings, which were held each evening, the young folks came together in crowds, and there were many interesting cases of decision. On Bank Holiday we had a rally and conference, and at night a Gospel meeting, when the tent was packed. Among the evangelists engaged during the last three weeks were Miss Cawston, and Messrs. A. Stewart, M. Western, and John Hawkins. A large number of local friends, led by Dr. Christie Wilson, have taken deep interest in the movement, and rendered valuable service. H.

A fruitful mission has been held at Northampton, in an Evangelization Society's tent, by Mr. Charles Noakes. The Corporation very kindly permitted the tent to be erected on their land. The object of the mission was to reach those who attend no place of worship, and in this respect much success was achieved. At many of the meetings the tent has been crowded to its utmost capacity. The Lord has graciously sustained his servant, who preached the Gospel with clearness and freshness. Many sought salvation, and these were urged, at the closing meeting, to join themselves with a Christian Church or assembly. J. H.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing upon a mission in Elswick district, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

For services which are being conducted at Sidmouth, Devon, by Mr. J. J. Browne, of the London City Mission.

That blessing may attend the mission to be held in Glasgow, beginning September 1, by Mr. Henry Varley.

For evangelical work in connection with St. Mary, Widnes, the living of which has been accepted by Rev. G. Stephen Jones, of Oxford.

Simla Conference.—The third annual conference at Simla for the deepening of spiritual life was held on July 22-24, and was attended with much blessing. Among the speakers were the Bishop of Lahore, on "The Duty and Blessedness of Cultivating a Thankful Spirit" (Col. i. 12); Rev. Mr. McKelvie, on "The Importance of Christ being in the Chief Place in the Thought of the Christian" (Acts viii. 35); Rev. G. T. Manley, on "The Unity of the Spirit"; Rev. P. Ireland Jones, on "The Constraining Motive for a Devoted Christian Life" (Rom. xii. 1); and Rev. J. H. Bateson, on "More than Conquerors" (Rom. viii. 37).

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone has arrived in England on business connected with his diocese. He is, unfortunately, in the doctor's hands, and must take things quietly for a time.

Rev. G. Grundy, vicar of Hey, near Oldham, since 1838, celebrated his ninety-fourth birthday last week. Mr. Grundy, in spite of his great age, is still a vigorous preacher, and takes his full share in the spiritual supervision of the parish, which has a population of about 3,500.

The Bishop of Carlisle, in the course of a recent address, referred to the question of Church attendance, pointing out that it was the general opinion of the clergy that the habit of Church attendance has not fallen off so seriously in that diocese as in some others. The Bishop said he was quite convinced that the attention given to recreation on Saturdays, though very good in its way, had a tendency to make men take less interest in spiritual things, and so to be less diligent than in former days in their attendance at the means of grace.

An interesting scheme has been introduced by Rev. E. R. Tarbuck, Vicar of St. Paul's, Warrington, for providing a refreshment room at a local ironworks where several thousand employés are engaged. The firm will build the room, and charge no rent for three years, and the vicar has arranged for the sale, on strictly business principles and "no patronising," of suitable meals and refreshments. The profits, after paying off capital expenditure, will be devoted to extending the premises and establishing similar bars in other portions of the works.

The open-air temperance campaign carried on at the church gates at Sileby by the vicar (Rev. A. G. Townshend), supported by Rev. Charles Harris, vicar of Christ Church, Mountsorrel, has had good results. No fewer than 130 pledges have been taken during the mission, and some of the worst characters in the locality have been reclaimed. Opposition of a most determined kind has, however, been shown by "the Trade" generally. A petition to the Bishop of Peterborough has been started, asking him to prevent the vicar from holding open-air meetings at the churchyard gates. The excuse is that it is "a desecration of the graves of the dead," although no graves exist at the spot where the meetings are held.

Congregational.

Augustine Church, Edinburgh, is now enjoying the visits of several English ministers. Among the preachers this month are Rev. J. P. Gledstone and Dr. Newman Hall.

Ashby-de-la-Zouch Church has undergone complete renovation, at a cost of £50. Successful re-opening services were held on Sunday last, when Rev. W. Scott, minister, officiated. The collections amounted to £32 5s. 6d.

Rev. Cuthbert McEvoy has declined the call to Great George Street Church, Liverpool, not accepted it, as recently stated, but remains at Cricklewood, where a new church is about to be erected. A sum of £5,000 is still needed for carrying out the proposed scheme.

The workers in connection with Westminster Road Congregational Church, Liverpool (Rev. Stanley Rogers), have recently been much so encouraged by large attendances of young people at their special services that it has been determined to erect a hall for the accommodation of these. The officers of the law in the district have expressed themselves in the highest terms regarding the results achieved, and a number of leading citizens have interested themselves in the effort. The hall is expected to cost £1,700.

For the past four weeks the pulpit of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N., has been occupied by Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, New York. His brief ministry has been highly appreciated, and the services have been marked by larger attendances than any time since Rev. G. Campbell Morgan left for America. At the conclusion of the service on Sunday night, many of the congregation remained behind to take a personal farewell of Dr. Cadman.

Baptist.

The work of the church at Highgate Road, N., under Rev. James Stephens, M.A., was the subject of appreciative notes in the Daily News of Tuesday last.

Unhappily the improvement in the condition of Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, Secretary of the Baptist Union, has not been maintained, serious symptoms having reappeared. Last week there was such a decided improvement that the doctors hoped he would be able to leave home at the end of this month; now it is exceedingly doubtful whether he will be able to do so.

When last heard from, Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, had reached the Pacific coast. China Town greatly moved him in San Francisco. He was allowed to visit some of its worst opium dens, and he describes one as a veritable castle of wickedness, so constructed that a pistol shot within could not be heard outside. It has been the scene of many a deadly feud, if not of murder.

At Bitterne Park, Southampton, the Baptist Mission, originated five years ago by Mr. C. J. Chamberlain, now a student of the Pastors' College, has been formed into a church with open Communion. The mission was started in 1896 with open air services, and in 1898 a mission room was opened. This room was soon crowded, and last year a new chapel, to accommodate 130, with vestries attached, was built voluntarily by the workers, and opened free from debt. It having been unanimously decided by the friends that the mission be formed into a church, the formation meeting was recently held. Rev. N. T. Jones-Miller presided, and Revs. E. R. Pullen and S. Flemington took part, after which the newly-formed church celebrated the Lord's Supper, thus bringing an impressive meeting to an appropriate close.

Methodist.

Rev. W. Turnbull Balmer, of Edinburgh, has been appointed by the Wesleyan Missionary Committee to proceed as a missionary to Sierra Leone. Mr. Balmer was selected out of seven university graduates who offered themselves for the post.

The memorial stones have been laid of a new chapel at Walsall Wood. The building will be in the centre of the village. Rev. J. F. Fairbourne presided at the ceremony, supported by a large number of ministers and friends; and Rev. F. L. Wiseman gave an inspiriting address.

Recently a gentleman, who desired his gift to be anonymous, offered £120 a year to the Bible Society for three years towards a new agent in a foreign field. The Committee accepted the offer, and the Wesleyan Conference at Newcastle sanctioned the appointment of one of its ministers—Rev. Frank Uttley—to the work. He will shortly leave Leighton Buzzard for Brazil, and will make Rio the centre of its operations.

A large gathering assembled at the stone-laying ceremony in connection with the new Victoria Memorial Wesleyan Church at Keyham, Devonport. The spot is well located in the centre of a thick population, which has grown with surprising rapidity consequent on the dock and barrack extension. Rev. J. Kernick said that some people think the scheme too big, but he reminded them that they were in the heart of a big community. Not many streets distant Roman Catholicism is building a church of equal dimensions.

Presbyterian.

A visitor to Felixstowe writes in terms of high praise of the helpful ministry of Rev. Thos. Colligan. "The Wednesday evening addresses are gems of Biblical exposition."

At a gathering of the congregation of St. Columba's, Cambridge, Principal Oswald Dykes presiding, a farewell gift was made to Rev. A. Halliday Douglas, who after eight years' ministry is leaving for a Professorship at Toronto College.

Most of the London ministers are at present out of town. In Mr. Connell's absence at Regent Square the pulpit will be supplied next Sunday by Professor Martin, of New College, Edinburgh. Dr. Pentecost is conducting the services at Marylebone, and at St. John's Wood the pulpit is being supplied by the assistant, Mr. Stuart Robertson, formerly assistant to Dr. Watson, of Sefton Park.

Society of Friends.

West Somerset monthly meeting has been held at Milverton in a tent on the grassy site of the old meeting house. The attendance of visitors from other meetings had been invited and a goodly number responded. Prayer for blessing on the gathering was followed by exhortation and testimony, then came the business meeting, divided into two parts by an adjournment, with happy social intercourse.

S. H. Armistead writes to The Friend of the experiences of herself and husband in the Vigten Islands, Norway. The people gather in crowds from the different islands to their meetings. About 200 came on a recent Sunday. Two meetings were held, each lasting about three hours. The congregations seemed as if they would not break up. During the time of Rorvik fair six meetings were held. J. J. and S. H. Armistead hope to be home early next month.

William Hobson, who is visiting America and Canada, writes of Canada yearly meeting, held at Pickering: "Love certainly dominated the yearly meeting. The missionary spirit was very apparent. Canada Friends made us feel at home at once, and we were privileged to share the public meetings, and render all possible help. Both in Portland and Pickering I lectured on 'George Fox and His Coadjutors,' and had an exceptionally attentive hearing. 'That is just what we need,' 'We want to know why we are Friends,' 'We have not heard these truths before,' and similar remarks, encourage us to believe that this is the right line of service, and not a little needed."

The Salvation Army.

The Earl of Hopetoun, Governor-General of Australia, has performed the opening ceremony of the newly-erected Federal Training Home for officers in Melbourne, which is the finest building of its kind in connection with the Army.

The social work in Switzerland, under the supervision of Princess Ouchtomsky, who holds the rank of Staff Captain in the Army, is making important developments. The Rescue Homes in Basle and Zurich have been enlarged, and the Staff-Captain, in order to keep in touch with her protégées after they have left the Homes, has founded a special league, the Siebesbund, of which each inmate becomes a member when leaving the Homes.

In connection with the extension of the social work of the Salvation Army in Demerara, His Excellency the Governor, Sir Walter Sendall, G.C.M.G., presided over an influential and representative gathering, recently held in the Town Hall, Georgetown. The Governor, who was accompanied by Lady Sendall, and supported by many distinguished gentlemen, paid a splendid tribute to the value of the Army's operations.

The Burnley Protestant Mission (a body of Evangelical Church people forced to leave the local churches by Ritualism), after carrying on for eight years a fruitful work in a rented mission hall, have purchased, for £1,000, larger and more convenient premises, which will be shortly opened as "St. Saviour's Protestant Church." The property is so vested and safe-guarded as to ensure that the services will be always conducted on Prayer Book and Evangelical lines, and will thus prove a boon to the aggrieved Protestant Church people of Burnley. Rev. C. E. Wincott is the pastor.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. Samuel Ringrose, one of the oldest members of Lutterworth Congregational Church, and an acceptable preacher.—At Geneseo, New York, Dr. George W. Wood, the oldest member of the New York Presbytery. He had been for twenty years Corresponding Secretary to the American Board of Foreign Missions.—Mr. Daniel Norris, for forty-one years a member, and for many years a deacon of the Baptist Church at Wendover.—In her eightieth year, Miss Mary Angus, from her earliest years associated with the Baptist cause at Walsingham, co. Durham.—Rev. R. Hake, formerly rector of St. George the Martyr, Canterbury, aged seventy-nine.—Rev. R. Hollis, vicar of Whaplode Drove, near Spalding.—Rev. E. T. Franklyn, assistant chaplain at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, aged seventy.—At Dunkerin, Rev. Thos. Hill, rector of the parish, after a lengthened illness, borne with Christian resignation.—At Ontario, Canada, Rev. T. B. Jones, Archdeacon of Ontario, but a native of Cork, where he worked as a curate for several years, and a graduate of Dublin University.—In his seventy-ninth year, Mr. James Campbell, of Tullichewan, Dumbartonshire.

Notes & Comments

Million Pledge Crusade. The sketch, which we publish on another page (accompanied by portrait), of the work accomplished in the United States under the leadership of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, will have a special interest for readers who are preparing, by prayer and effort, for the Twentieth Century Million New Pledge Crusade. Towards the end of September Dr. Henry will conduct a campaign of about fourteen days in various districts in London; and it is intended to follow this up by visits to Newcastle, Edinburgh, Sunderland, Darlington, Sheffield, Leeds, Manchester, Birmingham, Nottingham, Bristol, Plymouth, and Brighton. In some of the centres, however, arrangements depend upon the securing of suitable halls. A prominent part in the meetings will be taken by the Fisk Jubilee Singers, who, being truly Christian vocalists, earnest abstainers, and of world-wide reputation, will, it is believed, attract large audiences.

Boycotting in Ireland. On page 11 we publish a statement of the treatment which has been extended to Dr. Long in Limerick, simply because he is a Protestant Christian. As a medical missionary he deserved the considerate esteem of all classes of the community, Roman Catholics included. This story of boycotting compels the remark that there is a vast difference between the profession and practice of Irish Romanists. They claim liberty on the ground that they are tolerant; when they have the opportunity, they exercise every measure that intolerance can suggest or enforce. It is well for them to enjoy the blessings of Protestant rule, though all the while they chafe against it and agitate for Roman domination.

"Silver Tongues." The offer made by Rev. John Mitchell to send a copy of his book, Silver Tongues, gratis, to 200 clergy and ministers, has been more than fully taken advantage of, the publishers having received a large demand beyond the prescribed supply. In view of this, Mr. Mitchell has generously provided 150 further copies at 1s., beyond those already offered at that price. The book is published at 2s. 6d. (Morgan & Scott), but by this arrangement, copies may be had for 1s., plus 3d. postage, until the allotted number is exhausted. Sunday-school teachers, and all who address or work among children, will find a welcome store of material in this book.

Swiss Opinion on the War. The Bishop of Liverpool has addressed a courteous but strongly-worded reply to the "Pro-Boer" appeal issued by the Swiss branch of the Evangelical Alliance "to the Christians of Great Britain." He deals seriatim with the various statements contained in the appeal, and says:

If the charges you have brought against Great Britain were true she would deserve the condemnation of the civilized world. That our Government has made mistakes we admit; but that we have been inhuman, oppressive, and unrighteous, we emphatically and indignantly deny. I am sure, my dear and reverend brethren, that you have sent us your appeal from the highest motives and with the noblest aims; but I must be forgiven for saying that you have acted on seriously defective information; and that you have formulated charges against your Christian brethren which must touch to the very quick those who are as jealous as you are for the cause of humanity, of righteousness, and of God; and this step, in my opinion, is calculated to bring about the very result you deplore, and to do "serious spiritual harm to the cause of Evangelical Christianity throughout the world."

A Barren Session. The Parliamentary Session that has just come to an end is one of the least eventful and inspiring of modern times. It has been marked by an entire absence of enthusiasm. No great constructive measure has passed into law, and such beneficial Bills as have ultimately been adopted were greatly mutilated during their passage through the House. The blight and discouragement of the war has lain like an incubus on our legislators as well as on their constituents. Our public life is suffering now from a lack of great guiding principles; and, as this affects both sides, we are not likely to find any improvement till an awakening occurs of the national sense of responsibility towards the higher interests of our fellow-citizens. It is thus a time for the educators of public opinion to sow the seed of future harvests. The abuses of society are many; a burning conviction of their evil must be fostered before any genuine reform is possible.

Weighed Down with Gold. Many a preacher will find in the tragic incident of the wreck of the Islander, more than one illustration which may be effectively used in mission work. The most striking and pathetic is that of the miner, returning from the goldfields with his fortune. Seeking to save his money he strapped it round his waist and sprang into the sea, trusting to the life preserver to bear him up. The weight of the money, however, caused the life preserver to topple over, and the man was drowned. Paul warns the rich, and those who would be rich, that the undue love of money leads men into lusts "which drown men in perdition." It is a striking figure this, of the man sunk with an excessive weight, and it may be well urged in our own day when the golden idol is the sole god worshipped by a vast number of men. It is a remarkable thing that our blessed Lord, who generally addressed the poor, so frequently warned his hearers against covetousness. So long as a man holds it in his heart that money is the chief good, so long does he, like the man in the Gospel (Luke xii.), ruin his soul.

The Medium Exposure. The lengthy correspondence upon Spiritualism which has taken place in a secular London paper, and to which we referred a week or two ago, has had a practical, and it is to be hoped, a salutary termination. The medium—a lady who has been intimately and professionally associated with Spiritualism for years—undertook to produce, before a committee, the phenomenon of materialization and other phenomena. Happily, for the cause of truth, a committee of shrewd, business men was chosen, and they determined to have no nonsense, and to make no concessions. The official report of the committee is worded as follows:—

We find that the medium has completely failed to substantiate her claim to the power to produce supernormal phenomena, and that the few trivial occurrences recorded, which were represented by her as being of spirit origin, were deliberately produced by her and by her only.

The "Proof" of Christian Science. An "authorized" defence of Christian science has appeared in the North American Review. It is chiefly remarkable for the travesty of Scriptural argument which does duty in this piece of special pleading. Just as the old Gnostics appealed to the Scriptures and to the Church for their evidences, so with this latest-born form of the same heresy. The writer says that "the door of the spiritual understanding will open only to those who knock," which reminds us of certain words of our Lord and of a great argument of Paul. There the similarity ends. The contrast between the "natural" and the "spiritual" man has no place in the attitude of the true Christian to the "appeal" of Christian science. The Christian faith has never refused the demand for its evidences. They are open and accessible to all. The "proof" of Christian Science is denied to all who are not already committed to its claims, which is an argument in a circle, and so a sure sign of weakness.

The Soudan and Missions. We are very glad to see that the C.M.S. has taken such a stand upon the matter of preaching the Gospel in Khartoum. The memorandum which they have presented to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs is a model of courteous yet firm pleading for a recognition of our rights as English Christians to follow our flag, and, under its shadow, preach the Gospel. It is time that the ridiculous restrictions placed upon missionary societies with reference to work in Khartoum should be removed. To exclude the Gospel is to deny what the C.M.S. note justly calls "the most elementary religious liberty." If Lord Kitchener could so far brave Moslem fanaticism as to destroy the Mahdi's tomb and fling the Mahdi's corpse to the crocodiles, surely it is absurd to pretend that the peaceful preaching of the Gospel in Khartoum would stir up fanaticism. The closing of Khartoum against the Gospel is an outrage to the memory of Gordon, as well as a breach of the English principle of religious liberty for all. Lord Lansdowne promised that the memorandum shall receive "careful attention"; we hope that the attention will be prompt.

The Fear of Moslems. While upon this topic we may as well speak plainly about the cowardice which seems to characterize Christian powers in the presence of Moslems. The latter are treated with a deference which is granted to no others. All their follies are tolerated upon the ground that, if they were opposed, an outbreak of fanaticism would result. This seems to us to be extremely foolish, for so long as this policy is continued there can be no real freedom in Moslem countries which are under Christian rule. Of course, the principle of religious liberty must be granted to them also, but there ought to be no liberty given to such of their "religious" rules as make it im possible (for example) for a Moslem to confess Christ without fear of death, or confiscation, or petty persecution. Moslems, under Christian rule, ought at least to be made to behave themselves as decent human beings.

An Unfair Advantage. At present the Moslem has all the advantages. A Christian turned Moslem (!) would have every attention shown him; but a Moslem turned Christian holds his life in his hand. There is another thing. The plague, whose annual appearance disorganizes all Eastern commerce, and threatens the health of the community, is produced largely as the result of the Meccan pilgrimage. Surely, in the interests of sanitation, to say no more, we have the right to compel Moslems to observe the laws of cleanliness. And yet, even in this, Europe is bound by a craven fear.

Monks and Unholy Traffic. M. Clémenceau has just published some startling figures in support of the Anti-Clerical Crusade in France. Leaving entirely out of view the religious and political questions, he deals with the convents as trading institutions, and indicts them as a menace to honest trading, since they undersell respectable tradesmen, and then use the profits against the highest good of the community. The number of religious establishments in France engaged in traffic of this kind reaches the formidable figure of 2,500. Every branch of trade is touched. The most serious thing, however, is the traffic in strong drink, of which M. Clémenceau says:

> We know that the "charity" of our monks embraces speculations in alcoholism, that is to say, in the worst vice of humanity—and all to enrich the coffers of the Church. Five religious communities sell wine wholesale; six sell liquors wholesale; two alcohol exclusively; four sell liquors retail; seven convents are patented as distilleries; and nine as inns, with billiard playing allowed.

It is a terrible picture, surely—this gigantic traffic in strong drink "for the glory of God." The one convent of the Grande Chartreuse makes annually the profit of a millionaire.

Drink and Drugs. It is a very unhappy sign of the times that the advertisements in the public press of the opening of private establishments for dipsomaniacs, and for those suffering from the abuse of drugs, are so painfully numerous. The mere fact points to a startling development of two destructive habits which are at the root of much social misery, and behind which there looms threateningly a cloud of national evil. Most of the advertisements of specifics for the cure of weariness and fatigue, and for counteracting worry and mental troubles, point the way to the after-abuse, and they are intended simply to be substituted for rest. Speaking recently at Cheltenham, before the British Medical Association, Dr. Ferguson drew attention to the growing tendency to be more impatient, and that the development of morbid sensitiveness is shown by the rapidity with which people fly to drugs. "A little pain unnerves them." This is not as it should be. The proper place of rest in the economy of life should be more fully recognised. It is cheaper than drugs, and much more effective. But above all in the Christian, there should ever be a firm and unswerving faith in the love and care of God. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee."

A Bold Act. The magistrates of Derby last week decided to abolish music and dancing licences in connection with public-houses in that district from the middle of October next, the period when the licences require renewal. The resolution was arrived at after a long interview with deputations from the Church of England body and from the Free Church Council. It is said that over 170 of these licences will then terminate. Those who know how fruitful a source of immorality they become in large towns will rejoice at the wise action of the justices, and trust that it may be imitated elsewhere.

Home Life and Crime. The various notes which we have recently made upon the subject of home life have a lurid light cast upon them by the publication of the sad story of Charles Stuart at the Clerkenwell Sessions last week. This unhappy man put in writing the origin of his criminal career, and submitted it to the judge. It is a document which, through the medium of the newspapers, will be read all over England. Would God it might be read to some good purpose. This one sentence holds the key of his criminal career:—

> My life, from the age of six years to thirteen, was surrounded by all the evil that years of wickedness and vice could bring to bear on a mind and character like mine, naturally weak and ill-fitted to bear the temptations to which it was hourly subjected.

Here is the thing Christian workers have to face—a corrupt home life. It is the source of the country's sin and misery, on its visible side. People of Stuart's type attend neither schools, mission-halls, nor churches. Do they ever hear the Gospel? How is the Church to get at such people? The stream can never be pure whilst this fountain is poisoned.

The Tyranny of Etiquette. A friend of the late Empress Frederick, in giving some recollections of the deceased lady, quotes the following pathetic words used by her:—

> What is the good of talents to me, or genius, or ardent longings, endeavours, and strivings? Have I even the time, have I strength enough, with all these thousand empty, hateful duties of etiquette, which kill the human soul and nourish the propriety puppet in us? And even if I did accomplish anything great in art, would anyone believe in it? Would it not be always thought—as with all art work done by crowned heads, from Nero downwards—that it was not done by my own hands? Oh! what a curse rests on us Royalties—what a curse for those who would like to be human!

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown"—uneasy in more ways than one. It is well that we should get a glimpse such as this occasionally; it acts as a salutary check to the envying of great positions which sometimes springs up in the breast—the greatest splendour does not bring the greatest peace. Indeed, peace increases only as life becomes more simple. The aim of the Gospel is not to increase our complications, but to reduce them to the point of unity, and so to bring a contented heart. The plaint of the Empress raises another question also—i.e., would it not be a good thing all round if the rules of etiquette were stripped of the burdensome gilt and trappings, which so often lead to artificiality and hypocrisy?

The Colour Line. We learn with satisfaction that by the decided attitude of the manager of a large London hotel, the social rights of the negro were last week vindicated against American prejudices. Irrespective even of the question of righteous dealing, it is altogether unreasonable that tourists should seek to force their domestic troubles on another nation. Race feeling runs high in many countries besides the Southern States, but those who are our guests should remember that London is a cosmopolitan city, in which all the races of mankind meet on equal terms. Above all, as Christians, we thank God that there is at least one country where it is recognized by law and custom that the Creator "made of one blood all nations of men"; and where an educated gentleman is secure from social ostracism because of the colour of his skin.

The Vitality of Baptismal Regeneration. The vitality of sacerdotal error is well illustrated in the following extract from a local church magazine (the Hartismere Deanery Magazine), in which the rector of a Suffolk parish appeals to parents to have their children baptized:—

> It is a sad thing for any babe to remain unbaptized the "original sin" still unwashed away; Christ's loving invitation, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," disregarded. God-parents can always be provided. The rector will do anything he possibly can, in order that no single child may remain outside Christ's fold.

There is scarcely a doctrine that has caused more terrible suffering to innocent parents who have lost unbaptized infants than this fiction of baptismal regeneration, which is a pagan survival that ought long ago to have been buried out of sight and mind. To connect the beautiful words of the Saviour about the little ones with this superstition is a cruel offence against the first principles alike of exegesis and common sense. The idea is purely ecclesiastical, and is abhorrent to the whole spirit of the New Testament.

A Plea for Anglican Sunday-Schools. A new interest is unquestionably being aroused in Sunday-schools within the pale of the Anglican communion. This great instrument has not so far become as integral a part of "Church" institutions as has been the case with Nonconformist denominations. The tendency has been to favour the holding of "Children's Services" rather than classes for specific Scriptural instruction. The movement towards the school idea in preference to that of a general service is, if rightly used, a healthy one—that is, if the object really be to give the children pure and systematic Biblical teaching. The open Bible is the enemy of sacerdotalism, and the friend of Evangelical doctrine and faith.

The Temptation of Ten Per Cent. The feverish haste to be rich, which is so characteristic of the time, is leading men into speculations in which no righteous man should be concerned, and the ranks of these investors unhappily include the names of many who, in other relations of life, are scrupulously honourable, and endeavour to follow closely the teachings of Christ. The "temptation of ten per cent." pushes out of sight the simple and comprehensive altruism of the New Testament. The hands are held out for the large dividend without any inquiry as to the methods by which it has been obtained. Yet in some cases the balance over the fair and righteous return may represent simply the difference between the fair wage and the starvation wage, between a woman's purity and the life of the midnight streets.

A Retrograde Step. Some little while ago the first Turkish girl graduate won a high place, and the fact has apparently been brought under the notice of the Sultan, who has now issued very stringent orders prohibiting any Turkish children from attending foreign schools, or being educated in their homes by foreign masters or governesses. The action is intended to suppress that desire for "more light" which for some time back has been spreading among the higher classes in that benighted country.

Boycotting in Limerick.

WE are requested by the secretaries of the Society for Irish Church Missions to publish the following letter, which has been addressed by Dr. Long, the Society's Medical Missionary in Limerick, to the corporation official who is charged with the oversight of the licensed car-drivers of the city :—

[Copy.]
1, Lansdowne Villas, Limerick,
August 20, 1901.

To Mr. Forrest, City High Constable.

Sir,—Since the commencement of this year neither any member of my family nor myself has been able to hire a public car, except on two occasions. I need not say how inconvenient, and at times how trying, this state of things has been. On one occasion when Mrs. Long, with her mother and three little ones, were returning after a long day's outing, they were refused a car at the station, and were obliged to walk home through the city as best they could. Again when going away for our holiday they had to walk, as the car-drivers refused to drive them. Knowing that true Irishmen have more gallantry than to refuse to drive a lady with her children, I determined to test whether there was an organized boycott instituted against us, forcing the drivers, through fear, into this unnatural attitude.

On Saturday, August 10, as I was obliged to visit a patient on the Military Road, I stepped up on the first car I met in William Street, and asked to be driven. The car-driver refused, saying he would be afraid of his life to drive me. I asked him then to drive me to the Town Hall, so that I might report how matters stood to you, but he refused to drive me anywhere. I said that I would wait there on his car until you came up. While waiting, the driver tried to push me off the car. I called a constable to prevent an assault. He then took the horse from under and laid the shafts on the ground. To keep on the car until you came up I was obliged to climb into the driver's seat. When you did come, I understood that you abused me for creating a disturbance in the street, and that you said you would bring the case before the magistrates. You would not listen to me. I had simply asked Thomas Hartigan (11, Pennywell, No. 76) to drive me, which he refused to do, and, instead, took the horse from under the car, and hoisted the shafts in the air before I left the car. When you had an opportunity of seeing how matters stood, and having secured the name and number of the driver, I proceeded up George Street. Opposite the National Bank I stepped upon another car, and asked the driver, Cornelius Maher, No. 27, to drive me. He refused, saying that he was engaged for one o'clock. It was then twenty-five minutes to one, and I said that I would not keep him for more than five minutes, but he would not drive me. I asked him to drive me to the Town Hall, but he refused again. I waited on this car until five minutes to one, hoping you would have come up, and that I could have reported matters again to you, but as I got a message while waiting, to see my patient as soon as possible, I was obliged to get off the car and walk.

A full report of all that occurred has been forwarded to the authorities, including an account of your refusal to secure to me the use of a car; and now, in making this complaint, I wish to bring this matter formally before you, trusting that, without any further unpleasantness, you will take whatever steps you may consider necessary to secure to myself as a ratepayer, and to my family, the privileges of citizenship. I consider the car-drivers to be amenable only to your authority, and that no other interference with their actions should be permitted. I therefore hold you responsible for the enforcement of the corporation bye-laws, in regard to the hire of public conveyances, and beg to be informed at your earliest convenience of what measures you have taken, or intend to take, to secure to me the enjoyment of this right.—I remain, yours faithfully, (Signed) J. John Long, M.D.

The foregoing letter was considered at a meeting of the Hackney Car Committee of the Limerick Corporation, held on August 21, when it was unanimously decided after a discussion hostile to Dr. Long, to mark the letter as read. The deliberate boycott to which Dr. Long and his family are exposed has thus received the practical sanction of the officials to whom the car-drivers are responsible.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ON our arrival at Beyrout we were welcomed by Dr. Mackie, of the Presbyterian Mission; enjoyed the kind hospitality of an old Scotch resident, Mr. Somerville; had tea with dear Miss Taylor, and heard about her useful and much-prospered schools for Moslem girls; and finally became for the night the guests of Dr. Jessup, in his beautiful summer home at Ailee, overlooking an exquisite panorama of mountain, plain, and sea.

It was a rare delight to have this opportunity of intercourse with one of the foremost of modern missionaries, who, after upwards of forty years of honourable service, has been permitted to see the operations, to which he has consecrated his exceptional powers, attain such an extraordinary success. Applications for entrance to the more general American Training College pour in from every part of the East, while the young men of the Theological College, to whom he specially devotes himself, are carrying the Gospel throughout the entire region. I could not wonder, when I heard that he had declined to become an ambassador to Persia, on behalf of the United States, that he might pursue his much-loved work.

He courteously put us on our way for Damascus, which involved an eight-hours journey from his home, by a remarkable line, constructed by the French, which twice carried us to an elevation of 4,000 feet. I shall never forget the last two hours along the rushing Abana, descending to carry fertility to the oasis of Damascus; and could not wonder at the pride with which Naaman referred to it.

DAMASCUS.

The interest of Damascus is inexhaustible. Its exquisite setting in a dense mass of emerald green; its antiquity, dating far beyond the days of Abraham; its many mosques with their graceful minarets, from which the faithful are called to prayer five times a day, beginning with the grey dawn, "as soon as it is possible to distinguish a black hair from a white," when the muezzin bids you arise to pray, because prayer is sweeter than sleep; the narrow, crowded streets, with their myriad teeming life, and varied interests; the stately trains of camels, bringing in the produce of the country, or starting in caravans for distant markets; the bazaars, in which the natives make or display their goods—all is so interesting that you need to do little more than sit at the window of your hotel, or wander quietly through the streets.

We visited the magnificent mosque arising from the ashes of its fire, standing on the site of the House of Rimmon, and afterwards of a Greek temple, and finally of a Christian church. Still on the bronze gates we could discover the form of the communion cup, and on the pediment of an ancient portico read the Christian sentence which has looked down on these centuries of Mohammedanism, "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom."

We walked and drove repeatedly in the street called Straight which intersects the city from gate to gate, saw the spot where Paul is supposed to have been stricken to the ground, and that at which he is said to have been let down from the walls. From the top of the minaret we saw the entrance to the distant Arabian Desert, whither he fled. Much kindness was shown to us by the ladies of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, by Dr. Crauford, and Rev. Mr. Phillips. We were in all a party of some thirteen missionaries and others, bound ultimately for Brumana, but desirous of first making this memorable tour. Our travelling thus became full of incident and interest, and owed much of its comfort to the arrangements made by our dear friend, Rev. Mr. Maclachlan, of Smyrna.

BAALBEC.

Words simply fail me to tell of Baalbec. We reached it from Damascus, after four hours on rail, and four in carriages. That ride through the long pass, with Lebanon on our left, was specially interesting, passing by villages, with their cattle, goats, camels, and asses, and the peasants in their picturesque dresses. No one who has visited Baalbec will need a description, and for those who have not, no description can convey much idea of the extraordinary magnificence or size of the ruined temples of the Sun, of Jupiter, and of Venus. Imagine blocks of stone 70ft. long and 15ft. high, columns 75ft. high in three pieces, the most exquisitely carved cornices and friezes! Only six of the pillars in the Temple of the Sun remain erect—we saw them bathed in the glory of the evening sunset, and the morning glow. The other two temples are more perfect; and all travellers must acknowledge the notable service being rendered by the German Government, by the explorations that are being conducted under the superintendence of very competent archæological explorers and engineers.

It was with difficulty we tore ourselves away from the massive remains, to which Phenicians, Greeks, Romans, have contributed; for this site was first dedicated to Baal, then to Roman deities, and finally by Constantine to Christ. On our return journey we visited the quay, where one piece of stone lies, which was cut out and shaped for the building, but never transported thither. It suggested solemn reflections. Oh, that none of us may be left out of our place in the Temple of our Lord! Thank God, however great the difficulties of bringing us thither (and this stone would have demanded the strenuous effort of 40,000 slaves) our God is able. The Conference begins next week.

The Albert Midlane Fund.

WE are glad to record a very generous response by our readers to the appeal on behalf of the author of "There's a Friend for Little Children," and many other beautiful and well-known hymns. We acknowledge this week in our Donation List sums, amounting to £30 18s. 6d., and this, with previous amounts, makes a total of £60 19s. received by us up to Monday last.

Many of the contributors in writing us with their donations add words of appreciation of Mr. Midlane's poetry, and many express the hope that through our Fund and other similar efforts, Mr. and Mrs. Midlane may not only be freed from debt, but be placed above the reach of want for the rest of their earthly life. We shall, therefore, be pleased to continue to receive on behalf of Mr. Midlane the contributions which our readers feel led to send.

Theatrical Employees.—On Wednesday of last week Mr. Forbes held a tea meeting at Southend for the ballet girls engaged at the Kursaal. On the following day he had a similar meeting in London, at Orange Street Chapel, when Mr. Spencer Johnson, formerly an actor, took part in the proceedings.

Wesleyan Methodist Pastoral.—A pastoral letter, worthy of the closest attention, has been prepared under the direction of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, and is intended for reading at specially convened meetings in September. Opening with thanksgiving for the blessing experienced during the Simultaneous Mission, and for the signs of spiritual quickening manifest in connection with home and foreign missions, serious attention is called to the "fierce, prolonged, and many-sided attacks" made on Christianity during the past century; but cause for thanksgiving is found in the way in which it has come to be seen that "the foundation of God standeth sure." It is shown that the harvest of materialism is ripening, and men are hesitating to face vital moral issues, the one pursuit that seems to justify effort being that of riches. Among the working classes the thirst for amusements amounts almost to a craving. In the face of all these a loud call is given to new earnestness and zeal in every department of the work of the Church.

The Claims of Christ.—I.

By PRINCIPAL McCAIG, Pastors' College.

THE life of Jesus Christ belongs as much to history as the life of Alexander or Cæsar. The question for to-day is not "Did Christ live?" but "What manner of person was He?" "What think ye of Christ?" The keystone of the arch of Christianity is Christ. No other name occupies the same position with regard to religion that Christ occupies in relation to Christianity. He is at once its Founder and its Subject.

The life of Christ is correctly depicted by the four Evangelists. This we may believe, apart from all questions about inspiration. We do very strongly believe that the Gospel narrative is an inspired record. But we also believe that, in studying the Gospels, we are on sure historic ground; and, accepting the historical Christ, we bow to his authority.

Believing the records to be truthful, we are constrained to believe they are inspired, since inspiration is claimed by them: everything about them harmonises with that claim, and their composition can only be fully accounted for by supposing their inspiration. He who does not accept the inspiration is, at any rate, bound to accept the history unless he can show it to be false.

Human genius was powerless to invent such a life. Those Galilean peasants were able to write such a marvellous history because the events they record had actually taken place; the character they depict had been manifested among them. To suppose otherwise implies a greater miracle than any they narrate. Christ is the central point of all history. All the past pointed to Him, and derived significance from Him. All the future looks to Him, and from Him gains inspiration. His life breaks into the monotony of time, dividing the life of the world into two great epochs—the time before Christ, and the time since his advent. As we read the Gospel history, what do we find Him saying of Himself, and what does this involve in relation to us?

SENT FROM GOD.

I. We note his claims as to Natural Position. (1) He claims to be sent from God. It is in his teaching as reported by John that we find this claim most fully made, although it is implied in the Synoptists in the many passages where He speaks of Himself as having come into the world; it is set forth in a veiled manner in the Parable of the Vineyard; He indicates it somewhat obscurely when He says: "He that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me;" while, as his reason for preaching the Gospel from place to place, He says, "For therefore am I sent."

In the fourth Gospel the claim meets us everywhere. In his reply to the Jews, who complained that He had broken the Sabbath in healing the impotent man, He, three times, declares, "The Father hath sent Me." In his discourse at Capernaum, besides other expressions implying the same thought, He speaks six times of being sent of the Father. He presents God to man under this character as "the Father which hath sent Me."

In his conversation with the Jews at the feast, mentioned in John vii., this becomes still more marked; for five times, without mentioning the name of God, He alludes to Him as "He that sent Me." In the discourse reported in chap. viii., answering the charge of the Pharisees that He bare record of Himself; He declares that his witness is confirmed by "the Father that sent Me"; four times does He thus assert that the Father who sent Him is with Him in his witness-bearing. Still more emphatically in the same chapter does He declare, "I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of Myself, but He sent Me." He prefaces his work of healing the man born blind, by affirming, "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." In reply to the charge of blasphemy brought against Him by the Jews in the Temple porch, He asks with dignity: "Say ye of Him whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest?"

In his discourse after the inquiry of the Greeks, amid many expressions of a similar meaning, we find three distinct references to his being sent of God. In his table-talk at the Supper, He says, "He that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me;" and in the wonderful discourse which follows, He, four times, speaks of being sent, and coming forth from the Father; while in the prayer which closes the discourse, there are five similar references.

He rejoices that life eternal is found in "Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." He tells his Father that the disciples, receiving his words, have believed "that Thou didst send Me." He declares his intention of sending them into the world, "as Thou hast sent Me." He prays that the unity of the disciples may be so manifested that "the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me;" and He exults in the thought that these disciples "have known that Thou hast sent Me."

All these passages show that the thought was inwoven into the very texture of Christ's thinking, that He could not, and did not, think of Himself at any time as not sent of God. This claim is not an isolated assertion, but the burden of his whole teaching.

PRE-EXISTENT.

(2) But this claim goes much further than appears at first sight. Moses and other servants of God could claim to be sent of God, in the sense that they were authorized and qualified by God for their work; but Christ's claim to be sent of God meant much more, and involves the further claim, which is distinctly formulated, that He had lived in another sphere —Pre-existence. He was not only sent into the world, but sent from some other condition of life.

In John iii. 13 He speaks of Himself as the Son of Man who descended from heaven. To the gainsaying Jews He declares, "Before Abraham was, I am." In his great prayer He prays, "Father, glorify Me with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was;" and on the same occasion He says, "For Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world." Thus He claims to have come from heaven, to have been living there before Abraham's time, to have been there in fellowship with God, and in the enjoyment of the Father's love, before the world had a being. Assuredly, this is no slight claim—not only the most exalted of God's commissioned servants on earth, but possessor of superhuman glory in a pre-existent state.

THE SON OF GOD.

(3) Further, He claims to be the Son of God. In no subordinate sense, as a privilege shared by men and angels, does He make this claim, but in the fullest and supremest sense, as being something peculiar to Himself. The word, "Father," so constantly on his lips, implies it. This, his favourite title for God, is almost the first word we hear Him utter: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" as it is almost the last He speaks on earth: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

The title, Son of God, Son of the Living God, He accepts without rebuke, and, even with approval, from others. Nathanael, the healed demoniac, Martha, Simon Peter, all address Him thus, and in the last case He jubilantly declares that the confession of the disciple is the result of a direct revelation from the Father. In each of the Gospels He is reported as declaring that He is the Son who possessed an intimate knowledge of the Father, and to whom the Father had made special communications. Repeatedly in the Gospel of John does He speak of Himself as the Son absolutely, and as the Son of God, specifically. To the healed blind man He puts the searching question, "Dost thou believe in the Son of God?" and in answer to the man's bewildered inquiry, He unambiguously avows—"Thou hast both seen Him, and He it is that speaketh with thee."

The great charge brought against Him at the last, and for which we may say He was condemned to death, was that He made Himself the Son of God; and in that solemn hour, with his whole future, humanly speaking, at stake, when as it were put upon his oath by the high priest in the challenge—"I adjure Thee by the Living God that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of God," He deliberately replies in the affirmative. From those around the cross, the taunt is flung at Him, "If Thou be the Son of God." He said, and most unmistakably, that He was "the Son of God."

REVEALER OF THE FATHER.

(4) Nor does the claim of Christ end here. He claims to be the Revealer of the Father and to be equal with the Father. Two of the Synoptists report that wonderful utterance of his, surely the most daring ever uttered by human lips, the most blasphemous if untrue—"All things have been delivered unto Me of my Father; and no one knoweth the Son save the Father, neither doth any know the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son willeth to reveal Him." If the Son knows the Father in the same absolute and exclusive sense as the Infinite Father knows the Son, then surely the Son must stand very high in the scale of being, must indeed be possessed of the knowledge that is infinite, must have equality of nature with the Infinite God. And this very equality here implicitly asserted, Christ explicitly claims; for, besides the many statements in the fourth Gospel concerning his making known the Father, manifesting his Name, we have the distinct statement in John x. 30: "I and my Father are one," a statement which the Jews rightly understood, while scornfully resenting it, as making Himself "equal with God."

Again, there is the definite and detailed declaration of the farewell sermon, the gist of which lies in the words: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Christ thus makes the highest claim that could possibly be made. It is not necessary to mention his claim to be Messiah. That is involved in these other claims; and the additional instances of his specific avowal of Messiahship would really involve these, for, according to his idea of the Messiah, He was not only one sent from God to fulfil the ancient prophecies, and as Prophet, Priest, and King accomplish the work of Redemption, but He was to be Son of God, He was to be the Lord, pre-existing in David's time, and acknowledged as such by the spirit of prophecy.

Christ's claims, then, as to his Natura Position, mean, and can mean nothing lessl than, absolute Divinity, or, as we might better phrase it, absolute Deity.

Echoes from Keswick.

A Heavenly Exchange.

By Rev. S. A. SELWYN.

ONE may say—I have a temper, a habit, of which I cannot get rid. It may be that you will have to get rid of yourself altogether—that you will have to learn what it is to die to these things. There is a way of yielding to sin, also of fighting against sin and being defeated. The Scriptural procedure is to die to it, and rise again from the dead, by God's almighty power. First comes the baptism—only one Pentecost, then a daily infilling. The Lord is ready to give "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He might be glorified" (Isa. lxi. 3, 4).

Comfort for Dark Days.

By Rev. W. DARLOW SARJEANT.

The disciples could not get to Jesus, though they toiled hard (Matt. xiv. 22-33). But He came to them, walking on the foaming billows. You will find in Christian life and service that there are times when you cannot get to the Master. You may shut the closet door, but you cannot pray. Though you cannot go to the Lord, assuredly He will come to you. He sees the little boat, storm-tossed and driven, and He hears the sigh of the tortured spirit. His word is: "It is I; be not afraid." We may not follow Peter's example, and leave the boat; we must remain in the will of God, and even in the darkness we must say, "Thy will be done." When Jesus reached the boat, the disciples "worshipped Him." They could not do so on the shore; in his will they are able to worship Him.

Living Sacrifices.

By Rev. JAMES MURSELL.

"Present your bodies a living sacrifice" (Rom. xii. 1). Notice the intense reality of the consecration: beginning at the centre, it must pass to the circumference of our being. After a definite act, consecration is maintained in the yielded life. The step passes into the walk, and the act is repeated, so that a habit is formed which becomes unconscious in the life. The Apostle says, "a living sacrifice." In the old economy, the victim was slain; in the Christian dispensation it lives. That does not mean that we withdraw the offering, but rather that we live as victims. Moment by moment the mercies of God lay their gentle, and yet omnipotent grasp upon us, constraining us to realize that we are no longer our own, but Christ's, and to live in the perpetual recognition of that fact. We die daily, and live eternally. The more utterly we are victimized, the more we are blessed.

A Plea for Christian Consistency.

By Rev. JOHN BRASH.

I do not think there has ever been a time in the whole Christian era when it was so necessary as it is now for men who profess to be disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ to live true and pure Christian lives. Recall the revival of the eighteenth century under Whitefield, Wesley, and Howel Harris—why should we not have such an awakening to-day? Speaking generally, the masses of the people then believed in the historic facts of the Christian religion. They accepted everything that was taught in the Bible and the Prayer Book, and assented to what the preachers told them of heaven and hell and eternity. The one thing needed was to wake up their consciences by the preaching of the Word under the power of the Holy Ghost.

In our day there is a spirit of scepticism abroad; it pervades our current literature, and is all the more dangerous because it is not blatant and coarse as aforetime, but polite and gracious, and toned with beautiful sentiment. While there are many that reject Christianity, and others who still believe Christian facts and doctrines, there is a vast multitude who would be offended if you were to call them infidels, but who have been injuriously affected by the atmosphere of scepticism in which they pass their lives. They are untouched by the great truths that brought their forefathers to Christ. They have not time to read books, but they read people. How are they likely to be influenced for good when they see Christian men eager for pleasure, success, or social rank, and living only for the present?

God's Way With Wanderers.

By Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE.

Notice God's method in bringing his people back to Himself, as indicated in Hosea ii. 14-16. (1) Allurement: "I will allure her." God has some message to deliver, so He brings the soul into a wilderness, or to a condition of solitude. (2) Communion: "I will speak to her heart" (14 marg.). Some of us are not where we were as to prayer and touch with Divine things. God has something to teach us, some work for us to undertake. (3) Fruitfulness: "I will give her her vineyards; and the valley of Achor for a door of hope." Instead of barrenness, plenty; instead of defeat, victory. (4) Joy as in Youth: "And she shall sing." How many of God's people are unable to do this! Return to Him, and you shall rejoice "as in the day when you came up out of Egypt." And then, "The Lord my Husband," and "I will betroth thee unto Me for ever."

I am thine own, O Christ,
Henceforth entirely thine;
And life from this glad hour,
New life is mine.

No earthly joy can lure
My quiet soul from Thee;
This deep delight so pure
Is heaven to me.

The Thirsting Soul.

By Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY.

What is the secret of the blessed life? What are we aiming at? I find it all in the one word, Jesus, unseen by the natural eye, yet revealed by the Holy Ghost—the object up there, the power of vision here; Christ dwelling in the believer's heart. If any keep that Name in mind, they will not lose their way, but will be kept in the bosom of God. "If any man thirst" (John vii. 37): any incomplete soul can be a candidate—moral or immoral, literate or illiterate. My heart's grief is this, that there are a great many who have not got the thirst. It is a great sin not to be filled with the Holy Ghost, but it is a greater not to wish to be filled. Thirst is the intensified desire.

We need in the British Islands 100,000 men like Murray McCheyne. I asked a man in Melbourne if he knew McCheyne. "Yes," said he. "I have heard him talk and pray. He was a seraph." The Lord is not weaker in his power of saving men of the same quality in the dawn of the twentieth century. God is able. McCheyne had a thirst unquenchable that brought him ever to God. If you have not the passion which Christ had, pray until you have it. That is the sort of prayer God desires. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God."

"Let him come unto Me." Christ not only purchased you with his blood, but He purchased the way to the inheritance and the inheritance itself. Will you come to see where He dwells, and enter into the holiest? There is the throne, and One sitting on the throne, the Lamb in the midst which taketh away the sin of the world. We must get our minds enlarged to take in something of the grandeur of Christ.

The Lack of Spiritual Maturity.

By Rev. A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE.

What was the chief difficulty that the Apostle Paul found in his days? Some would say it was Judaism, or persecution; others the care of the Churches that came upon himself, or the thorn in the flesh that was sent by Satan to buffet him. When I look into the Epistles I find that the chief perplexity of the Church then was the lack of spiritual maturity in the Church itself. In Eph. iv. 14 Paul beseeches that they be no more children; and when writing to the Corinthians he says, "I could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat."

When I take another Epistle I find the difficulty is just the same: "Everyone that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe" (Heb. v. 13). So when I look into the Church of God, and ask what is the chief difficulty that perplexes us, I do not think it is formalism or ritualism, or the world that persecutes, or a downgrade theology that hinders. The great thing that pains the heart of Jesus Christ most is the disputing lives of many who ought to be mature men and women, strong in Him, and the power of his might.

Now, how does Paul propose to deal with carnal Christians? (1) Be clear as to your position. Do not flinch from it. Weigh yourself in the balance, and let it be perfectly clear whether or not you are a carnal Christian. Remember, a carnal Christian cannot make himself a spiritual Christian. (2) Make sure of your possession. What is that possession? "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." (3) Bring yourself to the Physician. How can you pass from the dominion of the flesh to the dominion of the Holy Ghost? Mark tells of a young man possessed of a dumb spirit, brought to Christ by his father, who prayed, "If Thou canst do anything, have compassion on us and help us." Have you offered that prayer? Jesus cast out the devil. There was a great conflict—"the devil tare him." Do not wonder if you get in the same perplexity as the Convention goes on, for it may be thus that you will pass into the dominion of the Holy Ghost. If Jesus Christ heals your disease to-night you will be put into a possession and state of spiritual health, and you will begin to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

He Careth.

"Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you" (1 Peter v. 7).

What can it mean? is it aught to Him
That the days are long and the nights are dim?
Can He be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
About his throne are eternal calms,
And strong glad music of happy psalms,
And bliss unruffled by any strife—
How can He care for my little life?

And yet I want Him to care for me,
While I live in this world where sorrows be.
When the lights die down from the path I take;
When strength is feeble and friends forsake;
And love and music, which once did bless,
Have left me to silence and loneliness;
Then my life-song changes to sobbing prayers,
And my heart cries out for a God who cares.

When shadows hang o'er the whole day long,
And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong,
And I am not good, and the bitter shade
Of conscious sin makes my soul afraid;
And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its courses to help me through;
And I long for a Saviour—can it be
That the God of the universe cares for me?

Oh, wonderful story of deathless Love,
Each child is dear to that heart above!
He fights for me when I cannot fight;
He comforts me in the gloom of night;
He lifts the burden, for He is strong;
He stills the sigh and awakes the song;
The sorrows that bear me down He shares,
And loves and pardons because He cares.

Let all who are sad take heart again,
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father looks from his throne above
To soothe and comfort us with his Love.
He leaves us not when the storms are high,
And we have safety for He is nigh—
Can that be trouble which He doth share?
Oh, rest in peace for the Lord will care!

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 1. Acts xxv.

THERE was great manliness in the Apostle's bearing. He insisted that his rights should be respected. As a Roman citizen he could claim to be heard by the Emperor himself, and when there seemed every fear that Festus would yield to the strong pressure being brought to bear on him by the Jews, and transfer the hearing of the case to Jerusalem, he exercised his privilege, and said, "I appeal to Cæsar." All this should be borne in mind when we consider our Master's teaching in Matt. v. There is a point beyond which it is useless to contend against high-handed wrong. When that is reached, we must yield. But, until then, we are justified in appealing to any court that shall protect us in the enjoyment of our liberty. It is not good for our oppressors themselves to be unchecked in their lawlessness.

From that moment Festus treated Paul with a good deal of respect, and sought the assistance of King Agrippa in framing the précis of the case which should be sent with the prisoner to the Emperor. It is remarkable to notice the indifference with which this Roman official mentions the name of Jesus. It was a question concerning Jewish superstition, and one Jesus, who had died, but whom Paul affirmed to be alive. What a flood of light this casts on the habitual attitude and teaching of the Apostle! The one impression which he produced on Festus was his evident fellowship with the living Christ. And this impression so precisely corroborates the statements of 1 Cor. xv., Col. iii., and Rom. vi. This is Christianity: not doctrines about Christ, not rites, not even the Bible, but Christ, always Christ, who was dead, and is yet alive, and in fellowship with whom we live for evermore.

MONDAY, September 2. Acts xxvi.

In this remarkable and impassioned address, the Apostle brings out many new points—the strictness of his early life (5), the cruelty of his hatred toward the followers of Jesus (10-11), the full account of what the Lord said to him, which he afterwards wove into the introduction to the Epistle to the Colossians. Does not the Lord always speak to us like this? He always addresses us in the mother tongue, always tells us to transform our visions into messages to others, always promises his deliverance and help, so long as we keep on the assigned path, and always promises that there are visions yet in front. "I will appear unto thee."

What a ministry is entrusted to Christ's disciples! To turn men from Satan unto God, is what this world is needing beyond everything else. The world itself so lovely, with its fair and beautiful expanses of land and sea, "its snow peaks lifting their silver mystery of light against the sky, the great woods singing with the song of the streams; but everywhere the terrible disgrace and wretchedness of human life. City beyond city has its tale to tell. You cross new seas and find the darkness waiting for you on the other side. You lift some veil of old-world beauty, and there it lurks behind." But what comfort to know that there is deliverance for men, that the Son of Man can save, can exercise healing virtue, can secure forgiveness and sanctification, on the condition of saving faith in Himself. When a man has once seen that, when he has seen that Christ is not example only, but the source of transforming power, he can no longer disobey the vision that beckons him to follow it, and proclaim it to the sons of men. There is much mystery in the world, but only one Christ, the God-man, the revelation of what man may become, and the power by which he may become. That vision, that task, inspire with a Divine enthusiasm, which men of the world cannot understand.

TUESDAY, September 3. Acts xxvii.

Only a few days ago I was traversing these very seas, so graphically described in this chapter. We had crossed the mouth of the Adriatic, and were coasting along the southern shores of Greece, when without a moment's warning a perfect hurricane broke on us from the north-west. The water was lashed into foam-crested waves, the big steamer heeled over before the force of the wind, and it was almost impossible to keep one's footing. One could imagine the effect on a heavily laden corn-ship, which was unable to stand against the storm, as it coasted under the shores of Crete, and was driven far to the south, even to the peril of falling on the quicksands off the coast of Africa.

The perfect self-possession and equanimity of the Apostle amid the agitating scenes of the shipwreck show how fully the peace of God was keeping his heart and mind. Prisoner though he is, he seems to assume the leadership of the whole company, assures them that there is no need for alarm, speaks of the vision and presence of God's angels, shows the centurion the peril of allowing the sailors to escape, and prevails on them to break their fast. It is a sublime picture to see him standing there in the grey dawn, with the heavy seas breaking over the ship, giving thanks to God as he breaks the bread as though it were a eucharist. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee. Trust ye in the Lord for ever." The child of God recognises that the storm is in his Father's hand.

WEDNESDAY, September 4. Acts xxviii.

It is good to hear of the kindness of these Maltese. In distant foreign lands there are traces of pity and goodwill. Men love their children, husbands their wives, brothers their sisters; and there will be ready help for those who are absolutely destitute. The mischief is when the stranger has something to lose, which the natives desire to gain! How changeable is human opinion, shifting from the lowest to the highest possible estimate of their fellow-man in a moment of time, and judging only by the the favourable or unfavourable circumstances of life. Because Paul cast off the viper these people accounted him a god; if he had died they would have thought him a felon. Thank God our destiny is fixed by character, not by the colour of outward circumstance. Many of the prosperous of this world, who are hurt by no vipers, are the greatest sinners, while those who have been the supreme sufferers of the world have been the greatest saints.

Paul went toward Rome, as we have seen, under very different circumstances from those which he originally expected; but these very circumstances gave him the greatest opportunity of his life. In no other way could he have approached and touched such men as the centurion, or Publius, or Nero himself. Moreover, in his own hired house, he was secure from the hatred and plottings of the Jews, which in every city had jeopardised his life and impeded his work. It was a secure and safe retreat for him amid the metropolis of the world, from which for two whole years he was able to influence Cæsar's household, to hold fellowship with his friends, and to issue epistles to the world. Trust God to work out his plans in your life. He makes no mistakes.

THURSDAY, September 5. Romans i.

While in Corinth, the Apostle had written this great treatise to the Christians in Rome, many of whom were well known to him. They were beloved of God; they were living the saintly life; their faith was spoken of through the whole world. He, on the other hand, had received grace and apostleship, to be exercised among all nations, and was conscious of the power of imparting spiritual gifts to his hearers.

Wherever he travelled through the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, and however various were the nationalities which poured their contributions on to the ships that passed from port to port—Roman or Grecian; student, soldier, or sailor; the slave or the freeman; the Scythian or the African, the Asiatic or the European—on each man Paul cast yearning glances. He felt that Christ had given him something for every man, and that he was in debt, until he had made known the Message with which his soul was charged. Only so could he discharge his trusteeship.

He did not shrink in coming to Rome, although it was the seat of the learning, literature, and eloquence of the world, because he knew that the Gospel with which he was entrusted had the secret of power in it. Other religions might have caught a glimpse of high morals, but Christ alone could give the power by which they could be made living and effective.

As few men, Paul knew the unutterableness of human need. He grows eloquent in enumerating its hideous aspects. Men resisted the truth that sought to enter their hearts, from nature, from the spheres of life and thought and conscience, and therefore God gave them up to their sins, and they became as beasts, and lower. But he goes on the supposition that "our greatest and deepest needs take voices and prophesy their own supplies, and the very blackness of the midnight tells beforehand of the dawn."

FRIDAY, September 6. Romans ii.

While the Jew listened to the foregoing enumeration of the sins which disgraced the Gentile world, he might have prided himself that he, at least, and his nation, were exempt from these charges. So in this chapter the Apostle shows that men are not saved or lost in nations or religions, but as individuals. It is not enough to hear the law, we must do it. It is not enough to be the custodian of the ten commandments and the Divine will, we must obey them for ourselves. It is not enough to be circumcised, we must have the separated heart and life. The Gentile who obeys the law as it is written on the tablets of conscience, will stand a better chance hereafter than the Jew who had the law written on the tablets of Sinai, and had not obeyed it. We are all tempted to depend on the holy ritual, the godly parentage, and the comforting assurances of the Church in which we were reared; but, after all, there is only one way in which any of us can be saved: it is by a personal application to God for the riches of his goodness, forbearance, and long-suffering, which are in Jesus Christ.

SATURDAY, September 7. Romans iii.

The Jew is supposed to take umbrage at the levelling statements of the foregoing chapter. If you speak like that, he says, what is the good of being one of the chosen people? There is much good, replies the Apostle, especially because to the Jew has been committed the work of receiving and transmitting the Divine oracles. At the same time, a man's disbelief may thwart and cancel God's best intentions.

Then by a collection of terrible sentences from the Psalms, the Apostle shows that, in the Divine estimate, Jews and Gentiles have alike come short of God's glory. Every mouth must be stopped, and the whole world be brought in guilty before God.

Then the Apostle begins to dilate on Him whom God set forth, the Lord Jesus Christ. Not his words, but Himself. Not even his propitiation, considered as a doctrine, but He who made the propitiation, and now liveth for evermore at the right hand of God, to realize in all who believe the highest possibilities of their nature. The believer in Jesus Christ dares to face without hesitation the vast problem of human misery and sin. The anguish and hope of man become intelligible. Behind all is the God of infinite grace. Over all is the Christ, who once appeared to give a supreme example and make a supreme sacrifice and atonement. Before all, the one only hope for all men of his coming in the clouds with power and great glory, to achieve for the race what in this age He is realizing for all who believe.

Presbyterian Church of England.—The year book for 1901-2 brings up to date the statistics and facts of the congregations and missions at home and abroad.

With Dr. Baedeker.

WE left London on Thursday, August 8, to meet Dr. Baedeker at Zurich, a few days later. Thus we had time to take a run to Grindelwald, and spend a Sabbath with a few missionaries from Algeria, resting from the heat and their exhaustive labours.

Some of these friends, two days before, had had a somewhat perilous adventure on a glacier. Roped together, they came to a difficult crossing over a crevasse. The foremost lady said, "I can't go over," and the hinder one, "We must go back." But the guide answered, "You must go forward; you can't go back." The necessity braced their nerves, and they safely followed their guide. When he is older, as one of the party told him later, he will probably not run the risk of taking three inexperienced ladies, whose climbing powers or whose nerve he did not know, over a glacier of whose perilous possibilities they were unaware. Providentially they did not lose their heads. There is nothing to steady the nerves over a yawning crevasse, like faith in God; and to this they owed their preservation.

The National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales has arranged for religious services in various centres of resort on the Continent, for which subscriptions are asked. At Grindelwald, the preacher for some weeks had been Rev. H. C. Wallace, of Bristol. Prayer was offered on the occasion of our visit by Principal Forsyth, of Hackney College; the congregation evidently followed, as he led in fervent and comprehensive supplication. The sermon was clear, Scriptural, and impressive. It is a good rule in every discourse, not only to exhort the hearers, but also to explain how they may appropriate the blessings of the Gospel.

ABOUT DR. BAEDEKER.

At Zurich we met our friend, Dr. Baedeker, and next day spent the night at Innsbruck. Our friend is as instructive a travelling companion as the guide-book of the same name, and most interesting are the stories he tells us of his experiences during his frequent travels since his conversion.

Early in the seventies he sojourned in Zurich for more than a year. This city prides itself on its intellectuality. Romanism had driven the people into rationalism and infidelity. One of the professors had even dared to preach that Jesus is not risen, nor gone up on high. Dr. Baedeker took a hall and preached the Gospel, laying stress upon its chief feature, the Resurrection. At the close he invited the assembly to come on the following Sunday. But he could not hire the hall again for a religious meeting, nor would any other be let for the Gospel to be preached. The people came in crowds, and at length they gathered in the only available place, a low theatre. The preacher, like Paul at Corinth, continued there a year and three months, for the Lord had many people in that city. Whether it was Zurich in 1871, or Keswick in 1901, what else could draw the people in such numbers so continuously but the name of Jesus, who in 31 A.D. preached the good tidings of the Reign of God in Palestine, and the common people heard Him gladly—yea, "hung upon Him to hear Him."

Our friend keeps himself supplied with New Testaments and Gospel books, looks out for opportunities to speak to conductors and fellow-passengers, and generally leaves a memento of the conversation, in which sometimes the recipient asks him to write his name.

On one of his evangelistic tours, between Flushing and Berlin, he gave a book to a Swedish lady travelling in the same compartment. She replied that she did not believe in those things. "Such was I once," said the Doctor, "but if you have not yet believed, there is no reason why you should not now turn to the Lord." He gave her the little three-paged book, black, red, and white; but she did not consider herself a sinner, nor need the blood, nor desire the pure heart. However they exchanged cards, and she promised that if she was ever converted (which she did not expect or intend), she would write to him. Eight years afterwards, Dr. Baedeker received a letter from this lady, saying that she was going to London and would be glad to meet him there. She had turned to the Lord, is now a friend of Prince Bernadotte, and is working for Christ among the people.

Years after their first interview, Dr. Baedeker visited a lady who was confined to her bed. She said that since she had been thus afflicted she had learned that God loved her. Her visitor said that was very good, but she might also learn that God needed her. She thought she was too weak to be of any use. He suggested that she should pray for the preachers of the Gospel in all parts of the world. She did so, and got into a wealthy place. Two years after she was up and about, busy for the Lord. Her blessing had come through the lady first spoken of.

Probably our greatest present need is prayer, and every answered prayer is an encouragement to pray. There is no more edifying habit than to record and to remember every prayer and its answer. On our way we passed Lake Wallen, into which flows a river through a very fruitful plain which has a history. As the water came down from the mountain it lay in stagnant pools on the land, the grass was rank, and many of the people were diseased with goitre and imbecile in mind.

A truly noble nobleman, moved by the misery which he saw might be avoided, devised a scheme by which this useless and hurtful marsh might be reclaimed. He formed a company, dug out a channel, and by a system of drainage turned the swamp into a fertile plain, full of fruits and flowers, with numerous factories worked by the mountain streams and by the river which they feed. Now, as at Jericho after Elisha had healed the waters by the salt which he cast into their spring, there is no more death or barren land. But everything lives where the waters come, and the fish are, after their kinds, exceeding many. Preachers and teachers may find an illustration of Ezek. xlvii.

The name of Baedeker is attractive. Those who hear it sometimes think they are in the presence of the travellers' guide himself. One Sunday a gentleman called and asked to see him alone, and they retired for a private conversation; but when our friend learned that the object was a Press interview he explained the mistake. He would gladly have improved the opportunity, and spoken, as he is wont to do, of the way to the city which hath the foundations, and of the old, old Story which is ever more the best and newest news; but the disappointed visitor did not, for the time at least, give a willing ear.

The Press is called the Fourth Estate. It grows in influence, which might be of the highest value in the Kingdom of God. An invalid who heard of Dr. Baedeker's interest in the Stundists, constantly "carried him in her arms to God." The whole strength of the Church of Christ would be well employed in daily carrying the Press of Christendom in its arms to God. May I earnestly ask every reader to consider whether this should not be one habitual subject of our public, social, and private prayer. R. Cope Morgan.

Women to the Rescue. — The beneficent association known as the "Countess of Dufferin's Fund" is, year by year, extending its operations, and making steady progress in providing the women of India with efficient medical aid. The society now has 247 hospitals and dispensaries, all officered by qualified women, and its funds are markedly improving. Much of the success is due to untiring individual effort, such as that of Lady Northcote in Bombay, Lady Ampthill in Madras, and others. A summary of the work shows that, despite all the native prejudices, 1,667,329 women and children received surgical and medical help during the past year, thirty-seven lady doctors of the first class, with eighty assistant surgeons, and 290 hospital assistants and practitioners of the third grade, are employed in this noble work, and that 379 women are now studying medicine in the schools. It is to be regretted that, in face of this, subscriptions from the United Kingdom during last year fell from £656 to £325, public attention being diverted to Africa.

The Virgin's Assumption.

COMPARATIVELY few among British Protestants are intimately acquainted with the Romish tradition which has exalted the Virgin Mary to the position of a mediatrix, seated, in the body, on the throne of Heaven as its Queen. In many Protestant homes, pictures of the Virgin, ascending in the clouds of heaven, give an unworthy and tacit approval to the tradition, a tradition which robs our Lord of his glory as the one sinless Representative of the human family exalted, as Son of God and Son of Man, to the Father's right hand. We reprint from an article in the Irish Catholic of August 17, the following passages, explanatory of the Feast of the Assumption, celebrated by the Church of Rome each year on August 15. Here we have its un-Scriptural, not to say blasphemous, character officially set forth:—

There are many feasts of our Blessed Lady throughout the year, some celebrated throughout the whole Church, others only in particular countries or places; but the one kept on this day is the principal one of them all, for it is the crown and completion of all the rest. This is the day on which, her glorious life being ended, Mary was received, with a triumph only second to that of her Divine Son in his Ascension, into the courts of heaven, there to be for ever at his right hand, as He is at that of his Father; Queen of heaven, of angels, and of men, incomparably the most perfect and pleasing to God of all that is not Himself.

But it is not merely her triumphant death and entrance into eternal glory that we celebrate to-day. The Assumption is something more than that. It is for her what the Resurrection and Ascension together were for her Divine Son. For it was not merely her soul that was admitted to the everlasting joy of heaven, but her body also that was, like his, raised from the dead without ever seeing corruption. Like her Son, she really died, and, like Him, she was really raised from the dead, and ascended into heaven as He did, and is in that glorious place, wherever it may be, with Him now, with her risen body, splendid and beautiful beyond all except his that eye hath ever seen, immortal and incorruptible for ever.

Tradition tells us that her death and Assumption into heaven took place, like those of our Lord Himself, at Jerusalem, though she had previously lived for some time at Ephesus in Asia Minor under the case of St. John, to whom her Son had, when dying, committed her. She went to Jerusalem only a short time before she died, and we learn also by tradition that the Apostles were assembled there, having been brought in a miraculous manner from the various regions in which they were preaching and converting the nations. However this may be, we can hardly doubt that St. John, and also St. Peter and St. James of Jerusalem, with many of the faithful there, had the great privilege of listening to her last words and receiving her parting blessing.

She was buried, it would seem, at the garden of Gethsemane, being laid in a sepulchre cut from the rock, and it is said that during the watch of the faithful by it the angelic songs were heard continually for three days. But our Lord hid his mother's Assumption, as He hid his own resurrection, from mortal eyes. After the three days the tomb was once more opened, but the sacred body was not there.

Protestant Reformation Society.

THE news received of the Society's work in Liverpool shows that real progress is being made. The old Irish Society has undertaken the purely Irish portion of the work in that city and the surrounding districts, and will pay result fees for proficiency in the Irish language and knowledge of the Irish Bible. The Protestant Reformation Society, through its local auxiliary, will, it is hoped, be able to keep up their classes which are being instructed in "The Hundred Texts," which are committed to memory and examined on, after the example set by the Irish Church Missions Society in its classes in Dublin.

Mr. J. Flanagan has been addressing large audiences at the Protestant Hall, King's Cross, Halifax. The Sunday-schools held in this hall were started several years ago, in connection with the Protestant Reformation Society Mission at Halifax, and have been the means of keeping hundreds of children from the influence of Roman Catholic and Ritualistic teaching.

The New Bishop of Durham.

THE appointment of Professor Handley Moule, D.D., to succeed Dr. Westcott as Bishop of Durham, has been hailed with peculiar satisfaction on all hands. For many years past Dr. Moule has enjoyed high distinction in theological circles, being universally esteemed for his influence in training Evangelical clergy, and for his important and singularly valuable contributions to Scripture exposition.

Rev. Handley Carr Glyn Moule, D.D., has been Norrisian Professor of Divinity at Cambridge since 1899. He was previously Principal of Ridley Hall for nineteen years. He has justly been regarded as a leader of Evangelical thought at the University, and it is impossible not to view his appointment to Durham as fitting, in more senses than one, and, particularly, as continuing the tradition of Cambridge scholarship established in the diocese by Dr. Lightfoot, and strengthened by the late Dr. Westcott.

Dr. Moule was borne in 1841, at Fordington Vicarage, Dorchester, where his father, Rev. Henry Moule, laboured for fifty-one years for the eternal and temporal welfare of those under his charge. From the same gifted family have come Bishop George Evans Moule of Mid-China, and Rev. A. E. Moule, formerly Archdeacon of Mid-China, both C.M.S. missionaries.

After education at home, Handley Moule entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, where his studies brought great distinction. In 1862 he won the Carus Prize for accurate study of the Greek Testament, and in 1863 he obtained Sir William Browne's gold medals for Greek and Latin poems. He graduated in 1864 as second classic, and on six occasions obtained the annual Seatonian Prize, awarded for the best sacred poem by a Master of Arts.

The year 1865 was an eventful one in his life, for he added a Theological First Class to his honours, was elected a Fellow of Trinity, which dignity he maintained for sixteen years, and commenced work as an assistant master in Marlborough College. While at Marlborough, in 1866, that great change took place in him which has been the spring of his life-work ever since. He passed through a time of deep conviction of sin, though he had never been what the world calls a sinner. From this he was led, by no human agency, but by the living Lord Himself, into the joyful realization of the grace of God. This experience has coloured all his teaching, and imparted to it much of that solemn personal element which is so characteristic of it. Every reader of his sermons and every student of his condensed and careful works must have noticed the directness of his appeals, and the solemnity of those passages in which he speaks of sin.

In 1867 Mr. Moule was ordained at Ely, by Bishop Harold Browne. He then served for some few years as his father's curate. In 1873 he was summoned back to Trinity to be Dean of his old College, and at the same time undertook to be evening preacher at the Round Church; he held the former office for four years. In 1877 he returned to Fordington, to nurse his aged parents, and act as his father's curate till his death. This work was doubtless very different from that which had occupied him in Cambridge, and more so from that to which he was about to called in the old University, the growth of whose religious life is one of the wonders of the century.

In 1879 the foundation stone of Ridley Hall was laid. This, as most people know, is a theological college for the reception and training of graduates who are desirous of preparing for ordination to the ministry of the Church of England. In 1880, on his father's death, Mr. Moule was appointed Principal of the new Hall. He began residence and work in January of the next year. In that year also he married Mary Elliott, niece of the authoress of the well-known hymn, "Just as I am," and of the author of "Horæ Apocalypticæ," Rev. E. B. Elliott, of Brighton.

Combining profound erudition with a winning personality, Dr. Moule exercised a powerful influence at Ridley Hall. As a set-off against the Romanising tendencies of some other theological colleges, his labours have been very timely, and will bring forth fruit for many days. As Norrisian Professor also, Dr. Moule has been much "at home" in his work, and has, if possible, added lustre to his professorial reputation. His lectures have been spiritual in tone as well as rich in theological instruction. Dr. Moule has been select preacher at Cambridge in no fewer than seven years, and he received the compliment of an invitation to Oxford as select preacher in 1895. He is one of the recently-appointed honorary chaplains to the King, and had been an honorary chaplain to her late Majesty since 1898.

The numerous works which the new Bishop has published from time to time have mostly been concerned with Scriptural interpretation and exegesis. These include Commentaries on the Epistles to the Romans, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon, a volume of "Outlines of Christian Doctrine," also a number of devotional books. The Bishop's poems have been a source of light and comfort to many.

The Rustling of the Sheaves.

The harvest moon is rising
O'er the eastern mountain crest,
The setting sun lies burning
On the waters of the west;
From upland, plain, and valley,
Just before the reaper leaves,
Hark, the shouting, and the singing,
And the rustling of the sheaves.

O rural scenes, so peaceful,
So unchanging year by year!
Far from tumult of the city—
Surely happiness is here.
Ah! you little know what sorrows
Lurk beneath those cottage eaves;
Nor hear the serpent hissing
Through the rustling of the sheaves.

There's another harvest round us;
We are dying one by one;
The ripe and the unready—
The reaper spareth none.
Prepare us, Lord, prepare us!
Give us fruit as well as leaves!
And we'll hear the angels singing
At the rustling of the sheaves.

Mr. Varley's Conversion.

IN the September issue of the Monthly Evangel Mr. Henry Varley tells the deeply interesting story of his conversion. He writes:—

"The first great International Exhibition took place in London in the year 1851. It was in the summer of that year that I, then a youth of fifteen, was crossing Trafalgar Square at the base of Nelson's Column. On account of the death of my mother, I had come to London from my Lincolnshire home three years before, and entered on a business career. The subject of many prayers, I was influenced from earliest childhood by the example and training of my beloved mother, which left an indelible mark upon the heart and mind of her youngest boy.

"That warm summer Sabbath afternoon in July, 1851, a four-page tract exhibiting the grace of God was placed in my hands by my own cousin, a young man identified with the Y.M.C.A. in London. Our meeting with each other was apparently quite accidental—some would say mere chance. Surely not! The incident, in itself so small, showed connection between the living God, the mother in glory, and the orphan boy alone in London. Trifles belong to man with his want of thought, but God has no trifles. Numbered hairs are tabulated in his memory; falling sparrows are within his knowledge.

"That afternoon was a time of crisis. A loving and kindly invitation to my cousin's home for tea followed, and the same evening I was listening with deep interest to the gracious words which fell from the lips of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, who shortly before had seceded from the Established Church, and was preaching to crowded congregations in John Street, Bedford Row. My cousin and I were together, and from that memorable day the work of God's grace and the revelation of Christ began. I do not know at what point within three months I was born again. The work was gracious, silent, and protracted. Mine was not a suddenly-realized conversion. For this I am thankful, for had I known the exact day and hour I should have constantly spoken of it, and unwittingly perhaps have hindered some, who might have said, 'Well, I never had any sudden change or revelation of Christ in me.'

"Yes, I believe the Holy Lord hid from my knowledge the exact time when I was 'born from above.' This I do know, I passed from spiritual death into life in Christ in 1851; from having identity with an evil and sinful human nature into partnership in the divine nature and life, which has its source in Christ. I owe more than I can tell to the clear and blessed teaching of my dear friend, John Roberts, the leader of the Young Men's Bible Class which I attended. Convicted of sin by the Holy Spirit, by my own experience, and by the Word of God, I was gently led away from the power and love of a self-centred life into the liberty of Christ.

"I saw clearly that judgment upon myself as a sinner had passed for ever. Jesus died for our sins; in Him therefore I died. He was buried for me, his sepulchre showing the reality of his death. With Him I also have been buried. Fifty years ago I became an exhibition of new creation, God's workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works. This great spiritual change took place, as I have said, in 1851, and for half a century I have known and believed in and been kept by the Lord. I hold firmly God's precious doctrine, so clearly his in origin, working, and completion. That I might exhibit by testimony, example, and presence 'the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God,' which has done so much for me, I have travelled into many parts of the world, and have made many long journeyings by sea and land. Everywhere I have seen the same results follow the ministry of the Gospel, and after all these years I have an unshaken conviction that the Gospel of Christ is still, as always, 'the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.'"

A New Temperance Crusade.

Rev. J. Q. A. HENRY, D.D., New York.

IN view of the approaching Twentieth Century Million New Pledge Crusade, we have pleasure in giving some account of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and his work. Our readers will remember that he is superintendent of the State of New York Anti-Saloon League, and that he came to this country last year as a delegate to the World's Temperance Congress. He will shortly be in our midst once more, helping forward the Crusade. The story he has to tell is one of hard work in the battle against drink, crowned with a most encouraging measure of success, and reaching out to the future with rich promise.

Nearly eight years have elapsed since the movement first took definite shape, through the organization at Oberlin of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League, as the outcome of the work of Dr. Russell. Within a few weeks a proposal for amalgamation was received from the Christian Temperance Alliance, and the work in that State went on steadily as a force for the unification and mutual strengthening of all effort for the abolition of the drink traffic. The crusade spread over the country, and when, in 1895, a call was issued for a national convention, it was found that organizations of the same nature existed in the States of Connecticut, Maryland, and Massachusetts, as well as in the District of Columbia. The convention was held at Washington. Amid much enthusiasm the American Anti-Saloon League was formed, and the work was then placed upon such a satisfactory basis that the scope of the movement has now spread till it embraces thirty States and territories, where Leagues are formed and at work auxiliary to the national organization.

The League is a federation of the churches, temperance societies, and other moral forces of the locality, county, and State, so to agitate and educate the public conscience as to secure the enactment and enforcement of laws against the drinking saloon. It is, like the Christian Endeavour Society, essentially a movement of the churches. Christian congregations of each locality become the nucleus around which other organizations are gathered for the development of that public sentiment which is essential to success.

As its name shows, the League aims at nothing short of the entire suppression of the traffic in drink. In many localities where the saloon has been abolished by law there is still, however, much for it to do in the exposure and suppression of illegal channels for the supply of liquor. It is found necessary in some cases to begin by agitating for the repeal of various laws which, in different ways, favour the existence of saloons or strengthen their position. When this has been attained, the issue is a simpler one, and all forces are united to secure the passing of such laws as will prohibit the sale of strong drink. It is fully realized that the adoption of these, and the putting of them into force when they have been enacted, must always be conditional on the state of public sentiment on the temperance question; and so close attention is given to the quickening and education of the public conscience on the subject.

Taking for the sake of illustration the State of Ohio, we find on looking into the figures that while during the five years ending July 1, 1893, 2,340 additional saloons had been opened, in the following five years there was an actual decrease to the number of over 1,500. Good results are also reported from other states where work has been recently begun, as well as from those in the South and New England where the same general methods have been in operation for longer periods.

The campaign has been going on in the State of New York since 1898, and in the person of Dr. Henry the League has a superintendent of great power and with peculiar qualifications for the work to be done. He laboured for some years in Chicago, and the testimony of ministers and others there was that he was peculiarly adapted for Gospel temperance and other aggressive work, having taken a special share in the struggle for the purification of civic life.

During his pastorate at three places on the Pacific coast, Dr. Henry also won golden opinions on every hand. He was a pastor loved by his people, and with high ideals in every department of Christian life and work.

DR. J. Q. A. HENRY.

But his activities could not be confined within the limits of any church or congregation. In San Francisco and other cities his audiences came to be limited only by the capacities of the largest buildings. Every movement for the public well-being was supported to the utmost limits of his ability.

At the outset of the campaign in New York State, the leaders asked, "Give us two years in which to agitate and organize, and then for the fight!" Before the two years were ended 2,500 rallies had been held in churches of twenty denominations, 500,000 people had been addressed, tens of thousands had formally identified themselves with the movement, the fighting forces of 300 committees had been organized, and many other places were marshalling their men for the campaign. Spread over the States of the Union there was, last year, a staff of 175 salaried officials, whose whole attention was devoted to this object.

The League stands for the maintenance of law. All that it does in the line of enforcing the law is calculated to support the officers, and compel obedience on the part of the law-breakers. It has its own attorneys and special service men, and is fully equipped for law-enforcement work. It has had 300 cases in the courts at a time, and has secured a number of criminal convictions. A much-needed change was secured in the Buffalo city charter, by which fifty-three dens of vice were closed on the day on which the Pan-American Exhibition was opened. The entire state has been divided into districts, and put under superintendents, no fewer than 300 local branches being affiliated with the central League.

With Dr. Henry at its head, its business of the League moves with steadily-increasing power. Regarding this, like all other reforms, as a long-continued siege rather than a short and decisive battle, it proposes patiently, calmly, resolutely to hold on and fight on, till by approximate steps—little by little if need be—it places the criminal drink traffic in the category of other crimes, to be kept there by the power of a permanently established public sentiment and conscience.

Dr. Henry speaks and writes under an almost overwhelming sense of the gravity of the case. Yet his outlook on the future is sanguine, as will be seen from the following extracts from his booklet, "Temperance Reform in the Twentieth Century":—

> The drink traffic has been the clinging curse of the nineteenth century. It faces us as our most formidable foe as we enter the twentieth cycle of Christian history. It is all but disheartening to think that, with all our boasted progress, we have been unable to deal even an effective, much less a deadly, blow to this huge iniquity. Evidences are not wanting, however, that public opinion is crystallizing for the everlasting destruction of this first and worst foe of the human family. Unless all signs fail it will soon be outlawed by every nation, as it is now loathed by every self-respecting citizen.
> In no respect have the efforts on the part of moral and Christian people during the last century been a more dismal failure than in this direction. Instead of unity, there has been a division of sentiment and service. The temperance worker has been an Ishmaelite, with his hand against every other man. The time has come when divisions must be healed, and the ranks must be filled by the friends of sobriety, irrespective of creed or party, if we are to win a triumphant victory over the grog-shop. To accomplish this, we must emphasize the things about which we agree, and avoid the subjects as to which we differ. The dawning century must witness more service and diviner sacrifice if our crusade is to succeed. We must create a new and growing constituency in every church and community. We must find an enduring home for this crusade. It has but one legitimate place of abode, viz., the House of God. Its supporters must be found among the people of God; its appeal must be to the highest motives known to the human heart. Our motto, like that of the Christian Endeavour, must be, "For Christ and the Church," to which might be added, "and humanity."
> The twentieth century will witness the breaking of the neck of the saloon by breaking its political power. Upon this it feeds, and fattens, blusters, bulldozes, and blights. But for this it would starve to death within a single decade. There are temperance people enough in every party who are honest, sincere, and Christian to break the rule of rum in their party life, if once they will take charge of the caucus and the ballot-box.
> The twentieth century will witness the adoption of local option as the divine and American principle in the solution of this great problem. This is God's method. The early days of the century will witness a revival of the doctrine of total abstinence. The days of pledge signing are largely passed away; but if our children are to be protected, and if our Christians are to stand where they ought, then we must pledge ourselves to neither touch, taste, nor handle the accursed thing. It will also witness a generous and determined effort on the part of temperance people to provide a substitute for the saloon. Only those who are familiar with the dram-shop, inside and outside, can appreciate its social significance, particularly in the centres of our civilization and the slum life of our cities. Something practical must be done to meet this social necessity which is so poorly met by the gin-mill. We must separate recreation from rum.

The twentieth century will witness the destruction of the drink traffic and the cure of the drink habit. The saloon will be prohibited and the business will be annihilated. It will certainly die during the next cycle of human progress. Never was public sentiment growing in any direction more rapidly than towards this end to-day. Truer knowledge of the awful evil of the liquor traffic exists to-day than at any previous time, while multitudes and millions of our people are controlled by an invincible and imperishable determination to drive this unmitigated curse back into its native hell. This they are bound to accomplish in order that our free institutions may be perpetuated, that our flag may no longer be dishonoured by floating from these palaces of death, that the redemption of the city may be secured, that the victims of this remorseless power may be delivered, and that Jesus Christ may be crowned King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Reds and Blues at Gibraltar.

AT this important garrison and seaport, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute has proved to be a haven from the many demoralising allurements which are to be found on every hand. The present institute in Southport Street was built in 1887, but the work was carried on previously in another building since 1876. It is unfortunate that while many advantages and comforts are offered to sailors and soldiers disembarking, there should be so serious a lack of sleeping accommodation. When all the ships of the Channel Fleet are in port, with about 10,000 men serving in them, the number given leave to sleep on shore varies from 500 to 2,000 a night. These need not only places of safe shelter, companionship, and recreation, but to be rescued from sin, and instructed in the Christian life. Every effort is made to provide the men with a comfortable night's lodging at the Institute, but many have to be turned away through want of room.

REMOVAL AND EXTENSION.

The committee have long felt that the spiritual work would be greatly furthered by the appointment of a lady superintendent, but the Institute was too small to provide the necessary accommodation, and after careful consideration it was found impossible for it to be enlarged to meet all requirements. A good freehold site of sufficient size, near the present building, was purchased for £4,100, retaining the right to continue in occupation of the present building for two years, during which it is earnestly hoped sufficient funds will have come in to meet the expenses of erecting a new institute. A sum of £3,000 is needed before the building can be commenced. The new institute will comprise accommodation for 100 bluejackets, private rooms for superintendent and manager, refreshment bar, reading and recreation rooms, meeting and tea rooms, as well as married quarters for three families.

The annual report records encouraging progress in every department of the work. The chief aim of the committee and superintendent is to help the men spiritually, and the Sunday meetings and weeknight gatherings have been fruitful in their results. The visitation of the troopships has been carried on as opportunity offered, and many have thanked God for the words of encouragement and help they have received, and the gifts of Christian literature. Communications may be addressed to the superintendent, Mr. C. Coupland, A.S.R., Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute, Southport Street, Gibraltar; or the hon. secretary and treasurer, Colonel H. S. Clarke, Essendene, Wimbledon.

The Marias of Bastar.—Writing from Yellandu, India, Rev. C. B. Ward says: "We are still waiting for the missionaries to this people. I am surprised at the number who are turning to the Lord. Every Sunday people come in eight and ten miles from their villages to be present at Sunday school and meetings. The old solid front of heathenism is giving way. In India to-day not less than 100,000 persons are knocking at the doors of Christian missions for admission to the Christian fold."

Crispi and Christianity.

FRANCESCO CRISPI, the great statesman, the last of the makers of Italy, who passed away on the evening of Sunday, the 11th inst., is denounced by the Papal Church as the enemy of Christianity. Nothing is further from the truth. He was the enemy of the Church of Rome, which is a very different thing, but he was not the enemy of Christianity. Indeed he was politically and personally its friend. Christianity in Italy owes not a little to Crispi. Very early in life he realized, not only that Christianity and the Church are two different things, but he realized that they are two diverse things, two conflictive things, that the one is the enemy of the other, that the forces of the Church are ranged against the forces of Christianity, and that a struggle is going on between them. And he further knew which would ultimately conquer, namely, Christianity, and he placed himself on the conquering side, hence he was at once the enemy of the Papal Church, and the friend of Christianity. All this he embodied in the memorable words he uttered in the House of Deputies, when in the zenith of his power: "The day is coming when Christianity will kill Roman Catholicism." On his deathbed he gave expression to the same sentiments. One day lately some papers arrived, which he asked his wife to read aloud to him. As she began, she remarked, "More papers against religion." "No," answered Crispi, "not against religion, but against the Church." "Religion is Christ," he further added, pointing to the large crucifix that was always in his room. His hope was in Christ. For that reason he repelled during all his long sickness the offices of a priest. It may be said that his life was not in accordance with his creed. It may not have been, but there is no doubt that his life was all the better and the nobler, because he was the enemy of the Church. Had he been a Papist, the Church that practically offers to all salvation in sin, would probably have made him what he was not, a really bad man, and at the same time, instead of denouncing him as such, would have proclaimed him as a saint.

Vikarabad-Tandur Mission.

IN H.H. the Nizam's Dominions, India, and due west of the capital, Hyderabad, is a large district of country about fifty miles broad, and 100 miles long, which is occupied by the Vikarabad-Tandur Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It has two or three out-stations, with over 200 Christians in about twenty different villages. The principal languages are Telugu and Hindustani, by which we reach all classes. During the recent hot season, it was my privilege to make two or three short tours into new sections of country where the Gospel had not been heard, and as a result we are opening two new out-stations in villages of 2,000 and 8,000 inhabitants respectively. The common people, both Hindus and Mahommedans, heard us gladly, and in several instances the officials also. To see this section of country thoroughly evangelized, the labourers are few, comprising only the missionary and his family, with thirteen helpers. There are at present, however, seven workers ready to engage in service, when we are able to erect dwellings for them and support them.

Work Among Invalided Soldiers.—In common with many other workers who have been labouring in the Gospel among wounded and invalided soldiers sent home from South Africa, as well as from other parts of the world, Miss Sandeman (Springbank, Netley Abbey) tells with gratitude of rich blessing vouchsafed on the efforts put forth by her and her colleagues. While the arrangements made by the Government provide for the needs of the body, it is being proved in many ways that those who bear witness for the Lord are all too few to overtake the field. Help is needed in personal effort, in gift, and in prayer

The Indian Famine.

IN many districts of India there is still much distress; while in other provinces rains have fallen, and there is every prospect of a good harvest.

Rev. G. W. SAWDAY, of the Wesleyan Mission, Bangalore, is doing excellent work for the famine orphans, having taken a house and started a home for girls. Under date June 25, Mr. Sawday wrote:—"We are still waiting for rain. The high winds blow the clouds over. We hope for the best, but the poor ryots will lose their seed unless the rain comes soon. The plague gets worse rather than better. There were five attacks here yesterday and six deaths. The total mortality is about three times greater than the average. It will be terrible if the scenes of last year recur, but we trust we shall be saved from this. There are now eighteen children in the girls' home."

Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE does good service in continuing to draw attention to the needs of the distressed districts. In the course of a recent letter, he says:—"We were distressed to receive a letter from one of the most sympathetic missionaries of a sister mission, offering to part with fifty of his orphan boys, as he had no means to support them. He has sold his bicycle, and parted with his personal goods." Mr. Osborne adds a quotation from a letter written by Rev. W. Kiefel, of Gossner's Mission, Govindpur:—"We have now plenty of rain, but all the sown rice is destroyed, and must be re-sown, and many have no seed. The gundli, too, is destroyed; as much as germinated has been eaten by locusts and grasshoppers, which are in great multitudes all over the country. I shall be grateful if you will help me with some cloth, especially for the women. I am always so sorry to see them in their rags, and shall be happy if you can place me in a position to help the poorest of them."

HARVEST PROSPECTS.

More cheering tidings come from Rev. THOS. EVANS, Mussoorie, who, writing on August 1, says:—"Our rains have been rather late in coming, but they have come just in time to save the crops, and now, as they have spread far and wide, there is the prospect of a good harvest this coming winter. In Bengal, N.W.P., and Bombay, and parts of Madras and the Punjab, we have had abundant showers—Guyrab and parts of central India the showers have been lighter—but, thank God, we are now beyond the range of a famine this year.

"It is astonishing how rapidly grass and grain spring up once the refreshing showers fall—so that vegetation of all sorts is now abundant. In the wild country of the rustic Bhils no doubt there will still be the need of help from home, as the land is rocky, and the poor people have now neither cattle to plough, nor instruments to cultivate the ground. Still supplies can be sent to them on beasts of burden through the devoted missionaries who labour there.

"Our hearts are glad and thankful as we look on the grand clouds laden with precious rain. The plague is less, but it still holds on obstinately in the wicked city of Bombay—with which no doubt God has a controversy."

Romish Persecution.—One of the Genevan papers recently told a significant story of the way the Roman Catholic Church still treats those who throw over her teachings and authority, when she is able to have her will. A Carmelite monk, M. Robert Teutsch, known as Boniface, fifty-four years of age, and greatly esteemed for his character and zeal, was led by a study of the Scriptures to the conclusion that the Roman Church was not the true Church of Christ. Having quitted his monastery to put himself under the instruction of a Protestant pastor, he was prevailed upon to return on some pretext to the monastery, when he was immediately put into a cell till he should retract his heresies. On his refusal he was transferred to a Franciscan monastery, where he was subjected to terrible treatment, recalling the punishments inflicted in the Middle Ages by the Inquisition. Fortunately, powerful friends intervened, and M. Teutsch was enabled to escape, and now enjoys the freedom of person and conscience in Germany.

Simla Conference.

As mentioned in last issue, the third annual Conference at Simla for the deepening of spiritual life was attended with rich blessing, so much so that the meetings were continued beyond the three days originally arranged.

On Monday, July 22, the meeting was conducted by the Bishop of Lahore, who based his address on Col. i. 12. The Bishop spoke of the duty and blessedness of possessing a thankful spirit. No Christian life is complete unless it is full of praise, and the praise most acceptable to God is that which is sounded forth in a life devoted to his service.

On Tuesday, the 23rd, Rev. G. McKelvie, M.A., was the first speaker. His text was Acts viii. 35, his theme the importance of giving Christ the first place in our thoughts. We must constantly see and hear Jesus if He is to be seen and heard in our lives. Rev. G. T. Manley, M.A. (C.M.S.), whose lectures to educated natives in Simla have attracted large audiences, spoke on "The Unity of the Spirit." Having explained the oneness of all believers in Christ Jesus, Mr. Manley showed that God's purpose is that our lives should be Spirit-filled, and that the qualification for such a life is an earnest desire on our part to be thus filled.

On Wednesday, the 24th, the Revs. P. Ireland Jones, M.A., and J. H. Bateson were the speakers. Mr. Jones took Rom. xii. 1 as his text. He showed that, in the thought of Paul, sound doctrine is not all that is required in the Christian. Creed needs to be translated into conduct, the laws of Christ to be manifested in common life. The constraining motive for such true Christianity is the mercy of God. Mr. Bateson's subject was "More than conquerors, through Him that loved us." He described the Christian life as an overcoming life. Its constant characteristic may be "victory." Victory is possible always, and in every detail of everyday life, through Christ. Apart from Him there can only be failure. With Him and in Him victory is assured.

"God's Day for Brazil."

Letters from Mr. and Mrs. Reginald J. Young (Rua da Liberdade, 62, Sao Paulo, S.P.), are full of thanksgiving for blessing on Gospel work. During a visit to Rio Janeiro, Mr. Glass had met with unusual success in the sale of Bibles. In one street, forty-six Bibles and six New Testaments were bought, being a book for every three houses. Mr. Young repeats his former words to us, that "This is God's day for Brazil." The proofs of this he finds in (1) The anti-clerical movements all over the land, and the general discontent of the people with the Romish Church; (2) the marvellous distribution of the Word of God, not only in out-of-the-way places, but in the leading business streets of the principal city; (3) the willingness of the people to read tracts and religious literature generally —"rarely do they refuse to accept and read what we offer them"; and (4) willingness to listen to the preaching of the Gospel.

"We need a good printing-press! We need it badly! God has given us a fine young man, a Brazilian, a good preacher, and a zealous, fearless worker, who can take complete charge of a press, and do first-class work without any expense. Why should we be denied that which is an urgent need, and which can be used of God to awaken, enlighten, and attract many who cannot be reached by other means?"

Demill Ladies' College, St. Catherines, Ont., continues to fill a useful place in supplying a sound Protestant school for girls where there is grave danger of the children being sent to Roman Catholic convents for education. The danger is both real and great in Canada, and ministers and parents who are in the midst of it testify with gratitude to the relief experienced in their difficulty. Our readers have helped this work in the past, and the president (Rev. A. B. Demill) says: "Thousands can be saved if the true friends of Protestantism will help."

With the Troops in South Africa.

Interesting letters continue to be received showing how, in the midst of the war, there is a gracious spiritual work going on among the soldiers. In a recent letter Mrs. Osborn-Howe tells of a letter received from the mother of a soldier, full of gratitude for the change in her son, whose letters give decided evidence of conversion. He was a wild lad when he left home, but the Lord in mercy met him in one of the Homes, and turned his heart to heavenly things. In a very special degree the workers have been protected and delivered out of many dangers in the course of their work.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe hope to sail from East London for England on September 4. Arrangements have been made for the carrying on of the Homes till the war is really over. They ask our readers, as helpers together in prayer and gift, "to return thanks to God for his abundant mercy, for the blessing that has rested on the preached word, for journeying mercies—in addition to the ordinary dangers of railway travel we have been exposed to that of 'train wreckers' and to those of insanitary camps. Though some of our staff have been in hospital with enteric, we have lost only one worker by death." Finally thanks are given for the goodness of God in so abundantly supplying the means for the work. Letters may be addressed to care of Mr. Geo. Henry, London Road, St. Leonards.

A SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY VAN.

Another branch of Christian service, among both military men and civilians, is represented by Mrs. Todd-Osborne, who writes from Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B.:

Many of the readers of The Christian will be glad to hear that our dear friend, Mr. Adam Tervit, has been granted the use of a railway van, to run along the lines of communication in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony; this, he says, gives the possibility of reaching something like 100,000 men or more, occupying block-houses, forts, stations, garrison, &c. On June 14 he started his most interesting journey, carrying with him writing material, Testaments, tracts, also provisions and comforts of every description, and everywhere received a glad welcome, holding meetings with the hearty consent of the officers in charge.

"At Nauuwspruit station," he says, "quite a number of men were waiting for the Soldiers' Home van. For a moment we could not understand how they had come to hear of us, but soon the mystery was solved, when we heard that the escort of a train running in front, who had purchased things from us at Nylstroom, were telling the men all along the line, "The Soldiers' Home van is coming next train." After a busy half-hour or so acting as salesmen, we find ourselves for the next two hours being carried through some of the most beautiful scenery, arriving about sunset at Piet Potgeiters-rust, where we find another crowd waiting for us. We have our van detached and shunted into a siding, where we are able to attend to the men who are now appreciating the value of a travelling Soldiers' Home van. At almost every place we had the privilege of preaching the Gospel to the soldiers."

In addition to Mr. Tervit, we have Mr. J. A. Garrioch at Newcastle, Mr. C. J. Anderson at Pretoria, and Mr. W. A. Boyd at Bloemfontein. The need is very great; 14,000 sick men means so much!

A Highland soldier, who said he was not converted, told me that he was an hospital orderly for a time, and used to kneel by the patients' cots when they were dying, and, holding their hands, I "put up a prayer" for them sometimes, for I know that many of them had wife and weans like myself. A great cry comes for other labourers, and we have some ready to go. Shall we send them? If so, will you help us?

Diaries, giving a full account of this trip in the Soldiers' Home van, may be had for one penny each, from Mr. W. C. Charteris, 45, Hope Street, Glasgow.

Medical Mission in Persia.

We find ourselves confronted with a pressing need in connection with our medical work here, in which we hope that some of the very kind friends of Persia in Great Britain may feel disposed to help. Doubtless some of the readers of this will remember Dr. Isaac Daniels, a native of this place, and a former student in our schools, who studied several years in Glasgow and Edinburgh, and received a medical diploma from these cities. On his return to Persia last year he resumed work in connection with the hospital of our mission, and has rendered very efficient aid. The Mission assumed a part of his support, but felt unable to assume the whole, hoping that friends would co-operate. Our hopes have not been realised, and we now make this more public appeal.

It is, of course, for the sake of the cause of Christ that we make the request. The hospital and other medical agencies here do a very large work, in spite of lack of funds. In 1900, notwithstanding reduced force, the total number of patients treated was 10,294, of whom 359 were for a longer or shorter time in-patients of the hospital. What makes the work more valuable is the large area from which patients come to the hospital, and the many, otherwise inaccessible, who are thus brought within the influence of the Gospel. No valley of Kurdistan is too remote to send its delegation of misery. Just the other day, a party of Kurds came in from a region north of Mosul, seldom, if ever, visited by a missionary; and this is only an example of what is constantly occurring. No bigotry, it may almost be said, is able to withstand the urgency of suffering, and keep the sufferer from pilgrimage to the hospital. At all events, within its walls may be found representatives of every race and creed of the babel surrounding us here, including the religious teachers of both the great branches of Islam.

Rio Janeiro Y.M.C.A.

This Association, organized in 1893, by a representative of the International Committee of New York, has proved a means of much blessing to the young men who compose so large a percentage of the population of this city of 600,000 inhabitants. Many of these have gone out from Britain, and are surrounded by the grossest temptations, calling loudly for every effort that can be put forth on their behalf.

In 1897, through the activity of two Christian merchants, a suitable unfinished building, admirably located in the very heart of the city, was secured for the Association. This has been completed, and the property is held by a board of seven trustees, four of whom are appointed by the International Committee of New York, thus guaranteeing a safe administration. A mortgage of £4,150, falling due in September, 1901, has been reduced, largely by contributions in Rio Janeiro, to about £2,350. To meet this, the New York Association has made an offer of £1,000, on condition that the balance is secured; £350 has been pledged in the city itself; and an appeal is made to our friends in Great Britain for the remaining £1,000.

The appeal of the Association is fully endorsed by the leaders in Y.M.C.A. work in London; and further information on the subject may be obtained from the Treasurer of National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, Exeter Hall; or Rev. H. C. Tucker, Tudor Hotel, Oxford Street.

The membership now numbers 374, and is gradually increasing; 141 members were admitted from June, 1900, to June, 1901, of whom ninety-nine were not members of any Evangelical Church at the time of admission; quite a number every year make profession of faith and unite with the Churches in the city. Special efforts are made to attract outsiders to the Gospel meetings, and there are frequently remarkable conversions. Recently a young Catholic priest was passing along the street; an invitation was handed him; he went in to see and hear, was convicted, converted, and is now an earnest preacher in one of the Evangelical Churches.

Prayer Unions.

THEIR MULTIPLICATION AND MEANING.

IN July last a letter, addressed by Rev. William Crosbie, M.A., LL.B., of Nottingham, to a well-known and devoted Christian minister in America, and through him to the members of a large inter-denominational American prayer-union, was published in these columns, and awakened considerable interest among our readers. A reply, received by Mr. Crosbie from his American correspondent, shows that the prayer spirit is spreading widely among the Lord's people. "Union" is in the air; union in prayer for a new and mightier manifestation of the Holy Ghost is one of the most significant and hopeful signs of our day, and is surely the precursor and the condition of gracious revival times.

The following brief extracts from the American correspondent will be read with deep interest by "covenanted intercessors," and, it is hoped, will help to add to their number:—

Your communication, July 8, was received ten days ago, and I heartily thank you for it in the Lord's name. The matter for publication will be a great help to many, and to the prayer-movement as a whole. It was surely dictated by the Spirit of All-prayer. I am greatly indebted to you for making known to me so much of the work abroad.

I had a letter the other day from the secretary of Dr. Paton in your city, in answer to one I had written concerning his connection with the weekly concert of prayer among Evangelical Free Church ministers. I did not know until the receipt of his message that you were directly identified with him in the movement. I thank God for it, and am glad to know more particularly of the steps that are being taken. I hope to be able, in some measure, to aid the great movement in this land, and possibly in wider spheres.

I am waiting daily on the Lord for more anointing and insight, and seeking help and means to carry forward to fulfilment the call and charge laid upon me. As one with the multitudes who are hearing and responding to the Holy Spirit I feel like saying anew every morning and every night, Here am I; send me! . . .

Since receiving your address delivered at the Dublin Christian Convention, doors of communication have been opened to me, through it, in Scotland, England, Ireland, and other places; and tidings of the prayer-work have come to me very much as they have come to you.

The seed sown is resulting in harvests, according to the promise. Let us pray on in faith, working and fainting not.

Yesterday was the all-day of waiting upon God in connection with the Pentecostal Prayer Union here. To-day there are the meetings of the World-wide Circle of Prayer.* Every day comes the Daily Prayer Union, with its fellowship of 100,000 members, and with its one petition—O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years.†

Welsh Notes.

AT a special meeting of the directors of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Foreign Missionary Society, held at Shrewsbury on Monday, August 19, Rev. R. J. Williams, of Blaenau Festiniog, was appointed to the secretaryship of the Society. The office is a very important one, and considerable difficulty has been experienced in filling it.

One of the largest (possibly the largest) musical festival ever held in the Principality, took place on Monday, August 19, at Merthyr Tydfil. Some 7,000 singers are estimated to have been present. These were drawn from the Baptist churches of West Glamorgan. The programme consisted chiefly of Congregational hymn tunes.

The Welsh Forward Movement, despite its name, has hitherto confined its operations to the English-speaking population. A departure has now been made by the opening of a new centre in Dowlais for the benefit of those who speak the tongue of the Cymru. The new effort is in the midst of a large population, and it is hoped that many will be reached by its agency.

The annual meetings of the English Grand Lodge of Wales of the Independent Order of Good Templars are to be held at Cardiff, on September 7 and the following days. Hundreds of delegates will be present from the English lodges of the Good Templar Order in the Principality. Representatives from England, Scotland, and Ireland are also expected.

Bermondsey Medical Mission.

THE Oxford Medical Mission in Bermondsey, S.E., is especially for men and lads. The premises are only open in the evenings and Sundays, because all the workers are voluntary, and can only give their spare time.

On Monday and Thursday evenings, from thirty to forty men and lads come to see the doctor about all sorts of ailments and wounds. As a few collect, either the doctor or dispenser or occasional helper says a few words to them about the Great Physician; and, whenever possible, there are individual talks. On other evenings the doctor visits sick cases in the homes.

The Mission was started four years ago by a few Oxford men. Patients came freely enough, but it was felt that more continuous teaching was necessary. Three years ago a class was started for young men and lads who went to no place of worship, and patients were invited to attend this.

There are sad records of disturbances in the early days, but now over 100 belong to the Sunday afternoon class, with an average attendance of from sixty to seventy. One man, who came first with a diseased finger, is now an earnest Christian and most faithful helper. A lad who seemed utterly hopeless, and was turned out repeatedly, is now a very lively and energetic Christian, and is known as "religious Billy" at the works. Another old patient, who writes every week, is now bearing faithful testimony to Christ in Leith Barracks.

Constant effort is made to win the young men and lads for Christ. Clubs and classes are held during the week, and every Sunday is given to the work. A camp was held the first week in August. Over eighty lads and young men came. It was a great success.

Another resident will be welcomed if he will do some work in the lads' clubs and classes; the cost of living is kept as low as possible. Although no workers are paid, yet rent, rates, medicines, cleaning, &c., are serious items. Any help will be welcomed by the hon. secretary, 134, Abbey Street, Bermondsey, or the hon. treasurer, M. H. Foquet Sutton, Esq., Broad Oak, Reading.

Irish Notes.

AN Interdenominational Convention for the promotion of holiness was held each day last week in the Methodist Church, Donegal Square, Belfast. Delegates were present from England and Scotland, and there was a large attendance at each meeting.

A scandalous case of child kidnapping for sectarian advantages has been brought to light in Dublin. A Protestant named Daniel Forbes died in Dublin last December, and three years before his death, his wife being dead at the time, he entrusted his little daughter, then two years old, to the care of a Protestant woman, a Mrs. Tracy, with definite instructions to bring up the child as a Protestant. However, on December 15 last, after ten o'clock at night, a man and woman called at Mrs. Tracy's house and represented that the father of the child was dying in hospital, and wanted to see the child. Accordingly Mrs. Tracy took the child out of bed, and proceeded with it to the hospital; but as she was on the way the man referred to ran off with the child, while two or three women prevented Mrs. Tracy from following him. She made her way, however, to the hospital, and found that Mr. Forbes had died at two o'clock that day. The child was ultimately traced to a convent at Sandymount, and when the child's uncle, a Protestant, in Glasgow, moved the Court of Chancery to appoint guardians for the child, affidavits were put in that the child was baptized as a Roman Catholic, and that the father died a Roman Catholic. Of these statements there were no corroborating proofs; still the Court decided that the convent was a proper place in which the child was to be brought up, and the child's maternal grandfather, a Roman Catholic, and her paternal uncle, a Protestant, were appointed guardians. The fact remains that those who planned and executed this nefarious kidnapping scheme got off scot-free, without even a word of rebuke, and thus encouragement is given to others to commit similar crimes. Unfortunately, this is not the only case of the kind which has occurred in this country of late.

University Intelligence.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

IN prospect of the Duke of Marlborough's appointment to the Lord-Lieutenancy of Ireland, which is now considered likely to take place next year, it will be interesting to readers to know the keen interest which he and the Duchess take in all that concerns the real welfare of the neighbourhood. To say that they are both popular is to say very little. By their real self-sacrifice they are becoming beloved by a large section of the people. On Tuesday last they attended four different gatherings in the city, and their ceaseless activity and liberal interest in the life of those about them proves their fitness for the high and onerous position.

Preaching to the University Extension students in the University Church on Sunday, Rev. C. V. Garton dealt with "Some Religious Aspects of History," illustrating them by references to two famous historians, the Venerable Bede and Dr. Stubbs. Speaking of the latter, he said: "His industry was stupendous. It is good for us to be humiliated; it is good for the fussy ones among us to realize how we waste our time. Nothing is more likely to administer wholesome medicine to our souls than is the reading of some of the footnotes in the Constitutional History.'" This is putting the late Bishop's great work to a new use; but there is nothing that deteriorates character more than the frittering away of time or the filling of it up by desultory work. It is as a man's industry grows that the man grows, and work was one of God's highest blessings to man.

CAMBRIDGE.

THIS is indeed a time of great change in Cambridge. Only recently Dr. Forsyth and Rev. A. Halliday Douglas have left, and now Professor Handley Moule and Rev. C. J. Procter are about to go. Cambridge received the news of the preferment of Professor Moule to the See of Durham with mixed feelings. All rejoice at the honour thus conferred upon him, but there exists a feeling of sincere sorrow at his approaching departure.

Cambridge has known Dr. Moule so long as Dean of Trinity College, as Lecturer in Divinity, then as Principal of Ridley Hall and evening preacher at Holy Trinity Church, and lastly as Divinity Professor, that he seems to belong peculiarly to the town, and his removal will cause a gap very hard to be filled. Those will miss him most who have been privileged Sunday by Sunday, in term time, to sit under him in Charles Simeon's church, where he always preached. Many a heart has thanked God for the messages so faithfully delivered by his servant in those sermons. But it is not only by the townspeople that Dr. Moule's removal will be felt. There is probably no man living with such an influence in the University, and whenever he was announced as the speaker, at Bible readings or at the C.I.C.C.U. meetings, or elsewhere, he was sure of a large audience.

Not a few see in Dr. Moule's removal the departure of a dear and revered friend, and there will assuredly go up from Cambridge to Almighty God much praise and thanksgiving for Dr. Moule's ministry here, and prayer for an abundant blessing on his future work in his new and responsible sphere.

Cambridge has at the same time to sustain another severe loss in Rev. C. J. Procter, who has been appointed to succeed Prebendary Barlow as vicar of Islington. Mr. Procter, as vicar of Holy Trinity, has endeared himself to many, and his departure will be sincerely felt by hundreds. Holy Trinity Church not only has a central position in the town and a large congregation of townspeople, it is also very popular with the University; so the position Mr. Procter has held has been one of great responsibility, and there are few men who could have borne it as, with God's help, Mr. Procter has done.

Not only in Cambridge, but far and wide there is a need for prayer that the right men may be appointed to these vacancies. They are positions of great influence on the undergraduates, who, after a brief three years or so, are scattered over the world.

Clifton Conference.—The subject proposed for the thirty-ninth annual Conference at Clifton, to be held in the Victoria Rooms on October 1, 2, and 3, is Bible Types concerning (1) Christ; (2) The Church; (3) Our Heavenly Home. In announcing the assembly, Rev. James Ormiston trusts that "this threefold division of the sacred theme will provide a rich spiritual repast for the three appointed days of our Convention. It is the office of Jehovah the Spirit to take of the things of Christ and to reveal them to our hearts and minds. Let us then, beloved friends, unite in earnest prayer that our ascended Lord and Saviour may be greatly exalted by the Holy Ghost, and that the great Revealer may be pleased to unfold the hidden glories of the Incarnate Word to the joy and rejoicing of our souls."

Prayer-Book Revision.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

I HAVE recently been staying at Hove, in Sussex. In one of the Anglican churches identified with High Church ritual and teaching, it was distinctly announced that "unless the people come to the priest for confession, they cannot be saved." The people, as a whole, in the neighbourhood are poor and respectable. Very few of them are thinkers, and their knowledge of the Word of God is limited. The clergymen referred to are exceedingly busy, and their zeal for the Anglican Church is not only strongly marked, but they are seconded by sisterhoods and guilds, the object and intent of whose working is to show the sin of dissent and so-called "schism."

Now, no instructed Evangelicals, who recognise the supremacy and authority of the Word of God, can sympathize with such actions or statements; but just here is the difficulty and gravity of the position. The men who are doing their utmost to build up and further these priestly pretensions, appeal to the Prayer-Book to sustain their position and action. The following quotation is taken from the service for the Ordination of Priests, found in the Book of Common Prayer. Not as unfriendly to the Church of England, but as pointing out the seed plot which has produced these false pretensions, do I state the following. The Bishop lays his hands upon the head of these men, and says:—

"Receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a priest in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands. Whose sins thou dost forgive they are forgiven; and whose sins thou dost retain they retained. And be thou a faithful dispenser of the Word of God and of his holy Sacraments. In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

Can it be matter for surprise that this statement, made at the so-called ordaining of priests, has produced such assertions as that, unless "the people come to the priest for confession, they cannot be saved"? Surely it is time that this imitation of Rome's pretensions, in order to maintain a sacerdotal priesthood, should be eschewed by the Church of England. This whole statement is entirely contrary to the Word of God. The Bishop does not possess the ability to communicate the Holy Ghost for the functions of a priest. Such priesthood is foreign to the teaching of the New Testament. If priesthood in any sacrificing or sacerdotal sense exists, then Christ has not died, much less has He risen from the dead.

The foundation upon which the New Testament is built, is the completed sacrifice of Christ, offered once for all. If Christ has not died, and risen from the dead, we have no New Testament. If He has, a sacerdotal priesthood is a delusion, and contrary to the will of God. Neither Peter, Paul, nor John is called a priest. The Holy Ghost would not dishonour the work of Christ by calling these apostles and ministers of the Gospel priests. When our Lord ascended to the right hand of the glory in the heavens, He gave apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers as his gifts to the Church, but no priests, except as every believer is one of the Royal Priesthood (Eph. iv. 10-12).

To have done otherwise, would have been to acknowledge that his sacrifice had not been offered, Himself risen and accepted by God as the One Great High Priest able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him (Heb. vii. 25). Those who assume the functions and adopt the name of priest declare by their actions that they are not Christ's gifts, for the conclusive reason that Christ never gave priests to his Church. All the members of his body are equally priests unto God. In no other sense does priesthood exist. How much need there is to come back to the plainness of the Word of God and be entirely free from a false position, as also to have no mental reservations, as some have, as to the meaning of such words as those quoted from the Ordination Service. These words imply and teach what has no place in the New Testament. All Evangelical Clergymen earnestly desire that in the above and other parts, the Prayer-Book should be revised.

Letters to the Editor.

"Day by Day."

DEAR SIR,—Day by day, to our great interest and edification, we read at our family worship the notes on the daily chapter in your columns. I often marvel at the thought, the comprehensiveness, and the illustration concentrated in these valuable comments. It is, therefore, with hesitation that I venture very respectfully to question one or two recent remarks.

August 24, Acts xvii. I hope no one will think that the Apostle did not make the Atonement of our Lord the main topic of his discourse. The formula, "Jesus and the Resurrection," descriptive of his preaching at Athens, is substantially the same as that in which he describes his preaching at Corinth, "Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

To preach "Jesus and the Resurrection" as at Athens, was to preach the Saviour who died upon the cross to save us from our sins; "and the Resurrection," shows that Paul went on to emphasize his risen life and glory. To preach "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," as at Corinth, was to preach the risen Saviour, with special emphasis on his previous death upon the cross.

The Cross is the central fact. All the Past looked forward to it, for, in the counsel of the Godhead, Jesus was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." All the Future, from the Resurrection to the endless Eternity, looks and will look back upon it. It was by his Death and Resurrection that the Church became his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all.

I am well aware that in this I am but repeating what our gifted friend, Mr. Meyer, is continually preaching. But some may misunderstand the somewhat ambiguous sentence to which reference is made. In the last paragraph on the same chapter I am disposed to question the statement, which has been made by others, that no church was formed at Athens. "Dionysius, Damaris, and others with them," were, I suggest, a church already formed by the Holy Ghost, although not mentioned as such by the narrator. —Yours faithfully, DISCIPULUS.

Next Year's Keswick.

DEAR SIR,—The Lord has spread this year a bountiful table before 7,000 of his hungry children at Keswick, and He is willing to feed many more.

A group of friends was gliding along on Derwentwater Lake one day. From another boat the airwaves carried the melody of "The sweet by-and-by." Hymns were sung at Friar's Crag. Every bird humming in the woods seemed to sing God's praises.

As the sun broke through the clouds, rolling away the mists from the mountain-tops, a lady exclaimed: "The half has not been told me of Keswick." She was a first comer, and to her, like to many other arduous workers in the heat of the day, this lovely spot, with its blissful associations, represented a glimpse of the "Beyond," when we shall see Him as He is. I had the pleasure of entertaining a few guests who had never been before. They were all missionaries from abroad or workers at home. I shall be happy to do so again; but can you not enlarge your own borders, and provide for a larger number than you did this year? I shall be glad to contribute, if it meets with your approval to carry out my suggestion.—Yours,

MISSIONARIES' FRIEND.

[We shall be very happy to use whatever sums may be subscribed in answer to this appeal in providing for missionary workers (home or foreign), in addition to our own party, next year, if the Lord will.—ED.]

Criminals and Sunday-Schools.

SIR,—With regard to your article on the above in a recent issue, I do not think Sunday-school teachers need be disturbed at some of their scholars finding their way to prison. Considering that in a large convict prison nearly every class of society has its representatives, including clergy, ministers, local preachers, &c., it would be very strange if a large proportion had not, at some time or other, attended Sunday-school.

For the encouragement of teachers, I would like to state that when seeking to lead convicts to Christ I have often been told by them that my words reminded them of what their Sunday-school teacher had taught them years and years before, and many have told me that the first item amongst the influences which began their great change was the sudden remembrance of the loving effort made by their teacher to bring them to a decision and to win them for Christ.

AN OLD PRISON GOVERNOR.

Liverpool Strangers' Rest.

SINCE the removal from 24, Park Lane, to the new building provided by our good friend, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., the work at the Strangers' Rest has gone on well. The foreign seamen and emigrants are being reached with the Gospel in large numbers, especially the German and Spanish. The Italian, Hungarian, and Chinese meet in class at the Rest, and altogether some twenty different nationalities make frequent use of the reading-room, where they are conversed with, and provided with suitable reading. Portions of Scripture in their own tongue are also distributed freely amongst them.

Although now working side by side with the Seamen's Friend Society in the Gordon Smith Institute, our work is carried on exactly the same as before. Owing, however, to the change of building, some misunderstanding seems to have arisen in regard to our needs, and we have suffered in consequence.

The work among the emigrants and foreign seamen is steadily increasing, and it would be a great pity if our efforts were curtailed through lack of funds. I shall, therefore, be glad to receive any contributions towards this noble institution, which was founded by our beloved friend, the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, some twenty-four years ago.

THOS. A. LEIGH, Hon. Treasurer.

Scottish Notes.

IT is intended to hold the usual half-yearly meetings of Christians in Glasgow, September 21-24. Deep satisfaction is felt at the measure of success which has attended the special services held in connection with the Exhibition.

An instance was afforded last week in Edinburgh of the results which might be expected to accrue from municipalities having a share in the management of city churches. Finding that the income of their congregations is declining, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners supported the proposal to remove a number of their livings to the suburbs, because they are at present placed in "lapsed centres," and points out the desirability of starting a service of tram-cars at church hours in order to make it possible for people to come from a distance to those that remain. Such ideas as the Christian duty of remaining among the "lapsed" in order to preach the Gospel where it is most needed, or the preservation of the Lord's Day from desecration, have no place in the plans of public officials.

Speaking last week in connection with the mission church recently opened in Strathtay, Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod (Inverness) said church extension was one of the most urgent duties to which the churches were called. Had they ever realized that the population of Scotland was increasing at the rate of from thirty to forty thousand souls every year? In some of the mining and manufacturing districts and the large cities the increase of population has been almost phenomenal. There were parishes where, within the recollection of living man, there was a quiet rural population of perhaps 1,500 or 2,000 in which they would now find a population of twenty, thirty, and forty thousand souls. The population of Scotland now was eight times larger than it was at the date of the Reformation, when the boundaries of the existing parochial charges were practically settled.

A most successful and encouraging Conference was held at Grantown-on-Spey on Wednesday, August 21. The first meeting was presided over by Sir Arch. S. L. Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, and was given to the subject of "Home Work." Rev. Mr. Low (Edinburgh) spoke on the necessity of home religion, and urged parents to aim at the early conversion of their children. Rev. J. Muir (Glasgow) urged the Church's duty of looking after the young; and Rev. Mr. Martin (Church of England) advocated more Christian unity. The afternoon meeting was devoted to the subject of "Work Abroad." Dr. Walker (London) presided, and Rev. Mr. Maciver (Hakkaland, China) urged the claims of China; Rev. D. J. Martin (Oban) giving some of his impressions of India and Indian Missions from a recent visit to that land. The evening meeting was evangelistic, and was presided over by Mr. R. R. Simpson, S.S.C. (Edinburgh). Earnest and pointed addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Arnott (Glasgow), Rev. Mr. Moir (Strichen), and Rev. Mr. Rainsford (London). It is hoped that this Conference will be an annual feature of the holiday season in Strathspey.

Mary's Prayer.

Part I.

"Oh, mother, isn't it lovely!" The "it" was a doll, beautifully dressed in blue, carried by a wee maiden in spotless white; and the speaker was a poor, pale child, in clean but sordid garments, trudging patiently by the side of her mother as she was carrying home a basket of soiled linen for her laundry work. She had just been met by one of her customers, who stopped to speak to her, and her little Mary had meanwhile been feasting her eyes on this fairy vision of the lovely, well-cared-for child of a wealthy home, and the wonderful doll-baby that gazed out so unseeingly from its blue china eyes. "Mother, it had a blue frock on," she remarked, finding her first exclamation unnoticed.

Mrs. Benson was absorbed in her own thoughts, sadly care-worn ones, for her husband was a drunkard, and she had to work unceasingly, and far beyond her strength to feed her children, and the question of "ways and means" sometimes pressed heavily. But she was a kind, good mother, and at little Mary's persistent tones she bent her ear to listen. "What was it, dearie?" "Oh, mother, the doll and the blue frock; oh, mustn't the little girl be awful 'appy? Mother, couldn't I have a doll in a blue frock?"

The mother smiled sadly. "Nay, dear, mother can't get the frocks she would like for her bairns, much less for a doll." And she quickened her pace, feeling that time was precious, and all Mary's breath was needed in the effort to keep up with her mother's rapid steps. She had to battle bravely, too, poor child, with the tantalizing thought that so few pretty things ever came into her life. But the doll had taken too strong a hold of her fancy to be forgotten, and at night, when her mother was undressing her, it was named again.

"Mother, could no one give me a doll with a blue frock?" "No," her mother answered wearily. "I don't know any one; put it out of your head, dear; you've got your brothers and sisters to play with; that must content you." "But they aren't niccly dressed," Mary objected with a suspicion of tears in her voice. "Well, it's no use fretting," her mother said, with a sigh, "we can't have everything we want in this world. It seems a pity you met little Miss Fortescue to-day, but be a good girl, and say your prayers, and get to bed, child, for I'm very busy."

Mary's eyes suddenly brightened. "Mother, may I ask gentle Jesus to give me a doll? Maybe He'll have dolls up in heaven, and there might be one with a blue frock." "You can ask Him if you like," her mother said; "it can't do any harm." There was small encouragement in the tone, but it was enough for Mary, and with the simple, direct faith of a little child she made her request known to the Lover of little children, and had her mother had time to listen after the head of her child was resting on its pillow, she would have heard many minute directions whispered to "Gentle Jesus" about the size of the doll and the exact colour of its dress.

Part II.

"Well, young people, how are you getting on?" The large dining-room at Deneside was turned into a hive of industry; and the table, laden with materials for work, was surrounded by a group of bright young girls, whose faces were quickly raised from their occupation as Mrs. Fortescue entered the room. "Oh, mother, you are just in time," her daughter Maud, exclaimed. "We are making the work fly, and there is more cutting-out to be done at once. Is not that a grand pinafore?" holding up with great complacency a winsey over-all; "it will quite do duty as a frock."

"Splendid," her mother said, seizing her scissors and setting to work on a new pile of materials. "But what is this plan that Mabel's kind little cranium has been hatching?" Two or three eager voices attempted to explain; but from the babel this information was evolved, that the young workers, at Mabel Guy's suggestion, had decided that the treats for the poor children of the mission, and the gifts planned for it, should not be confined to useful articles, but that each child should have, in addition, a toy, a picture-book, or a doll.

"We can give up our pocket money for a week or two, Mrs. Fortescue, and then it will easily be done," said Mabel, "and the poor little mites will be so pleased." "And someone else will be pleased as well, dear child," said Mrs. Fortescue, laying her hand caressingly on the shoulder of the young girl as she sat near her; "the Lord Jesus is still saying, 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me.'"

And so, a few weeks later, when little Mary Benson was one of the group of 150 children who were feasted with tea and buns in the prettily-decorated schoolroom, she was called forward in her turn, and after being made very proud and happy by the gift of a new frock, was rendered speechless with quivering delight when a doll, half as large as herself, and dressed in blue, was put into her arms. Call it coincidence or chance who may. Many knew better! and wise little woman that she was, after she had time to consider the thing, and had in her ensuing prayer returned devout thanks, she asked the very practical question, "Mother, what shall I pray for next?" And the dear, noble-hearted deaconess, who, with full heart, told me this story, says that she is now praying with the same simple faith that gentle Jesus will persuade daddy not to go to the public any more. Many thanks for heather and flowers received.

Martha Allan.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher," and hope you will be as diligent and careful as many of your little "cousins."

Winnie Gartshore—Thank you for your letter. I am pleased to hear that you are to take up the Searcher work again.

Agnes and Martha Allan.—It is not sufficient to give chapter and verse only. You should answer the question by the words of the verse.

Benefactions to Baptist Institutions.—By the will of the late Mr. W. L. Robinson, The Elms, Coventry, the Baptist College at Bristol will benefit to the extent of £1,000. A similar sum is bequeathed to the Baptist Missionary Society. Mr. Robinson also devised to the trustees of the Queen's Road Chapel, Coventry, the free-hold of a piece of land, for the erection of a Sunday-school or schools or place of Divine worship, to be used always as a Baptist school.

SUNDAY, September 1.

Spiritual Acquaintance (Job xxii. 21-23).

We may learn much of God in nature. Everywhere the world is beautiful—sea and sky, wave and grass, flower and sea-shell, wood and river, but how much poorer it would be if it did not speak from every leaf of its great picture-book—reminding us of the missals of the Middle Ages—of the Eternal God. As by studying the pictures, or books, of an illustrious man whom we have never seen, so by contemplating the words of God we may know Him. The invisible things of God are made known by the works of his hands—his eternal power and Godhead.

We may learn much of God, also from great and good men who have lived in every age of the world, and in every land. "Where is the country whose history is so dead that it has not had some such men to show?" And we must always believe that the light which shone in them, amid a good deal of ignorance and mistake, was just borrowed from Christ Himself. "In them we have simply the sunlight before the sunrise."

But after all, the only way of acquainting ourselves with God is by looking into the face of Jesus Christ. "Christ spoke the words of God, and that was much. Christ was the Word of God, and that was vastly more. The Incarnate Word of God is the real Light of the world." All other men are fragments of the One Man. In each there is some failure, some plan, something that we dare not imitate. But Jesus Christ is perfect Man, as He is also, by his essential nature, the Eternal God; and in his perfect humanity, the Eternal God is declared. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," He said to Philip. "How sayest thou then, Show us the Father?"

We must, first, be at peace with God by confessing ourselves worthless sinners, and taking our stand in his finished work, and then, being at peace with God through faith, we may go on to know God, according to his Divine promise, "I have declared thy name to those whom Thou hast given Me, and will declare it."

The remainder of this chapter should be studied in R.V. in order to realise all the advantages which will accrue from this acquaintance with God. "Thou shalt be built up." Iniquity shall have no place in heart or home. The soul will be so occupied with the treasure it has discovered in God, that it will be prepared to lay its gold, on which it had prided itself, in the dust; and even the gold of Ophir, among the stones of the brook. In other words, it will have discovered a treasure so excelling as to dwarf and pale all other attractions (24, 25).

The delight of life will be in the Almighty; there will be constant communion, fellowship, and prayer; the purposes of life will be well-based, and work out to favourable issues. Amid the depression and pessimism of the world, such a one shall move to and fro with a Divine strength and comfort—with the voice that cheers and the strong arm that uplifts.

Dear fellow Endeavourers, let it be the object of your life to get to know as much of God as possible. Turn from every beautiful object, every noble man, every little child, every happy or sad occurrence, every discovery of nature, every event in history, every movement of the Spirit of God over your own souls, to know Him better. He is infinitely lowly, gentle, and tender, as well as mighty and glorious. "What is seen" is but a slight veil cast over his Person. Life becomes calm and glad, strong, blessed, and useful, just in so far as the soul becomes acquainted with God.

C.E. NOTES.

Rev. T. J. Gladwin, of the Harringay Park Primitive Methodist Church, will succeed Rev. Llewellyn H. Parsons as president of the North London Christian Endeavour Union from October 1, 1902. The winter programme of the union, which holds its annual meeting on October 3, is a very full one.

An active member of the Christ Church C.E. Society (Westminster Bridge Road) leaves next month for China, in connection with the C.I.M., his fellow members having paid his expenses during three years' training, also providing his outfit. Four members of the same Society are taking twenty cripple children to Yarmouth for a fortnight at the end of the month. A house is being lent for the time. The amount required for their trip has been collected by the Endeavourers.

The following message has come from the native Christian Endeavourers of the Philippines: "We are now 100 strong, and desire to declare to you we give glory unto the Lord, and declare his praise in the islands. We are at the beginning of marvellous things for these islands of the sea. Already the transformation has begun. Christian Endeavour is to have a grand part in this work. February 1 saw the organizing of our first Society with seventeen members. Five months have passed, another Society has been organized, and the membership roll has gone up to 100. Other Societies are soon to be organized. All our members are Filipinos."

Jacob at Bethel (Gen. xxviii. 10-22).

Golden Text—Gen. xxviii. 16.

Introductory.

Isaac's two sons were very different in character. Esau, active, bold, impulsive and careless; Jacob, quiet and home-loving, but shrewd and deceitful. His name means "supplanter," and his mother hoped from the first that he would inherit the blessing. Jacob was her favourite, while Isaac loved Esau best; the great evil of favouritism in a family comes out in this story. Chapter xxvii. relates how Jacob deceived his father and obtained the blessing, which God would have given him in a proper way had he only had patience to wait. From this time forth we find Jacob's life full of trouble; we always reap the consequence of our evil doing. Jacob has to be sent away to escape his brother's anger, and his mother sends him to her country, so that he may choose a wife from her family. Rebekah never saw her darling son again. How different it might have been if she had only acted rightly.

The Journey (10).

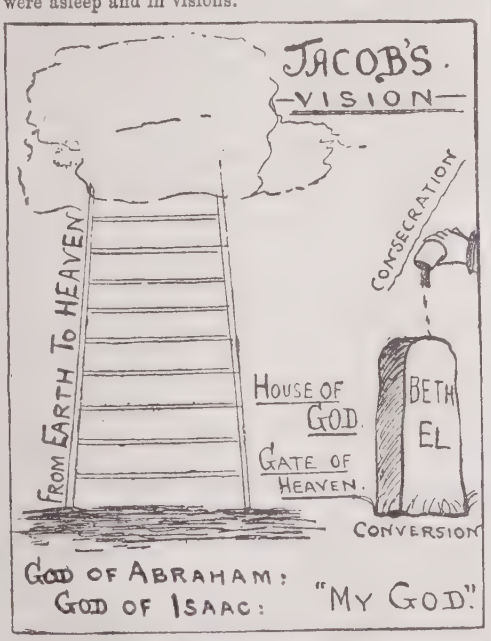
"Padan-aram," or "the field of Syria," was the Hebrew name for the flat and highly-cultivated lands bordering the Euphrates. Haran, or Charran, was its principal city. Who travelled from thence? (xii. 4.) The journey was about 450 miles. (Trace it on the map.)

The Resting Place (11).

Bethel. Who built an altar there 160 years before? (xii. 8.) Jacob happened to stop there, but what seemed chance was God's appointment. The hills around Bethel are formed of mighty slabs of rock piled up, and in places they look like flights of steps. At the base of one of these Jacob, weary, lonely, and sad, lay down. From chap. xxxv. 3 we learn that Jacob prayed to God before he slept. The vision was given in answer to prayer. (Give a word picture.)

The Dream (12).

Before people had the Bible, or other written revelation, the Lord used to speak to his children when they were asleep and in visions.



Note, the angels ascended first to show that they were already on the earth to minister to God's children (Heb. i. 14). Mark the three "beholds." He saw first the ladder, then the angels, and afterwards the Lord. He was not alone; heaven and earth are connected. God is with us. Our "ladder" is Jesus the Saviour (John i. 51; xiv. 6).

God's Message (13-15).

"I am," "I will give," "I am with thee," "I will keep," "I will bring thee," "I will not leave thee." Not for your sake, but because of my covenant with Abraham and Isaac. And this is God's message to each of us, not for our sake, but because his covenant is now made with Jesus Christ for us.

Jacob's Conversion (16, 17).

He had seen Jehovah, a grand reality, heard Him speak, in faith accepted his promise, and he is a changed man; he acknowledges his fault, "I knew it not," feels great awe, or reverence, for this good God, and goes on his way conscious that heaven is near and earth is God's house. True conversion is like this; we all need this great change, for all are sinful as Jacob (John iii. 3). Point out the difference between man's way and God's.

Jacob's New Life (18-22).

First he marked the place by setting up the stone; and consecrated, or set it apart for a special purpose, by pouring on oil; many years afterwards Jacob returned, and built a permanent altar here (xxxv. 6, 7). Then he made a solemn promise to God. Abraham and Isaac had never got so far as this. The word "If" means "since." He takes all he has, as gifts from God, and pledges himself to devote one-tenth specially to God's service. The Lord had taught his servants that He claimed a tenth as acknowledgment that all came from Him (Gen. xiv. 20). Remember that this was before the giving of the Law. God still claims it from his people, and special favours demand special thankofferings.

Have I been converted?
Do I give God my tenth?
Is my life so changed that others can see it?

The Y.M.C.A.

Associations are in formation at Belvedere and Erith, in the South-East Metropolitan District.

Mr. R. C. Taylor, of Bristol, has been appointed general secretary of the Exeter Y.M.C.A. The Association will still have the advantage of the co-operation, in an honorary capacity, of the late general secretary, Mr. E. D. Collins.

On a recent Sunday afternoon the Y.M.C.A. rooms at Torquay were thrown open to the men of the Fleet, and a tea was provided for them. Between 400 and 500 men availed themselves of the hospitality provided by friends of the Association, and joined heartily in the special services arranged. On leaving they took away books, magazines, &c., which had been given, to read on board ship.

The work of the Rangoon Association, under the supervision of Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, LL.B., is making very gratifying progress. Twenty young fellows are accommodated in the new hostel. The port authorities have made the Association a grant of 500 rupees, in recognition of its work amongst seamen; they have also made a similar grant to the Association recently established at Moulmein, the enrolled membership of which has already reached 120.

The workers of the Hastings and St. Leonards Association were much encouraged a few Sundays ago by the presence and helpful testimony of a Christian veteran, Dr. Newman Hall. He came forward at the open-air mission service, and spoke to those assembled. He looked back to his conversion in his sixteenth year, and his first open-air address was given in a hop garden. At eighty-five he had no new Gospel to proclaim, only the story of God's love in the gift of the Saviour.

The committee of the St. Helens Association has recently passed plans for the erection of a new building, in a central position, upon ground generously placed at its disposal by the president, Colonel W. W. Pilkington. The building will comprise a lecture hall, seating 200 (the present gymnasium, which seats 1,000, being still available for large gatherings), a spacious reading-room, reception hall, games and refreshment room, class and club rooms, &c., the basement and ground floor consisting of several fine shops and stores. A roof garden will be provided as a resort in hot weather, and for the accommodation of small meetings in the open.

The Jubilee Year Book of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America, just issued, is a volume of more than 250 pages, containing elaborate particulars of the remarkable progress of Y.M.C.A. work throughout the United States. There are now 1,476 American Associations, with a membership of 268,477, an increase of over 13,000 on the figures of last year, while the gross value of property in buildings, real estate, &c., is returned at £4,343,220. A hundred and sixty-one railroad branches are in operation, largely supported financially by various railway corporations; army work has been carried on at 321 points, and eighty-nine rooms or buildings are used for the work by permission of the authorities; the naval institute at Brooklyn has been visited during the year by 38,973 sailors and marines; 577 student Associations have done excellent work in colleges and preparatory schools; and special departments have been successfully carried on at numerous centres for boys and for coloured men.

"Phœbe, our Sister."

"A SUCCOURER OF MANY."

By Rev. FREDERICK HASTINGS.

"SHE hath been a succourer of many," is the way in which Paul speaks of this Phœbe (Rom. xvi. 1, 2). What honourable mention! Probably she was a Gentile convert. She may have been a widow, having property which involved an appeal to the High Central Court. She had found a vocation in the infant Church at Cenchrea, but had to leave it on this hazardous journey to Rome. A letter was sent by her hands, and she was commended and introduced by Paul to the circle of Christians gathered in the Imperial city.

They were to "receive her as becometh saints." It was well to have such a letter, such an introduction. Phœbe would feel a stranger in Rome. She would be lonely, and would enjoy the gatherings that were held in this house of Christians. But this letter would soften the pain and loneliness. It would give her an entrée among loving, though humble, friends. Not only so, but there would be some in "Cæsar's household," well known to Paul, who would facilitate her object. At that day there was so much done by interest, that it would be well to have friends at court, some who could speak a good word for the widow. In a short sentence, the great Apostle tells several things concerning Phœbe that are of great interest.

PHŒBE'S MINISTRY.

She was a trusted messenger. To have such a letter entrusted to her was a great honour, a high privilege. She had a message that would be welcomed. We can imagine the scene when she delivered it and heard it read. We can see her received with cordiality by the Church. We can imagine her telling the assembly of Paul's doings, sufferings, efforts, even to write this long letter.

It is a great thing to be entrusted with a message. We should realize that our lives can be a message to the callous, the backslider, the hopeless, the despairing, the tempted, the anxious. All who know Christ receive a message for others.

She had been a hospitable hostess. She was a practical Christian. Did the infant Church at Cenchrea need a home, or did the apostle or ministers need a resting-place, it was found under her roof. She was the forerunner of many who have thrown open houses, kitchens, barns for the preaching of the Gospel. How much has Christianity been indebted to such! Forerunner was she of those who prepared the prophet's chamber, and supplied the preacher's needs in many places. And such have often received back far more than they have given. Many a parent has had to thank God for those who have come into the home, and influenced sons or daughters.

A tireless helper was Phœbe. "Succourer of many" is her title—ready helper. Phœbe felt it was a privilege to show hospitality, and to contribute to the Apostle's good. She had means. She had evidently pressed help on Paul at times. No mere spasmodic action was this, but the habit of her life. She became the official deaconess of the Church, took care of other widows, or the sick, the sorrowful, the blind, the wounded in life.

THE TRUE DEACONESS.

Such quiet services glorify God. What services has not Christ started! Sweet ministries of love have had their source in Him. He said, "He that giveth a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple shall in no wise lose his reward." It was a joy to Phœbe, perhaps a relief to her feelings. But she would not think of that; it was its own reward. There are different ways of helping. Some help to get rid of importunity. They just give a penny to a beggar, only to be rid of a sight that disgusts or the need that seems hopeless. To do this is a damage to the one whose spirit of self-reliance has already been broken by the constant response to appeals.

Phœbe helped, feeling pain at her limitations. She gave till she felt it. The trifling and the costless may even be a help. When a soldier is on the battle field wounded, the one thing he wants is water. Water costs little, but conveying it may cost much. There must be courage to face bullets and shrapnel still flying about, or to meet bitter foes, who may think it their duty to kill a helper. The self-sacrifice in act makes the costless costly. Christ set us an example of such sacrifice. "He put his hands on them and healed them." He could have spoken a word that would have healed; but no, He would come into contact, though at pain to Himself. We must catch his spirit. We can help others either to mould or to mar life.

There are certain points where help is specially needed, and then we can do a simple work that will be a real boon. A mother has a fever. It is the outcome, perhaps, of poor nourishment, miserable surroundings, over-anxiety and worry about her children. The doctor attends to the fever. That is not our province; but we can help to soothe, to nourish, to clothe, and to care for her infant child. We can bring some cordial or comfort that may even have a medicinal effect and lessen the fury of fever.

A Phœbe may succour many thus. A strong swimmer succours the sinking one. A steam-tug succours the ship that has got behind the pier, whose moorings has failed. A little tug can drag her from a rock to where the swell and surge are gradually sending her. So we may each succour some soul.

WORDS IN DUE SEASON.

Helpful words can be so easily spoken in the family circle, to servants, to business men, to the toilers. We have to realize how much we are indebted to others, and then we shall speak with sympathy, and not the patronage which may do more to irritate than to elevate.

By kind words we are contributing more to the purification of the world than we can measure. It is this that would make the pew balance the pulpit. The Gospel ministry has a grand vocation, but what would it be if it were not backed up by the helpfulness and consistency of those who have embraced the doctrines? Some who listen keep the truth, shining as Lot did in Sodom. He was a lantern in a dark place. Some imagine that the world is a great Hyde Park, where only gold and glitter and fashion parade. They see not the sorrow, suffering, and misery of their fellows. They are satisfied to have peace themselves. They are somewhat indifferent to the advantages of others. They are not awake to the possibilities of life of this pivotal age. Others are like Phœbe, true succourers, giving joy to many.

Love and grace greaten and glorify all things,
Till God is aglow in the loving heart,
In what was mere earth before.

Encouragement.

Isaiah lv. 2.

THE following lines were sent in an early month of 1832 by an anonymous friend to a discouraged pastor who at that time had a mere handful of people attending his ministry. He had announced his intention to resign the pastorate, resolving, like Jeremiah (Jer. xx. 9), to "speak no more" in the name of the Lord. On receiving these lines he took courage, and recommenced. The cholera broke out, and the sanctuary was crowded by anxious inquirers. A revival commenced, 120 converts were added to the church, and the prosperity continues to this day. The pastor has long since departed, but the good work remains.

To Ministers.

Sow, sow, sow—always keep on sowing,
God will cause the seed to grow
Faster than you're knowing,
God's seed is not sown in vain
When, God's voice obeying,
You look upward for the rain,
And falter not in praying.

To the People.

Pray, pray, pray—always keep on praying.
In the brightest—darkest days,
Still God's voice obeying.
Never from the gates of prayer
Turn with doubting sorrow,
The Mighty One who standeth there,
May answer thee to-morrow

Obituary.

MR. JOHN COLVILLE, M.P.

MANY Christian and philanthropic organizations have lost a warm friend and supporter through the death, on Wednesday of last week, at Motherwell, of Mr. John Colville, member of Parliament for the North-East Division of Lanarkshire. Dying in his fiftieth year, he has left behind a long record of useful service. Constrained by the love of Christ at an early age, he was busy for a number of years in connection with the Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society of Motherwell, and, as his opportunities and powers developed, he became the chief moving spirit in the Lanarkshire Christian Union, of which he remained president till his death. He was well known as an elder of the United Presbyterian Church, and took a deep interest in the Union, which resulted in the formation of the United Free Church.

PROFESSOR JAMES ROBERTSON.

A distinguished authority on educational matters has been removed by the death of Dr. James Robertson, Professor of Church History, United Free Church College, Aberdeen, who passed away suddenly at Ballater, on Saturday. Having graduated at Aberdeen University, and after teaching for some time at King's Lynn, he studied for the Church, and after a brilliant Unitersity career, he was ordained a missionary of the Free Church of Scotland. He joined the Duff College, Calcutta, and worked with much success in India for many years. He was appointed professor at Aberdeen in 1887, in succession to the late Dr. Binnie.

DR. GRIFFITH PARRY.

The death of Rev. Griffith Parry, D.D., of Carno, Montgomeryshire, which took place on Thursday, removes a distinguished minister of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church. Dr. Parry was ordained to the ministry in 1856, and a large part of his ministerial career was spent at Aberystwyth. In time his abilities as a preacher brought him into wide prominence. In addition to this he became widely known as a thoughtful writer on theological and kindred subjects. Among his many published works were "An Introduction to the Gospels;" "Life and Sermons of Rev. R. Roberts, Clynog;" and a "Commentary on the Pastoral Epistles." He made many translations from English and Latin into Welsh, including Dr. Chalmers' "Astronomy of the Bible."

Rev. George Soltau's Bible School.—Arrangements are in progress for reopening the Bible schools the last week in September, for twelve weeks, in the following places: Tuesdays, Newport, Monmouth. Wednesdays (it is hoped), Cardiff. Thursdays, Clifton and Bristol. Fridays, Reading and Guildford. The Mondays are, so far, unappropriated, and Mr. Soltau would be glad to reserve that day for London and suburbs. The afternoon and evening are available. In many remarkable ways God's blessing was manifested during the spring course in some of the western centres. Letters may be addressed to George Soltau, at 85, Lordship Park, London, N.

Church Missionary Society Report.—The volume, giving an account of the proceedings of the Church Missionary Society for its one hundred and second year, 1900-1901, will be a welcome addition to every missionary library. At the beginning of each chapter a short historical summary brings up to date the history of the work so far as the particular country is concerned. A copious and carefully classified index of special topics places the interesting facts and incidents of the year—and the volume abounds with them—in an available form within the reach of the public speaker. The missionaries are shown to have numbered at the close of 1900, 889 (412 ordained, 146 lay, and 331 single women), whose efforts were supplemented by 365 native clergy, and 6,600 teachers. On the financial side an idea of the magnitude of the work may be gathered from the fact that the payments of the year were £381,281 5s. 3d., though the gross income fell short of that by £30,789 14s. 1d. An excellent series of maps will enable the reader to follow the narrative intelligently. The "Story of the Year" popular report is a very readable compilation, admirably illustrated, and furnished with excellent maps, on which the mission stations of the Society are indicated.

Evangelistic.

Rev. Jas. Lyall in Queensland.

Many will rejoice to hear of the widespread interest which has been aroused in Brisbane as a result of Rev. Jas. Lyall's Queensland campaign. The meetings have been largely attended, and the earnest appeals made at each gathering have not been without result. The number of those who confessed Christ is distinctly encouraging. Throughout September Mr. Lyall will be conducting services at Ipswich, Queensland.

A Fruitful Mission at Lancaster.

We have been favoured in this town by a visit from three brethren belonging to the Open-Air Mission (Messrs. Gray, Heath, and Pullinger), who have done us splendid service for about ten days. Meetings have been held in the villages of Glasson, Thurnham, Galgate Wray, Hornby, &c., and at night there was a large gathering in the Market Square, Lancaster. The Gospel was told out faithfully and earnestly, and we have had definite results therefrom. The only regret we have is that our brethren could not remain with us longer. The workers who have assisted have been much stimulated and encouraged to labour on in this God-appointed field of service; our prayers go with the friends in their future labour.

G. H. W.

Mr. Samuel Levermore in Pennsylvania.

In the course of a recent communication, Mr. Samuel Levermore reports a season of fruitful labour in Pennsylvania. He writes:—"I commenced in Columbia, a fortnight ago, and the hand of the Lord has truly been with me in a marvellous way. We have had nightly services in the Park, and these have increased in attendance nightly. It has been a great joy to see the masses of people, stretching away under the maples, listening eagerly to the Word. Then, at the close, there have been every evening groups of people on their knees praying with convicted ones. About fifteen sturdy railway engineers are among the number of the saved. All the churches are open to me. Oh! what a hunger there is here for the Word of God. The people are tired of semi-political addresses and moral essays. They are crying out for the Word. I ask the prayers of your many readers. I hope to return in September for missions at home."

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, has been the preacher at the Edinburgh Castle Mission Church, Limehouse, during August. Congregations, growing in numbers, have testified to the acceptance of his ministry. His addresses have invariably been bright, direct, earnest, and Scriptural, and most helpful both to young and old. Several earnest seekers after Christ have been dealt with by Mr. Collins during the month. W. R. N.

Rev. John Mitchell (author of "Silver Tongues," "How to Gain the Eye," &c.), is open to conduct special services and missions, free of charge, where his services may be desired. Engagements should be booked early for the coming season. Address, Sherwood, Sutton, Surrey.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Henry Collins recently visited Exmouth, Devon. Mr. Collins preached the anniversary sermons at the Baptist Church. The services were largely attended. Mrs. Collins conducted several meetings at the Sailors' Rest, which were impressive gatherings.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

A WEEK of glorious soul-saving has been experienced at the Leyton tent. Every night the congregations grow. As soon as the inquiry rooms were opened they were filled with anxious souls. The messages of Mr. Bewley Weaver in speech, and Mr. Frank Weaver in song, were greatly appreciated. On Friday night, quite 1,000 people gathered to say "God be with you till we meet again" to the mission preachers. It was an open testimony to the success of the meetings to see such a crowd on Friday in August. On Saturday afternoon Mr. Bradbrook addressed a great assembly of children, and gave a special address at night, illustrated by dissolving views. On Sunday Mr. John Vine and Mr. R. S. Bradbrook conducted the meetings, and at the close of the evening service quite a large number found their way into the inquiry room, and until a late hour anxious souls were being dealt with. No fewer than 113 special requests for prayer were sent to the platform at the evening meeting. Dr. John Robertson (of Glasgow) and Mr. Bradbrook continue the mission during this week.

Mr. W. Grove, who is a great favourite with East End audiences, has by special request paid another visit to Canning Town tent, and has had glorious times. He will continue the mission, which will close on September 3, with a special meeting for converts and gathering for tea. The meetings on Sunday were full of blessing; and marches round the densely-crowded streets, and notably that part known as Duckfields, drew large crowds to their windows and doors, so that the streets were literally lined with men and women and children who apparently had no thought of the value of their souls. A worker of long experience gives it as his opinion that during the three hours of procession no fewer than 20,000 people must have heard the Gospel in song or invitation. Surely there are few districts in London more needy, and where aggressive Christian work is required. The Christian workers in these parts are considerably cheered, and encouraged to pursue their labours with renewed vigour.

Sabbath last was a time long to be remembered in the Lavender Hill tent, when the Weaver Brothers commenced a week's mission. There was a splendid gathering for "men only" in the morning. In the afternoon, quite 1,500 people were present, and the message was one in the power and demonstration of the Spirit. The night meeting was advertised for eight o'clock, but at seven o'clock the tent was filled. All the sides were thrown up, and a large crowd was densely packed all round the outside, while scores went away not able to get a glimpse. There was a great breakdown among the unsaved. The workers' hearts were greatly gladdened, and they took courage, and are looking forward to a time of ingathering of souls.

At the Islington tent the mission continues to grow in interest and power. Mr. Leonard Weaver addresses increased audiences nightly, and Mr. Meredith's singing continues to prove an attraction. On Monday, August 19, a special conference of local clergy and ministers was held at Islington Congregational Church, under the presidency of Rev. J. G. Henderson. Eighteen churches were represented, and it was unanimously decided to ask Mr. Weaver to continue the Islington tent for another fourteen days. Permission having been granted by the Church Missionary Society and the Y.M.C.A. authorities, the mission will go on until September 16. An interesting development of the work has been the dinner-hour service, held in the neighbourhood between one and two o'clock; a band of workers of about sixty strong gather to sing and testify, and invite people to the tent for the evening meeting. Good results have followed these daily gatherings. The Sunday morning prayer meeting is well maintained, 250 being present at 7 a.m. A remarkable service was that of Sunday evening, when Mr. Weaver spoke on "The Unpardonable Sin." At the after-meeting, some names were taken as having decided for Jesus Christ. The workers were busy dealing with the anxious to a late hour. It is now beyond doubt that a great spiritual revival has broken out in North London. Many clergymen in the district testify to the revival of increased spiritual activity among their congregations. The workers continue to show splendid enthusiasm in the mission. A three-day church conference is to be held Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, September 3, 4, and 5, and to which all the local churches are promising support. Among the speakers already secured may be mentioned Revs. J. Gregory Mantle, W. Darlow Sargeant, and Mr. Stanley P. Smith. It is proposed to hold an afternoon meeting at 3 o'clock, and an evening meeting at 7.30 each day. The local committee have made arrangements for the providing of refreshments at a small charge.

Friends interested in the work of the London Tent Campaign will regret to hear that at the Central Council Meeting held last week it was most reluctantly decided considerably to curtail the scope of their operations. Since the definite appeal was made for £1,500 about £400 has been received, mostly in small sums, the majority of the amounts being accompanied by letters, in which the writers urge the committee most earnestly not to slacken their hands. The pressure of this financial burden, borne by those at the front of the battle, is exceedingly heavy.

We praise God for the number who have testified for the Lord in connection with our brother Wooldridge's tent work at Bow Common Lane, E. The Lord is bringing to his fold young and old. We believe the Lord will do wonders in this neighbourhood. Pray that it may be so. R. S.

Mr. Charles Gellatley, of the London Evangelization Society, has just concluded a five weeks' tent mission in Leslie, Fife. From the very beginning the meetings were well attended, but latterly the tent was crowded, especially on Sunday evenings. The ministers of the town gave the mission their countenance, and can testify to the good that has been accomplished. There were many anxious inquirers, and not a few were led to decide for Christ. God's people, too, have been greatly helped and stimulated. At the closing meeting (which was of a social nature) a fervent hope was expressed that Mr. Gellatley would revisit Leslie on some future occasion.

Salvation.

One offer of salvation; to all the world 'tis free.
One offer of redemption, 'tis made to you and me:
The Lamb of God has suffered, He suffered in our stead,
For you, for me, uplifted, on Calvary's Cross He bled.
Those sins that now oppress you were borne upon the tree,
Believe the words of Jesus, and thou shalt go out free.
Believe them, oh! believe them, He waits to set thee free,
Your guilt, your sin, your judgment, He bore on Calvary.

One offer of salvation! Wide open stands the gate,
One pathway on to freedom, oh! take it ere too late.
The Christ of God is waiting, has waited long, for you,
Oh, heed the solemn pleading of the Saviour strong and true.
Life He alone can offer, life He alone can give,
Accept the gift of Jesus, accept it now, and live.
Accept it, oh! accept it. This life He offers thee
Was won through blood and sorrow, was bought on Calvary.

One offer of salvation! There is no other plan.
One Saviour of the lost ones, who died for sinful man;
The Lamb of God who suffered, who died the death of shame,
That you might stand before Him, faultless and free of blame.
How will you dare to meet Him, if you his call refuse?
How will you stand before Him, if mercy you abuse?
Refuse not Him who calleth, his love He offers thee
Believe Him, and accept Him, thus shalt thou go out free.

Ethel Philpot-Crowther.

Personalia.

Rev. Wm. Adamson, M.A., vicar of Old Ford, E. is contributing a series of articles upon "Higher Criticism," "Encyclopædia Biblica," and the "Polychrome Bible," to the English Churchman. The first paper appeared in last week's issue, and dealt with "The Bible—False or True?"

Rev. Frederick Brown (of Tientsin) has been appointed by the Methodist Episcopal Church as a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference (London, September 4-16), and hopes on October 2 to sail by the s.s. Ballarat for his field of labour, his family remaining in England for the present.

Rev. Charles Carter sailed from Liverpool for Melbourne on the 17th inst. To his extreme regret he was unable to accept the invitations of many friends, or even to reply to their letters. He asks their remembrance in prayer, for a successful voyage, and for usefulness among his 300 fellow-passengers.

Mrs. Amanda Smith, having met with a serious accident by being thrown out of a vehicle, is prevented this year from attending the American camp meetings, at which she obtained help for her orphanage. Mrs. Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin, appeals to those who desire the elevation of the negro to help in this emergency.

Abbe Corneloup, director of the work among priests in France, expects to be in England at the beginning of October, and would be very grateful to any who can get up meetings for him to give an account of the work either in public halls or drawing-rooms. Communications may be addressed to the care of W. F. Hathaway, Esq. (Hon. Sec.), Pewsey, Wilts.

Rev. Harold F. Sayles, of Chicago, an evangelist widely known in America, is at present on a visit to Great Britain. He has travelled largely, telling the Gospel by song and story with the aid of a powerful stereopticon. The Chicago Union of Congregational ministers voted him a letter of introduction to Christians in Europe, and Dr. C. I. Scofield, of Northfield, Mass., warmly commends him to confidence and fellowship. Workers who desire to secure the services of Mr. Sayles, may address him to our care.

About Books.

A VERY instructive addition to the series of Bible Class Primers is The Mosaic Tabernacle: Studies in the Priesthood and the Sanctuary of the Jews. By Rev. John Adams, B.D. (6d. T. & T. Clark.)

Before Marriage and After: Being Homely Counsels on Courtship and Marriage. By Rev. Joseph Bush. (1s. C. H. Kelly.) This choice little book is in its seventh edition. There is pious purpose and sound common sense in the pages. "Get-up" and contents alike indicate this as a good book for presentation purposes.

A peculiar interest attaches to Reform movements in the Spanish peninsula; and many will read with satisfaction a pamphlet entitled Don Miguel Longas, the Spanish Reformer. (2d. W. Greene, 3, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.) It contains the translation of a lecture given in April last, on "The Church of Rome and Civilization," by one who was formerly a Romish priest.

How to Regain Health and Live a Hundred Years. By One Who Did It. Translated from the Italian of Lewis Cornaro. (C. F. Carpenter, Bishop's Teignton, South Devon.) We welcome a fourth edition of this treatise, the pages of which expound in practical language the conditions indispensable to physical health and comfort. The narrative reads like a romance; but as it is sober fact, it deserves unhesitating commendation.

The issue, in three forms, of The Practice of the Presence of God, by Brother Lawrence (4d., 6d., 1s. W. Walker, 28, Paternoster Row), brings within popular reach a book which has proved its vitality by the interest maintained in it after 200 years. In the words of Archbishop Benson, the author "was a saint;" and the fact that he was a Roman Catholic has led to a use of the book for circulation among those who would refuse Protestant literature.

An Introduction to Christian Mysticism, by Eleanor Gregory, is a welcome little volume, in which a paper read before a Ladies' Society is presented in a permanent form. After an instructive introduction, there is an account of the mystics themselves, from Plato to Maeterlinck, and then an outline of their teachings, and the tendencies (sometimes evil) of the same. Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh, supplies a brief preface. We agree with him that this little book is an admirable introduction to the study of the mystic writers. (1s. 6d. nett. Allenson.)

On the occasion of taking his Doctor's degree in the University of Leipzig, Candidat Gerhard A. Wauer delivered a dissertation on the Moravian Church. This has been translated into English by John Elliott, and issued with the title, The Beginnings of the Brethren's Church in England: A Chapter of the Commerce of Thought between Germany and England. (Moravian House, Baildon, near Shipley, Yorks.) The pages are deeply interesting, and constitute an important chapter in Church History. The author seems to have prosecuted thorough research; and while on the one hand we have a delineation of the noble Zinzendorf, on the other we have glimpses of William Law, John Wesley, and other well-known Englishmen.

Mr. J. Loader, of the Middle Temple, has tabulated in THE WITNESS OF SCRIPTURE TO JESUS CHRIST (6d. Percy Lund, Humphries & Co., Limited, Bradford), under helpful classification, passages from the Revision Version, with references to parallel passages and occasional foot-notes.

Notices.

A correspondent would like to trace the entire poem in which the stanza is found:—

"I said my 'yes' to Jesus,
When He came to me that day;
For I love my Saviour dearly,
And I could not say Him 'nay.'"

Church of England.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is one of the few prelates who are at present residing in their cathedral city. Dr. and Mrs. Temple celebrated their silver wedding on Saturday.

The Bishop of Worcester (Dr. Perowne) is at present cruising in Norway, and his health is so much improved that his pending resignation of the see is likely to be deferred till after the Coronation.

Rev. G. A. Anning, Association Secretary (C.M.S.) for the diocese of Rochester, has been appointed to the benefice of St. Paul's, West Smethwick. Mr. Anning was for twelve years curate of Langley, Birmingham.

The vicarage of Islington has been offered to and accepted by Rev. C. J. Procter, vicar of Holy Trinity, Cambridge. The appointment is one which will give the greatest satisfaction, not only in Islington itself, but amongst Evangelical clergy all over the country. His brotherly sympathy and zeal for every good work have always been conspicuous, and the simple hearty services of his church, with his earnest preaching of Divine Truth, have drawn congregations of large numbers and all classes.

The memorial addressed to the Foreign Office by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Sir John Kennaway, on behalf of the Committee of the Church Missionary Society, in regard to the prosecution of missionary work in the Egyptian Soudan has not met with an encouraging response. Lord Lansdowne has "carefully considered" its contents; he has noted with pleasure the recognition by the Society of the need of caution; he cannot indicate any time when the restrictions will be removed; he will give the matter "most careful attention"—and that is all.

An encouraging report of the year's work at Aston, Birmingham, has been issued by the vicar, Canon Sutton. The strain of a parish, with a population of 43,000, has been nobly borne by the vicar and his able staff of workers, and the outlook is hopeful. In reviewing the six years he has spent at Aston, Canon Sutton says:—"That more than £30,000 should, in one form and another, have been raised in six years; that heavy liabilities have been met; that, spite of many changes, congregations keep up so well; that there is a kindly spirit and generous forbearance shown to me in my responsible work; that something has been done, if much remains to be done—all these things may well awaken in my heart a feeling of deep gratitude to God for his goodness, and of gratitude to you, my friends, helpers, parishioners, for all you have done to make my position as vicar of Aston a very happy one."

Congregational.

Rev. D. Macintosh, the blind preacher of Port Erroll, Aberdeenshire, has received a hearty invitation to the pastorate of the church at Kilsyth, in succession to Rev. M. P. Noble, now of Cambuslang.

Rev. F. T. Astbury, for several years Congregational minister at Lynton, North Devon, having accepted a unanimous invitation to become pastor of the church at Tavistock, commenced his public ministry last week.

At Bowdon, during the month of August, in view of the fact that so many people are away from home, it has become a custom for the Downs Congregational Church and the Presbyterian Church to unite their congregations. Each church in turn is closed for two Sundays, and the results of the arrangement are found to be satisfactory.

The fifty-first anniversary of the Bar Church, Scarborough, was celebrated on Sunday week, Rev. Frederick Hall, the pastor, conducting the services both morning and evening. At the latter service Mr. Hall preached on "The Rock of Ages," and gratefully acknowledged the blessing of God upon their work during the past fifty-one years.

The historic Bethnal Green Church, which dates back to the year 1668, is likely once more to have Rev. J. Stockwell Watts as pastor. It will be remembered that Mr. Watts, after a pastorate of eighteen years, resigned his charge in order to give his full attention to the Liberator Relief Fund, which was started by him to assist the victims in the great Liberator Building Society smash. As a result of his efforts a sum of £107,000 has been raised. Mr. Watts has been invited to resume his pastorate.

Baptist.

The Herne Bay Chapel became entirely free from debt on its thanksgiving day, August 15, when the pastor sat in his vestry to receive thankofferings. The amount brought in exceeded the £137 needed.

Last year's report of the Baptist Mission in Japan is particularly encouraging. The additions to the churches numbered 204, raising the membership to 2,011. A remarkable work is said to be in progress, and the present year promises to be the most successful in the history of the mission.

In connection with the settlement at Fenny Stratford of Rev. George Curtis (late of King's Cross) recognition services were recently held. The service in the afternoon was conducted by Rev. C. B. Sawday (Metropolitan Tabernacle), and in the evening a number of brother ministers took part in a public meeting, and delivered addresses.

The eighty-fifth anniversary of the Sunday school, St. George's Street, Macclesfield, was celebrated on Sunday week, when special sermons were preached by Rev. W. J. Marris, Wesleyan Superintendent, and Rev. E. A. Hobby, pastor. During the year there has been an increase of 100 scholars, principally adults. Fifty have joined the church during the year.

At a large gathering of Welsh ministers, drawn from every county in the Principality, in favour of the cessation of hostilities in South Africa, held at the Albert Hall, Llandrindod Wells, Dr. Clifford was the principal speaker. His speech favoured the terms for peace embodied in the Free Church ministers' manifesto. At the close all the ministers present signed the manifesto.

Present members and former adherents of the East London Tabernacle will rejoice to learn that Rev. E. H. Ellis, of North Adelaide, Australia, and formerly of Devonshire Square, Stoke Newington, has accepted an unanimous call to become pastor of the church, and hopes to commence his ministry with the New Year. Many will pray that this influential church will be entering upon a period of great blessing under the pastorate of Mr. Ellis. Dr. John Robertson will be the preacher during September, October, and November.

Methodist.

The Corn Exchange at Wellingborough has been taken for a year by the Primitive Methodists for evangelistic services.

Rev. Dr. Rigg (Wesleyan) has entirely recovered from his recent illness; and the reports concerning Rev. H. Price Hughes are distinctly reassuring.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference is suffering from reaction after the strain of Conference work, and has been compelled to cancel several engagements.

It is understood that Rev. W. L. Watkinson will take no part in the Ecumenical Conference, owing to his continued indisposition. Professor J. Agar Beet, D.D., will deal with "Christianity and Unbelief."

A number of American delegates to the Wesleyan Ecumenical Conference are already in London. Rev. John Bond and his committee are fully engaged in completing arrangements for the assembly, which opens on Wednesday next.

Under Rev. J. Harding the Primitive Methodist Church at Newport (Mon.) is making gratifying progress. For many years the circuit has been in difficulties, but its liabilities are now being met, and the outlook is encouraging.

The Primitive Methodists of Gnosall, near Stafford, are engaged in the erection of a chapel in place of the old edifice, in which the church has met for the last thirty years. The stone-laying ceremony was highly successful, and nearly £400 towards the cost of the building has been subscribed.

With reference to the controversy regarding the admission of Primitive Methodist students to Wesleyan Colleges, Dr. Waller, the secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Education Committee, admits that students have been required during their residence to attend the religious services. "But," he adds, "this requirement was not made with a narrow, sectarian, or proselytising purpose. We looked upon the several branches of the Methodist Church as one family, and we acted in what we believed to be a generous and fraternal spirit."

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. J. Mackay, M.A., of Hull, has been conducting the United Free Church services at Connel Ferry, near Oban, during August.

It is expected that Rev. Dr. Thomas Carter, minister of Camphill Church, Birmingham, will accept the call which he has received from Croydon. Camphill is his first charge, which he entered upon in 1890, on leaving college.

Rev. James Christie, Moderator of Synod, has left Carlisle for the Continent, and after spending a week in the Black Forest he will appear as a deputy at the Waldensian Synod, which meets at Torre Pellice, near Turin, in the beginning of September.

Society of Friends.

The returns of the Society of Friends for the last forty years, recently compiled, show that in Great Britain the membership has increased during that period from 13,844 to 17,346, or inclusive of habitual attenders, 17,034 to 25,143—an average yearly gain of about 200.

Henry E. Clark and his daughter, Ethel M. Clark, from Madagascar, are returning home. They expected to reach Marseilles by the steamer Irrawady on or about the 23rd inst. Herbert F. Standing, B.Sc., and Edouard H. Leu expect to sail from Marseilles for Madagascar on the 25th of next month.

A committee of Hardshaw East monthly meeting has been actively engaged in circulating the "Plea for a Peaceable Spirit," and has placarded Manchester and neighbouring towns with the large posters from York, with a footnote to say that copies may be obtained at the Meeting-house, Mount Street, Manchester. In addition, about 3,500 "Pleas" have been sent by post to magistrates, town councillors, secretaries, &c. In every case a circular was enclosed, offering to supply more copies if required. There has been a gratifying response, and many applications have been received for numbers for distribution, together with letters of warm approval. About 15,000 copies have already been disposed of.

The Salvation Army.

Salvation Army work has been commenced in Trinidad, St. Lucia, and Grenada.

A splendid property has been secured in Honolulu for the commencement of rescue operations.

Colonel Ropner, M.P. for Stockton, laid the foundation-stone of the new barracks in Stockton, which is to cost £2,000.

General Booth will meet 1,000 officers in congress at New York on his arrival there. He will be absent from England for a period of five months.

On Monday evening General Booth is to preside over a meeting in Exeter Hall for the purpose of bidding farewell to Commissioners Oliphant, McKie, McAlonan, and Higgins, who are proceeding to take charge of the Salvation Army work in Germany, Australia, Sweden, and India respectively.

During last month, 1,522 patients were treated at the "Catherine Booth" Hospital and Dispensary at Nagercoil, which has recently been extended. V. I. Kesana Pillay, M.A., who laid the foundation stone, bore testimony to the valuable work done through the hospital at the time of the recent cholera epedemic.

During the past twelve months no fewer than 55,718 coolies have been sheltered in the Social Institutions in Barbadoes and British Guiana, and cheap food supplied to the value of over £2,000 in the colony. Plans have been formulated for the extension of the social work to the Sugar Estates in Guiana, especially with a view to influencing for good the large numbers of East Indian immigrants there.

Another settlement has been established in Zululand. The latest report received, referring to Captain Bennie, the officer in charge, says that he is busy making his bricks, having to make his own bricks and build his own house. He spends his week ends visiting kraals and holding meetings in the little grass barracks which he has already built. A number of natives have already sought salvation.

Fallen Asleep.

In the eightieth year of his age, fifty-fifth of his Wesleyan ministry, Rev. JOSEPH HIRST, Douglas.—A notable figure in the life of Wesleyan Methodism at Whitby has been removed by the death of Mr. RICHARD JACKSON, of Lythe.—Rev. W. TONKIN (Congregational minister), late of Shelley, at the age of fifty-six.—By the sudden death of Mr. J. A. P. SMITH, the Presbyterian congregation at Stratford, E., has lost one of its most active and devoted workers.—Mr. JACOB FRANCE (eighty-two), for nearly fifty years head master of Winsford Wesleyan Day Schools.—A member and office bearer of Higherland Primitive Methodist Church, Newcastle-under-Lyme, of fifty years standing, has passed away in the person of Mr. W. MILLWARD.—Rev. JOSEPH LLOYD BRERETON, M.A., Prebendary of Exeter, and rector of Little Massingham, King's Lynn. As a country rector, he took the keenest interest in the social and general condition of his parishioners and neighbours.—After a few hours illness, at Dadford, Buckingham, Lieut.-Col. JOHN GRAHAM, aged sixty-seven years; a highly esteemed and devout Christian, and champion of the rights of the animal creation.—At Portadown, Rev. JOHN CARSON, Methodist minister, aged sixty-six years.—Rev. GEORGE FFRENCH, Canon of Killaloe, and for twenty-five years rector of Shinrone, aged sixty-six years.

Notes & Comments

The Dispensation of the Spirit on Earth. The human mind, like a pendulum, swings from side to side, and seldom holds the truths of the Gospel steadily in equal proportion. Time was when the Holy Spirit was called It, and when among Christians the presence and influence of the Spirit were recognized in the gathered assembly far more than in the individual. Now we emphasize the Holy Spirit, and while we call this the dispensation of the Spirit, we may not remember that it is equally the dispensation of the risen Christ; and that his High-priestly ministry in heaven is as essential to our growth in grace as is the ministry of the indwelling Spirit while we are on earth.

The Dispensation of Christ in Heaven. When Jesus said that He would send another Comforter, or Advocate, or Paraclete—the Holy Spirit, He did not cease to be our Comforter, our Paraclete, our Advocate with the Father. The Holy Spirit is the Father's Paraclete sent down to us, to speak with us for God; Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, is our Paraclete in heaven, able to save unto the uttermost those who come unto God by Him, seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for them.

The New Bishop of Durham. A correspondent of The Times, in a letter on Dr. Handley Moule's translation, remarks that "where Westcott found his solution in the Incarnation, Dr. Moule will probably look for his in the Atonement." There is a vital difference between these two methods of solution, which affects the foundations of Gospel truth. The former supposes the elevation of man, as born of Adam, by God's participation in human nature. The latter is based upon the fact that the Incarnation was the first step of a descent by the incarnate God to the cross, the grave, and Hades.

Incarnation and Atonement. The Incarnation did not elevate man, it humbled God; for "except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The sin of man was damnatorily judged when "He who knew not sin was made sin for us": when "God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." The solution was not made by the Incarnation, but by the Incarnation and the death and the resurrection of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. The only solution is, "Ye must be born again." It would have been impossible for children of Adam to be born again if Jesus had not died and risen, and thus "opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers."

One Result of Slandering Missionaries. The shameful slanders that have been published in the Press about the conduct of missionaries in China have had the melancholy result of seriously diminishing the income of some of the societies. The light-hearted way in which such accusations have been made against innocent men in some secular organs is not creditable to the writers who perpetrated them. Seldom do the same journals publish the refutation, and their readers are thus left permanently in the dark as to the truth. Fortunately, in this country the Press is less unscrupulous, and the real facts finally find their way to the public ear. In order to meet the mischief in America, a general council in the interests of foreign missions has been held, whose chief purpose is to reinstate the missionary cause in public favour, and to stir up the generosity of the Churches towards it. We wish it every success in its laudable object.

Army Chaplains in South Africa. A little while ago, wild charges were freely circulated in the secular press against our missionaries in China, who were indiscriminately accused of being the real instigators of the Boxer revolt, and afterwards, of basely forsaking their posts. The truth has since been published, and it is shown that these charges, so far at least as Protestant missionaries were concerned, were altogether unfounded. Now it is the turn of our chaplains with the armies in South Africa to come under the lash. Mr. Menpes in his book "War Impressions," has denounced all but the Roman Catholic chaplains of inefficiency (and worse) in the conduct of their duty, and his words have been freely circulated in newspaper reviews, in which such charges are sure to be "lifted" in the interests of "good copy." Fortunately, however, these accusations can be put to a convincing test, and it is as well that this should be done at once, so that the charge and its refutation may go into the world together.

The Charge Refuted. Mr. Menpes specially refers, in his attack on the Army chaplains, to those that accompanied the army of the Modder and the advance to Bloemfontein. These are the words in which Rev. E. P. Lowry, the senior Wesleyan chaplain rebuts the charge against his colleagues:—

> When Lord Methuen's force reached the Modder River where Mr. Menpes joined us, there were with that force three commissioned chaplains—viz., an Anglican, to whom for his wise and timely services was given the D.S.O. and promotion to a first-class chaplaincy, ranking as full colonel; there was a Presbyterian, who for very notable work not only received the D.S.O. and promotion to a second-class chaplaincy, but has also just had conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.D. by his Scottish University; and there was also a Roman Catholic chaplain, a kindly-hearted man, who would be the last to claim for himself any superior gifts or grace, and whom fever very soon sent to the base hospital, so that we saw him no more. Beside these were two "acting chaplains," one a Colonial Anglican, whom one of the London weekly illustrateds made the subject of a double-paged picture, in commemoration of his devotion to duty at Belmont; but he also was soon disabled by fever and sent home.

The "other culprit" was Mr. Lowry himself, who was mentioned in Lord Roberts' despatches for "meritorious service"—the highest recognition that could be given to one who was merely an Acting Chaplain, and the men themselves out of their poverty gave him a gold watch as a token of their warm gratitude for his services. Surely military distinctions are not given so lavishly to non-combatants as to make this crushing rejoinder to irresponsible attacks of no avail!

The British Chautauqua. The increasing success that marks the annual gathering of the "British Chautauqua" is a gratifying sign of the times. These gatherings, in which the delights of a happy holiday are united to opportunity for study on high and helpful subjects, are calculated to do great good to those who attend them; and the religious exercises and addresses with which the general lectures are interspersed permeate the teaching with a spiritual corrective and stimulus. Specially helpful is the training given to Sunday-school teachers in their all-important work. Many go back to their classes with a new ideal of their function, and a more consecrated determination to do their best to bring the truth home to the conscience as well as the intelligence of their scholars.

The Children's Bill. In our issue of August 1, when the Children's Bill was in a drooping condition, it was inadvertently referred to as "dropped." It is with the utmost satisfaction that we now correct this error. The Act, which was duly passed, though we regret to say in a very emasculated form, will come into operation on Wednesday, January 1, 1902. Our readers will notice with interest the warm tribute paid to the efforts of Mr. C. Herbert Tritton on behalf of the Bill.

Temperance Reform in Liverpool. The Liverpool licensing bench has, for some time, been the pioneer of municipal licensing reform. It has made another bold step in the cleansing of the city life by announcing its intention to object to the renewal of sixty-four licenses which are included in a certain "demolition area" which is of a notoriously insanitary kind. The significant elements in this action are the surrender of the old notion that the function of a licensing bench is strictly judicial, and the acceptance of the principle that its members are there not to safeguard a certain "business" interest, but to see after the welfare of the community at large. If these enlightened principles were more generally acknowledged and widely followed, we should soon see a social revolution of the profoundest kind. Already the "black spot on the Mersey" is a different place from what it was some years ago; and the improvement continues year by year. Under similar watchful and courageous methods the whole country would benefit in a way almost beyond belief.

"Treating." Publicans have been heard to confess that three-quarters of the money taken over their bars is "treat-money." Many, perhaps the majority of drunkards have developed their craving through the "social" use of intoxicants. This is so all over the world. At Philadelphia a society has been started, known as the National Anti-Treating Society, whose aim is to combat this particular form of temptation to drink, and it is doing good work.

It would be an untold blessing if this Society had a branch in every town and village in our own country. Whether that be done or not, the pledge undertaken by the members is worth making into an individual rule by all :—

Pledge :—God helping me, I do solemnly pledge myself not to give or treat anyone to intoxicating liquors, or to accept the same from others (cases of actual need in sickness excepted), and I will use my influence with others to uphold these principles.

Alcoholism and Consumption. Dr. Longhurst contributes to the Church of England Temperance Chronicle an article full of striking facts upon the relation between Alcoholism and Consumption. Now that medical men are devoting themselves, aided by the discoveries of modern science, to grapple with this dread disease as never before, Dr. Longhurst justly contends that the scourge of alcoholism must be taken into consideration as a great factor in the spread of the disease. The statistics he gives amply justify his contention—barmen heading the list of the incurables. Every effort should be made to uproot the popular prejudices which regard spirituous liquors as containing nourishment and strength. The popular mind needs correcting upon many of its favourite illusions, both as regards food, health, and disease. With all our advancement, dense ignorance concerning the commonest matters of life reigns among the people, and until this is removed the work of all who seek to render physical life normal will be very difficult.

The Vice of Absent-Mindedness. Are the following facts symptomatic of a growing habit of hurry and carelessness in the public mind? We are told in the Postmaster-General's report that there was last year more than the usual amount of heedlessness with regard to letters and parcels relating to money and valuables. "Articles found loose in the post increased by 12 per cent., and are more than twice as numerous as four years ago. £902 worth of coin escaped from packets; and 349,690 packets were posted unaddressed, while the value of property found in undelivered letters amounted to £681,335"! The lack of self-restraint, the absorption of mind in other business than that in hand at the moment, revealed in this summary, is melancholy reading. But what is it compared with the colossal heedlessness of the multitude regarding "treasure in heaven"? There are few things more tragic in life than the way men persist in neglecting the things that really matter, in the pursuit of the momentary affairs and fleeting business of the world.

The Marriage Tie. One of the sources of laxity in regard to the marriage bond is the absence of uniformity in the marriage code of different nations, which enables the rich who desire to obtain a divorce by irregular means to travel to some foreign country, and so to evade their own national law. Judge Phillimore, in a paper read at Glasgow before the International Law Association, threw out a hint that if it is impossible to get all civilized nations to agree to a common code, it might at least be possible to get them to agree that those contracting marriage should always be subject—wherever they might be—to their own national law. This would put an end to such a scandal as recently consigned a peer of the realm to Holloway jail. The more indissoluble the family tie is made, the less temptation will there be to enter upon it hastily, and to tamper with its sacred obligations afterwards.

The Exiled Priests. So we are to have the exiled Assumptionists in London! Cardinal Vaughan is going to "create a new parish" in London, and place it under the care of the "Assumptionist Fathers" driven from France. This is a curious comment upon the "rebuke" which, it is alleged, was some time ago administered to this order from Rome for undue interference with politics. The Cardinal applauds what other dignitaries condemn. The Catholic Times naively remarks: "The spirit which the Cardinal has displayed will, we feel sure, unlock fountains of practical sympathy for the exiles in other countries as well as in England." The action of Cardinal Vaughan is purely personal, and it is by no means the action of the English people. Indeed, English people generally will regard it as a grave indiscretion to pay such deference to an order which has so seriously troubled French life. As for the "other countries," all indications point to the fact that they are tired to death of troublesome monks.

Redemption by Evolution? The "silly season" subjects this year have been graver than usual. In one of the London dailies a lengthy correspondence is proceeding upon the question, "Is the world growing better or worse?" Naturally a great many wise, and a great many foolish things are written by the various correspondents. The notion enunciated by those who take an optimistic view of things seems to be that the race is being redeemed by evolution. As one correspondent puts it, "The passage of life is from innocence, through temptation to virtue." This sentiment is simply the echo of teaching which is gaining currency in many quarters. It is both foolish and false, since it ignores obvious facts, and therefore is thoroughly misleading. The study of a correspondence such as the present one reveals clearly how far astray many clever men have wandered both in their estimate of the radical mischief at the heart of the human race, and the radical remedy provided for it in the Gospel. Very many indications clearly reveal that the present generation has not learned either the alphabet of sin or the alphabet of redemption.

Sand or Rock. Just as beneath the troubled surface of the sea there are still depths which the storm never reaches, there are many lives peaceful under the Divine assurance that God is with them, and that, therefore, no man shall set on them to hurt them. Their spiritual convictions are so strong in their very simplicity, that they remain quiet and peaceful while tempests of controversy rage above them. They keep themselves, and are kept, aloof from all the vexed questions of science, of the "higher criticism," of the laws of prayer, and of degeneration or of expansion. They do not cry to be led by dogmatic authority, and they escape the disturbing elements which trouble those who have built upon shifting foundations. The secret of their peace is that they are of those of whom Jesus said, "Blessed are they who have not seen and yet have believed," whose faith rests not upon book-knowledge, but love. It is not that they possess a religion; their religion possesses them.

Duties Versus Rights. Rev. J. H. Sugden in a little volume of "Pleasant Half Hours," in which an endeavour is made to define the boundaries of Socialism upon Christian lines, says:—"That is only a poor religion which teaches men to look so intently to the future as to make them forget the present." The late Bishop of Durham strongly expressed a similar view, and was able to find a spiritual meaning even in Democracy, which he thus defined:—

The idea of Democracy is not, if we look below the surface, so much a form of government as a confession of common duties and common responsibilities. True Democracy, and in this lies its abiding strength, substitutes duties for rights.

The Hour of Worship—and After. The habit of miscellaneous conversation among worshippers immediately Divine service is over is one that should be discouraged. The hour of communion with the Unseen loses its best influence on the soul if, after devotional exercises and spiritual teaching, the effect is to be immediately dissipated by turning to the trivialities of social intercourse. Better take the opportunity to speak in a brotherly way to strangers. Many who wander into strange places of worship go away desolate and unhappy, because the sense of welcome and comradeship in the congregation has been conspicuous by its absence. A kind word, on the other hand, often drives home the message of the sermon with gentle power. But even in this, a tactful spirit, as well as a little courage, is needful to know when and how to speak.

The Glorification of the Organ. What is the function of the organ in public worship? Ideally it is to support, stimulate, and colour, the singing of choir and congregation in the worship of God. When this function is heartily and reverently performed, and strictly subordinated to the human voice, it is a real help to the spiritual exercises. In many instances, however, the organ, like other instrumentalities, is in danger of being a fetish. When churchmen begin to rebel against the tyranny of organists there is an assurance that something is wrong. One correspondent forcibly writes:—

You are not allowed even to say the Lord's Prayer in peace, and, in some places, if you want to read the Holy Bible you are played down to the lectern and back, like a circus pony!

In many churches even the brief pauses between the vocal parts of worship are sedulously filled in with chords and cadences by the organist, and a solemn, heart-searching quietude is unknown. It has been said that "worship and silence are twin-sisters." Whether this be so or not, there should be a brief space for silence permitted here and there.

Monte Carlo. Rarely has the devilry of Monte Carlo been so exposed as in a recent article in La Revue du Christianisme Social. Even gamblers might be startled if this ensemble of facts could be brought to their notice. Without passion, but with terrible incisiveness, the contrast is drawn between the Eden without and the hell within. Both nature and art have been outraged in the interests of inhuman monsters who have prostituted the fairest things to the most sinister uses. The annual profits of the Casino amount to twenty-five millions of francs. The expenses are heavy—one item including an annual payment of half a million francs to journalists, in order to secure their silence concerning unpleasant matters!!! The scoundrel who manages this death-trap has gathered around him, at easy distances, no less than 2,000 "filles de joie et de proie"—unhappy creatures whom he designates his "flying squadron." The number of suicides is astonishing. The Casino, "so modest in its appreciation," relates only thirty-five suicides (but as a fact there are nearly 300) per annum. M. de Marolles counts more than 2,000 since the year 1860.

The Claims of Christ.—II.

By PRINCIPAL McCAIG, Pastors' College.

LET us consider (II.) the claims which Christ makes as to Moral Pre-eminence. I do not so much mean what He claimed for Himself as what He claimed from others. What He claimed from others in the moral sphere supposes his own moral pre-eminence. Of course, it would be easy also to show that He actually claimed that directly for Himself. For example, He claimed to be without sin: "Which of you convinceth Me of sin?"; to be superior to the assaults of Satan: "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me"; to live in unbroken fellowship with the Father: "I am not alone, but the Father is with Me"; to do the will of God perfectly: "I do always those things that please Him." "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do."

The whole account of the Evangelists bears out these assertions. He is depicted as perfect in every respect, and it is noticeable that while He inculcates the duty of repentance upon all others, He never feels the need of repenting Himself. He never asks forgiveness. He is always

ABSOLUTELY UNCONSCIOUS OF SIN.

This of itself is a fruitful topic, but I pass on to note how his moral pre-eminence is indicated by the demands which He makes upon men. Thus we notice that He claims the perfect love of human hearts. "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me, and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me." He claims the complete surrender of the will. "Follow Me" is his constant demand. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me."

He claims absolute obedience. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." "If ye love Me, keep my commandments." He claims devotion unto death. "He that doth not take up his cross, and follow after Me, is not worthy of Me; he that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves." "Ye shall be delivered up even by parents and kinsfolk, brethren and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death;" and yet in view of this appalling prospect He still bids them follow Him. He claims, to mention no other points, the perfect homage of the whole being, declaring that it is the will of the Father "that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father."

Again we say this claim to moral pre-eminence means nothing less than

A CLAIM TO ABSOLUTE DEITY.

No man has a right to make such demands upon his fellows; nor would any man be warranted in complying with such demands made by a fellow-creature. It would be intolerable egotism, it would be the climax of blasphemous pretension, for any mere man or for any created intelligence, however high he might rank in the scale of being, to speak thus. The language only becomes the lips of God, and yet, strange to say, we feel that there is no incongruity in Jesus using them. The language seems well to befit his lips, and from unnumbered thousands He has obtained unstinted and practical recognition of his claims.

III. He makes certain claims as to Spiritual Prerogative. He claims to be able to forgive sins. To the sinful woman whose repentance had been called forth by coming within the sphere of his gracious influence, He says, in tones no less sovereign than tender, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." In circumstances of the gravest character He makes the same claim. Besides the ordinary crowds gathered round Him there were Pharisees and doctors of the law, who had come out of every town of Galilee, and Judæa, and Jerusalem, as representatives of the classes, solemn delegates who were not to be carried away by the wave of popular feeling, but who meant to scan and criticise his every deed and word, eagerly watching for the possibility of entrapping Him.

Soon they get something to startle them. The palsied man is placed before Him, and in his own sublime way Christ says, "Man, thy sins are forgiven thee." To these learned critics it seems as if the heavens must fall at the sound of such blasphemy, and they say querulously, half-scornfully and half-wonderingly, yet withal truthfully, "Who can forgive sins but God alone?" Jesus calmly meets the question, which is at once a criticism, a taunt, a condemnation, and a challenge, by giving as a guarantee of his truthfulness. "That ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, He saith to the sick of the palsy, Arise, take up thy couch, and go unto thy house."

By their silence, when He asks whether it is easier to forgive sins or to heal the disease, they admit that Divine power alone can heal the disease, and Divine power alone, they say, can forgive sins. That ye may know that I have this power, says Jesus, behold its effect upon this man. Ye see my word takes effect upon his physical frame, and accomplishes what no human word could do. Then you may believe that the word of forgiveness which I have spoken has equally taken effect, though you cannot see the results. It is almost a mathematical demonstration. Many priestlings have claimed, and still claim, power to forgive sins; when they can show that they are able by a word to remove physical evils, we may begin seriously to consider that claim to remove moral ills by their absolvo te. Christ submits his claim to the fullest and most searching investigation without fear of the result.

THE REST GIVER.

He claims to give rest of soul: a wonderful claim, in view of the known impossibility of satisfying the human heart. The unsatisfying nature of all earthly pursuits is proverbial. Pleasure, fame, riches, human religion, all fail to give true and abiding rest. Augustine's confession is still the expression of the truest philosophy of human nature—"O Lord, Thou hast made us for Thyself, and our souls are restless till they rest in Thee." Yet Jesus says, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." Most expressive is the phrase. It is not the giving of a recipe for securing rest, as some have put it; nor is it the giving of the blessing of rest in any abstract sense, but it is in Christ Himself that the rest is to be found. "I will rest you." This transcending promise has been actually fulfilled in the experience of countless thousands, who could say with Bonar:—

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Come unto Me and rest."
. . . . . .
I came to Jesus as I was,
Weary, and worn, and sad;
I found in Him a resting-place,
And He has made me glad.

Christ further claims to bestow eternal life. "I give unto my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish." Life is the mystery that baffles science. It is beyond human power to impart life in its humblest forms where it is lacking; but Christ promises spiritual life, eternal life, and insures the receivers of it against perishing. He claims to introduce men to the Father. That is implied in the giving of spiritual life, the essence of which is fellowship with God; but He specifically declares that approach to God, admission to his favour and fellowship, can only be obtained through Himself. "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me."

In fine, He claims to enlighten and bless throughout life, to be the Food, the Guide, the Light of men's spirits; to reward after death, to raise up from the grave, to receive into glory, and to banish into endless woe.

Such claims as to prerogative mean nothing less than absolute Divinity. It would be utterly absurd to suppose it possible for any man or angel to do what Christ claims to be able to do. Remembering the meekness and humility by which He was distinguished, it is all the more remarkable and significant to find Him on these points so grandly, so augustly self-assertive. That his claims should be seriously considered shows their naturalness; that so many should have acknowledged them shows their reasonableness. His character supplies

A BASIS FOR HIS CLAIMS.

There is the presumption that such a Personage would claim nothing but his right, and there is the momentous fact that the closest examination of his character and conduct reveals nothing inconsistent with such claims; this vastly increases the strongest presumption in his favour. Then we have to remember that the Evangelists represent Him as speaking by Divine inspiration—the Spirit without measure having been given unto Him. And, indeed, it will be generally admitted that if anyone ever spoke under Divine inspiration, Jesus of Nazareth so spake. Even those who reject his Deity acknowledge this, and speak eulogistically of the beauty and profundity and unparalleled character of his teaching. But

HIS CLAIMS ARE PART OF HIS TEACHING.

His utterances on these points shared in the quality of inspiration. Unless his inspiration is a delusion, and all inspiration a dream, his claims must be allowed. On the lowest ground, if the Gospel accounts are true, Jesus of Nazareth was either the Son of God, the Sovereign Lord, the supreme Object of love and adoration, or He forfeits all claim to be considered as a man of common truth and honesty. He stands condemned as a blasphemous pretender or a self-deceived fanatic. Those who lived nearest to Him and knew Him best were convinced of the truth of his claims. His miracles attested the truth of his teaching. His resurrection abundantly justified every statement He had made. The history of Christianity is a continued proof of the supernatural working of the Living Christ. With the great army of believing souls throughout the ages we fall at his feet and adoringly exclaim:

"Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ."
"My Lord and My God."

Salisbury Conference.—The annual Conference of Believers at Salisbury is fixed to take place September 23-29. The opening sermon will be preached in Fisherton Church by Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, vicar of Tunbridge Wells, the subsequent gatherings being held in the Maundrel Hall. A feature of the Conference will be the afternoon meetings, at which many branches of Christian service—at home and abroad—will be represented. Full particulars of all the gatherings, and arrangements for visitors, will be sent on receipt of stamped envelope, by Rev. E. N. Thwaites, Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury.

The Preaching That Wins.

By CHARLES COOK.

I AM presuming that we depend alone upon the Spirit to do his own work. I am taking for granted that our lives are consistent, yet there may be an ignorance of the best methods. It is not enough that we know what sword to use, but we must know how to use it; we may attack our enemy with the flat of it, instead of cutting with its keen edge, or piercing to the marrow with its fine point. It is not enough that we use the Word of God, but that we be workmen needing not to be ashamed, "rightly dividing the Word of Truth." First as to the matter to be used in the winning of souls.

THE MATTER.

Much depends upon a wise choice of texts, and if we are to be effectual in the awakening of sleeping spirits—if, in the hands of the life-giving Holy Spirit, we aim at being used to quicken dead souls—we must seek out words calculated to arouse the careless, and alarm the unconcerned. From out the armoury of the Lord of Hosts we must select and display such death-dealing weapons as shall frighten his enemies into submission to his will, and to surrender at his feet. We must aim at conviction! I never rise to speak to the unsaved but I question myself, "Is the text from which I am about to preach calculated to arouse the sinner, and bring his guilt home to the conscience?" And this ever leads me to the Word to seek heart-searching questions, such as "What wilt thou say when He shall punish thee?" "The great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" "How much owest thou my Lord?" "What wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?"

One should look upon a congregation as dead ouls that need awakening from a sleep of death; as men who, unconscious of their danger, are "condemned already," and need to be shown their position. The most direct home-thrust possible, the most heart-piercing text you can find, should be launched at the citadel which defies Immanuel, and a most definite and distinct attack made on the understanding, the conscience, and the heart of the sinner.

I remember a beloved brother, when speaking at an open-air Gospel meeting, taking as his text, "The Church, which is his body." I was but a boy, and he a beloved elder brother, but I dared to think I could have done better myself. Two old whalers in the Orkneys were criticizing the sermon to which they had listened in the kirk close by:—

"Well, Jamie, what did ye think of the sermon?"

"Eh, mon, it was verra guid; but there were nae harpoons in it."

That's the trouble! our addresses may be very good, well arranged, quite orthodox, but there are so few harpoons in them. To change the figure, if we fish with flies, see to it that fish-hooks glisten underneath!

THE MANNER.

"He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed," is the spirit in which we must labour. Murray McCheyne, when too ill to preach, asked a friend, "What did the minister preach from?" "Oh, 'He that believeth not shall be damned,'" replied the visitor. "Oh, what grace he must have needed, to speak from so solemn a subject!" said the invalid. It is possible, through close intimacy with the "Man of Sorrows," to have sympathy with those whose faces are towards hell, and whose hearts are far from God; and though one be a very Boanerges there may be blended the spirit of a Barnabas; as we make full proof of our ministry as a "Son of Thunder," yet may we become a veritable "Son of Consolation" to many who have been awakened to the verities of the Judgment Day, and are trembling at the thought of an undone eternity.

I confess how much I am indebted to the late J. M. Scroggie. He was preaching at Bristol, and I was resting. His address was on "Christ weeping over Jerusalem." I have never heard anyone speak so solemnly on the realities of eternity, the value of a soul, the hopelessness of those who die rejecting Christ, and yet withal there was such a loving spirit evinced, such a gentle manner seen, that you felt the man who was preaching loved you, and was laying himself out to win you to where he was, and that his heart was weeping in its longing loving desire to see you blessed also. We need to know the meaning of self-effacement and self-abasement; and there must be an absence of all unreality, and no puny attempt to copy bigger men than ourselves.

One Sunday a young lady came to the tent at Shepherd's Bush, and was blessed. Reaching home, she put her arms round the neck of her unsaved brother, saying, "O George, I do want you to love Jesus! I do long to see you converted." The family retired to rest; but at one o'clock the brother woke them up, saying, "I want to find Jesus. I must be saved as my sister is." He had been loved into the Kingdom.

So we must by our manner, as well as by our matter, win the unsaved to Jesus—put your arms round their neck in love, and the rest is easy work. While there is any distance between the evangelist and the people, there is little chance of souls being won; while there is any difference between the preacher and those to whom he speaks, they are not at one. We need to be, as the French would say, en rapport with the people, and when they see we are of themselves and love them, when they see this in our manner they are drawn to us. Thus, having influence over them, we easily win them to our Lord."

THE METHOD.

"He that winneth souls is wise." God saves men not by foolish preaching, but by "the foolishness of preaching." Some preachers are so rough and rugged in their preaching that there is little of the winsome attraction which God commends and the Holy Spirit uses. Wisdom is required, and the wise preacher will—

(1) "Speak to the mind to produce conviction"; he will tell of ruin and of the need of regeneration and of redemption. He will warn men of their death, which is possible, of the coming of our Lord, which is probable, of the grieving away of the Holy Spirit, and of the impossible, viz., their being saved when they have "done despite to the Spirit of Grace." When there has been an intelligent setting forth of the lost condition of the whole unsaved world, then we may

(2) Speak to the heart to produce emotion. A little pathos is at times a mighty power! "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." Tell of his mighty love in dying! speak of his sufferings on behalf of sinners; but ask the question, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto My sorrow." Tell no anecdote, use no illustration merely for the telling sake, but as you seek to state, to illustrate, to demonstrate, a wisely-chosen incident coming from the heart, redolent with the perfume of the heart's gratitude and love, will tell where logical argument may fail to reach.

Do we use an apposite illustration? it is because there are thousands who can appreciate and understand it, while there are few who can follow a complicated argument, or seek the solution of a problem. Here is a story that touched my heart, and I have applied it recently for all it is worth:—

A man employed at the docks fell into the water, and was with great difficulty rescued by a fellow-workman. In the evening a woman with two little children approached the rescuer, saying—

"Are you the man that saved my husband?"

"Yes, I am."

"Well, these two little boys want to kiss the man that saved their father."

The workman wiped his mouth with his sleeve, and stooped down while the children kissed him.

The woman then said, "And I—I—feel—that I—I—would like to kiss him too."

"And so you shall, my lass," and, with an extra wipe of his mouth, the man leaned towards the wife who imprinted on his manly cheek a holy, matronly kiss which told of her gratitude and love.

(3) Appeal to the will to effect persuasion. To win the man, you must gain his will. Exhort men to strike while the iron is hot. Seneca said, "I know the right, but I do the wrong." On the ground of what has gone before, implore men to act upon their convictions; to do the will of God from the heart; to accept Christ while they may—bid them to surrender. A French admiral whom Nelson had conquered, held out his hand. "Your sword first," demanded Nelson. The Lord's people "shall be made willing in the day of his power."

"We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord;" and when the penitent soul cries, "Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?" that soul is a saved soul, for "no man can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Go not before the Spirit; do not "rush" men into the Kingdom. Let them count the cost; but, given that men are awakened and alarmed, that their hearts' feelings have been touched, that their own sins and the Saviour's sufferings have searched their consciences, then by all the glories of heaven and the horrors of hell, by the joy of the redeemed and the misery of the lost through the countless ages of eternity, bid men and women no longer halt between two opinions, but there and then say, "As for me, and my house, we will serve the Lord."

"Lives o' Men."

By Dr. Balgarnie, Bishop Auckland.

Shove her off! spring on board! set the rudder! face the deep!
Keep her straight till we're safe across the bar.
Let her scud before the breeze, the winds that onward sweep—
Away beyond the headlands with foaming border keep,
Its rocky crags, its caverns, and daring smuggler's leap.
Then away to the fishing grounds afar.

O happy is the life of the fisherman afloat;
It is free as the winds that blaw.
The only chief we own is the Captain of the boat,
He rules from English Foreland to stormy John O'Groat.
We are free as the white sea maw,
We are free as the white sea maw.

Throw the nets! let them down for the harvest of the sea!
They're baited by our lassies on the shore.
Our steersman, we can see, is still tough at sixty-three.
His boatmates, we'll agree, have the stuff to do or dee.
By our day's work there will be enough for you and me;
Enough to keep the she wolf from the door.

O happy is the life that we fishermen have led,
It is free as the winds that blaw.
The Ruler of the sea, He provides our daily bread;
The Giver of all good, He supplies the fountain head.
We are fed like the white sea maw,
We are fed like the white sea maw.

Hurrah! the nets are full; turn her head towards the coast!
Pull her back towards headquarters! hoist the sail!
Rest lies beyond the breakers where storms of life are past;
Escape from toil and danger, and shelter from the blast;
And welcome from our ain folks while taking down the mast,
Our anchor's fixed secure within the vail.

O happy is the life of the fisherman and good,
It is caller as the winds that blaw.
Our hands laved by the water, our souls washed in the blood;
We'll reach the shore in safety that lies beyond the flood.
We'll be whiter than the white sea maw,
We'll be whiter than the white sea maw.

We have anchored in the gloaming, we are safe at eventide;
Been welcomed by our leal folks on the shore.
In harbour with our Captain, in service with his Bride,
With fishermen of Galilee, now princes at his side;
With ransomed of all nations brought in from far and wide,
We are safe within his home for evermore.

O happy is the life of the fisherman afloat,
It is free as the winds that blaw.
The Ruler of the waters is the Captain of the boat,
The blessings He has promised come from One that faileth not.
We are safe as the white sea maw,
We are safe as the white sea maw.

From the Karawanken Mountains.—1.

"FORGET not all his benefits," said our travelling companion, Dr. Baedeker, one morning as the train was carrying us through the beautiful scenery of the Tyrol. "The little blue flower, reflecting the sky, seems to bring a direct message from Him: 'Forget me not.'" The birds chirping in the trees seem to take up the note. 'Forget me not,' echoed the leaping brook as it jumped over the craggy rocks, an emblem of life in its quickening progress. 'Forget me not,' shouted the rushing waterfall, and the falling avalanche repeated it with thundering voice. Every blade of grass speaks to us, as well as the mountain-giants which bathe their hoary heads in mist and eternal snow. The pine, straight and tall, that clings to the rock, resisting the fury of winds and storm, tells out the impressive language of creation: "I am on the rock, therefore I stand. I am taking of the abundance of water which is hidden in its bosom, therefore I am evergreen."

We have crossed the frontier, and before us lies Carinthia, with its own beauty. Picturesque villages are unfolded before our eyes. As we pass by groups of men and women stop in their hay-making and reaping, children shout and wave their hands. From yonder mountain top old ruins beckon to the passing travellers. All seems beautiful. Yet this lovely province is, we hear, sunk in superstition, immorality, and drunkenness.

"ALL HAVE SINNED."

"And every prospect pleases, and only man is vile." Dr. Baedeker, in trying to convey the Gospel to an interesting and intelligent fellow-traveller, makes a remark to this effect. The man pulls himself together.

Sin? Why should it be common to all? He personally felt himself free of it, and his children were so well brought up that they would never sin. The Bible? Yes, he knew the book. It was a most wonderful romance. He studied it, because it was useful in his socialistic expositions: but he did not believe in any salvation for man, except through education. What an illustration of John iii. 3: "Except a man be born again he cannot perceive the kingdom of God." The end of our journey closes the discussion.

A half-hour's drive from Villach brings us to Schloss Treffen. The mistress of this beautifully-situated summer residence in the Karawanken mountains is a stately lady, with charming manners, and a marked individuality. She is a staunch Protestant, using her means in the service of the Gospel for the support of orphanages, schools, deaconesses, and evangelists, here and near her winter seat, Russiz, in Istria. She is also one who does not fear to stand alone with her convictions in encouraging and helping the "Los von Rom" movement.

LONGING FOR FREEDOM.

What is the meaning of the cry for freedom from the domination of Rome? Its first cause was a political one. The Romish Church always had more docile subjects in the Slavs than in the Northern races. Most of her troubles came from the latter. Her present efforts in the parliament as well as in the spiritual government tend to make Slavs of Germans by such methods as sending Tchech priests to entirely German congregations. Prague, with its 30,000 German Catholics, has not one German priest.

The Austrians, jealous of their nationality, would not be robbed of their rights and language. Seeing the prosperity and higher moral standard of Protestant countries, they begin to long for something better than the actual state of things. So the battle cry is raised. Two years ago at Teplitz, a well-known watering place in Bohemia, the first Romanists, for a long period of years, joined the Protestant Church, and others throughout the land soon followed their example. Believers in and outside of Austria looked, at first, with doubtful eyes upon the movement. For they knew that people may be Protestants and yet devoid of Christian life. But the convincing Spirit of truth does not let Himself be easily quenched. Hearts once opened to Evangelical teaching soon learn to love the Gospel for its own sake.

The thirst and hunger for the Word of God is increasing, not only in Bohemia, but also in other lands, overleaping political boundaries and national questions; for there is a similar movement among the Slavs, which will be spoken of later on.

Within the last two years about 10,000 persons in the Austrian Empire have severed themselves from Rome. This is a magnificent number, if we consider the obstacles and difficulties which are placed in the way of converts. Of course it is not meant that all of these are regenerate people.

DIFFICULTIES TO BE FACED.

According to law, every Austrian subject is free to choose his own religion, after completing his fourteenth year; but in reality this freedom does not exist. Officers of the Government who have turned Protestants have at once been dismissed from office, and soldiers and pupils have been punished for the same reason. Many, therefore, are not able to manifest their convictions, and others, who do so, have to contend with other difficulties. The Catholic priesthood and press do all they can to slander Protestantism. They openly demand that the Government should combat the "treasonable movement," and the Government is acquiescent enough to prohibit assemblies where religious addresses are to take place; to confiscate pamphlets which formerly could be easily propagated; to seize newspapers favouring the movement; and to open letters which are suspected of containing Protestant matter. We need not speak of the many petty persecutions which are set on foot by the priests, for these are a matter of course.

Further difficulties affect the Protestant ministry, and may appeal to those living in spiritual luxury. How are the hungry thousands to be fed?

The Protestants hitherto have only formed two per cent. of the entire population, the members of one parish being thinly scattered over many districts, so that the pastors had in some cases more than their due share of work. The addition of members called for additional pastoral help, which Austria alone was not able to supply. The Christians of Germany and Switzerland come willingly forward, but as foreign applicants require first the sanction of the High Consistory and of the Government, the latter, playing into the hands of the Jesuits, often refuse such sanction, and sometimes expel the candidates. Nothwithstanding all these obstacles, a great many new congregations have been formed, and foundation stones laid of new Evangelical churches, especially in Bohemia, the cradle of the movement. In the suburbs of Teplitz a small chapel was dedicated last winter.

As the converts are mostly poor, though the well-to-do class is also represented, so much result within such a short time would have been impossible without the aid of the Gustav Adolf-Verein, and other similar associations, especially the "Evangelische Bund," from which the Austrian movement received over 2,000,000 Bibles, prayer-books, or pamphlets. Through this Association a home for converted priests has been opened at Halle, in which young Evangelical Austrians who do not need to be naturalized are trained for the ministry. Yet all the means which Germany has at its disposal will prove inadequate if the work continues to grow, as it is hoped it will. For some of the above particulars I am indebted to the Continental Presbyterian, an annual edited by Rev. J. E. Somerville, of Mentone.

WILMA MORGAN.

The Glory of the Gospel.—The Gospel's glory is, that it is the ministration of the Spirit. The great privilege of believers is, that the Lord manifests Himself to them as He doth not to the world. When he manifests his authority in the command, it is then powerful; when He manifests his goodness and truth in the promise, it is full of sweetness; when He manifests his wrath in the threatening, it awes the soul; when He manifests his glory in the face of Christ, it is ravishing, reforming, attracting.—Halyburton.

Notes from Northfield,

East Northfield, Mass., August 19.

THE Northfield General Christian Workers' Conference closed its annual session on Sunday evening, after a day characterized by large meetings, excellent addresses, and deep spiritual interest on the part of the hearers. Looking at the Conference from the point of numbers, it has been the most successful one ever held here. Looking at it from a deeper point of view—in the words of a doctor of divinity of national reputation, who has been here at nearly every conference since D. L. Moody issued his call for a Northfield gathering twenty years ago—it has been a remarkable one. There never has seemed to be a deeper interest in the meeting than there has been this year. A number of people who were here only for a few days for the first time, have been so much impressed that they are engaging rooms for next year.

It has been a Conference notable for the large number of meetings, starting with three services a day at the outset, new ones were added until there was opportunity for one to attend a religious service at almost any time of day. This gathering has made an advance upon previous conferences, in the introduction of "Institutes." The Institute of Fundamental Christian Doctrine, conducted by Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago, the Musical Institute in charge of Prof. D. B. Towner, of the Chicago Bible Institute, and "The Young People's Institute," over which John Willis Baer, of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, presided, proved to be a valuable addition to the Conference, and they were deeply appreciated by the visitors.

The chief speakers have been Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, recently of London, and Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds, England. One is a Congregationalist and the other a Wesleyan. Their manners differ, but their message is one. Other speakers have included Dr. and Mrs. J. Howard Taylor, China Inland Mission; Revs. H. G. Weston, D.D., Crozer Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.; Teunis S. Hamlin, D.D., Washington, D.C.; C. I. Scofield, D.D., Northfield, Mass.; H. W. Pope, New Haven, Conn.; R. A. Torrey, Chicago, Ill.; H. C. Mabie, D.D., Boston, Mass.; Commander Booth-Tucker, New York City; Revs. A. C. Dixon, D.D., A. T. Pierson, D.D., Geo. C. Needham, etc. The music was under the direction of Messrs. D. B. Towner, George C. Stebbins, and F. H. Jacobs.

While the Conference is over, a large number of the visitors desire to remain in Northfield through the month, and others enjoy coming when there are fewer meetings and more quiet. To accommodate these the Post Conference was instituted a number of years ago. Guests attending the Conferences, visitors in the village, friends from surrounding towns, and all others are invited to attend these services, to be held in the Congregational Church.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. Samuel Chadwick will each give daily Bible lectures, arranged in courses, from Tuesday, August 20, to Saturday, August 24, 1901, inclusive, in the Congregational Church. Mr. Morgan will give Bible readings on the Epistles of Peter, and Mr. Chadwick on Equipment for Christian Service. Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D., is to give a course of Bible lectures from August 27 to September 1.

"Preaching and Healing."—Under this title the Medical Mission Auxiliary of the C.M.S. publishes an interesting statement of its operations at home and abroad for the past year. Many important developments in the form of new hospitals and opening-up new centres of activity in the foreign field are noted. So far as home organization is concerned, a very gratifying report is given, and a large increase in the number of meetings arranged indicates the growing interest with which the auxiliary and its workers are followed. In the mission hospitals the number of beds has increased during the year from 1,484 to 1,613, the number of in-patients from 11,400 to 11,887, and the out patients from 630,000 to 753,000. Copies of "Preaching and Healing" may be had from the C.M.S. House, Salisbury Square, E.C.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 8. Romans iv.

THE life of God in the soul of man is one and the same in every age. The light may vary from the dimmest twilight of Ur to the meridian glory of Patmos, but the attitude of the soul towards the mountain ranges of God's nature is always the same. From the earliest, men have been justified by faith, and faith has two invariable elements—attitude and receptiveness, the right position towards God and the power to receive from God. In Abraham's case, there was at first the Divine promise about the land and the seed; it was only afterwards that he saw Christ's day and was glad, but he believed God, and it was reckoned to him for righteousness. In our case, there is the revelation of Jesus Christ, who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. But the moral and spiritual attitude of all believers is the same. And this attitude is permitted to sinful men because the Lamb of God was slain in the Divine thought before the foundation of the world, and is the propitiation for the sins of the whole race.

The Apostle is careful to make it clear that Abraham's faith was exercised while he was still a Gentile (i.e., before the Jewish rite of circumcision had been administered). Therefore all Gentiles may have the same faith. He also makes it clear that the promise was given to him of grace, and through faith, not by a legal obedience rendered to law; so that it is by faith that we too may enter into the full enjoyment of all that God has promised. And, lastly, he makes it clear that such faith is obtained by looking away from all the difficulties and disabilities which the flesh may present, and by dwelling wholly on the word of the Eternal God (21). If you consider that Word, you may dare to look at your own disabilities without being appalled (compare A.V. and R.V. of verse 19).

MONDAY, September 9. Romans v.

Starting from faith, the staircase mounts from peace to hope (2); from hope to love (5); and from reconciliation to salvation—not only from wrath (9), but to life and joy in God; so that whatever He does, as well as whatever He is, awakens in our hearts responsive admiration and glad consent (11). The landings on that upward-springing ladder are marked, "Not only so" (3), "Much more then" (9), "Not only so" (11). Stand on these terraces in the mountain climb, and take your breath.

But the most glorious and wonderful paragraph in the Epistle is that which follows. It should be read slowly and thoughtfully again and again from the R.V. In a few lines it is impossible to set forth its wealth of meaning. It teaches us the unity of our race, not only in Adam, but in Jesus Christ. Adam's one sin has affected the standing of every man; but the grace of "the One Man," "the obedience of the One Man," through "the One," secure the free gift to all men. The guilt that lay on the race by the sin of Adam has been removed from the race by the obedience of the Son of Man to the Cross—so that no one can now be condemned because of that first transgression. In that sense all are made righteous, i.e., put in the right relation to the law of God. But that is not all; all the gifts of grace, which selfishness and sin forfeited, have been again restored, and put within our reach; and if only we will not contract ourselves out of them, if only we will receive them with open hands, they may become ours, so as to make us reign in life. Nay, in Christ we have more than Adam forfeited, and may arise to higher heights than could have been within the reach of unfallen man.

TUESDAY, September 10. Romans vi.

It is not enough to apprehend clearly our standing in Jesus, we must see to it that doctrine issues in life. Nothing is so absolutely harmful as to hold truth doctrinally and intellectually, without giving it an expression in life. In fact, the doctrinal ages of the Church have been the deadest ages, producing the inevitable reaction towards the exaggerated preaching of Christian ethics. Therefore, after the massive statements of doctrine in the three last chapters, in this the Apostle turns to discuss the great doctrine of sanctification. The work of Christ for us must lead to the work of his Spirit within us, and its issue in deliverance from the power of sin unto the life of God.

The first ten verses apply the fact of the death of Christ to our individual and personal experience. They form the transition between the great doctrinal and the great experimental portions of the Epistle. The Apostle has given the first and main object of our Lord's death—it was as our propitiation. But there was a second. All who believe are reckoned by God as one with the Lord Jesus in that absolute devotion to the Father's will which led Him to death, even the death of the cross. From that moment for his disciples, as for Him, the life of self-will (v. 6) was no longer possible. It was put out of court. All who profess their oneness with Jesus should understand that it involves death to self and sin and the world. This was the primitive significance of the rite of baptism—buried in the likeness of Christ's death. Men, cries the Apostle (11 to end), make all that real. Live up to your profession. Yield yourselves to God in obedience unto righteousness, in righteousness unto holiness (19), in holiness unto life (vv. 16, 19, 22).

WEDNESDAY, September 11. Romans vii.

Once more the Apostle insists on our unity with Christ. He had shown that that unity had originated in the purpose of God, had been symbolized in the rite of baptism, and involved the mightiest possible issues in leading to a surrendered, holy life. Here he shows, still further, that it is the union of the marriage tie: "We are married to Another, even to Him that was raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God."

He teaches us that we were formerly married to the law; and were urged to obedience by the constant sense of the righteousness and force of God's requirements. It was a terrible struggle, because the soul could never realize its own ideals. All that is altered now, because our union with the first husband, with whom we were once wedded, had been dissolved by death, leaving us free to contract another marriage, with that lovely Man, in whose face the light of Godhead blends with the perfection and sweetness of man. It is by union with Him that we now bring forth fruit unto God. Every holy act is the result of Christ in us.

But here comes in a great practical difficulty (from verse 7). We are united to Christ, it is for Him to produce a holy life in us, and life ought to run smoothly. But it does not. There are effort, strain, failure, the consciousness of sin, the dazzling glory of unattained ideals. How is this? It is because so many of us endeavour to realize God's ideal, and to rise to the glory of the Christian life, in the energy of our own resolution, and this is not strong or spiritual enough. It is one perpetual repetition of I, I, I; and matters can never improve until we have commenced to realize and use the grace of the Holy Spirit, of whom there is nothing in this chapter, but much in the next.

THURSDAY, September 12. Romans viii.

This may fitly be called the chapter of the Holy Spirit. The Apostle had carefully kept this great theme in the background, till he had shown the precise point in Christian experience where his presence is absolutely necessary, in order to make operative all those glorious principles on which our attention has been fixed. Here is the motive power for the machinery! Here is the summer heat, beneath which all the seeds buried in the soil bears flowers and fruit!

He makes the Lord Jesus real, keeps Him on the throne of our inner life, communicates to us the very life of Christ, produces in us the spiritual mind which is full of life and peace, quickens our mortal bodies in resurrection glory, witnesses that God is our Father, inspires the child's response—"Abba," communicates to us the first fruits of our inheritance, makes intercession within us with unutterable groanings, and reproduces in us the spirit and devotion of our blessed Lord's life, so that we are conformed to his image. Yes, and further, He bears us forward in our mortal course, which is beset by all the power of pain and sorrow; He keeps the boat's keel steady in mid-current; He gives us victory where all other men own defeat, and generates the triumphant persuasion that every billow is but wafting us into the bosom of God. Blessed Spirit, do all this in me, as I sorely need and passionately desire!

FRIDAY, September 13. Romans ix.

There has been a spiritual succession of holy souls from the earliest days to these. From one generation to another it is possible to trace the line of those who have lived the life of simple and devoted faith. But this line is by no means confined to those who have been most richly dowered in privilege, as was Israel (4, 5), and it has not flowed in the line of human descent—i.e., godly fathers have not been able to pass their spiritual character and standing, as an estate, to their eldest sons (12, 13).

God has wished to do his best for every man. But, as in the case of Esau, who sold his birthright, and of Pharaoh, who turned God's gracious revelations of Himself into occasions of aggravated resistance and revolt, the heavenly Father is often compelled to make very inferior vessels out of the clay, which, if it had only yielded to Him, might have been wrought into the highest possible results (14-20).

We may see what God can do, if only we yield to Him. This same power which has been thwarted and resisted by the unbelief and stubbornness of the chosen people, has taken up the Gentiles, who have had none of the advantages of the Hebrew people, and out of them has made vessels of marvellous mercy and glory. What an argument for us all, not to resist the grace of God, as it strives with us day by day; for if we do, no amount of privilege or godly ancestry can avert an inevitable fate; while He can make saints of the most unlikely, who will yield to Him (25, &c.).

SATURDAY, September 14. Romans x.

How passionately the Apostle loved his own people. Apostle of the Gentiles though he were, his soul was filled with yearning desire for Israel. He sees the whole reason for their rejection. (1) They would not submit (3). Is not that the difficulty with us all? It is not that we cannot believe, but that we will not submit to God's way of righteousness. If only God would allow us to scale the heights or plumb the depths, to do some great thing, to undergo some mighty labour, we should be satisfied to accept his help and crown; but it is irksome, and intolerable to our pride to be told that, so far as our salvation is concerned, we have nothing to do but accept the finished work of Jesus, and receive Him into our hearts. (2) And the chosen people chafed at there being no difference in the way of salvation, whether for them or the Gentiles. If only there had been some staircase for them other than that trodden by uncircumcised Gentiles! (11, 12, 13). But there was none.

For these two reasons, the guests for whom the marriage feast was prepared refused to come; and therefore the Great King resolved that since heaven abhors a vacancy, his servants should go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; that the highways and hedges should be scoured in order that whosoever would come might have the chance of doing so. The remainder of the chapter (14, &c.) vindicates, therefore, the Apostle in his determination to preach the Gospel far beyond the limits of his own people.

Picture Cards for India.—Mr. B. K. Mukhuji, Mission High School, Seoni-chhapara, C.P., India, writes: "Will any readers of THE CHRISTIAN kindly help us in inducing heathen boys and girls to attend Sunday school by sending old and unserviceable picture cards—birthday, Christmas, Easter, and New Year?"

Blankenburg Conference.

TIME seems to pass more swiftly than ever. Fifteen years ago I was here, one year after the slip had been planted which has now become this important branch of the Evangelical Alliance. To its growth Fräulein Anna von Weling gave the best years of her life; indeed, she gave her life, for the work she did was beyond her power, and when disease came she had not strength to resist it. We are reminded of her absence in many ways, for all the threads were in her hands. But in each meeting we miss the best interpreter. She knew both languages so intimately, and so entered into the spirit of the speaker, that the right word, the only word, was always used to convey his thought.

We miss, for the first time for several years, Dr. John Gritton, a true and faithful man of God, whose heart was warm toward Germany, especially toward its Christians and their work. As our readers are aware, he has recently been called Home, and tears were in many hearts and eyes when Pastor Fuller Gooch said that a day or two before his friend died he had sat by his bedside; and, after conversation about Blankenburg, Dr. Gritton said, "Do kneel and pray about the work in Germany;" and though within so few hours of seeing his Lord, he followed with a few words of prayer. They spoke of the special difficulties of these last days; then he lifted up his hands, saying, "Never mind, it must be victory at last." A few minutes before his end he asked his nurse to repeat the benediction. He said, "Amen," and departed out of this world to the Father. He loved the work, and was brave in the conflict, and Mr. Gooch believed he was in communion with his spirit in what he was charged to say as the delegate of the Evangelical Alliance to Blankenburg.

This conference is the outcome of all its predecessors. The unity which has always characterized it was more fully developed than ever, in the deliberations of the committee, and in all the meetings. Many arrived at the end of last week, and the preliminary days, by speech and intercourse, prepared the way for the brotherly love and unity manifested through the conference by the 1,200 present.

THE SUBJECTS OF CONFERENCE.

The subjects for the four days, Tuesday to Friday, were "Christ Crucified, Risen, Ascended, Returning," and consecutiveness was thus secured, while speakers had ample liberty in choice of their themes. The addresses were of a high order. The principal leaders and speakers were Dr. Baedeker, A. W. Clark (Prague), Langmessor and Storjahan (Sweden); Baron von Thümmler, General von Viebahn, Colonel von Knobelsdorff, Professors Stroeter and Nielson; Pastors Bohne, Dammann, Jellinghaus, Stockmayer, Krawilietke, Svanberg (Stockholm), Fuller Gooch, and Paul; Messrs. Walter B. Sloan (China Inland Mission) and R. C. Morgan.

Each day began with a prayer meeting, conducted by Dr. Baedeker, who was in his element, surrounded by hundreds of pastors, evangelists, colporteurs, missionaries, and Christian workers generally. A few verses of Scripture were earnestly enforced, requests for prayer made for various parts of the world, each commended to God in brief and fervent prayer. Now and then a single verse of a hymn, to a familiar tune, often American or English, gave the relief of change. This hour was a fit prelude to subsequent sessions, and some men, always busy, found it the choicest of all, feeling in a peculiar sense the Real Presence. All were about the Father's business, binding the whole round world about the feet of God.

Limited space prevents my doing justice to the excellent addresses of those days; but there is some reason for giving at length the words of Pastor Fuller Gooch, who came as the delegate of the Evangelical Alliance. The German newspapers for many months past have published scurrilous attacks upon England, and to some Christians they have seemed true. The Swiss branch, some time ago, sent a strongly-worded remonstrance to London, urging the Alliance there to denounce the English Government's action in regard to the South African war, which the Council did not feel able to do. This and some other circumstances have created a strongly-expressed prejudice against England and the Evangelical Alliance on the part of some German Christians.

GERMAN AND ENGLISH CHRISTIANS.

I think, with this in view, the wisdom of Mr. Gooch's address will be evident. Those who had prayed, regarded its effect on the meeting as an answer to prayer. He said—

"As the delegate of the Council of the Evangelical Alliance in London, I am charged to say that we are heartily with you in your work, and as heartily desire your brotherhood and sympathy in ours. Christians under present circumstances are apt to misunderstand one another, but we assure you that our warmest sympathies are with the work of God in every land.

"The Alliance does not interfere with churches as such. It has no thought of bringing all under one denomination. Its motto is Unity, not Uniformity. We do not touch differences, but cultivate love, which makes Christians agree while they differ." Reading the opening verses of Eph. iv., Mr. Gooch said it has been spoken of as and he heartily agreed with that, and added, no portion of God's Word more truly represents the spirit of the Evangelical Alliance.

"We believe the Church is one body, and every converted soul a member of it. One spirit—We have not one breath of spiritual life save as it comes from Him. One hope of our calling—We may differ as to some aspects, but that does not alter our common hope. One faith—Whether we regard it as the faith by which we appropriate Christ, or the Word of truth on which our faith rests. One baptism—We may differ as to mode and subjects, but our differences do not alter God's Word, and all we want is that that may be established. We believe in one God and Father of all. This is our creed; to all who subscribe to it we give our heart and hand.

"No one thing concerning his people is more dear to Christ than the unity of the members of his body. Almost his last petition was 'that they may all be one.' Can we think lightly of what our Lord so earnestly longed for? This tells on the work the Church has to accomplish in the world. Divided we are weak; united we are strong.

"The world looks and wonders at the divisions of Christendom; but when it sees a gathering like this, it is obliged to own the power in Christianity. Wherever there is one heart the Spirit works mightily.

OF ONE HEART AND ONE SOUL,

"The Evangelical Alliance seeks to promote the unity of Christians for special purposes—one of which is the manifestation of the revealed truths of God. Its basis includes these three points: The Divine inspiration of the sacred Scriptures; the atoning blood of Christ; the power and work of the Holy Spirit. These truths unite the people of God. Against all who deny them we make our stand.

"The Alliance seeks to help the oppressed throughout the world. I rejoice in its history in this respect. It has existed fifty-six years, and has proved itself the friend of down-trodden Christians of every land. How God has blessed the Alliance! Only recently, in Saxony, the united efforts of the English Council and the German branch have been used by Him to help the work of Pastor Mascher and other brethren in serious difficulties. Religious liberty is dear to us, not only in Britain but in all countries! We pray much that out of the Conference this year may come an increased oneness of spirit among us all. Our brother, F. B. Meyer, wrote recently: 'In my opinion the Evangelical Alliance was never more needed than in the present day.' We in England have no desire to override or neglect other branches. The more your Evangelical Alliance multiplies, the more we rejoice."

General Viebahn, of Stettin, in his address of welcome, which was searching and encouraging, asked how it was that since 1870 there had been 360,000 suicides. The world, in its pleasures or its profits, can give no peace or rest. In the world is darkness, in Christ alone is light. As warriors we must be on one side or the other. Could all say, with the man of John ix.: "Once I was blind; now I see." Prince Bernadotte of Sweden wished to preach the Gospel in his own land. But it was not thought desirable. He asked and obtained permission to preach to the Laplanders, and, with his faithful wife, has been doing so during the past two years.

Professor Stroeter, whose subject was "Christ the Crucified," based his address chiefly on 2 Cor. v. 21, and laid peculiar and strongly-expressed emphasis upon the fact that "Him that knew no sin God made to be sin on our behalf; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." The exposition of this vitally important truth, and of its necessity, was far beyond what is general, and attracted much attention, as, if not a new truth, one into which they had been more deeply led than ever before. Let us hope and expect it may be for the furtherance of the Gospel.

Another remarkable address was on "Christ Risen," by Pastor Stockmayer. He dwelt upon "The heavenly places," mentioned five times Eph. (i. 3, 20; ii. 6; iii. 10; vi. 12). It was an elevated and elevating word, and its effect may be expressed in those ecstatic lines of Charles Wesley:—

O glorious hope of perfect love!
It lifts me up to things above,
It bears on eagles' wings;
It gives my ravished soul a taste,
And makes me for some moments feast
With Jesu's priests and kings.

The pastor added that he once heard Theodore Monod say that the third of Colossians begins in heaven and ends in the kitchen. Raised up together with Christ, sitting in the heavenly places in Christ, we are able to manage our earthly affairs. Thus the very highest truth enters into the smallest and meanest matters.

THE FINAL PRAYER MEETING.

Leading the prayer meeting on the last morning, Dr. Baedeker was so full of the love of God and man that he spoke and started verses and read Scriptures for nearly the whole hour, in spite of sundry hints and movements and pulls intended to draw his attention to the progress of time. But he was sublimely unconscious of it. At last only a few minutes were left for prayer; but they were utilized by brief, fervent supplications from all parts of the hall. If all the meetings had been as full to overflowing as the leader the whole day would have been spent in prayer for all the world, and it would have been well and fruitfully employed.

Mr. Sloan, of the C.I.M., gave a thrilling and pathetic account of the sufferings of the missionaries in China, together with useful information as to the causes of the troubles, and of the prospects for the future. He also, as well as Mr. Fuller Gooch gave afternoon Bible-readings, which were highly appreciated.

It was said that at no previous Conference had there been so unqualified a manifestation of brotherly love, nor one at which exhortations to holiness had been so distinctly founded upon the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

On the last evening I was introduced to a lady, a Hollander, a fast friend of the Boers, who wished to shake hands with me. She had promised Pastor Stockmayer that she would shake hands with an Englishman, and I entered just then. R. C. M.

Holy Scriptures.—The veneration we shall feel for the Bible, as the depository of saving knowledge, will be totally distinct, not only from what we attach to any other book, but from that admiration its other properties inspire; and the variety and antiquity of its history, the light it affords in various researches, its inimitable touches of nature, together with the sublimity and beauty so copiously poured over its pages, will be deemed subsidiary ornaments, the embellishments of the casket, which contains the "pearl of great price."—Rev. Robert Hall.

THE LATE

Canon A. J. Robinson,

BIRMINGHAM.

A TRIBUTE, by Canon SUTTON.

NO two men could well have been more unlike each other than Canon Robinson and his predecessor, Canon Wilkinson. In personal appearance, in manner, in mental characteristics, they differed widely. Canon Wilkinson was of tall, commanding figure, had a splendid voice, great gift of ready utterance, much charm of manner, the qualities which at once win popularity. From his early days he seemed marked out for positions of importance. Arthur James Robinson won his way by qualities of a quite different kind. It was by hard work, sterling worth, steady, reliable characteristics, rather than by striking gifts, that he became a man much looked up to, greatly honoured, thoroughly trusted. Unlike as these two rectors of Birmingham were, they had not a little in common. Both had a great love for and excelled in manly games. Canon Wilkinson was a bold rider, Canon Robinson a strong and skilful rower. It was on the river that the latter mainly distinguished himself at Cambridge.

Neither was destined for the sacred ministry when he entered the University. Both as undergraduates became subjects of saving grace, and, longing to win souls, gave up cherished plans to become clergymen. The older man was intended for the bar, the younger for the army, and each retained, through life, a feeling of affection for the profession he had gladly given up for, as he believed and trusted, "the greater glory of God."

But their great point of similarity is found in their equal devotion to Evangelical truth. When I first met A. J. Robinson, more than a quarter of a century ago, he was curate to Canon Hoare, of Tunbridge Wells. He gave, at that time, no special promise of becoming an able preacher. Indeed he was fond of telling how Canon Hoare, after speaking very kindly about his excellent work in the parish, turned round to him and said, "But you're a very poor preacher!" The fact was, that at that time he was much too diffident to "let himself go." He knew that when he entered the pulpit at Holy Trinity Church, there was a good deal of disappointment in the congregation. The earnest Christian people, who deeply valued the vicar, were not so ready to listen to the curate, and knowing that to be the case, the curate was hardly likely to be at ease.

One thing, however, this knowledge did—it made him very careful in his preparation, and helped him to become a very close student and profitable expounder of Scripture. This was his special power in the pulpit. His preaching became greatly valued by those who wanted to know what the Holy Spirit would teach them in the written Word. He never attempted to be eloquent. He had no very wide acquaintance with modern literature, or modern thought; but he had a very deep acquaintance with human nature, and with the Bible.

In later years he could preach with great facility. He was never over the heads of his hearers; they felt that he was speaking out of the depths of his heart truths which were to him the very breath of life. No one could doubt his sincerity.

Sometimes in hearing him I was reminded of a story told of the famous Nonconformist, Dr. McAll, a man so eloquent that it is said the congregation would sometimes unwittingly rise to their feet in their eager desire not to miss a word. At a great meeting in Manchester he had made one of his grand orations. He was followed by a missionary, who told with simple pathos the story of his work among the heathen. The audience was deeply touched, not by the eloquence, but by the message of the man. Turning to a friend, McAll said: "What would I give to produce such an effect as that man does!"

Canon Robinson carried conviction to the heart because of the straightforward simplicity and profound earnestness of his preaching. His unselfishness, devotion to duty, untiring, ceaseless longing to be faithful, were exhibited in a very marked manner in his first incumbency—St. John's, Waterloo Road. I have heard him tell the story of his early work there, and the overwhelming sense he had of the sin and misery, ungodliness, irreligion, which met him everywhere. But he toiled on, bringing strong common-sense, a hopeful heart, deep faith in the Gospel message, full assurance that the Holy Ghost can change the worst heart to bear on his work. Nor was he without signal proof that God blesses faithful labour.

Financial difficulties were great. South London, though there is to the full as much sin and vice and wretchedness, to be found there as in the East End, does not, or did not then, appeal to the imagination as the East End does. In order to meet the money troubles of his parish, the vicar had to trench seriously on his own private property. This he never grudged, and his devoted wife was equally ready to make sacrifices. At that time there were no children to be cared for, and they felt justified in making sacrifices which, had there been a family to provide for, they might have hesitated to make.

But it was at Whitechapel that Arthur J. Robinson made his mark as a splendid organizer, and a highly successful rector. Perhaps the organization was too varied and cumbersome. But he kept all parts of it alive by his energy, vigour, and untiring zeal. Here he found no difficulty in securing funds and workers. The horrors which startled the public mind drew attention to Whitechapel. It was, as he often said, "a name to conjure with."

There was a noble church, splendidly filled on Sundays. There was every kind of machinery at work for reaching different classes; but one of the outstanding efforts was open-air preaching. This has been carried on in nearly all well-worked parishes for many years now, though I can remember the time when people spoke scornfully of "clergymen standing on a tub and preaching in the street;" but the speciality at the parish church, Whitechapel, was the open-air pulpit built into the wall of the church.

Thousands of people pass up and down Whitechapel Road on Sunday evenings. Every effort was made to gain, and retain, and repay the attention of passers-by. So strong was Canon Robinson's faith in this kind of work that he had an open-air pulpit built at Marylebone Church, where open-air work would have seemed less likely to be effective than in Whitechapel. Again, when he became rector of Birmingham he had a pulpit built in the church wall, from which he himself and his helpers preached to large congregations.

He went to Birmingham with a high ideal of what the parish church should be, the effect it should have on the religious life of the city, the position it should hold as a great centre of Evangelical truth.

He was a very decided Churchman. He desired to carry out the system of the Church as fully as possible. He wished to be absolutely loyal to the Prayer Book. He hoped to conciliate High Churchmen by introducing daily services. In many other ways he strove to show that although he was a very decided, he was by no means a narrow, Evangelical. Whether he succeeded in his wishes in this respect may be doubtful.

What no one can doubt is that in every effort he put forth to make St. Martin's, in a very special sense, the parish church, he was actuated by a sincere desire to honour God and serve his fellow-men. He was wonderfully free from personal ambition. To his brother clergy his manner was most kindly and courteous. To use a slang expression, he never "put on side."

He may not always have seen that his efforts to draw together men of different views were predestined to failure. That he honestly wished to use his position—a position of great influence—for the highest ends, that he had no petty envy, jealousy, or mean thoughts of others, can be doubted by none who knew him.

I have spoken of him as a preacher; but perhaps he was still more successful as a speaker. There was a vein of genuine humour in his speeches which was very refreshing. His long experience in the ministry, his varied career, his intimate acquaintance with nearly all the leading Evangelicals of the day, and with many notable men who are not Evangelicals, rendered his speeches peculiarly interesting.

His life was a "living epistle, known and read of all men." Deeply spiritual, firmly attached to Evangelical truth, and to what he believed to be the principles and practice of the Church of England, ready to "spend and be spent" for the Master's service, kindly, gentle, yet firm, Arthur J. Robinson has left behind him a record which may well inspire others with the wish and prayer that they, too, may be found, as they know he was, "faithful."

THE LATE

Mr. Robert Wilson, Edinburgh

By Rev. J. HOOD WILSON, D.D.

EDINBURGH has lost one of its most respected and useful citizens in the unexpected removal by death of Mr. Robert Wilson. He was born on Sept. 9, 1834, and after completing his education, spent some time in the office of his father, Mr. Patrick Wilson, a well-known Edinburgh architect. He afterwards went to London, to the office of Mr. Salvin, the eminent architect, to improve himself in the knowledge of his future profession. There he had the good fortune to be associated with Mr. Waldock, afterwards Rev. Frederick Waldock, missionary in Ceylon, who was made a special help to him in the great crisis of his spiritual history. He afterwards wrote, "I owe my happy change chiefly to the influence of Waldock."

Mr. Wilson was a cousin of the late Mr. W. P. Lockhart, of Liverpool. The two cousins travelled together in Wales in 1855, and it was during that excursion that Mr. Lockhart was brought into the light through the flashing into his mind, with Divine power, of the words, "It is finished." The change, however, was kept a secret till young Wilson had a like experience, two years later. An interesting correspondence between the two friends will be found in the volume, "W. P. Lockhart, Merchant and Preacher: A Life Story." It was Wilson's letter announcing his conversion that drew from the afterwards distinguished evangelist the fact of his own conversion. In this letter Wilson says, "I had often been aroused to think of my state. I had convictions and impressions, but these passed away. The cause of my again thinking of personal religion was the reading of a book by Newman Hall, 'Quench not the Spirit,' which showed me very forcibly I had been so doing. I resolved that I should not do so, but I should investigate the whole subject. I had a week of close reading and much anxiety. The books I read were 'The Way of Life,' by John Kirk; 'The Evidences of Christianity,' by Doddridge; and, above all, I studied my Bible. I had two or three conversations with Waldock. The result was that I found peace—peace with God through believing in Jesus as my Saviour."

On his return to Edinburgh, Mr. Wilson took up a decided position as a Christian man, and by 1857 we find him throwing himself actively into Christian work. During the memorable "Year of Grace," 1859, and in the years that immediately followed, he gave willing help in town and country, in special evangelistic and ordinary services, and we have before us now evidence of precious fruits that were then gathered in. One who got blessing through his instrumentality, speaks of a wonderful scene in a country church, on one Lord's Day, in 1861, when, at an after-meeting, "a great number were on their knees seeking mercy;" and another, who got similar blessing then, speaks of many who have since passed away, looking to him as the instrument of their conversion. For more than forty years he held on in a consistent Christian course, and in abounding labours for the spiritual good of others.

While thus "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," the young architect was "not slothful in business." He made rapid advance in his profession, and, on the passing of the Education Act, he received the important appointment of architect to the Edinburgh School Board. The numerous and large public schools of the Scottish metropolis have all been erected under his hand, the latest addition being in progress when his last brief illness overtook him. We are told his schools "have earned the frequent encomiums of H.M.'s inspectors on account of their internal suitability to modern educational requirements." He was held in great respect as a professional man, and set a high Christian standard before him in his business.

Mr. Wilson was in the thick of business when Mr. Moody paid his first visit to Edinburgh in 1874, and from the outset he identified himself with that movement. One of the most important offshoots of it was what came to be known as the Drill Hall Sabbath Morning Free Breakfast. It was designed to bring the poorest and most degraded classes in the city under the sound of the Gospel, and in general to carry on mission work among these. It was started on January 31, 1875, and has been carried on ever since without missing a single Sabbath morning. Mr. Wilson was urged to become honorary treasurer and superintendent, and during all the six-and-twenty years that have intervened he has held on stedfastly at his post. Under his superintendence the mission rapidly developed, until it included almost every department of Sabbath and week-day mission work for old and young. Mr. Wilson had the hearty co-operation of ministers, including the late Dr. Horatius Bonar and Principal Cairns, and Christian laymen of all denominations. He was ably supported by the heads of departments, and gathered round him a large staff of workers of both sexes, of all classes, and of all churches, among the most earnest and devoted that Edinburgh could furnish. It has turned out a training-school of the most valuable kind for young Christians. Some of the earlier workers are now ministers in this country, and others are doing noble work in foreign lands—in Africa, India, China, America, and Australasia.

The end originally in view has been largely accomplished. As the work expanded, permanent premises were erected in Fishmarket Close (one of the old closes between the High Street and Cowgate), at a cost of upwards of £4,000, the professional work being done by Mr. Wilson as a labour of love. The Semi-Jubilee number (1874-1899) of "The Story of the Drill Hall Breakfast," was able to report—"About 1,000 hear the Gospel every week. The lowest dregs of society have been reached, not by one great spasmodic effort, but by quiet, patient, and continuous work. Men and women have been helped to employment, girls have been rescued and sent to homes, drunkards have been reclaimed, children have been placed in homes and schools and taught and cared for all these years; above all, souls have been converted to God. These are results which cause us, amidst all discouragements, to say, 'Yet Thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us!'"

All this is, of course, not to be attributed solely to Mr. Wilson, but he has been the central figure and moving spirit in it. Besides presiding at and addressing the early Sabbath morning gatherings, and many others, he did a great deal of individual work among the poor people, visited special cases, was always on the outlook at meetings for any of the hearers who seemed interested, and talked with them at the close, got work for the unemployed, manifested unwearied patience and gentleness and hopefulness, sought to stimulate the workers and keep them in heart, and took entire charge of the finances. That one of the busiest men in the city should see to all this for more than a quarter of a century, without flagging, is a very remarkable record.

From Photograph by Messrs. G. S. Tauny & Co., Edinburgh.

Mr. Wilson was an active member of the Baptist Church, and at the time of his death was Vice-President of the Baptist Union of Scotland, but his sympathies and efforts were so catholic that few knew to what religious body he belonged. Prominent among the agencies into which he entered with great enthusiasm was the Carrubbers Close Mission, of which he was one of the founders, and at the time of his death was one of the oldest workers.

The end came suddenly. He was out driving in an open cab on Friday, June 28, when he caught a chill, which developed into pneumonia and inflammation of the lungs. He passed away on Monday night, July 1. The funeral took place in the Grange Cemetery, the Thursday following, in the presence of a large and deeply sympathetic company.

Mr. Wilson's home life was a happy and helpful one. His wife, a daughter of the late Dr. Gunn (one of the masters of the High School, and a favourite elder of Dr. Guthrie), has been a sharer with him in all his labours, and, with four children, survives him.

The Mission will go on as hitherto, and Mr. Thos. Dymock, C.A., 8, Castle Street, meanwhile acts as hon. treasurer.

The following may be taken as a specimen of the kind of work done:—

In a corner of the room lay an old sailor, too much the worse for drink to stand. We invited him to the breakfast meeting, but left, not very sanguine of his coming. However, he did appear, and became a regular attender at the Drill Hall. A few weeks after, he was brought to Christ, and his life thenceforward was consistent with his profession. He joined our Temperance Society, and was never again seen under the influence of strong drink. Suitable employment was got for him in a temperance refreshment room. In his leisure hours his great delight was the study of God's Word, and his quiet testimony to the power of the Gospel was the means of blessing to those among whom he lived. Suddenly he was called away. He dropped down dead in the street. The testimony of his employer was that he never had a more faithful servant.

The late Principal Cairns, one of the early directors of the Mission, spoke of it in the following words :—

No work in our great city impresses me more than the Drill Hall Breakfast. Often as I have gone to it and addressed it, I am impressed every time with a deeper sense of the sadness of the spectacle, and of the blessed power of the Gospel of Christ to reach the lowest depths of human sin and wretchedness. I never see gathered together so many and such various wrecks, moral and physical, of our poor humanity, amidst the surface glitter of our great and polished city, but I always go away with a stronger admiration of the power of Christian kindness, and of the resources of Almighty redeeming grace. In fact, as I have watched for years the features of this work, the look of the crowds gathered to breakfast is not so tragic and appalling as when I first knew them. The mass of wasted, debased, and utterly sunken existence has begun to be visibly lifted up, and almost organized into something like a mission congregation, haggard and squalid enough no doubt, and with awful memories of the past, but also with brightening touches of the picture in old and young.

To My Larger Congregation.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

HOW can I describe Brumana? It is one of the most beautiful places I have ever seen. Imagine a succession of limestone hills and terraces, rising in regular gradations from the blue waters of the Mediterranean, covered with vines, olives, mulberry trees, figs, the eucalyptus, and the pine. On the summit of one of these, 2,400ft above the sea-level, and four miles from the shore, is the village of Brumana, where the Friends have a large mission work, and where the Conference I have attended has just been held. The buildings of are extensive, well-planned, and substantial. They consist of the boys' school, the girls' school, the hospital, the dispensary, and various residences and buildings, which during this time of vacation have served admirably for the accommodation of the missionaries, 200 of whom have gathered from all the lands of the Orient. Those who could not be taken into the houses have been very comfortably provided for in the tents which are perched in all directions. Some of them have been most kindly lent to the Conference by Messrs. Cook, free of charge; others are the property of the missionaries who are constantly requiring them in their work. Here, for instance, beneath my windows, are the tents of a party of missionaries who have travelled six days' journey from Tripoli, in the neighbourhood of the ancient Hamath.

Amongst those present have been the venerable Dr. Bliss and Mr. Bird, who celebrated their seventy-eighth birthday on the same day, during the Conference; Dr. H. Jessup and his brother Samuel, who have left an imperishable impression on the noble work of the American Presbyterian Mission in Beyrout; Revs. F. G. Phillips and J. S. Crauford from Damascus; Miss Taylor, of Beyrout; Rev. Douglas Thornton and Mr. Bradley from Egypt; Dr. Mackay, of the Scotch Jewish Mission; Revs. H. Porter and F. E. Hoskins, of the marvellous American Press of Beyrout, which in seventy years has issued 700 publications in Arabic, and supplies Bibles and Testaments for the use of all Arabic-speaking peoples; Revs. A. MacLachlan and Moschou, from Smyrna; Rev. Mr. White, Buatcha, Black Sea; Professor Curtis, from Chicago. Nearly every one of the great number I cannot name has come from some historical place, such as Hebron, Bethlehem, Gaza, Jaffa, Damascus, Tarsus, &c., &c. It has been a great privilege to address these workers from the Bible Lands, which must still have a foremost place in the heart of our Lord.

The meetings have been held under a large awning erected in the plantation. We have had each day sunrise and sunset meetings, beside two diets for conference and prayer; and I have been enabled to give fourteen Bible readings and addresses. The subjects have been on the Nature and Crucifixion of the Self-Life, the Life of the Risen Christ in the Yielded Heart, the Significance of Pentecost, Temptation, Deliverance from the Power of Sin, Equipment for Service, and the Reckoning of Faith. I have never had a deeper sense of God's Presence, and more rapt attention, or experienced more of the co-operating grace and fellowship of the Holy Spirit. It seems as though there has been a literal fulfilment of the promise: "I will open rivers on the bare heights."

The Conference has been attended by large numbers of Syrian Christians — preachers, evangelists, teachers, both men and women. We have had additional daily meetings with these in English, which they understand; and it seems as though a great work is breaking out among them, the full results of which it is impossible to estimate.

HAPPY MEMORIES.

The kindness with which Mrs. Meyer and I have been treated is simply indescribable. We have had one or two meals daily with various groups of missionaries and their Syrian helpers, and have formed friendships which will be imperishable. In all my travels I have never met a more noble body of workers, and though we were of all nationalities and of all societies and denominations, none of these were mentioned amongst us, who were "all one in Christ." What talks we have had, of native customs as illustrating the Bible, of the products of this wonderful land, of the relation of converts to the ancient Greek Church, of the remarkable work of God which has broken out in Cairo under the preaching of a converted Mohammedan, of the training of pastors and evangelists, of the difficulties, trials, and hardships, and of the joys of missionary life! The time has been so full of interest that the hours have sped on winged feet, and the hour is at hand for our descent to Beyrout, and so to Jaffa, Alexandria, Marseilles, and home.

The one cloud on the Conference has been the illness of the beloved and able superintendent of the Friends' Mission, Thomas Little, though even this has been overruled, since from his bed he has been able to pour out a constant stream of intercession on our behalf, doing for this Convention what Father Nash was wont to do for Finney.

I have not succeeded in conveying one tithe of the beauty of this exquisite scene, of the loving fellowship of God's children, or of the sense of God's nearness and blessing. The half cannot be told; but from my heart I thank the beloved servants of God, and especially the dear boys and girls who have prayed for me; and let me humbly and earnestly ask that those prayers may be continued on my behalf.

Home Missionary Circle.

IT is cause for thankfulness and rejoicing that the Home Missionary Circle continues to extend its sphere of usefulness and blessing. During the last few months it has been constantly demonstrated that the only effectual method of getting in touch with outsiders, to influence them for good, is through individual Christian workers.

The latest addition to the "Circle" is a branch of about thirty members formed at Great Easton, Leicestershire, Christians of various denominations gathering to the Word of God to learn how to become individual soul-winners in the daily life. It is found that the "Home Missionary Circle" forms an excellent neutral basis, thus enabling both church and chapel folk to strengthen each other's hands for the purpose of extending the Redeemer's kingdom.

The suggestion of passing on read copies of The Christian meets with general approval—not a few have expressed thanks for the hint. As one brother remarked, "Such a paper never grows old."

All information about the "Circle" can be obtained by enclosing two stamps to Mr. A. E. Sims, "Hope" Gospel Mission, Northsea, Portsmouth, Hants

New Book by Bishop Moule.

THE praise of the Bishop Designate of Durham is in all the churches, for in a very wide circle he is known and loved for his devotional and helpful Bible studies, which mark him out clearly as one who rises above the distinctions of party or creed into the atmosphere of unity in the Spirit. It is an interesting coincidence that, when his appointment is being hailed with satisfaction by all sections of the community, there should issue from his pen a book—prepared before there was any thought of his preferment—in which his true sympathy with all who are in Christ is frankly expressed. If we assume that, unconsciously to himself, Dr. Moule was preparing a manifesto of the spirit in which he enters on his new sphere, Thoughts for the Sundays of the Year (3s. 6d. R.T.S.) may be hailed as a cause for almost national congratulation.

We find it much occupied with the power of the risen Christ, and with the power and office of the indwelling Spirit. If we may single out other particular passages from so much that is good, we would mention those in which the doctrine of the Trinity is explained so that a child may understand, in which the temptation of Christ is made the basis of a new word of cheer to those who have a hard fight, in which his readers are warned against expecting a "Gospel of the Spirit," in which the Christian is pointed to himself as an evidence of Christ, and in which those who may have a feeling of disappointment are reminded of their present possessions.

That the book speaks from the heart to the heart is especially evident in this reference to personal experience, under the heading, "The Restorer of Lost Years":—

If your "years" have lately seemed bare and fruitless for the Lord, what does conscience denote as the cause? If this past year, perhaps, has been such, a year which you cannot help contrasting with the green and prosperous landscape of some previous years of your converted life, how has it come about? Seldom, if we seriously take the question up, shall we fail of an answer. I remember a time in my own life, when a year of rich and well-remembered blessing, deep and solid, was followed by a very "lean" year, sadly cold and barren. And I am perfectly conscious that the immediate cause was an undue, self-chosen, self-indulgent, devotion of time to a certain mental interest, perfectly pure and good in itself, but out of keeping with God's work for me just at that season. It so possessed the mind and interests that not only did prayer and Bible-study suffer, but the common duties of life received a less thorough attention than was right. And so conscious love to Christ waned, and with it, inevitably, love to the souls of others. And many a secret advantage did the tempter take, when he found that "the Prince Emmanuel" was not in full residence in "the castle" of "Mansoul." It was a year that the locusts settled upon; the locusts of sin, and then of chastening trouble.

We quote also, in view of the special circumstances in which the book appears, the following sentences from "Holy Converse in Bad Times" (Mal. iii.16).

Is there not much in all this to remind us of some features of our own time? Spoken out, or compressed into gloomy silence, there is a great deal now of this arrogant questioning of God, the God of the Word, the God of Providence, the God of Christ. Shocking are the loud outbreaks sometimes. "We will listen to Jesus Christ, if He will behave Himself," was actually said a few years ago, and it expressed ten thousand less articulately rebel thoughts. Only too often (does the Christian never know it in his own heart?) there swells up, very near the surface of even a religious mind, some fierce questioning of his messages, or of his actions, till the thought hovers in a wretched ambiguity between half-censure of his character, and half denial of his Being. In distress and perplexity, sometimes, the Christian is driven to ask whether reverence and submission are vanished from (not only the world but) the Church. This may be, nay, it is, a hasty asking, based on very partial data. But the data are terribly prominent, though there is indeed, in the mercy of God, another side.

Certainly, if there ever really has been an "age of faith," in the sense of a time when eternal truths were accepted and cherished generally without misgiving, that age is not our own.

Yet Dr. Moule is no pessimist, for the dominant note of the book is one of victory, the last word in it being, "To your old age I am He."

The Tragedy of Toil.—A few figures in the current issue of the Board of Trade Labour Gazette illustrate forcibly the striking fact that more lives are lost in the search for bread than in war. During June last 309 workpeople died from "industrial accidents," and 9,208 were seriously injured, in addition to which there were eight deaths from lead-poisoning, and eighty-five cases of "occupation disease." Last year 583 railway servants were killed, and 15,698 injured, and it appears that of the total deaths among the entire body of miners in South Wales during twelve months, twenty-five per cent. was from accidents alone. It is startling to find Sir A. Forward stating that one in every 1,400 workmen is killed annually, one in 2,500 totally disabled, and one in 300 permanently partially disabled. Behind all this, unfortunately, for many of the deaths and accidents might have been prevented, there is the thirst for large dividends, and the recklessness of competition. As Mr. John Burns, M.P., has said: "When soldiering is as deadly as shunting, international disarmament will be nearer than it now is."

Other Lands.

Stones Instead of Bread.

ON making a journey through Bolivia we witnessed several semi-Pagan, semi-Romish scenes, which will never be effaced from our memory, especially one in La Paz, the capital.

At one or two squares from the central plaza, where two streets crossed, our attention was arrested by a crowd, approaching which we saw in the centre some fourteen Indians marching in a circle in single file. Every one was armed with a rude musical instrument, some with pandean pipes, of which there were sets of various sizes; others had the quena, a kind of flute or whistle, and, like the pandean pipes, made of rough bamboo cane; while there were also drums and cymbals, all of the most primitive make. The sounds which they produced were anything but harmonious, though the performers were all in dead earnest. Indeed, some of them could not have been more so had they believed, as probably they did, that their eternal destiny, in some way and in some measure, depended on the devotion and energy put into this performance. We were overcome with emotion by their earnestness, for we had been told that the "Virgen" had gone down to the Merced Church to hear Mass, and that they were calling her back.

Very soon a motley procession of Indian and half-caste women appeared coming up the street. In the fore-front was one swinging a silver censer full of burning incense, and close by her another carrying "La Virgen," about as large as a medium-sized doll. All the way women in the street, or from the procession, were running up to kiss the idol or its clothing.

A SAD SPECTACLE.

On reaching the cross streets, where the musicians were playing, the procession turned to the left, and was followed by the performers in the direction of the home of the Indian to whom the idol belonged. They had turned the corner but a short distance, when they came to a small table placed in the middle of the street. On it the idol was placed to listen to an harangue by one of the company, and this was repeated several times before they reached their destination.

The homage, however, was not limited to the Indians, for all along the way people were throwing handfuls of coloured paper, cut into minute squares, in lieu of flowers, while from the balconies and windows were displayed bed-covers of bright colour, in which red predominated. Overhead, on cords, passed from side to side of the street, were hung spoons, ladles, bowls, tureens, basins, pitchers, and other vessels, all of solid silver, in honour of "La Virgen," who was passing.

On reaching the home of the Indian who had taken his "virgen" to hear Mass, a three days' carousal took place. The drink used is a kind of beer. It makes those who indulge in it, as do all the Indians and half-castes, maudlin, not uproariously drunk.

Remembering that our commission should lead us "to every creature," we have often come upon these bacchanalian festivals, and on proffering the Scriptures, the invariable answer has been "No, estamos alegres aqui" —"No. We are merry-making here"—the very opposite of the truth, were one to judge from the sights he sees and the wailing that he hears.

The priests of Rome, instead of trying to suppress such debasing customs, join in, and foment them, as they thereby increase their revenue. They do not, however, care to say a Mass for one "virgen" alone, as that would only bring them five dollars, but arrange that no fewer than four be brought on the same occasion, so that for a single Mass they obtain the sum of 20 dols. What we have witnessed in Bolivia, Peru, and Ecuador, during the eighteen years that have transpired since we witnessed the scene here decribed, has but deepened our painful solicitude to see something attempted for the amelioration of the condition of these Quechua Indians, which to-day number, as shown by recent statistics, three million five hundred thousand.

Breton Workmen Near Paris.

I TAKE the liberty of writing to you about an interesting work I have been permitted to carry on for some months among Breton "ouvriers" at St. Denis, near Paris. I ought to say, first of all, I am a Breton myself, and was a Roman Catholic until the age of fifteen, when I heard the preaching of the simple Gospel by M. Lecoat. Soon afterwards I left Brittany for the Channel Islands, where I was led to yield my heart to God, later became a lay preacher in the Methodist Church, and finally evangelist at Sark, where during my two years' stay God granted me the unspeakable privilege and joy of leading several to the knowledge of Jesus as their Saviour.

After going through my military service I became, in October last, a student for the ministry at the French Methodist Theological School here in Paris. Soon after my arrival in the capital I was told that there were more than ten thousand Bretons at St. Denis, but three miles only from the gates of Paris. They had left their distant homes in order to find employment in the foundries, &c., of this manufacturing centre.

From the simplest surroundings, where superstition reigns supreme, they come to one of the headquarters of revolutionary anarchism. I soon took the opportunity of visiting them in their lodgings, and invited them to a meeting in our large French Mission Hall. Never shall I forget

OUR FIRST MEETING.

Thirty had answered the invitation, and listened with rapt attention whilst I spoke to them in their own language of the Saviour's love.

At the close I announced that I would return in a fortnight, when a man got up and said: "Why not come next Saturday? We will return gladly to hear you, for never have we heard such beautiful things as those you have just told us." I need not say that I acceded to the request with joy and thankfulness, and since then to the beginning of the present vacation have held a meeting every Saturday evening at eight o'clock.

These meetings have been most interesting, and it has been a real pleasure to announce the good news of salvation to souls ignorant, it is true, but longing after truth. One of them said to me, not long ago in his simple and naïve language, "How happy I am since I come here to listen to you read and explain the beautiful stories from your big book. Formerly I cared for no one, and no one cared for me; but now it seems to me as if I had once more a little family, as away in my home in Brittany." This man has never missed a meeting, although he lives at a considerable distance from the hall. The numbers vary: several times we have seen more than fifty present; once as many as a hundred, and, what is rare in France, the majority are men.

Brittany in some respects resembles Ireland. It is the province in France where Romanism has the greatest hold. When the Breton leaves his own country he is much less under the thumb of the priest, and more accessible to the Gospel. There are about a million Bretons speaking a language closely akin to Welsh. There are three mission halls at Havre which some Evangelical Christians (among them the late Hon. Lady Beauchamp) have opened for meetings in Breton. One of our Methodist ministers there told me that some of his best class leaders were converted Breton Catholics, and that he had two devoted Breton lay preachers.

As I live at some miles' distance from St. Denis, it is difficult to give all the time needed for visiting these thousands of my fellow countrymen. Also, our present hall is not in the Breton quarter of the town. When a week or two ago I was among friends in Jersey and Guernsey, I met with a Breton lady, a class leader, who would be willing to come and live at St. Denis. My friends generously came forward with help; but to carry on the work vigorously, to provide regular meetings, to follow the converts when they return to Brittany, we require more; and earnestly ask Christian friends who have been to Brittany, or on whose hearts the Lord has laid this people, to come to our help in what has seemed from the beginning to be a work prepared by the Master Himself. Rev. George Whelpton, M.A., 4, rue Roquépine, Paris, who knows our work well, will gladly receive and acknowledge any gifts, however small.

A Chinese Martyr.

THE new report of the British and Foreign Bible Society, whose native colporteurs and auxiliaries suffered very greatly during last year's social eruption in the Far East, gives some painfully interesting details of the sufferings of native converts. The following is but one example of many:—

"In the Yen-shan district there lived Han Yih-shan, one of our old colporteurs. He had retired from active service for several years, and his son had taken his place, but even in his retirement he could not keep quiet. For several weeks at a time he would leave his home and preach the Gospel in all the villages round, and thus he was well known everywhere. The Boxers captured him. At first he was nervous, but when he was taken into the city of Yen-shan, and saw what was awaiting him, he was given grace, and became very bold, preaching the Gospel even to the Boxers. Would they like to hear him sing? So he sang them a Gospel hymn, and then told them that if they thought they were going to exterminate the Christians when they burnt the churches they were greatly mistaken; in three years there would be three times as many Christians and chapels in the city." Then they cut him to pieces.

The horrible torture meted out to poor old Han Yih-shan was apparently that known as "the death by a thousand slices," in which the flesh of the victim is little by little snipped off his still living and tormented frame. Equally faithful and courageous was a native Christian in "a distant outpost" of Manchuria. He was ordered to repent. "Repent," said he; "I have repented long ago, and believe in Jesus." His persecutors pressed him to renounce Christ and worship Buddha. "That I cannot do," he replied, and began to pray. While he thus prayed his head was struck off.

The Social Evil in Shanghai.

The following facts are published by The Union (Shanghai), translated from a Chinese daily newspaper published in the same city.

SHANGHAI is a great commercial centre, but the social evil in the place is attaining most lamentable proportions. Most of the victims have been sold or pawned by wicked parents. Others go out to work, and are secretly in the business without their parents' knowledge, others are decoyed away or kidnapped. Some at seven years of age are taught to sing songs, and are compelled to learn wickedness under pain of severe tortures. They come from all the provinces of the Empire. Officials do not dare to frequent such places elsewhere; but when they come to Shanghai, from the first button (i.e., grade) downwards, all freely go to them without shame. The settlements are indeed Chinese soil; but the Chinese officials cannot reach the people in them with their instructions. That is entirely in the hands of the Western officials. The native city has no house of ill-fame; it is under native jurisdiction. Why do the foreigners allow the comparison to tell against them?

Faith can support when nature shrinks; faith can call God Father, even when He frowns; and make some discovery of a sun through the darkest cloud.—Arrowsmith.

Miss Marsh's Convalescent Home.

CIRCUMSTANCES have arisen which necessitate the removal of Miss Marsh's Convalescent Home from Black Rock; and, after various unsuccessful endeavours to obtain either a house or a suitable site for the institution in Brighton—a house and grounds admirably fitted for the purpose, formerly a boys' school, have at length been found at Worthing (known as Worthing College), now considered to be one of the healthiest towns in England. The property, which consists of about 1½ acres, is freehold, and is beautifully situated close to the sea beach.

It has been suggested that there could hardly be a better opportunity than the present for the numerous friends who know and love Miss Marsh, and for all who value the good work she has been enabled to do, to show their sympathy with and their appreciation of this honoured servant of God, by contributing for the purchase and equipment of the new Home—"Beachfield," Worthing, and presenting it as a gift on September 15, her eighty-third birthday.

The older generation will easily recall that Miss Marsh was a pioneer in many of the benevolent and philanthropic undertakings that have distinguished the Victorian era; as, for instance, the Mission to Railway Men with all its far-reaching branches, which took its rise from her work amongst the navvies of Beckenham, made known in "English Hearts and English Hands." The reading of that book suggested to Mrs. Ranyard the possibility of beginning the great and good work of the Bible Women's Mission, still carried on in London, to which has since been added the Bible Nurses' Mission. The remarkable and wide-spread good work in the Navy, begun and carried on by Miss Agnes Weston, and the no less remarkable good work in the Army of Miss Sandes, Miss Robinson, and many others, was, we are informed, suggested to their thoughts by the same book.

BEACHFIELD, WORTHING.

Black Rock Convalescent Home was the outcome of Miss Marsh's work in the London Hospital during the time of the cholera visitation in the autumn of 1866. About 19,000 patients have been received, and by general testimony the time spent there has been the means, to the great majority, of restored health, and in many cases of marked spiritual blessing. "Beachfield" will hold a larger number of patients than "Black Rock," and has, in addition, a garden and other advantages.

We believe the need has only to be known to bring a generous response; and how far more delightful to let the beloved lady have this pleasure in her green old age, than to wait, as is so often done, only to contribute a memorial.

"Beachfield" will be vested in the names of five trustees—Lord Polworth, Sir Ralph Anstruther, Bart., T. F. Victor Buxton, Esq., Colonel H. Stephenson Clarke, and J. D. K. Wingfield-Digby, Esq., M.P. Friends interested in the present movement are invited to communicate with Miss Medland, lady superintendent of the present Home, Black Rock, Brighton.

The Glamour of the Stage.

SOME of the moral dangers surrounding the theatrical profession have been vividly brought before the public during the past week or two in a series of articles published in the Daily Express. In Christian papers, and the reports of philanthropic societies, the subject is kept well before their readers, but the present exposures will reach to some extent a wider circle; and we trust the statements made, and facts quoted, will be carefully pondered by young people over whose imaginations the stage has cast an attractive glamour, as well as by parents and others on whom the duty devolves of guiding the rising generation by example and counsel.

In these days of overcrowded professions and callings, there is no class by whom this difficulty is more keenly felt than it is by aspirants for appearance on the stage. To say this, would seldom act as a deterrent, however, for aspirants always intend to be among the successes and not the failures. But there is a darker shadow over the prospect in this case than the fear of lack of employment. The way is especially beset with danger for the girls who "believe that the stage-entrance is the early door to fame and fortune"; in fact, the numbers who apply for every vacancy have done not a little to accentuate the evil, by making it possible for managers to lay down any terms they choose.

Christian workers who have given special attention to the question have heart-rending stories to tell of the slippery path on which many a girl has tried to walk; and of those who, having found themselves unable to maintain a foothold, have gone down. It is easy to say that girls are not obliged to accept any particular part, if it offends their sense of propriety or decency; but it must be remembered that the profession is adopted as a means of living, that this makes practically regular employment necessary, and consequently the would-be actress among the rank and file cannot afford to pick and choose among appointments. They well know that, whatever may be the case with them, managers have no difficulty in filling up vacancies. Besides, the general tone and action of the most popular present-day plays are all conducive to a lowered moral sense. For this the authors are as responsible as the managers.

A THEATRICAL MINOTAUR.

But there is a lower depth. The fact has been brought out that one London manager, when dealing with girls, has habitually made the gratification of the lowest passions one condition of an engagement. We are told that in nine cases out of ten they fled from the place in a state of indignation and terror; but what about the tenth case? The man referred to was no doubt an outstanding example; yet there can be no doubt that in very many instances those who were full of ambition and bright hopes for the future have, ere long, realized that to gain an opening a terrible price indeed must be paid.

The publication of a "white list," enumerating the so-called "clean" theatres of the country, is suggested as a remedy for the state of affairs. But the evil is not to be counteracted in such fashion. The line between the "black" and the "white" must in the end be arbitrary, and those who draw it will surely find houses on both sides perilously near.

It is not alleged that actors and actresses are naturally weaker in moral stamina than their fellows; but on their own confession they are liable in their profession to more than the average amount of temptation. It is noteworthy that in a recent year more than ten per cent. of the bona fide actors of the kingdom received relief from the Actors' Benevolent Fund.

That the Christian Church has not forsaken the profession is admitted, though the criticism is brought forward that missions do nothing for the girls until they are already beset by difficulties, and, it may be, have succumbed. But while much advice may be given, no one can be compelled to accept it; and the average "stage struck girl" is one of the least likely to accept an invitation to a Christian meeting, or to a friendly talk with one whose advice might run contrary to her wishes.

Among agencies which have met with encouragement in seeking the best interests of such young women, is the Theatrical Mission. In the front of all its effort is its spiritual aim, but their moral and temporal welfare is also zealously cared for; and the work is capable of extension. The Home at 92, Charlotte Street, W. (Rev. George Freeman, secretary), has sheltered many. But sometimes it has been full. "Often we have been compelled to refuse shelter for lack of room, and we have had ample assurance that many have been saved from worse than death. Not long since one, who was often under our roof, but whom we had not seen of late, went astray, and finally committed suicide. Those in the house were heard to say, 'But for this home we might have done the same.'"

Applications are received regularly from those to whom the life has been one of bondage. Such cries are heard as: "I am tired of this life." "I am so friendless." "I wish I had never seen the stage." Much more can be done than is even attempted at present if those interested would rally round the Mission.

Another effort is being set on foot by the Mission to the Dramatic Profession, promoted by (Mr. F. C. Vernon Harcourt, 16, Birchington Road, Crouch End, N.). This aims at individual effort in the higher branches of the profession, for which Mr. Harcourt (himself a converted actor) is specially fitted. The work of the Mission being quite unsectarian, Christians of every denomination are invited to consider its claims for active recognition, and the Committee earnestly appeal for that assistance, moral and material, which will enable it to carry this great and far-reaching work to a successful issue.

In addition to these, there are the untiring efforts of Mr. William Forbes, who for over twenty years has carried on a successful and much appreciated work among theatrical women in London and the Provinces.

Among the Hop Pickers.

THE Church Army Mission Van (Worcester II.) will be stationed at Suckley, Worcestershire, for the hop-picking season.

The evangelists will visit the hop yards daily, distributing Gospel literature and tracts. Gospel services, illustrated by lantern views, will be held each night.

By the aid of the lantern, the subject of the addresses are brought vividly before the eyes of the listeners. The sacred slides thus used have brought home the Gospel story to many who have been attracted out of curiosity.

Will all Christians in sympathy pray that God may open the eyes of many visiting the hop yards who are yet blind to his truth.

Helpful tracts may be addressed, care of Rectory, Suckley, Worcestershire.

Scottish Notes.

THE twentieth annual Conference of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild is to be held in Edinburgh, October 13-15, when over 400 delegates are expected.

The annual Conference of Scottish Y.M.C.A.'s is announced to be held at Dumbarton, September 1-5. The principal topics of consideration are—(1) "The Junior Section; how to work it and make it a feeder to the Senior Section;" and (2) "The Temperance Problem, and how the Y.M.C.A. may deal with it."

The Congregational Union of Scotland has just issued its year book, from which it appears that the 182 churches have an aggregate membership of 30,000. Most of the societies and institutions in connection with the Union are in a prosperous condition. Only forty-nine of the congregations receive aid from the central funds, and these are in rural districts.

The report of the Christian Endeavour Societies of the Church of Scotland shows that there are thirty-one Societies, comprising 1,149 members, affiliated to the Union. These are located as far north as North Yell, and as far south as Stranraer. Among the members of the Senior Societies at least 476 out of 540 active members are Church members. During the year twenty-nine have joined the Church, and fifteen associates have become active members.

The invitation has been issued for the thirty-ninth annual Christian Conference at Perth, to be held September 10-12. Special attention is called to the meeting for ministers (including missionaries and evangelists), to be held on Tuesday afternoon, when Canon McCormick (St. James, Piccadilly), and Rev. George Wilson (St. Michael's, Edinburgh) are expected to speak. The general subject is, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever, amen." Among other speakers are Rev. G. L. Carstairs, Rev. D. M. McIntyre (Glasgow), Rev. A. S. Inch (Dumbarton), Rev. H. E. Fox (C.M.S.), with a number of missionaries.

The need is being increasingly felt by the United Free Church of a properly-equipped training college in Edinburgh for lay workers, and a proposal is on foot for the appropriation of the Synod Buildings in Castle Terrace for the purpose. In the meantime, the evening classes carried on during the past five years will be continued during the coming winter, though on an enlarged scale. The classes are open to all denominations, and lecturers as well as students have been enlisted from sister churches. Among the courses arranged for are lectures on "The Gospel of John," by Dr. D. Somerville; on "Comparative Religion," by Miss Small; on "The Saving Work of Christ," by Dr. R. J. Drummond; on "Tropical Diseases," by Brigade-Surgeon Arnott; and on "Ambulance," by Dr. Angus Macdonald. In previous sessions the students have averaged 250.

The Law of God is a Lamp of Light, as it guides in the way of duty; and instructing reproofs from the law are the way of life, as they keep from sin; they do not guide into the way of peace but as they lead into the path of duty; nor do they keep a man out of trouble but as they keep him from sin. —Boston.

Distressed Grimsby.

SUFFERING is keen at Grimsby as the outcome of the unhappy difference between employers and employed in the fishing industry, and efforts are being put forth for the relief of the distressed women and children. Rev. Fred W. Beaumont, chairman of the Relief Committee, New Clee, writes:—"We are working in the midst of the fishing population. We find women are parting with their wedding rings in order to obtain food for their children, while in many homes furniture and clothes have been pawned. Typhoid is rife, but we are sending milk and other sustenance to needy cases. We have two soup kitchens, and have distributed over 3,000 quarts of soup, besides nearly 4,000 loaves of bread and £100 worth of groceries and provisions. We are also starting meals for the children. Distress is painfully acute, and local help is almost exhausted, trade being in a state of paralysis. Any help that may be sent us will be economically and discreetly used."

Welsh Notes.

THE Welsh Baptist Union has taken a step which is an innovation among the religious bodies of the Principality. Hitherto the secretaryship of the Union has been filled by a minister who was also pastor of a church. Henceforth there will be a paid secretary who will devote all his time to the work of his office.

The Calvinistic Methodists of Carnarvonshire will shortly possess an orphanage of their own. The inmates must be children of Calvinistic Methodist communicants or hearers within the confines of the county of Carnarvon. One donor has given the land for the orphanage and also the sum of £1,000.

The quarterly meetings of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association were held at Bangor last week. Delegates were present from various parts of North Wales, as well as from Liverpool and other English towns where the denomination is represented. On Wednesday morning the ministerial and lay delegates sat in separate sessions, each taking as the subject of their discussion, "The Importance of a Lasting Consciousness of the Divine Presence."

The report on the position of the denomination in North Carnarvonshire showed a membership of 17,540 in eighty-six churches. The total number of adherents was 28,698. The number of scholars on the Sunday school roll was 20,961. The total contributions during the year amounted to over £27,000. The report of the Twentieth Century Fund showed a slight addition to the contributions already made. The report, however, complained of the apathy shown by the churches in regard to this important fund.

On the occasion of laying the memorial stones of a new Congregational chapel at Froncyssylltan, North Wales, on August 28, Mr. Herbert Roberts, M.P., gave utterance to sentiments which were particularly timely. Dealing with the duties of the churches in relation to the religious and social problems of the day in Wales, the speaker uttered a warning to the churches that the era of material prosperity upon which the country had entered might lead to a diminution of the earnestness of their forefathers, and to neglect of their ideals.

The Free Church Council of Corwen, North Wales, has come into conflict with the authorities of the Agricultural Show, which is to be held there this year. This show is one of the most important in North Wales, and for years it has been the custom to have intoxicating liquors on the ground. As a result of a canvas of the town by members of the Free Church Council, some 1,500 of the inhabitants signed a petition against this custom. This appeal to the authorities was unsuccessful, and now the Council intend renewing their opposition at the next Licensing Sessions.

With Tent and Bible Carriage.—Mr. John Coates, Northleigh, 3, Cantilupe Road, Ross, Herefordshire, writes:—"We have had a blessed time in our tent and Bible carriage work. Commencing early in May, we visited many outlying villages in Herefordshire and Gloucestershire. During August we have had the Bible carriage on the sands at Weston-super-Mare. The services increased daily in numbers and interest. A tent was pitched in an adjoining village, and at the evening gatherings there were manifestations of the working of God's spirit. Our large tent is now in Warwickshire, where a wide field for such work has opened up. It will continue there until the end of September. We have held already this summer upwards of 150 tent services and forty meetings conducted from the platform of the Bible carriage. God has greatly blessed them to the salvation of souls."

"Ecce Homo!"

ONE of the finest examples of modern sacred art is now on view at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, London, in Munkacsy's last work bearing the above title.

Of course, it professes no more than to depict the painter's conception of the "King of the Jews," as seen of men. To our mind, the striking characteristics of the picture are in evidence quite as much in the other figures, every one of which has a unique individuality distinctively its own; and even those lovers of the sacred story who conscientiously demur at any pictorial representation of the Saviour could not fail to carry away much suggestive thought from a study of the crowd.

Eager, thoughtful, restless, angry, the figures seem almost to sway before the spectator, so vivid is the artist's representation. Here are Nicodemus, fresh from the trial, halting, hesitating, yet drawn to view the scene by an uncontrollable impulse; Mary Magdalene, her anguish as manifest in the frenzied clasp of her hands as in the expression of her tearful face. In fact, it may be said that if all the faces were hidden the varied emotions of those who make up the scene are speakingly expressed by the hands, whether it be anger, hate, wonder, or fear.

The figure of Judas is a fruitful study, as, partly hidden by the crowd, he appears half-wishing he were not there, and yet constrained to stay. The fainting mother, upheld by faithful John, next attracts the eye, from whom it turns to the typical Pharisee, whose sinister look of triumph is only too apparent. Here is an aged man lost in thought; another mad with furious hate; close by, a mother with two little children at her side, whose tender yet awestruck faces suggest that they must have heard the gracious words spoken to the mothers of Salem, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me."

These are a few types only, scattered here and there amid the turbulent mob, while all eyes are turned towards the balcony, where appears the weak and vacillating face of Pilate, and his stolid guards, as they bring the Man of Sorrows forth.

Of Him who shall speak! What brush can depict the physical and spiritual anguish that He endured! Yet we turn from the picture filled with a sense of wonder that it has been given to any mortal mind to conceive, or human hand to paint, the rapt expression, radiant with holy light, which soars above the noise and tumult, as He who was "not of this world" stands sublimely unconscious of the presence of man, and gazes, as it were, into the face of God.

Sea Breezes for Our City Poor.

DURING these summer days the four seaside homes at Lancing, near Worthing, have been the scene of much enjoyment. As we approach this quiet old-world village from the Brighton Road, we first catch sight of the former residence of a country magnate, now used as a "Home" for broken-down fathers and bread-winners.

Passing a few bright gardens we come upon the ample exercise grounds of the Women's and Children's Home, with its shading trees and its cool shelter, from which the briny waves stretch away in a perfect perspective east and west. The laughter of the children as they crowd the gipsy swings, crutches or no crutches, or scamper and play on the grass; the bronzing faces of mothers, from whose kindly features the careworn furrows have been smoothed out; the anæmic maiden, whose halting steps have again given place to the elasticity of health; the aged "granny," who had never before seen the sea—all are there.

The Cottage Home for the aged and dying, where a few feeble ones of advanced years are provided for, who are expecting to close their pilgrimage with us, is opposite; and adjacent to this is the Convalescent Home for weakly mothers and ailing infants.

Poor they all are, and without any possible hope of enjoying the needed rest, unless by such means afforded by our Homes. Roughly speaking, seventy women (including mothers with babies), forty children, and forty men and youths, can be received which, counting babies, would make over 170. There is a bright mission room attached to the Homes, and a robust but spiritual tone pervades each "Home," while the "exercises" are entirely free from sectarian taint.

Every bed is being utilized, and very many are waiting the "next vacancy." The daily outgoings are necessarily very heavy, while, in addition to these, the committee have need of nearly £400 to cover the cost of the new wing opened in June last, by which some forty beds were added to the Women's and Children's Home. Mrs. Bevan would heartily welcome any assistance addressed to her, at 59, Prince's Gate, South Kensington, S.W. The secretary is Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

Children of the Congo.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—I am sure that all our doings out here on the Congo are of interest to such as pray for us and the prosperity of the Lord's work in our hands.

The school work is growing. We have in regular attendance every day a minimum of 230 children, all of whom are under the daily influence of the Gospel. They read Bible stories, they learn to recite portions of the Bible, their compositions are on Bible subjects; in short, the school work is a part, and I think I may say a very important part, of the evangelistic work.

With the elder lads I have been taking the story of the Children of Israel, and it has been most interesting to watch them as they heard of the stubbornness of Pharaoh, even during the time of the plagues, and still more so to note the surprise which was manifested by some, when later on we came to the murmuring of the Children of Israel themselves.

One boy said, "Well, when they had seen the deliverance of God in the river (Red Sea), which was so great, why did they not believe that He was able to do anything else that was needed?" And how often have we ourselves thought just the same! It was easy for me to explain that we and they act in the very same way every day of our lives, that we forget how God has saved us in times of sickness, of hunger, of trial, and not least in the eyes of the natives, at the time of the earthquake two years ago, and yet we do not trust Him for other things, or most of us even for salvation. But it was not so easy to convince them of this in their own cases, or that in similar circumstances they would have done as the Children of Israel did.

I enclose a composition by one of the boys on "The Story of the Children of Israel going to Egypt till they crossed the Red Sea." This was done by the whole class, and there was very little difference in point of merit. I think it shows a very good grasp of the general outline of the subject. I feel it a great privilege to have so many little ones to listen to the truths of the Gospel from day to day; and who can even attempt to gauge the influence which these teachings will have over their after lives? Surely we may trust the word of our God that "His word shall not return to Him void," and may we not also feel assured that even if we see not much fruit now, yet the Holy Spirit will be to these little ones a Remembrancer in the future, bringing back words they heard in the school, and in that time those who sow and those who reap shall rejoice together? But we cannot help believing that many will be brought to the Lord even in the time of youth's bright morning, to bring glory to God, and help to teach their own people.

Asking again for a continuance of your prayers for us and ours in dark Africa,—Yours very sincerely,

Lily Ruskin.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, September 8.

ON UNSEEN HELPERS (2 Kings vi. 15-17).

IT is surely an imputation on the wisdom and power of God to suppose that his creative skill has produced no other moral beings than man. Above and below, the universe teems with life. There is not a single drop of water or of air in our earth which does not contain kingdoms of existence. Judging by analogy, we may surely believe that it is so with all other worlds, and that as the murmur of bees makes the hives musical so the multitudinous voice of created life fills the universe with a song that rises unceasingly about the throne of God. But if God's hand has been so prolific in creating the lower orders of being surely it could not have been less so with regard to the higher; and though man, without doubt, is alone among all other orders of moral being in having been made in the image of God, yet surely there must be principalities and powers, kingdoms and orders of moral being; and surely, also, among them, there will be the same moral choice, and the same possibilities of good and evil as among us. In other words, our inferences lead us to the express revelations of Scripture, that there are angels and demons, good spirits and bad.

There is only one devil, but there are many demons, all of whom are set on our destruction. We wrestle, says the Apostle, against the hosts of wicked spirits in the heavenlies, who rule the darkness of this world. What a comfort then to know that around us are noble and holy intelligences, strong and helpful, who duly keep their watch and ward. I have always made much in my life of the ministry of God's angels, who are sent forth to minister to those who are the heirs of salvation. I realize that the more one is in union with their Lord and King, the more able one is to secure, through Him, their loving and attendant help.

As long as we are on God's plan, and doing his will, we may believe that there are more with us than against us, and that there is an inner wall of protection, through which the malice of those that hate us cannot intrude. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them." Teach young children this who are afraid of being left alone in the dark. The mischief is that our eyes are holden. Our sin, our selfishness, our intentness on the things and people around us, our materialism, our unbelief, blind us to the great realities of the unseen and eternal world, amid which we live and move and have our being; and we need to offer for ourselves and others Elisha's prayer for the opened eyes.

The Lord told us that little children have the special escort of the high angels, whose faces behold the Face of God; as though the loftiest ministry of the loftiest angels were to care for the most helpless. Often in one's own life one has realized that deliverance from impending evil was due to angel interposition.

There is another side to this. Let us, whose lives are spent in the holy presence of God's angels, do nothing to hurt their gentle, holy natures. Remember how God warned Israel that they must not grieve the angel that led their pilgrimage.

C.E. NOTES.

A convention on Prison Endeavour work has been held at Cincinnati. It is hoped that prison work has been given such an impetus that it will be soon established in every State in the Union, and that remarkable results will follow.

* * *

An interesting letter from Gabriel Thangam, an Indian native Endeavour secretary, tells of an itinerary among the churches, in which he organized twelve new Societies, and strengthened many of the old ones. Everywhere the meetings held were most encouraging.

* * *

There is a flourishing Endeavour Society in Christchurch, Los Angelos, of which Rev. George T. Dowling, D.D., is rector. Both Bishop Nichols, of Northern California, and Bishop Johnson, of Southern California, sanction the introduction of Societies wherever the rector and vestry wish it.

* * *

The members of a Society of a Union of Presbyterian Societies in Kansas, learning of the need of a church building, where a Presbyterian missionary was at work, took upon themselves to provide a house of worship. An old school building was bought and fitted up in nice style, painted, seated, and furnished with organ and pulpit Bible. There are only fifteen Societies in this Union.

International S.S. Lesson.

JACOB, A PRINCE WITH GOD (Gen. xxxii.).
GOLDEN TEXT: Luke xviii. 1.

INTRODUCTORY.

WE left Jacob at Bethel on his way to his Uncle Laban's, now we find him, after twenty-one years residence there, returning. He went out alone; he returns rich, with wives, children, servants, and cattle. God has told him to go back, therefore he started; his life at Haran had been a troubled one, and his uncle is angry at his leaving. Jacob, too, is frightened to meet his brother. Jacob had never forgotten Bethel, and had always acknowledged God and worshipped Him (see chap. xxx. 30; xxxi. 5, 13, 42), but he was still selfish and self-reliant, and God has to humble him and give him further revelations ere he enters the promised land. Jacob has yet to learn the duty of absolute trust in God.

PLACES REFERRED TO.

Mountains of Gilead (xxxi. 25), the rocky region west of the Jordan, 300 miles from Haran. Mizpah, north of the river Jabbok, means "Watchtower." Jephthah lived there, many years after this (Judges xi. 11). The other two names for Mizpah, one Chaldaic, the other Hebrew, mean "the heap-of-witness" (xxxi. 47). Mahanaim, or "hosts," afterwards a distinguished city of God (Josh. xiii. 26), frequently referred to in Scripture. Land of Seir, or Edom, the mountainous district between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Akabah; the Edomites in after years were often at war with Israel. Jabbok, a tributary of the Jordan, a rapid stream flowing westward and emptying itself nearly opposite Shechem.

JACOB'S PRAYER (1-23).

Jacob was pre-eminently a man of prayer. At Mahanaim he was encouraged by God's messengers, a host of angels (recall Bethel). He did all in his power to pacify Esau, and then turned to God in prayer. This is a model prayer (9-12). He had been obedient to the Divine command (9), and now pleads God's promise; he humbly expresses his unworthiness, gratefully acknowledges past mercies, and directly and simply makes his request with all his might. Prayer does not change God, but it exercises our faith, puts us in the right position before God, and fits us to receive the answer (James v. 16).

THE ANSWER (24-27).

Jacob is left alone, and the "angel of the Covenant" comes down to answer his ardent supplication. Note, the angel wrestled with Jacob, not Jacob with him; he must be subdued, his will yielded, his own self-sufficiency taken away, and such is the struggle that he has to be touched in his body before he gives in; then Jacob knows who it is with whom he is striving and clinging on; he, though quite helpless now in himself, persistently pleads for the ratification of the Covenant Blessing. Hosea points out the lesson (Hosea xii. 4-6). We get here the secret power in prayer, God cannot resist the cry of the helpless (Psa. xxxiv. 6, 7).

THE GREAT CHANGE (28-31).

Jacob's character is altered, so he must have a new name, no longer "The Supplanter," but "The Prince of God." He has a new power with God and with man, and a new nature. Read xxxiii. 18 to 20. He fulfilled his vow. Jacob is the great father of those who pray. Are we, his children, persistent in prayer? God is willing to give directly we are ready to receive.

PENIEL—i.e., "The face of God."

We can get "face to face" with the God-Man Christ Jesus in prayer; every pardoned sinner is invited to hold communion with God through this Mediator (1 Tim. ii. 5, 6). We shall see his face in glory hereafter (Rev. xxii. 4).

EXAMPLES OF TRUE PRAYER.

Jesus prayed in "an agony" (Luke xxii. 44).
Paul "strove in prayer" (Rom. xv. 30; 2 Cor. xii. 8).
Nehemiah prayed for his people fasting and with tears (Neh. i. 4).
Hannah prayed silently, but with intensity, until Eli thought her drunken (1 Sam. i. 13).
Elijah prayed with all his strength (1 Kings xviii. 42-44).

What do I know about the power of true prayer?

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Stuttgart Association, which is in its forty-first year, and which began in a very small way, consists at present of five branches with sections for soldiers, bakers, gardeners, hotel waiters, tramway employés.

The Railroad Association of Philadelphia possesses a flourishing Boys' Branch, which has started an illustrated monthly paper. The boys themselves print this. A special room has been placed at their disposal, and friends of the work have furnished the necessary plant.

The Totterdown (Bristol) Association is making a special endeavour to clear its building from debt. The institute cost £6,000, of which £1,100 has still to be raised. Mr. J. Storrs Fry, who has already given most generously to the scheme, has expressed his willingness to give a further £100, and in addition to contribute the equivalent of all donations secured by October 11, up to £500. Mr. Edward Robinson has promised another £100, so soon as the committee are able to claim the £500 from Mr. Fry.

Mr. John R. Mott, M.A., is just leaving America for a tour of about five months. He will spend one month in Japan and another in China. Thence he hopes to go to Ceylon, India, and Burma. He wishes to hold in each country conferences comprised of leading native Christian students and instructors and educational missionaries, and to conduct evangelistic campaigns in two or three principal student centres of India. He will be in Great Britain in February. Mr. Mott travels in a double capacity; he is general secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation as well as Foreign Secretary of the American Y.M.C.A. International Committee.

Personal Appeals.

DEAR SIR,—I have no doubt many of your readers have, like myself, an endless number of appeals sent to them; many of the personal appeals seem most heartrending, and come apparently from Christian people and Christian workers.

I think it well to pass on my experience, which has lately had strong confirmation, that such appeals cannot in any way be trusted; and it is quite necessary to test the truth of statements made by means of some society or agent. Within the last few weeks I have had several begging letters remarkably well written, but which proved on inquiry to be thoroughly undeserving.

May I also seek to impress on Christian givers that they should not help individuals from Turkey or the East without making inquiry at some of the existing societies. There are most admirable colleges all over the East, where Easterns are much better trained than by coming to this conntry.—Yours very truly,

KINNAIRD.

[We regret to say that our recent experience has been much the same as that of Lord Kinnaird.—ED.]

The Halt and the Lame.—A few days ago an ambulance, designed by the Hon. Miss Lawrence, one of the members of the London School Board, was brought into use for the purpose of conveying, upon each of its journeys to and from school, ten of the thousand little cripples in London who, without that means, would be unable to attend. This is only one instance out of many in which the women members of the Board have made their presence felt in the direction of kindness and sympathy. The school for cripples, which has been tried for some time, having been very successful, others are now being opened, and it is satisfactory to find that at each of them a noonday two-course meal will be provided for the little sufferers at a cost of threehalfpence per head.

"LINES OF COMMUNICATIONS."

THE work among our soldiers, which has been greatly blessed during the prolonged campaign, is still being vigorously maintained.

The South Africa General Mission had decided to bring Mr. James Taylor home again, that he might undertake deputation work, and thus help to get in the £14,000 required for establishing the different Soldiers' Homes. But now, owing to the great need, he will remain in the field, and be joined by Mr. Robert Fleming, late 15th (The King's) Hussars, who sailed for Durban a week or two since.

Some most interesting details have come to hand from Mr. Darroll. Writing from Pretoria, he says:—

"The present 'block-house' system along the lines of communication has necessitated a new mode of working. There are now so many small camps; and the men being distributed in the various block-houses and forts, the only possible way of reaching them is by constant travelling. Mr. Tervit kindly offered to join me for this work, so we approached the army headquarters on the subject, and they have granted us some special facilities.

"We have just returned from our first journey—Pretoria to Pietersburg—for which we had the use of a special van, with authority to be attached and detached at any station as required. We left Pretoria with large supplies of papers made up into bundles, consisting of illustrated and weekly papers, South African Pioneer, CHRISTIAN, &c., &c., also writing-paper, envelopes, and pencils for free distribution, and some groceries for the men to purchase, such as milk, butter, sugar, matches, &c.

OVERCOMING DIFFICULTIES.

"Our first experiences were in connection with South African shunting, and cooking under difficulties, holding on to our pots lest our dinner be lost, and everything turned topsy-turvy on account of the terrific bumping with other trucks. But we are rejoicing over the Lord's goodness to us during the trip.

"Our first halt was at Nylstroom, where we saw the commandant, who gave us a free hand among his men, some of the 'Northamptons.' He also directed us to a mounted infantry column lying near his camp, and we went to see the officer commanding. On hearing our mission he was most kind, and as he told us his column was leaving the next day, we arranged for a meeting among them that night. At 5.30 we carried up our little organ to the 'Northamptons,' and had a short meeting, and then went over to the other camp. As soon as I commenced playing, the men gathered round, and it was like the old-time open-air services to see a great crowd again holding bits of candles in their hands for light. They were standing round us 'nine deep,' and we had a splendid meeting. Afterwards we offered stationery and Testaments to any who required them. 'Just what we're wanting,' said they. So Mr. Tervit and I were kept hard at it for awhile, giving out to nearly every man in the column. Among them was one of Miss McCarthy's 'Kimberley lads.' He was delighted to know I belonged to 'the same mission,' and showed me a Bible she had given him.

"The next day we spent in visiting and distributing stationery and literature, while in the evening we had another meeting with the 'Northamptons.' It was very cold, so the sergeant-major lent us his stove—a bucket of hot coals—which was a real help.

REACHING ALL THE MEN.

"At a small station we met a young Christian officer who has services for his men two or three times a week. I left him a quantity of stationery and arranged to send him some hymn books for his meetings. We stayed the week-end at Piet Potgieter's Rust. I called on the 'O.C.,' and he said, 'This van is a splendid idea. What denomination are you?' On my telling him our work was interdenominational, he said, 'That's splendid! Then you reach all the men.' He had it announced that we should have a meeting in one of his camps on a hill adjoining the station at 4 p.m.; and another in the goods shed (which he had cleaned up for the occasion) at 6.30 on the Sunday. It rained in torrents most of the day, so we were unable to have the afternoon meeting. We lit up the shed with candles placed in bottles, and, taking in our cooking-stove for warmth, the place was made very cosy. A nice number of the men came, and we had a good time. The next day we moved on, distributing paper, &c., at all the small camps along the line. As our van had to be handed in at Pretoria by June 30, we could only give one night to Pietersburg, which we spent in the 'Gordons'' camp. A great crowd came to our service. It was good to come in touch with the Christians here, who are very keen that a Soldiers' Home should be opened among them.

"We started on our return journey at five o'clock the next morning, staying a day at Warm Baths, where we had a meeting, and nearly every man off duty attended. Here, as elsewhere, the cry was, 'Can't you come again next week?' But we have the other lines to attend to, and if all the ground is to be covered, we need more workers to come to our help. The following morning we went over to the Warm Baths Hotel, which is now a large hospital, and visited some of the patients in the enteric ward. In the afternoon we left for Pretoria, making one more halt for a day at Pienaar's River.

THE DARK SIDE.

"Our friend, Mr. Gibson, has offered us the use of two bicycles, so that on our next trip—Pretoria to Klerksdorp—we shall be able to visit many more of the isolated forts and block houses. I think we generally write on the bright side, but there is a dark side to soldiers' work—and very dark it is, too, as all those working among the men know. We could speak of the terrible gambling and other vices, and of the few—how few they look in comparison to the others—who are standing out for God. We find the men do not want God, for they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. Our desire is that our Lord might deepen his work in us, that we may be his channels of living water to these needy ones. Brethren, pray for us."

So many friends have been sympathetically watching this special branch of the S.A.G.M. work in South Africa, and also the excellent work carried on by others amongst our soldiers, that we feel they will be rejoiced to know how God is continuing to work. The above will also give further opportunity for special intercession. ARTHUR MERCER, Secretary.

Obituary.

ARCHDEACON PELHAM-BURN.

INFORMATION has reached Norwich that the Archdeacon of Norwich met with a fatal accident in the Tyrol on Monday last. He was ordained in 1884 by the late Bishop Jackson to the curacy of Kensington, and after serving the curacy of Bodmin from 1885 to 1887, he returned to Kensington, and remained there until his appointment to the vicarage of St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich, in 1890. He became Archdeacon of Norwich last year.

MR. VICTOR MASLIN.

The death of Mr. Victor Maslin deprives evangelicalism of an earnest and devoted worker. Occupying an honourable position in the Government service, Mr. Maslin was one of those who discharged a large number of duties, and without ostentation. A member of the Executive Committee of the Protestant Reformation Society, and occupying a similar position in other organizations, he was ever ready to assist in the promotion of the Protestant cause. Kindly in disposition, and lofty in his sense of duty, Mr. Maslin will long be mourned by those who were privileged to know him. One cannot fail to speak of the generosity displayed by Mr. Maslin in the support of those causes which he approved. In this, as in so many other ways, he has left an example which is a rich inheritance.

The Indian Famine.

DISTRESSING news continues to be received concerning the remnant of the famine in India. Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE writes that "in not a few places where help has not been forthcoming from American funds the pinch of want has already begun to be acutely felt. In such cases the British public alone stands between the orphans and absolute want. The missionary is willing to sacrifice all he can—his pay, his possessions—rather than part with his sacred charge; but he must have help, and for this he humbly, trustingly begs. The last few weeks the response has seemed to be diminishing, and this strikes a chilling chord in our hopes. We are praying with increased earnestness and trust in God in this time of need."

It is lamentable that not until five p.m. on the closing day of the Session could the Government find time for the consideration by Parliament of the affairs of India, and of the vital questions affecting the well-being of our fellow-subjects in that great Empire. According to Lord George Hamilton, the House was "empty," yet the financial statement to be presented covered the three years of dread famine which has mowed down the unfortunate people like grass. Perhaps it was not surprising that the Government should take credit for the fact that after providing £15,000,000 for the relief expenditure there was a surplus of a million, but thoughtful people will not forget that the country is ground down by taxation, and that if it had not been for the noble assistance rendered by the charitable, the financial position of the executive would have been a very different one. The knowledge that the English Parliament could give only five hours to the consideration of the position and sufferings of the agriculturists in India will have a bad effect throughout the Empire.

KHURTAS AND CHOLIS.

Over 2,000 of these much-valued garments have been despatched to Bombay from Exeter Hall for famine orphans, eliciting such appreciation as "Our orphans are simply in raptures over them," and "Our little boys have never had anything so nice, and are more than delighted with them." Thousands more will be required for the coming winter. Sixpence sent to the Missionary Pence Association, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C., will bring two sample garments and instructions for making them.

Y.W.C.A.—At the Belfast Association on Aug. 29, Miss Helen V. Ewart, hon. sec., was welcomed on her return from Australia, whither she had gone for the benefit of her health. Rev. Henry Montgomery, who presided, said that for years past Miss Ewart had devoted her life to the good work of that association which is of the greatest benefit to the young women of the city. Rev. N. W. Brownrigg and other friends took part, and Miss Ewart gave an interesting resumé of her labours in Australia.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Henry Varley in Glasgow.

THE month's campaign of Mr. Henry Varley at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, has opened with much promise of fruitfulness. Pastor Findlay and his large and devoted band of workers had made very complete preparations for the mission, and at the first meeting, held on Sunday morning last, the building was crowded to the doors. The occasion was a season of refreshing. At night St. Andrew's Hall was crowded with a deeply-interested audience. Mr. Varley gave an address upon the Second Coming of our Lord. Deep attention was followed by hallowed results, a large number of persons confessing Christ.

Mr. Levermore in Columbia.

The meetings in connection with Mr. Samuel Levermore's campaign in Columbia, continue to attract large gatherings nightly, and the preaching of the Word, simply and earnestly, has resulted in many anxious inquirers for the way of life. At one meeting no fewer than a score of sturdy railway engineers sought Christ. Mr. Levermore, after preaching in one of the tents at the Presbyterian Committee of Philadelpia for two weeks, is to conduct services at the Pan-American Exposition for the closing week of the tour. He asks to be remembered in prayer by his numerous friends at home.

Leeds Free Church Mission.

Following up the work of the Simultaneous Mission, many outdoor meetings have been held during the summer. For the Simultaneous Mission the city was divided into twenty-seven groups with a separate committee in each, the organization being kept up for future united work. The groups adjacent Woodhouse Moor (one of the most frequented public parks) formed a united committee and arranged Sunday afternoon services on the Moor, for twelve weeks, only one of which was cancelled on account of the weather. Fourteen ministers and other speakers have taken part in the meetings, the attendance on some occasions reaching 600 to 700. The spiritual results are known only to the Lord of the Harvest, but the Gospel was earnestly and lovingly preached, and we trust not in vain. J. M. G.

Rev. J. Lyall in Queensland.

As mentioned in last week's issue, Rev. Jas. Lyall has been taking part in the Simultaneous Mission in Queensland. A recent issue of the Austral Star contained the following reference to Mr. Lyall's mission at Fortitude Valley:—"Beginning with the intention of continuing the mission for a fortnight, the work proved to be so eminently successful, and so manifestly a work of God, that before the end of the second week the session resolved to continue the services for another week. Later, an extension for one more week was made, making in all a four weeks' mission. The names of over 100 persons, young and old, who profess conversion, have been received, and among these the names of young men are conspicuous. The interest shown by the latter class in the services has been one of the most outstanding and pleasing phases of the work. In addition to those who have decided for Christ, many Christians testify to the stimulus which their own lives have received, and, indeed, there is scarcely a home in connection with the congregation in which there has not been at least one member who has experienced a work of grace. Many successful missions have been held in the Valley, but it is, probably, safe to say that for depth and solidity of work the present is the greatest of them all. One regret remains to be recorded, and that is the failure, almost complete, to touch the people unconnected with the church. Only a few of them attended any of the meetings, and still fewer of them have been added unto the Lord. But for this one thing, the success of the mission has been unqualified.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

The month of August will long be remembered by those associated with the work of the Tower Hamlets Mission. One of the hardest months in the year for evangelistic work was made into a very successful one by the visit of Rev. James Marchant. This was his first mission in the Great Assembly Hall, although for years he had now and again taken a night or two. Mr. Marchant was a colleague of the late Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, and at one time President of the West Ham Secular Society. A speaker of no mean order, he impresses you with the fact that he speaks as a man who is talking about what he knows to be true from what his experience has taught him. He chooses his subject, divides it, and in an argumentative way convinces you as he proceeds that, in his "search after truth," he has found Christ, and the blessing thus derived he wishes to impart to others. Many "Freethinkers" (so-called) and Secularists came to hear him, and some were led to meet him in the inquiry-room. The great hall was well attended on Sundays, and the tent was full on week nights. The night he gave his farewell address the tent was packed. His words fell with great solemnity upon the ears of his audience. They listened to him with riveted attention, and now and again their pent-up feelings were relieved by an outburst of applause as he alluded to how God in his goodness had set him free from the trammels of Atheism. Hundreds stayed behind to shake hands with him and acknowledge the blessings received during his month's labours. He leaves with the good wishes and prayers of many to whom God has blessed him in showing them the way of salvation. Mr. J. S. Brunning took the Gospel Temperance meetings on Thursdays, and on each occasion the tent was crowded, and many pledges were taken.

Glasgow Exhibition Services.

Thousands are pouring into Glasgow to see the great exhibition in Kelvingrove. Last week the newspapers were jubilant over the fact that the sum total of those who had gone through the gates since its opening exceeded 6,000,000. Beyond all doubt, numbers of those who visit it are Christian people, but to reach, if possible, some of the many who are not on the Lord's side, different agencies are at work scattering tracts, and sounding out the Gospel message.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, recently returned from a tour round the world, has been holding forth the Word of life. The Sunday evening meetings have been held in St. Andrew's Hall, and the week-night services in front of Finniston United Free Church. Mr. Oatts has had some very good meetings, but some of the nights have been very cold, operating against the attendance, while on one night we were there the open-air meeting had to be abandoned, and a service held in the church instead. Moving a little westward on the night on which the meeting was taken indoors, and the rain having slackened somewhat, we came across a company of Christian people hard at work near to one of the exhibition gates, with a Bible carriage in their midst. One of their number was telling out in clear and telling fashion the way of salvation. On our homeward way we came across another company of Gospellers with an "Exhibition Services" board set up in their midst. These also were trying to do business for the King. Though farther distant from the Exhibition than the others, yet as the mouth of the street they stood in abutted on one of the main lines of thoroughfare, their presence was a powerful testimony. J. C.

Rev. John Jameson on Sunday commenced his fourth year as missioner of the Yorkshire Congregational Union by conducting a mission at Guisborough. By arrangement with the executive, Mr. Jameson conducts an occasional mission outside the county. His present engagements extend to the end of the year. Applications for Mr. Jameson's services may be made to Rev. Bryan Dale, M.A., 29, St. Paul's Road, Bradford, Yorks.

A fruitful series of services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission was conducted by Mr. K. S. Bourne, of Edgbaston, Birmingham, at Langland Bay, Mumbles, during the first three weeks in August. Twenty meetings were held on the beach, and were well attended, the interest amongst the children and young people being sustained during the whole of the mission. Nine evening meetings were organized, including a lantern service, which was held in Oystermouth Castle, and attracted much attention. Numerous believers have testified to the help derived from these services, and many children sought Christ as their Saviour.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

The friends interested in the London Tent Campaign will be glad to hear that the Central Council have made arrangements whereby the Campaign can proceed. Four of the local committees where tents were to be erected have come forward at this time when funds were so much needed, and guaranteed the whole of the expenses connected with their particular districts, thus leaving the Central Council with the responsibility of carrying on the four great missions being held at Islington, Leyton, Lavender Hill, and Canning Town.

On Saturday last, further tents were opened at Harlesden (Harlesden Lane) and Deptford (High Street). In both these places great crowds gathered at the opening meetings, and on the Sunday evening many accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Further missions are being arranged for at High Road, Clapham, and Worple Road, Wimbledon. These missions open in the course of a few days.

The Central Council have been greatly encouraged by the responses made to carry on this work, hundreds of letters being received containing mostly small amounts, and up to the present moment the deficit has been reduced to about £800. In one case a little boy who had been attending the tent meetings had saved up 3s., which he had deposited in the savings bank, and when he heard of the need he withdrew all that he had and sent it to the central office with a letter saying that he did not want the tent meetings to stop. Letters were received signed as follows: "Five working men," "An Irishman (nationality dies at the Cross)," "Twenty railway men," "Band of Converts at Dartford," "Prayer Meeting at Llanelly." Many thank-offerings have also been sent for husbands converted, wives, children, brothers, sisters, &c.

Much solid work continues to be carried on in the Leyton tent, where Rev. Dr. Robertson and Mr. R. S. Bradbrook have been labouring during the past week. Many interesting cases of conversion and restoration have been dealt with, while Christians have been greatly helped into a richer and deeper experience. If the necessary funds are forthcoming there is every prospect of the mission being extended beyond the original date of closing. Many friends in Leyton are praying and believing that this may be so.

The spirit of revival continues to grow in the fruitful Mission being held at Islington. During the past week, despite the wet weather, great crowds have gathered nightly, and much blessing has been received. Mr. Leonard Weaver, owing to a slight indisposition, was compelled to take a rest three days, the vacancy being filled by Mr. J. T. Vine, who preached Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday with much power. Special mention should be made of his address on Thursday, the subject of which was "The Great White Throne." The power and earnestness of the address was greatly felt in the congregation, many souls deciding to start that night to serve the Lord. A pleasing feature of Friday's meeting was a short address and solo by Rev. Winnifrid Mixon, D.D., Presiding Elder of the Congregational Church, Alabama. On Saturday evening a limelight lecture was given by Mr. Sayles, of America, entitled "A Trip to the Holy Land." Notwithstanding the inclement weather, an audience of 1,500 people listened to an instructive and interesting discourse.

On Sunday, commencing at seven a.m., great power was felt in the prayer-meeting, between 200 and 300 being present. Definite blessing for the day was claimed.

At the eleven o'clock men's meeting Mr. Leonard Weaver spoke to about 1,000 men, the subject of his address being "Life." Preaching with persuasion and force, he besought his hearers to make definite decision for Christ. Many left their seats and proceeded to the platform as a testimony of entering the service of Jesus Christ.

In the afternoon Mr. Weaver addressed a congregation of 1,500, the subject of his address being "Ezekiel's Vision." This was a strong appeal to Christians to take up definite service for the Master

A remarkable meeting was that of Sunday evening, the tent being altogether too small for the crowd that had come. Mr. Weaver took as his text John iii. 16, speaking with spiritual fervour he impressed his hearers until he brought the service to a close with a powerful appeal for a decision for Jesus Christ. It was remarkable to see men and women, broken down, pleading for mercy. Altogether it was a red letter day for Islington. Up to Sunday night some hundreds had passed through the inquiry rooms at this tent.

On Friday evening next the service will be conducted by a number of ministers attending the Œcumenical Conference at Wesley's Chapel. Among the speakers on that occasion will be Dr. Dixon of Georgia, and Rev. Winnifrid Mixon of Alabama.

A lady worker, well known in London, writes:—

"Having had the great privilege, since the commencement of the Islington Tent Mission, of being present every evening (except Saturday), as well as at the seven o'clock meetings for praise and prayer on Sunday mornings, I should like to bear my testimony to what I have seen of the grace of God during these weeks, and to express my thankfulness that the Mission is to be continued till the middle of September.

"Some of us have been praying for many years that the Lord would open the windows of heaven and give showers of blessing on this neighbourhood, and the showers are truly coming down, and many are now rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour; backsliders are parting with their cherished idols, and returning to the Lord, and many Christians who have never confessed Christ or sought to bring others to Him are witnessing for Him.

"Sunday, 25th ult., was, I think, the best day of all. The spirit of prayer, as well as praise, was very evident in our seven o'clock meeting, when a goodly company gathered. Husbands pleaded with God for their wives, wives for husbands, sisters for brothers, and brothers for sisters.

"It was an unspeakable joy to me on one occasion to see a wife's prayer answered in her husband coming forward to the front of the platform to decide for Christ, and to see their united joy through their tears.

"All along, such a number of men, and especially young men and boys, have yielded themselves to God, as well as women and girls.

"As far as I can judge, the devoted helpers are mostly composed of those who are not rich in this world's goods; but I cannot help thinking that if God's stewards of his silver and gold could witness the grace of God as manifested in his servants who are conducting this mission, and in those who are helping in the arrangements for the comfort of the thousands coming night after night, as well as the other helpers, they would count it a privilege to help the funds of the mission.

"The secretary said to me one evening, 'The only thing I do not enjoy is having to press these poor people for money.' There are some physically unfit to help in these meetings who perhaps have not thought that they might share in the joy of harvest by ministering to the funds of the Tent Campaign, which is reaching the non-Church-goers and the drunkards, as well as others who have sat in their pews year after year, but are still dead in sin."

Central Mission, Bedminster Town Hall.

A Tent Mission in connection with the Central Mission has just been conducted by Mr. R. Spragg. Eternity alone will reveal all the good that has been accomplished, but there have been many seekers after salvation, while believers have been greatly edified and blessed by the afternoon Bible readings given by our brother. "To God be the glory." Our prayers follow him to South Croydon, where he will be labouring during the next three weeks.

Mr. W. D. Dunn in Aberdeen.

A month's mission in one of the tents of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission has been brought to a close in Aberdeen, by Mr. W. D. Dunn. This was the evangelist's fifth visit to the granite city, and never before have so many gathered to hear him. The tent and hall were both utilized on Sundays, but failed to accommodate the crowds who came. Throughout the month there was an unbroken line of inquirers, one evening twenty-two indicated their desire to be the Lord's. On several occasions two members of the same family were led to the Saviour together. One master sends a request for thanksgiving for four of his employés having been converted during the mission. The two last days of Mr. Dunn's visit were devoted to a conference on the coming of the Lord, Mr. Davidson, of Inchmarlo, Mr. Dunn, Dr. Ventby, Mr. J. A. Smith, and others giving addresses. W. R. A.

Vale of Leven Branch Railway Mission.

A tent mission, which has been a time of much blessing and spiritual quickening to the Christian workers throughout the Vale of Leven, and blessed of God in a great ingathering to the kingdom of our Lord, was conducted by Mr. Hugh Paton, evangelist, in Jamestown, from June 15 to July 8. There had been much waiting on God for a revival of his work in our midst, and prayer has been abundantly answered, far beyond what we either asked or thought. To God be all the glory. The keynote of the mission was struck, at the opening conference, by Rev. John McNeil, who spoke on Ezekiel's vision in the valley of dry bones. Some points were the necessity of being honest enough to admit failure whenever apparent; whole-hearted consecration to Christ; and the almighty power of God to convert even the dry bones into living, breathing souls.

The meetings throughout were well attended, the Sunday evening meetings being held in the Drill Hall as the tent could not accommodate the crowds that came. The open-air meetings were very hearty, much liberty and joy being experienced in testifying for the Master there, while the march to the tent afterwards was inspiring. Right from the opening meeting we realized the presence of the Lord in the midst to save, and as the old, old story of the Saviour's love was told forth in all its fulness and in the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost, our hearts were cheered and we praised God in seeing many precious souls passing from darkness unto light, and who are now by word and life testifying to the reality of that change. Not the least remarkable feature was the series of four conferences held during the mission. These Saturday afternoon meetings together with the Lord's Day morning gatherings proved to be times of sweet fellowship and spiritual helpfulness, and could not but be a stimulus and inspiration to all present. Among the friends who took part in these meetings were Rev. John McNeil, Mr. R. Logan, Mr. Henry, Mr. McRostie, Mr. D. Walker, Mr. Gardner, Mr. Halliday, Mrs. Morrison (Glasgow), Rev. Wm. Keddie (India), Mr. Charteris (South Africa), and Pastor Hughes (Glasgow).

The Mission-Hall being now too small for the Gospel meetings, they are meantime being conducted in the Drill Hall, but we expect to be back in our own hall shortly, which is (in answer to prayer) to have its present capacity doubled. To God be the glory; great things He hath done.

Personalia.

Rev. James Wall, well known for his devoted labours among the poor in Rome, lies seriously ill. Many will pray that this honoured servant of God may long be spared for further service to the cause he has so much at heart.

The numerous friends of Miss Lovell (who is working among the blind girls in Jerusalem) will be glad to know that she is to be joined in her labours by Miss L. Bowyer, who hopes to leave England on the 9th inst.

Mr. Charles R. Haig has for sixteen years at his own charges carried on a Gospel work at Birchington Bay, Thanet. Rev. John Wilkinson, of Mildmay, who spent his holiday at Birchington in the year 1885, was the first to give an address in the little building, which seats 200, and addressed the meetings on each of the Sundays of his stay. Since that time, without hardly any help from outside, Mr. Haig has held three services every Lord's Day, the afternoon one being for young people. Circumstances seem to point to his being compelled to leave Birchington, and he would be glad to hear of some Christian gentleman who might feel moved to co-operate or take over the work.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on display of Gospel banner at Alexandra Races and Barnet Fair.

For blessing upon Mr. Henry Varley's mission at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow.

For the mission to be conducted by Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz, at Arbroath, N.B., September 15-30.

Prayer is asked that the proceedings against Dr. Long, of Limerick, may be over-ruled to the glory of God.

That the Spirit of God may pierce the unbelief and indifference of West Didsbury, convicting and converting men.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. W. Birks, aged seventy-one, at Stockport. He was superannuated in 1893, after an active and successful ministry in the Primitive Methodist Connexion of forty-one years.—Rev. S. C. J. Fox, for twenty-two years vicar of Little Eaton.—One of the best-known lay Baptist preachers has passed away in the person of Mr. W. Belson, of Northampton, the hon. secretary of the Village Preachers' Association.—Mr. Josiah Lovatt, one of the founders of the Baptist Church at Stafford.—Mr. John Taylor, at Northampton, at the age of seventy. He rendered important service in collecting information as to the origin and history of many of the Free Churches, and spent much time in getting together biographical facts concerning the founders of the Baptist Missionary Society.

Internal Evidence of the Scriptures.—Search diligently the word of eternal life, enriched and ennobled as it is with the chain and the accomplishment of its prophecies; with the splendour of its miracles; with the attestation of its martyrs; the consistency of its doctrines; the importance of its facts; the plenitude of its precepts; the treasury of its promises; the irradiations of the Spirit; the abundance of its consolations; the proportion of its parts; the symmetry of the whole altogether presenting such a fund of instruction to the mind, of light to the path, of document to the conduct, of satisfaction to the heart, as demonstrably prove it to be the instrument of God for the salvation of man.—Hannah More.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of spiritual progress and effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The health of Dr. Welldon has greatly improved since his arrival in this country, and he is expecting to leave in October to resume his duties as Bishop of Calcutta.

Rev. H. S. Sanders, a well-known temperance advocate, who a few years ago was appointed rector of Eastnor on the presentation of Lady Henry Somerset, hast accepted the East London living of Bromley-by-Bow.

Canon Quirk, the newly-appointed Suffragan Bishop of Sheffield, will take special charge, under the Archbishop of York, of the southern portion of the diocese, including Sheffield, and stretching northwards to Doncaster. For the present the new bishopric will be associated with the vicarage of Doncaster.

The appointment by the Primate of Rev. A. F. Painter to the rectory of Isfield, Sussex, is a worthy recognition of his zealous labours in the mission field. Mr. Painter, who was trained at the C.M.S. College at Islington, has laboured for over twenty years as a missionary in India, being stationed for most of the time at Travancore.

The venerable rector of Cotleigh, near Honiton, Rev. J. Hawker, B.A., has lately resigned his living through increasing years and failing health. Mr. Hawker has always shown warm sympathy with Nonconformists, a sympathy which at one time exposed him to adverse criticism. On a recent Sunday Rev. P. Cudmore, now Bible Christian minister, of Kilburn, paid a warm tribute to Mr. Hawker in a sermon he preached in the village of Cotleigh. Before entering the ministry, Mr. Cudmore lived in the parish, and knew that when the Bible Christian chapel was built there, the members of the Society received the greatest kindness from the rector. Mr. Cudmore himself received personal kindness from Mr. Hawker, for when he decided to give himself to the work of the Bible Christian ministry, he was allowed the use of the rector's library.

Congregational.

As a memorial to Rev. Urijah R. Thomas, the seaside home for ministers at Monthoe, Devon, established by him, is to be placed on a sound financial basis at a cost of £5,000.

The first sod on the site for the new church at Cricklewood (Rev. Cuthbert McEvoy) was turned on Monday of last week, by Mr. R. D. Lown, of Hampstead, and building commenced the following day.

Rev. J. Volander Jones, formerly of Trecastle, Breconshire, now on tour through the United States, has accepted the pastorate of the Congregational Church at Newcastle, Pennsylvania, for the ensuing twelve months.

Rev. A. Thurston Pain, of Hackney College, has accepted the pastorate of the Stockwell Church, and commenced his ministry there on Sunday. The ordination service will take place on Wednesday, November 6, at the church, when Rev Principal Forsyth, M.A., D.D., of Hackney College, will deliver the charge.

Since Rev. W. A. Samuel assumed the responsibilities of the pastorate of Clifton Park Avenue Church, Belfast, much good work has been accomplished. The various societies connected with the church are all in a flourishing condition. The week-evening service has been well sustained, and the Sunday school has more than doubled itself in twelve months.

To commemorate the ministry of Rev. Noble Sheppard, the congregation at Sligo have recently undertaken a thorough scheme of renovation. In addition to cleaning and redecorating the building, the choir seats and organ, which were formerly behind the congregation, have been brought forward, and are arranged behind and on either side of the pulpit. Other improvements are contemplated.

At a meeting of the congregation of Horton Lane Church, Bradford, held last week, a letter was read from Rev. Henry Varley, resigning the pastorate, which he has held for nearly seven years. The steady migration of the population from the centre of the city has led to the removal of many families who had been connected with Horton Lane Chapel for years. In his letter Mr. Varley intimated that he no longer felt himself able to bear the strain which the changed circumstances imposed upon him. Mr. Varley's ministry will close at the end of September.

Baptist.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, the secretary to the Baptist Union, who has recently been suffering from a severe illness at his home in Beckenham, is considerably improved in health.

When giving the right hand of fellowship to six baptised candidates at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, Brunswick Road, E., Rev. A. Tildsley (pastor) mentioned the fact that up to this month of August he had received 200 new members within the last three years into this church.

Rev. James R. Cooper, in leaving Helston and Hayle, has received from the churches and Sunday schools tokens of appreciation. The Helston and District Free Church Council (of which Mr. Cooper was secretary), expressed its regret that the Council would lose so enthusiastic a worker.

Next month the Baptist Union will hold its autumnal assembly in Edinburgh, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Maclaren. Twenty-two years have elapsed since the Union last visited Scotland, when the assembly was held in Glasgow. During that period the membership of Baptist churches in Scotland has increased from 9,000 to nearly 17,000.

The 232nd anniversary of the formation of the church at Tottlebank, Lancs., has been celebrated. The pastor preached morning and evening, and at each service read an extract from the old church book, where it is stated that on "the eighteenth day of the sixth month called August, 1669, a church of Christ was formed in order at the house of William Rawlinson, of Tottlebank." The anniversary was an encouraging one in every way.

Methodist.

Under the guidance of Mr. W. Hogg, a Primitive Methodist a party of Primitive Methodist missionaries has left for the Zambesi.

The Primitive Missionary Committee of the Grimsby and Lincoln District has purchased a new mission van, which has commenced operations at Cleethorpes. Dr. J. C. Wright, J.P., has collected £100 towards the cost.

In connection with the Clowes Primitive Methodist Church, Hull, new institute rooms have been built, at a cost of £1,000. Dr. Gautby and the Mayor of Hull conducted the opening ceremony, Rev. E. Dalton being the preacher.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The Attack on President McKinley. Once more the assassin's pistol has been at work, and Anarchism has almost claimed another victim. The attack on President McKinley's life is one of the most dastardly in the records of crime. Society seems helpless against these subterranean forces of revolution which burst out now and again through the thin veneer of civilization, showing what pent-up fires of revolution lurk within. In this case the accessibility of the American President to the poorest and meanest of his fellow-citizens was made into an opportunity for making him an innocent victim of the hatred that burns in the minds of these revolutionaries against the established order. The sympathies of this country will go out with special warmth to the stricken President, and the great nation he represents, as well as earnest prayer for his recovery.

The Significance of Anarchism. The nineteenth century saw some thirty-three Anarchic attempts (of which several were successful) at the assassination of crowned heads and rulers. What is the meaning of this subtle, insidious, pitiless, untiring campaign of murder? It is no use referring it to such terms as insanity, environment, &c., and to dismiss Anarchism as a "social cancer," or an "epidemic of crime." In point of fact, we are here face to face with the fruit of the undying hatred that fills the heart of man against his fellows, the fruit of immemorial tyrannies and oppressions on the part of governments in the past, as well as of that newer oppression of irresponsible wealth and luxury which breeds millionaires at one end, and beggars at the other. Our civilization is far from being Christianized, and the "Golden Age" is still in the far future. Until it is permeated with the new life that flows from the cross of Christ, we may change our names, but not our crimes, and reap these frightful harvests of blood.

The Œcumenical Conference. The great gathering of Methodists from all parts of the English-speaking world which is now in progress in London represents a body of Christian people equalling a considerable nation in numbers, and a volume and quality of influence that mere figures could never represent. The most extraordinary feature of Methodism under all skies is its fidelity to a single doctrinal type (though it varies indefinitely in machinery and organization). Preaching to-day that special type of theology which gave what is now a vast network of religious influence its first impulse under the Wesleys, which may be defined as "Christian truth translated into terms of experience."

Theology and Hymnology. What is it that has enabled the Wesleyan churches to realise this "unity of the faith" in so marvellous a manner? There are doubtless many contributory causes—the veneration in which the founders of the Methodist movement have ever been held by their spiritual descendants, the itinerant system, &c. But deeper, possibly, than these lies Wesley's wonderful hymn-book, in which the spiritual forces of Methodism are enshrined, and which renew their appeal every Lord's Day, as they are sung by millions of worshippers. If the songs of a nation determine the quality and intensity of its patriotism more than any other cause, we may be sure that the hymns of a church determine the character of its thinking quite as much as the teaching of its pulpits—and possibly more so. This has been pre-eminently true of the century of Methodism since the death of John Wesley in 1791.

The Bane of Sacerdotalism. It is to be greatly regretted that Bishop Ryle should have forbidden Rev. C. B. Berry, a Plymouth clergyman, to hold the united Communion Service in his church, to which he had invited certain Nonconformist ministers. Such a service is annually held in connection with the Keswick Convention without interference from the Bishop of Carlisle, though greatly objected to in certain High Church circles. By such acts of exclusiveness the rift between Church and Dissent, which is healing on the one side, is being re-opened and widened on the other. More and more clearly it is evident that the real enemy of that unity, for which the Lord Jesus prayed in the seventeenth chapter of St. John, is sacerdotalism, which stifles the best instincts of Christian brotherhood, and perpetuates a state of seclusion and alienation which properly belongs to the mediæval era of Christianity.

The Recent Episcopal Appointment. The Church Review, which represents the extreme Sacerdotal party in the Church of England, delivers itself thus concerning Dr. Moule's appointment to the See of Durham:—

> It is sad to find deep piety and zeal for souls hand-in-hand with blindness to what are to us such obvious implications of the Incarnation as the Sacrifice of the Mass, the Catholic doctrines of merit and penance, and the powers and prerogatives of the saints.

A Roman editor could scarcely have said more. But it is going beyond all bounds to add, "If Low Churchmen have to be appointed to bishoprics," &c., as if they had no rights whatever. At the heart of these criticisms, it is easy to perceive the old sacerdotal persecuting spirit, which would deny to all outside the sacerdotal pale their most ordinary rights. If by any chance these sacerdotalists ever gained the supremacy, it would be an ill day for our liberties.

A Romanist Verdict. In the face of the Assumptionist migration from France to England consequent upon the recent legislation, it is interesting to observe that Italy—a Romanist country—is resolved to have none of these monks and nuns; and that not only is an agitation against any such reception spreading throughout the land, but the Italian Government is about to legislate to meet the case. Meanwhile, it is stated, the Dissolution Laws will be enforced. It is inevitable that sooner or later England will be forced to do likewise, for we are giving asylum to those whose loyalty is to Rome, and whose presence in a country is a standing menace to its freedom and spiritual growth.

The Satisfaction of the Cross. Rev. W. W. Peyton, discussing the anthropological theory of the origin of religion in The Contemporary, points out one of the significant results of the great Sacrifice on Calvary. In savage lands, religious human sacrifices have ever held a great place as a means of propitiating the gods. Nothing is more remarkable than the entire disappearance of human sacrifices in every country where the Cross has been preached. The great voluntary offering of the Son of God has met the dumb, misguided craving of the human heart, and has healed the world for ever of the "disease of human sacrifices." What the blood of bulls and goats, and virgins and captives, could not do, the death of Christ, who made peace by the blood of the Cross, has done for all mankind, and for all time.

The Failure of Ethical Preaching. Dr. John Smith said some straight things before the Glasgow Presbytery last week (see p. 23). In his view there is "ethical paralysis in the life of the nation of the most ominous kind." And this in a day when so-called ethical preaching is pre-eminently to the fore! It is high time for the pulpit to devote itself more fully to reasoning "of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment."

Decline in Church Attendance. We are all familiar with the various reasons given by Christian leaders to account for the undoubted decline in the attendance at public worship. The Outlook is now supplying us with reasons from the standpoint of worldly men, and it is well that we should hear them. One writer expresses with neat flippancy an opinion which largely prevails amongst those who account themselves to be of importance in the world. It is the lofty dictum that the march of science has left the Church of God hopelessly in the rear in the matter of teaching. Bacteriology has made belief in a devil impossible; sanitation disposes of faith, &c. It is intensely difficult to deal with this colossal and offensive ignorance, for those who exhibit it are generally persons inflated with the worst kind of vanity, and who are not open to the most ordinary reasoning in anything that concerns God and spiritual realities. For the absence of some people from the house of God no doubt the Church is to blame; but the letters in The Outlook prove that self-will and an ignorant pride amongst worldly men are some of the causes of the present ignoring of God and his ordinances.

An Old Man's Witness. Our readers will do well to direct the attention of young men to the confession made in the Young Man by Dr. Newman Hall, under the heading, "What Life is like at Eighty-five." It is a wise and ripe utterance which should make any man think earnestly about the trend of his life. Says Dr. Hall:—

> I would urge a young man, when considering what he may accept and what reject, to ask, not merely what at the present time is most fashionable, or may give him most pleasure, but what in the future he may look back upon as having most tended to his bodily, mental, social, and religious welfare. He may apply this test to the books he reads, the amusements he indulges, the companions he selects, the habits he encourages.

These considerations are urged continually from the pulpit and in religious books, but they come with additional weight when uttered by one who, at such an advanced age, carries in himself a testimony to their truth.

The Drink Traffic. Our "Temperance Notes" this week (see p. 21) contain some painfully interesting and instructive reading. Yet it is but the merest gleaning from the daily harvest of the drink curse, in its million-fold ramifications.

The Children's Bill. Those who are tempted to be sanguine about the present position of the temperance question will do well to ponder the fact that, notwithstanding the zealous support of members on both sides of the House of Commons, it was only possible to secure the passing of the Children's Bill in the emasculated condition to which we referred last week. The allowing of children to act as messengers in carrying on a "bottle" trade, as distinguished from the use of "jugs," defeats the chief aim of the promoters, which was to prevent boys and girls from encountering the contaminating influences of licensed houses. Through an inadvertence the name of Mr. C. Ernest Tritton, M.P. for Norwood, was given in our last issue as "Mr. C. Herbert Tritton."

Public-houses versus Clubs. The struggle with the drink traffic is entering on a new phase in Birmingham. The chairman of the Licensing Magistrates (Mr. Arthur Chamberlain) has intimated that in the near future the number of licences in that city will be reduced, with the result that the members of the trade are planning the turning of the houses into artizans' clubs. The clubs will remain open till midnight instead of eleven o'clock on week-days, and eleven instead of ten o'clock on the Lord's Day. Experience at Cardiff is said to justify the belief that more beer will be sold than under present conditions, through the freedom from official interference gained. On the other hand, if the enemies of the public well-being use their ingenuity to evade the law, Christian people must see to it that new legislation is procured to meet the exigencies of altered circumstances.

An Invertebrate Argument. It is lamentable to find a writer in The Times, in dealing with the important question of the reduction of liquor licences, insisting that it is not the function of the law to make people moral, and that whenever it has attempted to do so it has always failed. The real and legitimate function of law, it is urged, is simply that of "maintaining order and suppressing abuses which are obnoxious to the general community." Even this definition cuts deeply at the drink traffic as at present tolerated; but beyond this, law should be preventive as well as punitive. From the Ten Commandments downward, to the latest prohibitive statute, the prime intention has been that of securing morality. "Thou shalt not" has ever been the foundation of the higher morals.

Prayer and Licences. The power of agreed prayer in connection with the Brewster's Licensing Session has been demonstrated at Portsmouth the past two years in a very striking way. A determined effort was made by the Empire Music Hall Co. to obtain full public-house licences for a large new building proposed to erected in the Stanhope Road. The sitting accommodation of the present Empire Palace is 750, and it was asked that this should be increased to 1,600, with seven saloons for drinking purposes. Mr. Thomas Hogben, of the "Welcome Mission," and Rev. C. J. W. Davies, of the Congregational Church, interviewed the clergy, ministers, and Christian workers of the town. United prayer meetings were held at the "Welcome Mission," and the Congregational Church, to ask the Lord to defeat the purposes of the evil-doers, and both years the licences have been refused. Last Wednesday, when the case came before the court, many of the clergy, all the Free Church ministers, Miss Agnes Weston, Captain Key, and others, appeared and presented petitions against the granting of the licences, when the magistrates not only refused these licences, but also applications for four other new ones.

The G.P.O. and Betting. The dismissal of one or two employés in the Government Telegraphic Department for indulging in betting, is an indication that the Department is resorting to severe measures in regard to this vice, which is spreading like a plague in all public offices. So long ago as December, 1896, the "Post Office Circular" warned the servants of the G.P.O. that they would thenceforth be liable to dismissal if concerned in betting. This action of the department will probably do more good to young fellows, in the way of making them careful, than any quantity of advice. It is a poor sort of virtue which proceeds from fear; and yet fear may be the beginning of wisdom.

The Brothers Cotelingam. Either we and others have misunderstood the purpose of the Cotelingam Brothers in their proposed world-wide tour, or they have changed their minds concerning it. On the collecting-card which they have issued to their friends in various parts of the country, for raising money for them, the first of the brothers is described as "Evangelist." Sir George Williams is quoted as saying: "It has been my great privilege to make the acquaintance of Messrs. Cotelingam, brothers of one family. These friends are making a world-wide tour, with a view to proclaiming the Gospel by speech and song. They have helped us at Exeter Hall. I most gladly give to them this note of introduction and commendation, in the belief that their efforts could not fail to be useful wherever an open door is found for them." The Christian World is also quoted thus: "The object of their tour is to engage in evangelistic work, and gather impressions and ideas which they can utilize on their return home." In a recent interview however, with the brothers, they distinctly disavowed the idea that they are on an evangelistic tour, but said that it is a private tour for studying the conditions of Christianity in the various countries they may visit. They have established collecting centres in various places, for the amounts received at which there is no treasurer other than themselves, nor is any statement of receipts and expenditure issued. As we deem the latter to be a necessity in any mission for which we stand in any degree as sponsors before the public, we wish it to be understood that this method of collecting money was entered upon without our knowledge, and that we are not in any way to be regarded as endorsing it.

Official Sabbath-Breaking.

AMONGST the charges, mostly groundless, brought against our army in South Africa, there is one which we fear contains too much truth. This refers to the desecration of the Lord's Day, more especially by the officers. The evidence is drawn from the Johannesburg Gazette, a paper published by military authority, which contains the news of the games of hockey, shooting matches, and other sports, held on Sunday under official sanction. Historically, there is no doubt whatsoever that the cause of religion stands or falls in every country with the preservation of the Lord's Day from secular business and amusement. In this case we have to consider the thousands of young men who are away from the restrictions and inspirations of home life, as well as the native population, who will form their conception of our English ideals by the conduct of our troops there now.

But the example is being set in higher quarters at home. There is serious offence to the public conscience in the announcements made last week that:—

> Earl Egerton, Lord Lieutenant of Cheshire, will on Sunday next, at Chester, distribute medals to the 21st and 22nd Companies of the Imperial Yeomanry, which served in South Africa under Lord Arthur Grosvenor and Major Moseley Leigh.

Such a precedent has great public influence, and if amusements like the concerts at the Alexandra Palace—to which reference is made in another column—are to be even prevented from spreading, Christian people must guard against interference with the proper observance of the Day at every point.

Again, on Friday last:—

> The Chief Secretary sent a telegram this morning to Mr. Studdert, the secretary of Clare County Council, informing him that he would arrive at Liscannor Harbour, West Clare, at four o'clock on Sunday, when he would be prepared to meet the deputations of the Clare Council and other bodies who desire to interview him on the subjects of the improvement of Liscannor Harbour and pier, about which several questions have been put both in the Lords and Commons.

Mr. Wyndham, accompanied by his son, Mr. Percy Wyndham, and a party consisting of Mr. W. S. Green, Mr. James Malcolm, M.P., Mr. Charles Walleby, and Mr. P. Hanson (private secretary) drove from Glenans, where they had landed in the morning, by car, a distance of some twenty miles. Concerning this a Protestant minister in Ireland, says:—

"There is but one feeling in Christian minds in Ireland—it is that Mr. Wyndham, as a responsible British Minister in Ireland representing a Protestant Government, has committed an outrage in thus openly defying the Fourth Commandment, by appointing meetings on Sabbath afternoon for the discussion of public business with public bodies.

"The voice of Protestant Christian Ireland is invariably scouted by every British Government, because our numbers are few; but the voice of Protestant Christian England cannot be scouted by any British Government; and, as a Christian minister on the spot, I appeal to fellow-Christians in England to raise their voice against this glaring action of our Irish Chief Secretary." It is high time that this whole question, official Sabbath breaking, should receive serious attention. Christian ministers are universally deploring the increasing indifference of the people to the claims of God and of religion. But it is not likely that the people will regard these things unless those in authority set them the example. The claim of man for his day of rest is a strong one, but the claim of God for obedience to his law is stronger still, and neither individual nor nation can afford to set them at naught."

Remedies for Romanism.*

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

HOW shall we, as Evangelical Christians, counteract the Romanizing movement in our midst? We look upon that movement as one of the greatest perils that threatens both Church and State. The Romish apostasy began with corruption of the minds of men from the simplicity and the purity that is in Christ (2 Cor. xi. 2, 3), apart from which we cannot touch the sublimities of our holy faith.

Underneath the doings and the teachings of the Romish Church there is a foundation of truth, and this makes the whole thing so difficult to deal with. Yet the fact just stated indicates the line along which, by God's grace, we may successfully combat a movement which is founded in the obscuring of Christian verities and in playing upon the needs of the human heart. When Divine truth is not fully declared, helpless men turn to counterfeits. We must seek to bring truth to light, that it may contradict error.

LONGING FOR AUTHORITY.

The dogma of Papal Infallibility is based upon human longing for authority in some final word to satisfy the questioning heart of man. But that dogma denies the office of the Holy Spirit as Administrator of the affairs of the Church in the absence of Jesus Christ, and degrades the idea of the Catholic Church by implying that one man can comprehend within himself all truth. Correction of the error will be found by practically recognising the presence of the Holy Ghost in the midst of God's people; and realization of that truth will bring about the renunciation of worldly methods of service. Until this be done platform protests will be powerless to save the nation from the paralysis of Popery.

Sacerdotalism claims that so-called priests have certain rights of access to God which are denied to other men. These pretensions are based upon the soul's desire for spiritual guidance. Here the fulness of the work of Christ is denied, as well as the administrative power of the Holy Spirit in the believer. The error confines sacramental grace to a narrow rivulet, concealing the fact that grace flows through the whole Catholic Church of Jesus Christ. We are to correct it by returning to the doctrine of the Divine immanence in every believer, and by insisting upon the duty of each to seek to know the mind of God, immediately and directly, concerning every detail of life.

Young people sometimes come and ask me, "Do you think I may go to the theatre?" My answer is twofold. First, I reply, "I do not know; ask your Lord when you are alone with Him." And then, "If you ask me whether I can go, the reply is, Certainly not." I decline to decide a single question of conduct for anyone. It is so easy to take the decision of others in such matters; but a strong character is never made, and the will of God is never done, in that way. You cannot realize what it is to be "a man in Christ," unless you learn to wait amid the silence of a great perplexity until the voice of God sounds in your soul. When we reach that point, the priest loses his occupation.

THE CONFESSIONAL IN PLACE OF THE CROSS.

The confessional finds acceptance in our land with thousands of men and women, principally the latter. It recognises sin as an act of rebellion with consequences beyond the control of the sinner, and is reared upon human craving for pardon. What is wrong about it? The confessional delegates a power which has never been given by God to man, blunting the conscience, and setting sin in a false light. One sentence only upon a grave side of the question—the practice carries an awful possibility of sinning. I need not dwell upon that last shocking and awful fact. The corrective is to be found in proclaiming the atoning value of the Cross of Christ, for immediate and direct pardon of sin confessed to God alone.

There is a close connection between the sacerdotal pretension of the "priest" and that rationalistic theology which drops the Cross out of its preaching; for the latter has served the former, while professing to fight it. We must get back to the declaration, everywhere and at all times, that, without shedding of blood, there is no remission. It is quite time that we were done with the false thing called "culture," which abhors the doctrine of ATONEMENT BY BLOOD.

When the doctrine, in its necessity and direct results, is faithfully preached, the confessional will have no place among us.

Take that which, called by its right name, is termed the Mass. The writings of Romish mystics discover a seeking for actual contact and communion of man with God; and this doctrine of the Mass, false as it is blighting, is founded upon the heart's true hunger for comradeship with Christ. The doctrine degrades eternal and spiritual things to a material and sensual level, and creates a new idolatry.

The remedy is, that we preach and live in spiritual fellowship with the Father and with his Son, as the constant habit of our life. Then should there be no room for the false idea which robs men of their true communion, and leaves them out of touch with God. While there is need for exposure and denunciation of the vileness of the Romish system, it must be ours, as Evangelical Christians, to bear clear and full testimony to the positive truths which centre in Christ.

* Notes of an address.

British Liberty and Conventual Inspection.

From The Times.

SIR,—The recent Parliamentary discussion and action in reference to the Government proposal to inspect conventual laundries have again raised a very important question which it is very needful to keep alive until it is finally disposed of in a manner compatible with the boasted freedom and the personal rights of every British subject.

Public and private institutions in general, whether asylums, hospitals, poor-houses, prisons, or schools, are more or less open to official inspection, or to ordinary private view and acquaintance. But conventual institutions constitute a special exception. Not only the outside community, but even the officers of the law, and the custodians of personal liberty and security, are precluded from a knowledge of what does, or what may, take place within their walls. It may freely be conceded that these institutions appear to be usually conducted in accordance with the religious and philanthropic professions of their managers. But, neverthe less, it is opposed to the first principles of British liberty that it should be even fairly possible for any persons to be permanently shut up within establishments, some of which at least are absolutely closed by walls and gates, to the voluntary egress of the inmates, and in which also both deaths and interments take place without that degree of cognizance which the law rightly insists upon in all other cases.

EVEN PRISONS ARE INSPECTED.

It is contended by the opponents of inspection that the authorities of convents are such holy persons that every confidence ought to be placed upon their virtues and good motives. And doubtless there is much to be said for such a plea. But exactly the same reason could be given why prisons, for example, should not have been permitted to continue exempt from official inspection. In frequent visits to prisons I have often been impressed by the high character and humanity of many of the officials. And yet circumstances have repeatedly occurred which proved that, even in the best-managed prisons, some one or more of the staff might occasionally be the cause of some grave scandal. Hence, in common with some other witnesses examined in 1878, before the Royal Commission on the Penal Servitude Acts, I pleaded earnestly for the appointment of official unpaid visitors to the convict prisons. In their final report the Commissioners recommended the adoption of such a course; and it has been carried out with admittedly good results.

WHY NOT CONVENTUAL LAUNDRIES?

In the recent Parliamentary discussion on conventual laundries it was remarked by one speaker that "a change in the law of France had resulted in certain scandals being brought to light in a number of convents; and what guarantee, he asked, had they that similar institutions in this country were not being conducted in an equally disadvantageous manner?" Now, without guaranteeing either the truth of this statement as to French convents, or implying its applicability to English ones, yet all history and universal human nature prove the fallibility and peccability of even the best of men and women. And if a conventual abuse be an occurrence of the rarest nature, yet every Englishman and Englishwoman has a right to be, as far as possible, secured from even such occasional or exceptional abuse.

One could write more strongly on this subject. But it is desirable to avoid any charge savouring of sectarian unfairness. The main contention is the right of every British subject to the fullest personal protection against possible oppression, or, as Mr. Burns, M.P., so well expressed it, "the protection of the State to everybody, whether Roman Catholic or Jew, Pagan or Freethinker."

THE PLEA OF "DISCIPLINE."

The Home Secretary said that he had received many communications stating that conventual inspection "would destroy that discipline which was absolutely necessary." This reference to "discipline" (which may mean any kind of punishment) constitutes one of the very strongest reasons for inspection. Nor need such inspection be made offensive. The best-conducted convents might rightly welcome it. A lady told me that when, some years ago, there was a prospect of some legislation in this direction the superioress of an Irish convent remarked to her, "We shall be very pleased to see the gentlemen visitors. It will be something to look forward to with interest."

"GOOD PEOPLE MAY DO BAD THINGS."

I am only writing this letter on the same impartial principle which led me to advocate more prison visitation. I have repeatedly been charged by ultra-Protestant friends with entertaining a too favourable estimate of Roman Catholics. But I have known amongst them some of the best Christians. And all Christendom is vastly indebted to the Roman Church for its unshaken fidelity to the fundamental truths of the Incarnation and the Cross, and for its guardianship, through many centuries of danger, of the Holy Scriptures. These are priceless services to the Church Universal. But, at the same time, there should never be forgotten the lessons of the horrors of the Inquisition and of the Marian and other martyrdoms. And even as to the best of modern convents, it was a very wisely suggestive remark of Mr. Arthur J. Balfour's that "very good people sometimes do very bad things," and that "abuses sometimes creep into any institution, whatever its character, from which all publicity is excluded."

Some time, perhaps, when Mr. Balfour and his colleagues are more "strong in the knees," it may be practicable to give legislative effect to his own suggestions. But certainly, until they, or some other Government, succeed in doing so, the widely-boasted fabric of British liberty will continue to lack an important element of completion.—Respectfully yours,

William Tallack.

Mr. Kensit's Work.—Band I. of Mr. Kensit's Wycliffe Preachers have visited Gravesend, holding successful meetings near the Clock Tower. Mr. J. A. Kensit also spoke in the Public Hall, and Mr. John Kensit brought the mission to a close with a lecture in the Public Hall. Northfleet and Greenhithe were also visited, and well-attended meetings were held. A return visit to Dartford was made, and the preachers were accorded an encouraging reception. Although on the occasion of their last mission in the town they were met with opposition, the meetings this time have been orderly, and the audiences attentive.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

X.—The Envies of the World and the Jealousy of God (chap. iv.).

IT is important in the study of this passage to bear in mind that this Epistle is addressed to the whole nation as such, in its non-Christian as well as its Christian aspect. Such a view is the only possible explanation of the severity of the language in places, which finds its exact counterpart in the language of the older prophets. Often indeed special words of counsel are addressed to the true Israelite only, the man who has realized that Jesus of Nazareth is the answer to the hopes and calling of the nation, and has become a disciple of the Lord of Glory. Such passages are emphasized often by the more personal address, "brethren" (see i. 2, 9, 16, 19; ii. 1, 5, 14; iii. 1, 10; iv. 11; v. 7, 9, 12, 19). But here the sternness and severity of the passage determine its destination. It is addressed to the guilty and adulterous nation as a whole. Hence the title in verse 4, which is in keeping with the figure of Hosea, Isaiah, and other pre-exilic prophets, regarding the nation which has left its first love as a faithless wife who has deserted her true spouse.

The evil denounced in the opening verses of this chapter indirectly confirms our view as to the late date of the Epistle. The language used exactly corresponds with the state of things existing just before James' martyrdom. He speaks (1) of "wars and fightings" springing from pleasures which "make their encampment" in the members, and, drawn up in array there, wage war or practice ambush thence against the soul (same word or its compounds, Rom. vii. 23; 1 Pet. ii. 11). Then follows a passage, the punctuation of the parts of which has exercised the minds of many commentators. "Ye lust and have not; ye kill and covet and cannot obtain; ye fight and war; ye have not because ye ask not." Is it correct to place the "killing" before the "coveting"?

AN HISTORIC PICTURE.

First, the picture as a whole, to what does it allude? This successive description of lust, murder, jealousy, and strife is in startling correspondence with the condition of the nation under the infamous government of the freedman, Felix, and his successor, Porcius Festus.

Tacitus wrote of the former that "with all manner of cruelty and lust he exercised royal functions in the spirit of a slave." Under him "rebellion became permanent" (Schürer's "Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ"), the "Sicarii"—so called because they went about with short daggers ("sicae")—mingling with the crowds at festival seasons, stabbed their opponent unobserved, while the Zealots, whom Josephus styles "robbers," maintained the internecine strife of religious parties.

Nor were the high priests free from this general lust for the goods or lives of others. They took advantage of the illegal arrangements under the government of Felix, to send their servants to the threshing-floors to carry away by force the tithes which belonged to the other priests (Schürer), so that many of these even died of want. Religious and political fanatics united in one common enterprise, and, dividing into bodies, laid wait up and down the country, plundered the houses of rich men, slew them, and set their villages on fire.

The order of sentences here, therefore, corresponds with the actual facts. It is even suggested (Speaker's Commentary) that the words "Ye kill and covet" (zeloute) refer to the two great parties, the "murderers" and "zealots," who between them ravaged the country. Such a view is quite possible. First comes the lust for the goods of others; then the overt act of violence follows upon the "mens rea" of unlawful desire. But the murder does not mean the having. The wolves contend over the prey. The spoils coveted by all have to be fought over; hence fresh strife. If any urged that the general disorder of the times justified or excused such rough methods, no, replies James; prayer is still the true remedy for our wants, and prayer is not used, or if used is used amiss, and from this springs its failure.

Do we not ourselves need, in days of much luxury and prevailing selfishness, though of a more refined sort, to take home this warning? Have my prayers got pleasure or the will of God as their background? The active form for "ask," which is used in verse 3, implies using the words without the spirit of true prayer (Mayor). The word translated "spend" (Luke xv. 14) implies that they are pleasures of the flesh, like those on which the prodigal spent his father's living. What is

THE ROOT-SECRET OF ALL THIS EVIL?

Friendship of the world. Where is its remedy? In a whole-hearted return to God. This two-fold thought dominates the rest of the chapter.

(a) The Friendship of the World.—James, in company with Paul and John, brings before his readers a choice which they must make, a dilemma from which there is no escape. Either Holy Scripture is false, or it is true that love of the world and love of God are incompatible. "Whosoever wills to be the friend of the world is thereby constituted (see the Greek) the enemy of God." From jealousies and envies for earthly things spring man's present alienation from God, and his ruin. From the tender jealousy of God, so different in character, over the adulterous soul which has forsaken Him, springs the only hope of escape. For this is the meaning and connection of the obscure words which follow, which when understood are among the most precious in the whole Bible. "Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain, The Spirit which he hath made to dwell within us jealously longs for our love?" (or "yearneth for us even unto jealous envy," marg. R.V.).

(b) GOD'S JEALOUS LOVE.

"The Lord thy God is a jealous God." Here is the secret of the long story of man's redemption. It is the love of God going forth into the wilderness which man's sin has made, to draw him back to Himself as the shepherd seeks the lost sheep upon the mountains "till he find it." Or it is the love of God drawing us, as He drew Israel, into a wilderness where we are separated from creature joys (Hos. ii. 14), that He may "speak to our hearts" (marg.), and give us from thence "the valley of Achor for a door of hope." Oh, let us not receive such grace in vain. That love is man's pole-star to guide him heavenward. It is man's touchstone whereby to discern the worth or worthlessness of all created things. It is his loadstone towards the heart's true centre.

The jealousy of God in its results and the response which it must awaken are then told. The Spirit yearns over us, and (because of that jealous yearning) "He giveth a greater grace"—greater, that is, than the forces which strive to draw away the soul from Him, and greater than those know who have not yielded themselves fully to Him. A lighthouse-keeper from Lundy Island was once asked how the islanders got their water supply. His answer was that the springs on the island drew their fulness from the clouded heights of Dartmoor, whence they came beneath the sea to them. So the island never lost its living water drawn from the great hills of God, and conveyed as though by miracle. The "greater grace" never fails because the secret of its perpetual replenishment lies in an unfailing source. "We have a river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God." This jealousy of God is to Him with broken hearts. The features of that whole-hearted yielding up to Him are then given in detail.

I. Submission to God. For "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble" (6). Longfellow's beautiful tale from the old legend of King Robert of Sicily gives an apt illustration. The king is angry when he hears the words sung in church which tell of the mighty being put down from their seat, and he cries, "There is no power can push me from my throne." But, when he wakes out of sleep, another, of angelic dignity, has taken his place upon the throne, and he is forced to become the new king's jester. Again and again when they are alone the angel asks him tenderly, "Art thou the king?" always to meet with the same passionate response; till at last he is humbled and answers, "Thou knowest best," and his courtiers find their restored king kneeling beside his throne, "absorbed in silent prayer." It is in the true humbling of the soul before its rightful King that lies

THE ONLY PATHWAY TO TRUE KINGSHIP.

II. Resistance to Satan must follow (7). Compare this with the weak yielding of chap. i. 14, for "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world," and Satan is its "Prince." And in the very submission to God such resistance to his foes is implied.

III. Drawing nigh to God by practical separation from the "two-souled heart" (see also i. 8), and the life stained with sin (8). The words used here primarily refer to ceremonial purification, and are thence applied (cp. threskeia, i. 27) to moral conduct. With these goes also—

IV. Self-Humiliation (9, 10). The words which follow must be interpreted literally, remembering that James himself was a Nazarite and an ascetic. They are a call, in view of the impending judgments, to self-affliction before God. Thus Nineveh humbled itself at God's warning, and was spared. Thus David, "the man after God's own heart," fasted and wept, if haply the life of his child might be saved. And thus Nehemiah moved the heart of Artaxerxes by his sadness of countenance. We have all heard of the Jews' wailing place at Jerusalem. The fault about it was that

IT CAME TOO LATE.

Avert, cries James, the swiftly approaching doom by anticipating it as present. Be afflicted, mourn, weep, like the publican, with downcast eyes, before the Roman is at the gate. "Who can tell if God will turn and repent?"

V. Self-Restraint (11, 12). Such humiliation will express itself before men in an abstinence from evil speaking and condemnation of others, in view of the nearness of the Judge of all (cp. v. 9), He alone is "able to save and to destroy."

VI. Reverence (13-16). A heart thus yielded to God will realize and own his direction of its so-called secular affairs. In contrast you have the worldly, self-confident spirit which is the very feature of this "last age" as of that; the "prospecting" of the future from the point of view of selfish gain; the "braggart boast of life"; the making schemes without any reference to God as chief partner. . . . "Ye are a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away" (R.V.). The mingled thoughts of this last word give expression to the idea of life's transiency, its disfiguration, its sudden eclipse, its rapid migration. "Ye ought to say, 'If the Lord will.'" This may not mean the actual use of these words on every occasion, or in every letter we write. Such a view is too "legal." But it does affirm that this recognition of God must lie behind all our plans. Sometimes it will find actual expression (Rom i. 10; 1 Cor. iv. 19, xvi. 7; Phil. ii. 19).

Self-centred pride lay at the heart of all such vauntings. How often he has had to warn against it in this epistle (i. 10: ii. 5: iii. 14; iv. 16). And all such vaunting is as evil for ourselves, in an age when man, through the discoveries of science, is more than ever inclined to rest upon his own sufficiency still. A great principle sums up all the warnings of the chapter. As before, we have been told that hearing without doing (chap. i.), believing without action (ii), talking without wisdom (iii.), are vain; so here knowing without goodness is equally so. "To him, therefore, that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." The heavenly wisdom must express itself in the holy life.

The Lord's Supper.—We may at all times with advantage remember Jesus as a martyr, witnessing a good confession before Pontius Pilate, and sealing it with his blood; as an example of suffering obedience, even unto death; as a conqueror, even in death triumphing over all his enemies; but it is particularly as a sacrifice for sin that we should regard his death when we surround his table.—Rev. E. Bickersteth.

Other Lands.

From the Karawanken Mountains—II.

KARINTHIA is waking up like the other provinces of Austria. Through Dr. Baedeker we were invited by the Countess de la Tour, and hospitably entertained for two days on the occasion of the yearly conference, which this lady had arranged for August 15, and in which pastors and friends from near and far took part. Schloss Treffen was already alive with guests when we arrived. About forty sat down in the large hall to a pleasant evening meal, and almost double the number to breakfast and dinner the next day.

At nine o'clock in the morning we were directed through a beautiful avenue to an open space, surrounded by magnificent beech-trees, under the shadow of which were about 200 people.

Pastor Schwarz, of Ulaiern, read 1 Kings xix., laying stress upon verse 18. When men are silent, God is his own witness. There was never a time through the long ages of history, dark as they may have been, without God raising some witness to truth and light. A dying man was heard to exclaim, "It tells true after all; it does!" He had been playing with the Bible all his life long, refusing to believe. Its truth bore with crushing force upon his conscience, when it was too late for peace, and there was only room for despair.

Yes, it tells true. How otherwise would the martyrs have had the courage to suffer as they did? Huss dreamed on the eve of his execution that he was an artist, a painter, creating upon the canvas the beautiful countenance of his Lord Jesus Christ. His enemies came again and again, endeavouring to wipe out the image; but the more they tried, the more luminous and beautiful did it shine.

As Jezebel of old led the people away from God to Baal, so are the great bulk of people now made to listen to a false witness. But courage! We have come here from different parts of the country to strengthen our hands and hearts in reading this grand old narrative of Elijah. He complained: "I, even I only, am left." But what did the Lord reply? "Yet I have left Me 7,000 in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed to Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him."

TO THE DISCOURAGED MINISTER, who seems to preach to deaf ears, seeing no fruit of his labour, and vice increasing on every side, God says to-day: "Be still and be not dismayed. I am with you always. I have left Me not only 7,000, but hundreds of thousands of my own in Austria, Germany, England, America, yea, in the uttermost parts of the world. They hear my voice, and follow Me."

In times like these our hearts beat faster, especially when we think what God is doing for Austria, how He is stirring up the hearts of people, separating them from the deadening influence of a false church to the living Christ, and kindling in their souls a desire for righteousness. In closing, the speaker referred to a letter recently received from a Catholic priest, in which the writer said that he found it impossible to live the life he was subjected to much longer.

Dr. Baedeker spoke of the truth which remains, whether we believe it or not, of the one thing needful, which is his favourite theme—"Ye must be born again;" and of the futility, absurdity, and nullity of any human agency to atone for sin. He had seen in Siberia prisoners carrying stones from one place to another, and, after the heap was finished, carrying them back again. This irksome, purposeless work, which was said to have turned mad many a prisoner, reminded him of the thankless task which the priest had to perform, offering day by day sacrifices for sin, and yet never able to put it away. The realizing of this responsibility must make such a man utterly miserable.

Rev. Mr. Kuriak, of Pola, in Istria, followed with an address on Matt. v. 13, 14. The salt preserves the meat from turning foul. When the world seemed at its worst, God sent his Son to be the Salt and the Light of the world. The love of God shed abroad in the hearts of Christ's disciples made them the salt among Jews and Gentiles. The power of Heathenism was broken when to all appearance most of the people still clung to its practices.

LIGHT IN AUSTRIA.

Under the Reformation nine-tenths of Austria were brought into the light of the Gospel; but bitter persecutions on the part of the Romish Church sifted the numbers. Yet hidden from the eye of the cruel tyrant the truth lived on in secret places, in remote huts, and continued to be transmitted to every new generation. Every father was the priest and religious instructor of his own family.

There are at present 13,000 Protestants in Karinthia, among a population of 400,000. Should they be tried and sifted, like Gideon's army, how many would stand the test, how many would be found fit to fight the battle of the Lord? What is wanted in the New Movement, foremost and above all, is true, living Christians.

In the afternoon Pastor Jaquemar, of Laibach in Krain, gave a vivid sketch of the Berlin City Mission, in which he had been engaged for a year.

An approaching thunderstorm drove the assembly into the schoolhouse near by, where some stirring addresses were given by Pastor Kaufmann, of St. Ruprecht; Mr. Stechelin, bookseller of Vienna; Evangelist Busse, and Dr. Baedeker, in reference to the two besetting sins of the country—drunkenness and immorality.

The main succeeding thoughts were—that we ought to bear each other's burdens, and that there is no hope for man, whether given to vice or not, except by regeneration, this latter truth being specially emphasized by Dr. Baedeker, who concluded with prayer. At 6 p.m. the assembly dispersed slowly, some groups lingering in the garden, from where we could see the beautiful ruin of a castle belonging to the noble family of Kheven Hüllern. It was there, we were told, after the Austrian Reformation,

THE FIRST BIBLES WERE PRINTED,

until the proprietors were exiled from the country. A new Reformation Era seems to dawn upon dark Austria. From whatever motives the cry, "Los von Rom," may have been started, God may overrule them all to his glory. There are two men of influence prominent in this movement. One is Dr. Eisen Kolb, a lawyer in Bohemia, who is spoken of as a converted man, and the other is the poet, Rosegger, whose pen exercises a charm over the whole country. He is a Catholic—at least, nominally. Seeing how much handicapped the Protestants of Styria were in the exercise of their worship for want of churches and pastors, he issued appeals on their behalf in about seventy papers, and the result was a sum of £2,400, which had been used for building churches and appointing pastors.

Those who like German reading would do well to take the "Christlicher Alpen Bote"—a little monthly that watches closely the Los von Rom movement. Publisher, Fritz Mai, Cilly, Styria.

The Late Rev. Andrew Jukes.—Mr. Herbert H. Jeaffreson (Villa degli Angeli, Fiesole, Italy) writes:—"Having been invited by the family of Rev. Andrew Jukes to edit a selection of his letters, I venture to ask your courteous permission to request any of your readers who may have been in correspondence with him to lend me such papers as seem to them suitable for publication. I need hardly say that such papers will be treated by me with the greatest care, and returned with the least possible delay. I should be glad to learn whether the lenders would prefer that their names should be kept private. To reduce the cost of postage, letters, &c., may be addressed to Rev. H. H. Jeaffreson, care of Miss E. R. Cuff, Two Elms, Canfield Gardens, London, N.W.

Blankenburg Conference—II.

THE Conference closed with a praise-meeting on Saturday morning, Aug. 31. Men and women of every age and condition stood up all over the hall, waiting for their turn to give expression to what God had done for them during the Conference. Some had been enlightened as to the truth, and strengthened in faith; others encouraged or stimulated to more active work; others were filled with such a joy that tears streamed down their cheeks as, with broken voice, they testified to the grace and power of a redeeming God. There was the faint whisper of the aged lady, and the bold, decided tone of the woman in the prime of life, who wants to be true-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal, to her King and Lord. Many confessed to having taken Him for their All-in-all during these, to them, wonderful days. Very marked was the difference between the attitude of women a few years ago and now. Formerly so reticent, they are coming to the front more and more; formerly so repressed, they are, at least at such meetings as these, encouraged to pray, and testify, and to go home to live and work out and tell forth their own salvation, and to seek that of others.

NOBLE WOMEN NOT A FEW.

Two hours later a Women's meeting took place, presided over by Fräulein von Blücher. Ladies of rank spoke about their work, such as the sweet young Countess Pückler, of Geildorf, Wurtemburg; Frau von Bethmann Hohlweg, whose field of labour is Berlin; Frln. von Bahn, of the Marienhaus, Wiesbaden; Frln. Ring, who gave an account of the Women's Prayer Union. The Sister Superior, of Hildesheim, spoke of the gifts of women, and said, "If we cannot address assemblies, we can give practical help to the poor." A lady wondering what she could do, heard a voice in her heart—"You can cook." She went to a miserable home, cooked their dinner, and taught the wife to cook. Soon the husband enjoyed his food and came home to it. Cooking was a means of grace. What a field of beneficent usefulness there is in England, where the husband often wastes a quarter of his wages in drink, and the wife another quarter, in ignorance of how to use it, and to cook cheap and tasty dishes. Fräulein von Blücher called that practical Christianity. Her delicate face shone with a serene joy as she closed the meeting with a fervent prayer to our Heavenly Father for the furtherance of his kingdom among women.

A few months ago Pastor Stockmayer gave at Bethshan, London, some of his experience, "hoping to receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost." In 1874 he got at the Oxford meeting, not what he sought or expected, but a God-given understanding of simple trust. Moments came in which he took up the old expectation of a baptism of the Holy Ghost; but now, after twenty-seven years, the more he reads his New Testament the more clearly it stands before him that to please the Holy Ghost, and to be strengthened in the inner man, he must obey the Holy Ghost in all his ways of working, and know Him in that central point of his Divine office "by letting Him fill my horizon with Christ." The whole address appears in "Triumph of Redeeming Love," six addresses by Pastor O. Stockmayer (Morgan & Scott. 6d.), and will be found extremely helpful and corrective to many.

I was much interested to find, in the course of conversation, that Pastor Stockmayer is not alone, but expresses the enlightened and Scriptural views of many in Germany. There is a school which transfers the centre of gravity from the Atonement to the Incarnation. We may commit a like error by transferring it from the Person and Work of Christ Crucified and Risen for us, to the Person and Work of the Holy Spirit in us. To this these German brethren seem very much alive. R. C. M.

To My Larger Congregation.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

A VISIT TO CAIRO.

I HAD thought that my last letter would complete the story of my tour, but an unexpected experience befel which opened the door to much interest and pleasure. The engines broke down between Joppa and Port Said, and as the steamer could not proceed at once to Alexandria, I had to cancel my projected meetings there, and set myself to consider what to do.

To stay in Port Said seemed out of the question. It is a mere place of transit, and one of the most godless and immoral spots in the world. God help the lone woman, whom I met there, trying to instruct a few girls; and the other workers whose lot is cast on that desert waste! But the plan suggested itself of hastening to Cairo by the afternoon train, taking a day there, and joining the Sénégal at Alexandria on the following day. This we did.

What a wonderful day it was! In the early morning we started for

THE PYRAMIDS.

All the way we were in sight of the Nile, nearly at its height, brown with the rich loam it was bringing from the distant lands of Central Africa, to deposit on the green riband of fertile country, which extends for five miles on either side. The lordly splendour of the citadel, the beauty of mosque and palace, the very Pyramids, hardly interested me so much as "the River of Egypt." And as I saw the miserly care with which its waters are led by canal and watercourse to acres on acres of cotton-plant, maize, and all kinds of vegetable and cereal growth, it gave a new meaning to the text, "The glorious Lord shall be a place of broad rivers and streams."

With the help of three Arabs, I climbed the highest pyramid, and looked out on the desert stretching thither to Palestine, and thither to the Soudan—fifteen days to the nearest well. Then I crawled through the low passages to the king's chamber, the inclination and direction of which are determined by such minute chronological and astronomical calculations. And, finally, I looked at which has stood for thousands of years staring with wide-open eyes across the desert, as though scrutinizing the secret of creation, and oblivious to the flight of time. Upon its face Joseph must have looked, and Moses, and Jeremiah, as well as Plato, Solon, and Alexander the Great.

Thence to the great museum founded by Marriette. It was passing wonderful to see these life-like statues of men, who were politicians and priests, authors and teachers, when Abraham still tended his herds in Canaan, and Job argued with his friends on the mystery of the Divine dealings. Their portraits, their names, the houses in which they lived, the arts they pursued, the jewellery worn by their wives and daughters, were there in the inscriptions, engravings, or actual objects.

THE MUMMY OF PHARAOH.

But, greater and more interesting than all, we saw the mummy of Seti I., who issued the instructions of Exodus i. His face is very distinct, the dried flesh clinging like blackened parchment to the bones of cheek and nose and forehead. And next to this, was the form of Rameses II., whose sister drew Moses from the Nile, who was himself Moses' foster-brother, and may have learned with him at school and college; who became one of the greatest of Egyptian kings, and after a long reign, in which he carried his standards to the Euphrates valley, died, to the evident relief of the oppressed people, who now looked for some respite from their cruel bondage (Ex. ii. 23-25). His must have been a remarkable face. Even as I beheld it, it was full of intellectual force and determination.

In the afternoon, there was one place of all others which attracted me; and through the richly-cultivated lands we drove to Heliopolis, where the father-in-law of Joseph ministered, and where, in the days when Moses was a student, as many as 10,000 students gathered from all the world. This famous University, before his time, possessed a library of 20,000 volumes, and in these halls of learning Plato himself was educated. One noble obelisk still marks the site. It stood originally at the entrance through which the young Hebrew, adopted as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, passed and repassed daily. My heart beat as I stood on a mound above the level of the country, and thought of all that had happened then and since.

In the evening I had the pleasure of speaking at a meeting in the premises of the American Presbyterian Mission, at the invitation of Dr. Watson and his colleagues. They are to be congratulated on in connection with the Mission that is now in progress—some 500 or 600 Moslems assembling three times a week to listen to the fervent and evangelical utterances of a young Moslem, who seems to have been raised up by God to do for his fellow-religionists what no missionary of an alien race could possibly do.

At that gathering I had the joy of meeting a friend whom I had not met since 1872, when we worked together in Mr. Moody's mission in York. Secondly, a young soldier who had been greatly helped by my tour in India; and finally, my old friend Rev. W. Mathams, now chaplain of the Presbyterian troops there.

So to Alexandria, on the following morning, where Mrs. Meyer and I were most hospitably entertained by Rev. and Mrs. Finney, of the American Mission, and heard the glad tidings of the new church, nobly built for them by a church in Alleghany, U.S.A., which stands responsible up to 10,000 dollars.

Now we are again on the sea, with Sicily behind, in front Marseilles—and beyond, Great Britain, London, Christ Church, and Harley House—obedience, faith, and ministry. Pray for me!

Mount Lebanon Conference.

By Rev. HENRY H. JESSUP, D.D.

IT is not only a duty, but a pleasure and a privilege to tell the readers of The Christian of the blessing that has come to us all through the visit of Rev. and Mrs. F. B. Meyer during our second Triennial Conference.

Mr. Meyer arrived in Beirut August 5, came up to our Lebanon Home for the night, took the train the next day for Damascus and Baalbec, returned on Friday to Beirut, and thence to Brumana, where he conducte d meetings for nine days with ever-increasing interest. The meetings were held in a canvas tent, on the premises of the Friends' Mission, under the branching pines.

Missionaries and teachers, physicians, men and women, have come together from Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, representing many societies, churches, and institutions, and we have been truly in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

We came up into these fragrant pine-crowned heights of Lebanon, and they have been to us a Pisgah from which Mr. Meyer, as our guide, has shown us the mountains and plains, the gushing fountains and quiet glades of the heavenly Canaan.

A recent daily journal states that an Englishman named "Morning" has purchased Mount Sinai, and is to tunnel into its massive sides of granite and diorite for turquoises and precious metals! We seem to have had with us one whose nature, if not his name, is Morning, and he has penetrated not only into Sinai, but into Olivet and the Mount of Transfiguration (Hermon), and into the Mount of Beatitudes and Calvary itself, and brought to light "gems of purest ray serene," of love and faith, of hope and assurance, of humility and unselfishness and strength.

How our hearts have burned within us as he unfolded the Scriptures, and let us out of the "self-life" into the privileges and possibilities of a "life in Christ." His immediate style of pure English undefiled, his sterling good sense, sound judgment, deep personal experience of the life "hid with Christ in God," and tender love and sympathy with all God's children, with "wisdom profitable to direct," have made his addresses to the foreign missionaries, as well as to native evangelists, most effective and fruitful of blessing.

Every missionary worker present, and we numbered 265, felt that we were receiving a new infilling and equipment for work. We shall go "in the strength of this meat" for many days. He has given us a new send-off. Some of us are veterans of thirty, forty, and fifty years of service, and some newly-arrived on the field, but we feel that we have all received a new reminder of our marching orders and a new polishing of our armour.

The subject of Christian union and comity in our work has exercised a new impulse, and steps were taken to open correspondence with all the missions in the Levant, proposing that each mission appoint a Committee on Correspondence and Co-operation. One session was given to the consideration of "What are the characteristics of the ideal missionary?" and ninety brief answers written by members of the Conference were read in summary by Dr. George M. Mackie. They would be useful if printed as a tract for missionary candidates.

Eternity alone can reveal the blessing that has come to us all from this season of privilege. A new impulse has been given to the devotional and spiritual, as well as the doctrinal study of the Bible. The Bible readings have been luminous, exhaustive, sound, stimulating, and full of suggestion for future dealing in the inexhaustible mines of God's truth.

A few days before the opening of the Conference a party of brethren from the Beirut College and the Mission, returning from the Cedars of Lebanon, planned to ascend from Neba Leben to the summit of Sannin, which is 8,600 feet above the sea. On their return, we said to them, "We are sorry you could not ascend Sannin owing to the dense cloud which covered Lebanon, as here in Aaleih, 2,500 feet above the sea, we were enveloped in thick cloud all the day long." One of them replied, "We did ascend Sannin, in a cloudless sky. We were above the clouds, and looked down upon them. We could see Hermon and the Cedar Mountain, and all the high ranges. Only you who were lower down were in clouds and darkness."

And so it was with us at the close of this Conference. Our guide had led us up to the high ranges and summit of Christian experience, and we had left the clouds below and behind us. Mists have been dispersed and clouds scattered. We have gone up higher and come nearer to each other and to Christ. This visit of God's dear servant will never be forgotten. His teachings will be re-echoed along the Bosphorus and the Black Sea, the Orontes, the Jordan, and the Nile. He has left seed-thought which will germinate and bring forth blessed fruit on the plains of Galatia and Cilicia, of Syria and Palestine, and in the fertile soil of Egypt.

The hospitality of the Friends' Mission was unbounded. We used their grounds and buildings freely, and at the communion table on Sunday some of them sat with the members of the Conference and communed in spirit, as Dr. Mackie, of the Church of Scotland, and Mr. Thornton (C.M.S.), of Cairo, administered the ordinance. Messrs. Cook and Son generously supplied eighteen tents, with a complete outfit of bedsteads, mattresses, tables, rugs, &c., without charge to the Conference. The unanimous thanks of the Conference were transmitted for this generous contribution to its comfort and success.

If the Lord will that another Conference be held in 1904, may we all have a blessing equal to that brought to us by Mr. Meyer!

Ministering to Boer Prisoners.—Writing from the Territorial Headquarters of the Salvation Army, 32, Norris Road, Colombo, Ceylon, Captain W. Goddard says:—"We have a large work going on among the 5,000 Boer prisoners that are here, and should be glad to receive literature, books, or magazines, either for the Boer prisoners or the military that form the guard. There are not many who take a personal interest in these men. Lately the Governor of Ceylon has thanked us for what has been done."

A Warning from India.

The following letter has been addressed to the Christian Churches of Great Britain, Australasia and America, by the representatives of a number of Missions, working in the Madras Presidency :—

OF recent years several Indian Christians from South India and Ceylon have visited your churches in person, or have issued appeals by letter, and by these means have collected considerable sums of money for the purpose of carrying on different forms of mission work in this country. These persons were for the most part workers in connection with the various Churches or Missionary Societies, but in most cases their actual connection has ceased. They have issued their appeals in their own name, and the work which they have initiated, and profess to be now carrying on, is not under the control or oversight of anyone except themselves.

The actual work carried on in most cases bears but a small proportion to that set forth in their appeals as what they propose to do. The interests of truth and righteousness demand that these facts should be stated, and in view of the injury they have already done, and the still greater injury they are calculated to do to the cause of Christ in this land, we can no longer be silent. These appeals are a source of grave moral danger to those who make them, for they have to administer large funds without the safeguard of the control of others, and are thus exposed to a strong temptation to employ for private purposes money intended for public use. They are injurious to the cause of Missions in those countries from whence the funds come. For certainly sooner or later the contributors will find out that their gifts are either not being used for the purposes for which they were made, or that the work carried on is very disproportionate to the funds expended.

Distrust will thus be excited, which will extend even to undertakings where the proper use of the funds is adequately guaranteed. With some of the evils which these appeals produce in this country we are already too familiar. One of these is their tendency to demoralize the Indian community. The idea is abroad among a certain section of that community, that an Indian Christian has only to go with a specious plea to Great Britain, Australasia, or America, to obtain large sums of money from persons who will not inquire too closely as to how their gifts are to be used ; and who, if they see their contributions acknowledged in a subscription list, will be satisfied that they are being properly spent.

In order to check such evils resulting from appeals by irresponsible individuals, we would respectfully suggest that contributions should only be given to those who are willing to give guarantees, first, that they are the accredited agents of a responsible committee of persons who reside in the immediate neighbourhood where the proposed work is to be done ; secondly, that the special object for which money is solicited is distinctly approved of by that committee ; thirdly, that accounts will be rendered to all subscribers giving not simply a list of subscriptions and donations received, but a balance sheet, duly audited, showing that the moneys received have been actually spent upon the objects for which they were given. We are convinced that no cause which is really good will suffer by the exercise of these precautions, as those who plead for such causes will have no difficulty in giving the guarantees required.

Spurgeon's Sermons. — We have recently received an appeal for Mr. Spurgeon's sermons for distribution in tract form. Our readers may be glad to know that the "Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society" exists for the purpose of supplying Christian workers with these Gospel sermons in any part of the world. For the small sum of one penny weekly, sufficient to visit fifty houses every week throughout the year are supplied, ready covered and carriage paid. Sermons are also supplied under two other sections, particulars of which can be had on application. International headquarters are Greenhithe, England, and the American headquarters, City Mission Building, Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y. Letters in each case should be addressed to the Secretary, S.M.S.S.

The Prospects of Ashanti.

IT will be remembered that a few months ago a visit was paid to this country by Rev. F. Ramseyer, of the Basel Missionary Society, for the purpose of pleading the cause of the Mission at Kumassi. Concerning the present position, Mr. Ramseyer writes :

"We have good news of our poor, freed slave children, of whom the book, "Dark and Stormy Days at Kumassi," relates that on our march for life or death we had been obliged to let them follow behind the rearguard. We hear now that on that fearful day, the enemy having attacked the long train of carriers and followers marching behind the column, many were killed. Our teacher, who was in charge of the children, hid himself and them in the forest three days, but was obliged to enter a village of the rebels. There—as I was always assured—they were well treated, and our teacher says that during the nine or ten weeks they were obliged to live among the Ashantees he can only praise them for their kindness, although they had, at the approach of the English forces, to fly with the enemy. After the chiefs had made their submission, they were able to go where they liked, and arrived at Abetifi, where they are now, fifteen of them, in the care of our missionaries.

"I cannot say how this news of the return of these fifteen children has rejoiced us, for it shows again that there was no hatred to the mission ; on the contrary, we hear from Kumassi even, that some people are asking if the missionaries will not soon come back. To this good news, I can add that lately two of our missionaries visited the villages and Kumassi, and they report that not only were they very well received everywhere, but requests were made that the mission may soon resume its work. Many asked for us.

"Of our foster children, one said, 'If we had not prayed so much in our long days of distress, we would not be here ;' and another one begged him to write us, 'Come soon, soon.'

"Although we fully know that we shall find only ruins, we are not discouraged; on the contrary, the place, the mission land, the heaps of stones even, everything is dear and sacred to us, and with the help of God we shall soon see these ruins flourish, and our station on this very same spot raised up again to the glory of our Lord and Saviour."

Million New Pledges Crusade.

IN connection with the Million New Pledges Crusade, the following arrangements have been made for demonstrations in London, to be addressed by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry (New York). The Fisk Jubilee Singers will be present on each occasion, bearing their own peculiar and delightful part for half an hour before the proceedings begin, as well as at later stages.

Sept. 21.—Woolwich Tabernacle, 7.30 p.m.
22.—Metropolitan Tabernacle, 6.30 p.m.
23.—Battersea Town Hall, 8 p.m.
24.—Exeter Hall, Reception, 5.30 p.m.
Do. Public Meeting (Chairman, Alderman George White, M.P.), 8 p.m.
25.—Metropolitan Tabernacle, 3 p.m. & 8 p.m.
26.—Queen's Hall, 3 p.m. ; St. James' Hall, 8 p.m.
27.—Metropolitan Tabernacle, 3 p.m. & 8 p.m.
28.—Shoreditch Tabernacle (Chairman, Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.), 8 p.m.
29.—Mildmay Conference Hall, 3.30 p.m. & 7 p.m.
30.— Do. 3.30 p.m. (Chairman, B. Broomhall, Esq.) ; 7.30 p.m. (Chairman, Colonel Morton).
Oct. 1.—Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, 8 p.m.

Similar demonstrations are being arranged at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Sheffield, Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, Nottingham, Leicester, Norwich, Cambridge, Manchester, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, &c.

Our readers can do much to further this great movement by earnest prayer, and by making local gatherings known among all classes of people.

Twentieth Century Million Pledges Crusade.—The September issue of The Crusader (11, Crane Court, Fleet Street, E.C.) contains interesting notes on Dr. Henry's past history and work, with "Crusade Jottings," showing the progress made with arrangements for the Crusade in different parts of the country. Portraits are given of Dr. Henry and of the Jubilee Singers who accompany him.

The Alexandra Palace and the Lord's Day.

THE Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association has addressed a letter to the trustees of the Alexandra Palace, pointing out, among other facts—

(1) That the opening of the Palace for Sunday concerts, to which persons are admitted by tickets sold for money, is a breach of the Act, 21 George III. c. 49.

(2) That a Select Committee of the House of Lords appointed in 1895, found that "the good which might sometimes result from giving increased facilities for lectures and music on Sundays, would be more than counterbalanced by the increase of paid and practically involuntary Sunday labour, and by the encouragement given to endeavours to make pecuniary profit under the guise of entertainments 'for the public good' ;" and went on to express the opinion that "the existing law corresponds substantially with the wishes and sentiments of the English people, and that any material change in its general provisions would be harmful rather than advantageous."

(3) That when, in 1885, the lessees of the Palace opened it on Sundays, the attention of the owners (the London Financial Association) was called to the subject, with the result that they at once required the discontinuance of such opening.

The Association further calls attention to the large amount of labour involved in the running of the lines of omnibuses which have been started on the Lord's Day from different parts of the city; and earnestly asks the support of all Christian people in the efforts for the maintenance of the national observance of the Lord's Day, as one of rest from labour and dedicated to the public worship of God.

A Unique Anniversary.

A MEETING which most of your readers would have regarded as interesting and unique, was held the other night in the Hanover Street Church Schoolroom, in this city. The occasion was the annual meeting connected with the Sunday afternoon class, in which about thirty Chinese men are taught by as many teachers. Nearly forty Chinamen were present, and occupied seats immediately in front of the platform, their faces beaming with smiles. It was evidently a happy night to them. The chief adornment of the room was a costly and beautifully-worked silk banner, which hung over the platform. It was presented about a year ago by the Chinese themselves, as a token of their gratitude to the pastor and members of the Hanover Street Church for the interest taken in them ; and is a monument of which any church may be proud.

The programme included many items, in which the Chinese themselves were the singers, sometimes individually, and at other times in chorus. I am free to confess that I have heard sweeter voices than the Chinese can boast, but, in spite of this, and of the evident difficulty they had in mastering some of our tunes, I have not often heard singing that gave me greater delight. Some of the men are baptized and members of the Church, and can sing these hymns from their hearts.

Among the speakers were Miss Moore, a missionary from China, and Mr. Paterson, "the Chinaman's Friend." The warmth of his reception showed how his "Chinese brothers" love him for his work's sake.

Such Chinese mission work as this is possible in these colonies. If some of us cannot go to China, a small portion of the vast population of that country has come to us. Work among them never fails to secure their gratitude and affection, and will be fruitful "in that day." GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

Dunedin, New Zealand, July 20.

Protestant Reformation Society. — The Society's missionary, Mr. H. Wolstenholme, reports from Weston-super-Mare that a successful work has been carried on through the summer months, and will be continued until October, on the sea-front. The Cycle Band has been specially successful this year. On several occasions some twenty-six or twenty-seven cyclists have made excursions to surrounding villages and conducted evangelistic Protestant services. For the sea-front services at Weston, a gentleman has presented to the mission a powerful acetylene gas lamp, which not only serves the purpose of giving light, but also, from its brilliancy, helps to attract a large number of people.

The Late Major-General Haig.

We are glad to be able to add some further particulars to the account already given in our columns of the career of the late Major-General Felix Thackeray Haig. It was when serving as an assistant to the late Sir Arthur Cotton in the work of giving water to the delta of the River Godavery that, under the guidance of an unseen Teacher, the mind and heart of the young lieutenant of Engineers were drawn toward the light of truth, until the darkness was past and the true light shone in. From that time he was ever eager to make known to others, especially to the natives around him, the salvation which was free to them as to himself.

In 1855 the task was committed to Lieutenant Haig of making navigable for steamers of light draught the reaches of the Godavery above the Delta, and the next nine years of his life were spent in the same untiring and energetic fashion in which he had given himself to the irrigation scheme. The testimony he was able to bear for Christ at that period resulted not only in the conversion of Venkata Ram Razu, but in the arousing of numbers of the people of such manifest interest in the truth, that the Church Missionary Society sent a missionary to begin work in the district. Though only a little village in the midst of the forest, Dummagudem had for the time become, by the blessing of God, a most hopeful field for the ingathering of souls. After a time, the Government suddenly suspended the engineering works, but the Holy Spirit continued to pour down the blessing, and the work of grace continued. There are now hundreds of native Christians scattered among the jungle villages in the valley of the Godavery, while many more have gone to be with the Lord, all of whom were brought to a knowledge of the Saviour through mission work begun in this way.

Having been summoned to Calcutta in 1864, and placed in the position of Chief Engineer for Irrigation in Bengal, General Haig found himself no longer surrounded by Telugu-speaking people, and his knowledge of the vernacular ceased to be available for the telling of the Gospel story to those in spiritual darkness. But he set himself earnestly to work among the English-speaking sailors and lads connected with the ships frequenting the port. During this period he was identified with the congregation of Bishop Thoburn, who continued a warm and life-long friend. General Haig's retirement from Government service in 1879 set him free to give the remainder of his life unreservedly to the service of his Divine Master.

After spending a year in England, he learned that Mr. and Mrs. Cain, missionaries at Dummagudem, were much in need of rest and change, and offered at once to take charge of the mission during their absence. Full advantage was taken of this visit to familiar scenes to inquire into openings for further effort among the Kois, the shy and timid inhabitants of the jungle; and, with the help of two of the tribesmen, he translated into their own tongue the Gospel of Luke, as yet the only portion of Scripture which has been placed within their reach. A successful effort was also made to bring into close relation the Christians at Tinnevelly and the unevangelized tribes of the jungle, resulting in five of the Tinnevelly men going to Dummagudem as missionaries. Two of these died soon after, one returned to his own country, but two remain, and are doing good work for the Lord.

It was on the return voyage from India that the needs of Arabia were borne in on General Haig's mind. One of the results of his advocacy on the subject at home was the touching of the heart of Ion Keith Falconer, and the opening of the mission station at Sheikh Othman. A more extensive effort was undertaken by the Dutch Reformed Church of America, which now occupies three stations on the Persian Gulf, and is gradually feeling its way inland. General Haig formed a warm friendship with two of the first missionaries, and was in constant correspondence with them till the end of his life. He applied himself to the study of Arabic, and though never acquiring a thorough knowledge of the language, gained sufficient facility to make possible a good deal of intercourse with Arabs during later years.

In the hope that the Church Missionary Society might be able to begin work in the same country, General Haig undertook, in 1887, a journey of inquiry. On the Red Sea he visited Jeddah, Massowah, and Hodeida, travelling on to Sanaa, and from there proceeding over the mountains to Aden. Sailing to Busrah, and up the River Tigris to Bagdad, he crossed the desert under trying conditions to Damascus. But a proposal to establish a medical mission about 100 miles from Aden was discouraged by the British Government.

The North Africa Mission also enjoyed the benefit of his advice. In 1882 he visited on their behalf Tunis, Algeria, and Morocco, specially with a view to the consideration of a proposal to take up work in the last-named country; and on two later occasions he made similar tours.

From Photograph by Lankester, Tunbridge Wells.

The winters of 1888-89 and 1890-91 were spent in Egypt, with a view to further effort among the Arabs. On the former of these visits General Haig hired a room in the Arab part of Alexandria, and with the help of a converted Druze held conversational meetings for any who would come, providing coffee, and talking over passages of Scripture. He also prepared a series of tracts composed entirely of passages from the Arabic Scriptures, large numbers of which he gave away in the streets.

The second visit was soon interrupted by a telegraphic request to join his friend Dr. Harpur, at Suakin. Drought and an invasion of locusts had brought great distress on the tribes who had recently been fighting under Osman Digna. Thousands of poor people had come to Suakin, begging for food; and the Government, alarmed lest there should be an outbreak of cholera, had driven most of them away by force. There still remained, however, some hundreds of helpless creatures, too ill or too famished to be able to move. Dr. Harpur was obliged to return to Cairo, and wished General Haig to take up the work of caring for these. He spent several months doing so with all his characteristic thoroughness, and his warm love for the poor creatures was warmly returned by them. At the beginning of April the work came to an end, some having died, and the rest being so far recovered as to be able to return to their homes. General Haig, however, remained for some weeks longer at Suakin, devoting himself to the preparation of a small grammar of the Hadendowa language, in the hope that some workers might be found willing to go among the people using that tongue; but that hope is, till now, unrealized.

So strongly did the needs of the Hadendowa people weigh on General Haig's mind that he was on the eve of setting out again for Suakin, although feeling far from well, when he was seized with influenza. From that time his health steadily declined; but, though no longer able to undertake his former long journeys, his interest in the progress of the kingdom of God was unabated. Turning much of his attention to Ireland, he made several tours in the interests of missionary work, and, as indicated in our former notice, rendered valuable service in connection with the Irish Church Missions.

In the summer of last year General Haig's strength completely failed. While on the way to London to speak at a meeting for the promotion of irrigation in India, he fainted in the train, and was unable to finish his journey. Month by month he became more feeble, till a slight illness contracted in March confined him entirely to his room. So on July 27, there passed to the rest that remaineth for the people of God one whose great and rare powers had been consecrated to his Lord. We have only mentioned some of his missionary interests. His large heart and wide sympathies could not be limited by the measure of his own activities. Workers in many lands have lost a friend who not only took a deep and intelligent interest in their work, but prayed much for them; and "the supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working."

"One of the Family" has sent us a copy of a written prayer appended over two hundred years ago to the family pedigree, by Obadiah Haig, of Beverside, Berwickshire. This includes a petition "that there may always be found a man living of the family endowed with virtue and honour, to give thanks to God and service to his country; and may our posterity always remember that the excellent motto of our family, 'Sola virtus invicta,' is the earnest prayer of their consanguinal kinsman and sincere well-wisher, Obadiah Haig."

His relative pointed out that in General Haig this prayer was fully answered, and that there are two generals of the same family still living, both men of God, and distinguished for military service. From first to last there have been at the front in South Africa about a dozen of the family in various military ranks. Better still, there have not been lacking those of the name who have witnessed and worked for the great Captain of our salvation. The eldest brother of General Felix Haig, who only predeceased him by a very short time, was a member of the Evangelization Society, and laboured both in Ireland and England for the Master.

Be Still.

Lord, keep me still,
Though stormy winds may blow,
And waves my little bark may overflow,
Or even if in darkness I must go,
Yet keep me still.

Lord, keep me still;
The waves are in thy hands,
The roughest winds subside at thy command.
Steer Thou my bark in safety to the land,
And keep me still.

Lord, keep me still,
And may I ever hear
Thy still small voice to comfort and to cheer:
So shall I know and feel Thee ever near,
When I am still.

Methodists in Conference.

UNDOUBTEDLY the chief event for which the opening year of the twentieth century will be memorable in the annals of Methodism will be the third Œcumenical Conference, now in session in London. At the first of the assemblies of 1881 it was decided to hold them every ten years as central points of meeting, discussion, and encouragement for all the branches of Methodism scattered throughout the world. Only once before has there been such an assembly within the confines of the historic Wesley's Chapel. Cosmopolitan to a degree, every gathering is impressive in its demonstration of the remarkable development of the following of Wesley, and the essential spirit of brotherhood which has established itself and retains its hold over so vast a section of the Christian Church. The deliberations of the 500 delegates will be followed with world-wide interest, since the matters to be considered and discussed concern the well-being of churches with which 25,000,000 persons are associated.

THE OPENING SESSIONS.

At an early hour on Wednesday, the delegates began to assemble preparatory to the opening session, and by ten o'clock every seat was occupied. Precisely at the hour appointed the President of the Wesleyan Conference (Rev. Dr. Davison) announced the well-known hymn, "All people that on earth do dwell." A liturgical form of service was used, the lessons being read by Rev. Dr. Watkin, Australasia, and prayer offered by Bishop J. C. Hartzell. The inaugural sermon was delivered by Bishop Galloway, of Jackson, Mississippi. His theme was "The supreme value of Christian experience," and his twofold text was taken from 1 John i. 3, and Acts iv. 20—"That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you," and, "For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." In the course of a powerful discourse, the bishop emphasized the fact that these two statements are a declaration of the supreme value of a personal Christian experience, and that was of the mighty movement which had made possible the great Conference gathered together that day. Christianity's sublime and only mission is the spiritual regeneration of the world. It is well enough to exalt its ethical value—the excellence of its doctrines, the beauty of its ordinances—but above all there must be personal experience of its redemptive efficiency. This pre-eminent doctrine has been obscured by the prominence given in modern discussion to the ethics of Christianity. Christ's mission was said to be social rather than theological. But though Christianity is a political force as well as a spiritual influence, a social dynamic as well as a celestial hope, Christ's mission was purely spiritual—the redemption of the soul from sin; and his specific aim was not to reach the masses or the classes, but the individual.

THE PERIL OF THE AGE

is not a God despised, but a God displaced; not a God forsaken, but a God forgotten; not a God rejected, but a God neglected. Eliminate sin and the Gospel is emasculated; but the Gospel for a world of sinners can only be preached by those who have felt its need and tested its redemptive power. It is ours to preach and practise spiritual religion. Should the day ever come when Methodism forgets this, her only mission, her downfall is secured. She will have finished her course, and ought to fall on sleep. But such, I trust, may never be. Methodism has not fulfilled the Divine purpose of its creation. God has still a work for us to do. The past has been glorious, but thrice glorious will be the future if we are true to the heritage of our fathers. Let us emulate their virtues and imitate their burning zeal.

The first business of the afternoon was the calling of the roll. This was followed by addresses of welcome. Dr. Davison, the first speaker, said their first act should be an expression of gratitude to Almighty God for bringing them together again. He alluded briefly to the changes in personnel since the last Conference, and thanked God for those who are left, and for the young men who are being called out to carry on their work.

THE WELCOME.

The venerable Dr. E. E. Jenkins, who took part in the first Œcumenical Conference, voiced the first welcome, and very hearty and cordial it was. Speaking of the holy warfare in which all present were engaged, he said the greatest peril with which they had all alike to contend was the modern anti-Christ, the spirit of the world, the gradual waning of the spiritual sense. Rev. Joseph Odell, of the Primitive Methodist Church, uttered the second welcome, speaking, he said, on behalf of a spiritual democracy—a church for the people, of the people, and by the people.

Sir Charles T. Skelton, on behalf of the Methodist New Connexion, said he represented the eldest daughter of Methodism. He should be glad if the outcome of the Conference should be something more than a gathering of learned men. Hell was let loose in South Africa. He wanted it to end. Could they not enter on a constructive policy that would make men brothers?

BISHOP WALTERS.

The first to reply was Bishop Hurst, Methodist Episcopal Church, who uttered most cordial sentiments as to

THE UNITY OF ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

Dwelling on the bonds of blood and of faith, he said they might live in a perpetual covenant of hearts and hands to work out the principles which underlay the past and gave significance to the present of the Anglo-Saxon race. Rev. John Potts, D.D., from the Methodist Church of Canada, said that Canada had a story to tell similar to that of the other sections, and it was a story of small beginnings and large growth, of many-sided consolidation of their work. On coming to dear old England, Canadians came with a deep feeling of patriotism in their hearts, tinctured with Imperialism. For sixty years they sang "God save the Queen," and now with equal loyalty they sing "God save the King." They represented British North America, and they renewed their allegiance to the old flag and the new King. Why had Methodism been so successful all round the world? Because of its one interpretation of the Word of God.

A PASSIONATE APPEAL.

The last speaker of the afternoon was Bishop Walters, of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. He expressed, on behalf of nearly five million adherents to Methodism in Africa, cordial thanks for the warm welcome accorded to their representatives. They had come on their visit regarding it as a pilgrimage to the shrine of Methodism's founder, "for only those devoid of sentiment do not believe in pilgrimages. We are here to receive a re-baptism, to be strengthened with power from on high to stem the mighty current of sin which threatens to overwhelm us." The bishop commenced his address with MS. in hand, but, under the influence of deep feeling, he discarded all notes, and spoke with impassioned vigour as he referred to the subject of race prejudice. He acknowledged with gratitude the millions of dollars which the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church had spent for the uplifting of the negro, and said there was not a coloured delegate who had not the profoundest respect for such men as Bishops Galloway, Tigert, and others. But during his three visits to this country he had discovered that a systematic effort was being made to destroy the good opinion of Englishmen regarding the negro race of America. He showed how little foundation there was for the charges sometimes brought against his brethren, and exclaimed, with pathetic earnestness, "You English have always been our friends. In the dark days of slavery you gave us refuge from the wrath of our master, and the fierceness of his bloodhounds; and now, when we are struggling so hard to reach the goal and make ourselves what we ought to be in every respect, we look to our old friends in England to continue to give us their sympathy and encouragement in the future as in the past. A few mendicants have come over here and made a bad impression in your churches; do not judge us by them. We bring you professors and delegates from some of the best universities, and we bring you a banker! Surely that is evidence of progress; we could not do that twenty years ago, when we occupied a humble position in this sanctuary. We are here now to listen to your bugle note, and if it is the call to battle against sin, your black brethren will march side by side with you. We have come to lay our armour at your feet, and to say that where you lead in the good work of amelioration we will follow."

The president during Thursday's proceedings was Bishop A. W. Wilson. The first essay at the morning session was given by Rev. Edward Boaden, United Methodist Free Church, and dealt with the growth of Methodism. He testified to the unity among Methodists in the Colonies. At no period has there been more peace. Following Canada, the Methodist churches in New Zealand are making progress towards reunion. Australasian Methodism is now virtually, and is about to become organically, one. The throb of storms which wrought great mischief in the past is happily now not felt. In spirit, British Methodism is one.

Methodism never stood higher in the world of culture than to-day. Reference was made to the work done by Methodism in the rural districts of the kingdom, and the great missions in London, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, and elsewhere. It was shown that Wesleyan Methodism since 1855 has expended £10,000,000 sterling upon church property, Primitive Methodism £4,000,000, the United Methodist Free Churches £2,250,000, the Bible Christians over £500,000, and the Methodist Reform Union £129,000.

Rev. Joseph Berry, representing the Australian Methodist Church, rejoiced in the formation of the Australian Commonwealth. It was the Lord's doing, and was marvellous in their eyes. Ten years ago, when the second Conference was in session, there were four Methodist bodies in Australia, now there is one. He was not there to advocate Methodist union, but to testify what had been done in the Southern hemisphere. It was seen from the first that if they were to unite, the oldest and richest church must be the first to hold out the olive branch. Of course they had difficulties, but when they came to the sea, lo! it divided before them.

The president's bell cut the speaker short, and immediately a clear voice in the Western section started,

Blest be the tie that binds.

Instantly the whole body of delegates rose to their feet, and with enthusiastic fervour sang two verses of Fawcett's well-known hymn.

A stirring address was given by Rev. Wesley Guard, of the Irish Methodist Church. In the matter of Methodist reunion, the Irish Methodist Church led the way twenty-three years ago. They had long since passed out of the oblivion and contempt which marked the period of the early Methodists. He wished to say they were in peril on account of their position and the perfection of their organization. The peril was lest they should worship their organization and admire their magnificent position. The speaker was obliged to resume his seat in the course of a glowing peroration on the brilliant future before Methodism.

In the discussion which followed a number of representatives from various parts of the world took part. Among these was Dr. M. C. B. Mason, of Cincinnati, a negro, who, speaking with warm earnestness, said there was growing up in the States a constituency that would give heart and hand to the whites in the grandest movement for the evangelization of Africa the world had ever seen.

Bishop Hartzell spoke with hopefulness of the future of Methodism in Africa. There is going to be a great empire there under the Anglo-Saxon flag. The war and reorganization of the boundary lines were but little incidents in the history of the continent. His heart went up to God that the nations might co-operate in peace for the industrial development and elevation of the black races. The man who said a word to promote the discord of races was the enemy of humanity. Dr. C. S. Smith, a coloured delegate, Dr. A. B. Leonard, and Dr. Watkins, of Australia, also spoke.

AMERICAN METHODISM.

When the Conference re-assembled in the afternoon, Bishop Goucher read a comprehensive essay on "The Present Position of Methodism in the Western Section." He showed that American Methodism, born in the midst of a courageous antagonism, honoured its heritage and parentage by its present position. The assertive, aspiring American was hospitable to the doctrines of Methodism, to the doctrines of free will, full grace, and the witness of fellowship with Christ. Two-thirds of all the Methodists in the world were enrolled in the United States; and allowing two and a half adherents for each communicant they gave a total of over 20,000,000 Methodists, or more than twenty-seven per cent. of the entire population. True, it had dangers to contend with, and the attitude of some of its members towards certain questions caused some apprehension, but the church was in the van of spiritual progress, and at the heart of human service in America.

Rev. Dr. J. D. Hammond (Methodist Episcopal Church, South) spoke for the second largest body of Methodists in the world, and told of its various activities. Mr. Rowell dealt with the position of the Methodist Church of Canada, which claimed as its heritage all that was best in the mother churches. Canada is destined to become a great country, and Methodism will exert a strong influence in its national life. Since 1884 the membership of the United Church has increased by about sixty-eight per cent., and all the departments of the church work show a corresponding activity. The days of the "saddle-bag" minister are not yet over in Canada, and the Methodist preacher still followed the pioneer settler.

Rev. Dr. Simmons referred to the early work of Methodism in California during the days of the mining rushes; and several other delegates, coloured and white, also spoke.

THE PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL PEACE.

The Conference resumed its sittings on Friday morning, the appointed chairman being Rev. H. B. Kendall, B.A., President of the Primitive Methodist Church. The first subject for discussion was "The Influence of Methodism on the Promotion of International Peace," and was introduced by Dr. C. W. Smith (Pittsburg). In the opening words of his paper he asked, what had Methodism, as one of the great branches of the Christian Church, to fulfil as her mission in promoting universal peace? It would be remembered that Methodism was not, and never had been, a national church. Her kingdom, like that of her Master, was not of this world. What she had done in the promotion of peace she had done as a religious organization, and not a political agency. America and Great Britain hold the peace, if not the destinies, of the world in their hands; and in spite of any seeming inconsistencies they are both for peace. War between two such nations—one in civilization, one in religion, one in speech, one in every true interest, and bound by a common aim to promote the peace of the world—war between such nations would be a crime the magnitude of which no language could express. John Wesley's pen and voice had always been used in favour of peace, and all who bore his name should follow in his steps.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., in a powerful address, remarked that Methodism, while not professing to be a political power, claimed to have a hold on the consciences of men, and it is in this direction that it should exert its influence in alleviating the forces which contributed to war. What are these forces? The first is ignorance. We have entrusted diplomacy to secret tribunals, and we are losing control of our national life. The second danger to be facedis the profession of arms; and the third, the corrupt and unlicensed journalism of the day—an unbridled and un-Christian Press. The fourth great danger is a false conception of what is real glory and what is true heroism. He trusted that the powers of their church would be applied in combating these influences, and so strive that they may become, by being peacemakers, the children of God.

In the course of the discussion which followed, a wide diversity of opinion was manifested, with confusing results. The majority seemed to be of opinion that when all other means had been exhausted, war was necessary to right wrongs or maintain the supremacy of truth. Several of the delegates did not agree with this view, and vigorously denounced war as a crime. It must be admitted that few of the speakers faced the question as to what was really the teaching of Christ concerning war. A hush fell upon the excited gathering as Dr. Thomas Allen spoke in a calm, subdued voice of the grave difficulties in the way of establishing international peace. As churches, they would not accomplish much in dealing with these great economic questions. Their strength was in the spread of the principles of the Sermon on the Mount.

SHALL METHODISTS UNITE?

There was a large number of the general public at the afternoon session, when the business commenced with an able paper by Rev. W. J. Townsend, D.D. (President-elect of the Free Church Council). His topic was, "The Relation of Methodism to the Evangelical Free Church Movement." It was pointed out that the National Free Church Council comprised numerous churches with nearly two million communicants, 9,114 ministers, 384,000 Sunday-school teachers, upwards of three million and a quarter Sunday-school scholars, 58,000 local preachers, and provision for eight million hearers of the Gospel. Two of its presidents had been Methodists, and half of its executive belonged to their communion. Politics had never entered into the movement; if they did, its future possibilities would vanish like a dream of the night.

The next speaker was a coloured bishop, Dr. R. S. Williams, whose address on "Methodism and Christian Unity," was listened to with eager attention. Methodism, he declared, means not merely rigid adhesion to empty formalities, but a living, active, throbbing, spiritual force. Its fundamental principle, love to God and to mankind, has wrought mightily, and has served to quicken while its precepts and teaching tend to unify all believers.

"Inter-denominational fellowship among Methodists" was the subject of an informing paper by Rev. Dr. T. B. Stephenson. Fellowship among Methodists, he maintained, already exists. To-day they neither persecute nor patronize each other. They interchange pulpits, they hold united Love Feasts, they send fraternal messages and occasional delegates to each other's Conferences. Moreover, they had a united committee for "Methodist Concerted Action"—three of their bodies have agreed to have a common hymn-book. In the Children's Home, four out of five Methodist bodies were represented. But with all this they did not go far enough.

THEY DID NOT TOUCH OVERLAPPING, the needless expense of several missionary societies, and the multiplication of small theological colleges, which were not so effectual as larger and more costly ones. They did not remove the scandal of two or three Methodist chapels standing side by side in small villages at a needless expense of men and money, and to the destruction of all wholesome discipline. Could they do more in this line that was really practical? He feared not. The fraternal fellowship had about reached the point which spells "union."

Among those who took part in the subsequent discussion were Rev. T. G. Candlin (Methodist New Connexion), Dr. F. M. North (M. E. Church), Rev. E. Boaden (U.M.F.C.), Rev. Thos. Mitchell (Primitive Methodist), Mr. Percy Bunting, and Rev. F. W. Bourne (Bible Christian.)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S GATHERING.

The first of the evening meetings in St. James' Hall was held on Friday. Being a children's gathering, there was a large attendance of young people.

Bishop Hartzell was in the chair, and in the course of a brief address said that Methodism could claim seven and a half million communicants, 50,000 ministers ordained of God, labouring among twenty million adherents. Their Sunday-school army throughout the world numbers over six millions.

Bishop Vincent, the father of the great Chautauqua Movement, on rising to speak, received the "Chautauqua salute" by all present rising and fluttering their handkerchiefs. He explained the origin of the salute, which was first given in Canada when the deaf and dumb Professor Green, of Belville, Ontario, delivered his address by gesture with a perfection of grace. Clapping would have been no acknowledgment of the profound impression he created, so all stood and waved their handkerchiefs.

Addresses were also given by Rev. Simpson Johnson, Mr. J. R. Inch (New Brunswick), Professor Scarborough, and Mr. E. Jennings (Leicester).

PRESIDENT McKINLEY.

The startling news of the attempt on the life of President McKinley had a marked effect upon the session on Saturday morning. An African bishop, Rev. Dr. B. W. Arnett, presided, and after brief devotional exercises, the deep feeling of all assembled found some relief in the speeches of representative men. The wounded President is an exalted member of the Methodist body, and so many delegates from both sides of the Atlantic were eager to express their loving esteem for and sympathy with him, that it seemed as if the appointed programme for the morning would be crowded out. By special motion an extra half-hour was devoted to the matter.

In eloquent terms Rev. Dr. Davison, President of the Wesleyan Conference, expressed, on behalf of the nation and Church to which he belongs, widespread sorrow and prayerful solicitude in view of an event which has thrilled the civilized world with horror. He also outlined the subsequent resolution expressive of intense indignation at the outrage and profound sympathy with the stricken President of the United States, the distressed family, and the anxious American people.

Rev. Dr. Waller said that at an interview he had with President McKinley, the first thing spoken of by the latter was the great bereavement suffered in the death of our late honoured and beloved Queen. All present to-day would join in asking the great Head of the Church to touch the wounded one with his healing hand.

Rev. Dr. Ebenezer E. Jenkins, Bishop Galloway (Jackson, Miss.), and Rev. Dr. Chas. Stewart (New Brunswick) having spoken, Dr. F. M. Bristol, pastor of Washington Methodist Episcopal Church, of which the American President is a member, spoke with evident emotion of Mr. McKinley's high Christian character, and his love for the English people. Dr. A. B. Leonard (New York City) thought that civilized nations should take concerted measures to render impossible such outrages as that just reported. Other speakers were Bishop Gaines (Atlanta, Ga.), Dr. Brook (United Methodist Free Church), Mr. Geo. Lidgett, and Rev. H. S. Doyle (Coloured Methodist Episcopal Church). Drafting of the resolution was at once referred to the Business Committee that the message might be reported to the meeting immediately before the close of the session; and Rev. Dr. W. F. King led in intercession with God that the life of President McKinley might be spared.

Rev. Dr. John Tigert (Nashville, Tenn.), read an essay upon "Biblical Criticism and the Christian Faith." In the course of a learned and far-reaching review of the subject, he spoke of the regenerating act of the Holy Ghost as private and personal, and claimed that for those who have experienced in their own hearts this solitary union of the Divine and human, the presence of God in nature, in Christ, and in the Bible, while still mysterious, becomes credible and certain. Thus the strands of historical Christianity, of the Divine Christ, and of the certainties of Christian experience, unite to form a threefold cord which cannot easily be broken. The time for readjustment to the main claims of historical criticism has almost fully come. We are not called upon, indeed, for a final judgment upon them all; many things remain in doubt, some, from the insufficiency of the materials at command, will probably always remain in doubt. But the main problems, appear to have been satisfactorily solved.

In an address upon "Recent Corroborations of the Scripture Narrative," Rev. Dr. Marshall Randles (Manchester) showed that the testimonies to the historicity of Old Testament books are nothing less than a manifestation of the finger of God. "The appeal of the Old Testament to the Life and Conscience of To-day," was dealt with by Chancellor D. S. Stephens, D.D. (Kansas).

PROTESTANTISM V. MODERN SACERDOTALISM.

The general subject for Monday morning was set forth in the title of an essay by Rev. Frederick Bourne, dealing with "The Principles of Protestantism versus Modern Sacerdotalism." The Scriptures do not simply testify of Christ as creation and providence testify to their Creator and Upholder. They are most prized by us because they are full of Christ; and the Saviour Himself declares that they are given for an express purpose, "They are they which testify of Me." The work of the Holy Spirit is the third essential principle of our common Protestantism. His two-fold mission is—to convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; and to implant in all penitent and believing souls the new and abundant life which Christ came to bestow. A Methodist preacher and scientist (a combination all too rare) proved, even to the satisfaction of so eminent a man as Professor Huxley, that there is no such thing as spontaneous generation in the natural world; nor can it be so in the spiritual sphere. The only way of entrance from a lower into a higher kingdom is being born into it. There is reason to dread the incipient Sacerdotalism that finds a hiding place in our own and other Protestant Churches, when so distinguished a Protestant champion as Dr. Dale says that, in baptism and the Lord's Supper, communicants receive something which is officially given to them by the authority of Christ.

Professor Chas. Stewart, D.D. (Methodist Church of Canada), showed that while Protestantism and modern Sacerdotalism are both opposed to materialistic philosophy, in recognizing the necessity of a Daysman between sinful man and a holy God, Sacerdotalism claims that the atoning sacrifice of the Redeemer and his High Priesthood are put in commission, so that a certain order of men may, without appeal to a higher source, open or shut the door of heaven.

Professor J. Shaw Banks (Wesleyan College, Headingley, Leeds) thought that a great change had been brought about in the High Church party by the teaching of Lightfoot, Westcott, and others, so that the Sacerdotal doctrine, in its proper sense, is not so prominent now as the theory of apostolical succession.

REV. DR. AGAR BEET.

Monday afternoon's session was well attended, and deep interest was manifested by delegates and the general public alike in the subject discussed. The essay prepared by President Chas. J. Little, D.D., on "Methodism and Education in the Twentieth Century," was read at the author's request by Bishop Vincent. The chief problem to be solved, it was observed, is how to find teachers who combine competency with piety. The theological school of the twentieth century must enlarge the range of its studies, but, above all, it must prepare men to save the lost and preserve the found. It must produce men of unexampled generosity, consecration, and sagacity. Another problem, How could Methodists best develop and retain the gifted mind brought within their borders? If our youth are to combine with commercial genius and power the delights of knowledge and philanthropic activity, they must be presented to them as prizes worthy of their greatest effort.

Mr. Thos. G. Osborn expressed the opinion that in aims and methods of education England and America are growing together. This assimilation was also among other nations. It is difficult to secure that higher education shall be well balanced and symmetrical. It is well to educate the mind in the revelation of God in nature, but it should never be forgotten that is given in human language. We must never let the work of his hands outshine the ministry of his love, but remember that when God would come nearest to man, He revealed Himself in his Word.

In the course of an able address, Mr. H. T. Kealing said the question of Methodism being a reformatory force in education was no longer an open one. He referred to the devotion of the pioneers in Africa, and told how, when the hunters were in the forests of America shooting wild beasts, their leader had cautioned them not to shoot when they could hear the cackle beneath the tread of the object which approached, but first make sure whether it was a bear or a Methodist preacher! Methodism had always gone where there were people, and also where there were not in order to make sure there were none.

A protracted discussion followed concerning the achievements of the past and the prospects of the future of the influence Methodism on religious, social, and secular education.

"The Moral Unity of the English-speaking Peoples," was the subject for Monday evening. In the absence of Sir Henry Fowler, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., presided over the large and enthusiastic audience which assembled in St. James' Hall. After Rev. John Bond had led in prayer, the chairman referred to the remarkable advances and movements of general consolidation which have marked the history of Methodism since the last Œcumenical Conference, and anticipated the time when all branches of British Methodism should come together in organic union. Mr. Perks went on to deal with important questions which have to be faced by Methodists, and, indeed, by all Evangelical Christians. He made a vigorous reply to a recent contention by Archbishop Ireland in favour of of the Temporal Sovereignty of the Pope, and denounced in strong terms the political crimes of the Assumptionists who are about to land in England. Proceeding, he advised the working classes to beware of Jesuit influences, and advocated the Government supervision of convents and monasteries. Mr. Perks' concluding words were a strong plea for observance of the Lord's Day, and for united action in all good work.

Rev. Dr. Briggs, of Canada, who followed, said that the English-speaking peoples are the great Bible printers and Bible distributors of the world. Wherever we find true national vigour, contented and prosperous people, sound jurisprudence, and an enlightened public opinion, we find not the hurtful influences of a debasing priesthood, but the elevating ones of the open Word of God. Great as is the British empire, greater is the moral power exercised by the English-speaking peoples, and in helping to create that power the millions of Methodists have played, and are playing, an important part. Sprung from heroic stock, they must more and more devote themselves to heroic work for the Master. Bishop Lee and others also spoke.

On Tuesday morning the Conference discussed in the first instance "Christianity and Modern Unbelief." Upon this subject a thoughtful and powerful essay was read by Dr. Agar Beet, of which we hope to take fuller notice next week. Bishop J. W. Hamilton dealt with "Secularism and Christianity," and was followed on the same subject by Rev. R. Abercrombie. In the afternoon the essay of Prof. W. J. Shaw, D.D., was on "Modern Indifferentism," and the addresses were devoted to "Apathy in the Church," and "The Antidote for Apathy and Indifference." The proceedings of Tuesday and succeeding days we hope to report in our next issue.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 15. Romans xi.

THE Apostle argues against the thought that Israel is entirely cast away. He admits that appearances point to that conclusion; nevertheless, there is assuredly a remnant of grace. It was so in the days of Elijah, when the nation seemed entirely apostate, and it must always be. God cannot utterly forsake the children of the covenant. For Abraham's sake He will always maintain special relations of love with the people whom he foreknew, or with as many as possible.

Then we are led into one of the deep mysteries or secrets of God's government. The Divine purpose is revealed, which deserves our careful consideration. There is an evident distinction drawn between the Hebrew nation as a whole, and the individuals who form the godly remnant of which we have been speaking.

The individuals are accepted and blessed through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; but the nation as a whole is deposed from being the organ of the Divine purpose. From the call of Abraham, God had been working through his chosen people to produce the Holy Scriptures, to secure a witness to Himself, to disseminate everywhere the knowledge of his unity, spirituality, and holiness; and, in spite of much failure and sin, they had, on the whole, been mightily used. When, however, as a nation, they rejected the Lord Jesus, as a nation they were put aside, and were no longer reckoned in the line of the Divine purpose.

Instead of Israel the Church was created to be the organ of the Divine will, and through the present age it will remain so. Those of us who are members of that Church are taking the place of the olive branches, "contrary to nature"—i.e., instead of the good being grafted into the wild, the wild have been grafted into the good. But the time is coming, at the end of this dispensation, when the Church shall be gathered to her Lord, as the body to the Head; and then again Israel shall be God's means of reaching and blessing the world. Oh, the depth of his wisdom and knowledge.

MONDAY, September 16. Romans xii.

The opening verses contain a plea which is surely irresistible. The "therefore" carries us back to chap. vi. 13, where the same word translated yield, or present, occurs. Because in Jesus we have died to the world, and because the cross stands between us and our past, we are called upon to give ourselves up to Him absolutely, that we may become the organs through which He may work out his perfect will. It is perhaps easier to die once than to live always, as a sacrifice; but it is to the latter that we have been called. We must be living sacrifices. Every moment the choice is being presented to us, whether we will think the world's thoughts, and take the world's wages, or mind and do the things of Christ. As we refuse to take the one, and determine to take the other, we are transformed, i.e., transfigured; and are led, in doing God's will, to realize how good, and acceptable, and perfect it is.

The Apostle, in the following verses, goes on to show exactly what is involved in this life of presentation to God, with its resulting transfiguration. It will lead us to think soberly of ourselves; to fulfil our own office in the body of Christ, without envying others; to love always, to be strenuous and diligent, to be glad, patient, and prayerful, to be reservoirs and fountains of blessing, to be lowly and humble, loving and forgiving. In other words, as soon as we present ourselves to God, and reckon that the Lord Jesus actually accepts what we give, He becomes resident in us by the Holy Spirit, and reproduces the traits of his own lovely life.

TUESDAY, September 17. Romans xiii.

There were many things in the world around which must have seriously offended the Apostle's sense of right; but he made no attempt to alter them by his own efforts or admonitions. He gave himself up to the glorious mission of disseminating the Gospel, being persuaded that the best way to renovate society was to regenerate men.

But surely the main principle of the opening paragraph of this chapter must be ever recognized and obeyed. Any existing order of government must be acknowledged as representing, on the whole, and however faultily, the Divine government, and as Christians we must support it. Of course, we may adopt every regular and constitutional method of improving it; and probably there are times when, if it notoriously fails, we may assist in removing it in favour of another—but on the whole, we must render to all their dues. And let those who exercise public office remember to exert it as in the sight, and for the purposes of the Eternal Judge.

It is interesting to see that perfect love realizes all the requirements of law. If a man loves perfectly he will necessarily fulfil the Decalogue, not only in its letter, but its spirit. Baptize us then, O King of Love, in thy perfect love!

The last paragraph (11-14) is especially St. Augustine's. It led to his conversion. In one supreme moment he cast away the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light. Let us do the same, putting off the rags of old habit, and putting on the character of the Lord Jesus.

WEDNESDAY, September 18. Romans xiv.

There is a fine sanity in these prescriptions and regulations. We are to be positive and constructive in our religious life, and must not suffer our own or our brother's soul to be perpetually irritated and fretted by minute and vexatious quibbles. How many good people are what we call cranks; that is, they magnify some small point out of the proportion of truth, and contend for it as if it were a fundamental doctrine. These people have got switched off the main track, on to a siding, and there they stand like a useless locomotive engine, blowing off steam, but not moving forward, nor dragging their line of trucks.

There are many things, says the Apostle, which must be left to each man's individual judgment, guided and illuminated by the Holy Spirit. The one matter for each disciple is to be sure that there is no cloud between his Master and himself. We must not expect uniformity in all things. The Hebrew mind may have a lingering respect for the seventh day, the Roman mind may have no such regard. Then let not the Hebrew Christian try to coerce the Greek; nor the Greek despise the Hebrew.

It may be, however, that in practice a certain line of behaviour may become a positive hindrance and cause of stumbling to a brother, who is weak in the faith. Under such circumstances, the love of God demands that we should refrain from it, as in the case of strong drink. This, however, is only incumbent on us, when it has been distinctly proved that to do otherwise would actually hinder some weaker brother, while to take the opposite course would help him.

THURSDAY, September 19. Romans xv.

This chapter is remarkable for its threefold ascription to God, as the God of Patience (5), of Hope (13), and of Peace (33). Let us meditate on the Divine nature under these aspects. And remember that they were realized by one, as this chapter shows, who, first, meditated much on the Divine Word (4, 9, 10, 11, 12); who, secondly, was conscious of the utter helplessness of the human instrument, unless taken up and used by the mighty, indwelling Spirit (16, 18); and who, thirdly, was entirely yielded to the will of God (32). To see him, there might have been nothing to arrest human notice or admiration in the Apostle. He might have appeared a mere Jewish traveller, who was constantly being driven from pillar to post, under great concern of spirit, and in circumstances of extreme poverty; but he was laying the foundations of our Christian commonwealth (20, 21).

Of modern men, the one who seems to me to have come nearest this incomparable Apostle was John Woolman, the Friend. In each of them faith wrought by love to the purifying of the heart, the outcome of faith being in love, manifested in reverent waiting upon God, and in untiring benevolence, in a quiet but deep enthusiasm of humanity, which made the daily service of others a hymn of praise to the Divine Father. Take for instance this golden sentence from John Woolman's pen. After dwelling with great earnestness on the importance of possessing the mind of Christ, he describes it as that state "in which every motion from the selfish spirit yielded to pure love," and he says that this was the pearl after which he was constantly searching.

FRIDAY, September 20. Romans xvi.

Here is a window unto the Apostle's heart. He was apparently disowned by most of his own kindred, but he had mothers, sisters, brothers, a hundredfold. How different is the gentle spirit, which breathes through this chapter, from that of the mere disputant or theologian, the stoic or monk. We learn, as we peruse these verses, the courtesy, gentleness, purity, thoughtfulness, of Christian relations.

Women are here: Phœbe, Priscilla, Mary, Junia, Persis, Julia, and others. The Apostle realized, as so many have done since, the vast help which holy women furnish in the ministry of the Gospel. Men are here, old and young, fathers, brothers, and sons. Lovely titles are given with lavish but discriminating hand—"succourer," "helpers," "beloved," "approved in Christ," "saints." How specially beautiful the appellation, "The beloved Persis, which laboured much in the Lord." Most triumphantly the assurance rings out, "The God of Peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." It was his fervent and confident faith. Satan might rage, but the old promise was yet to be fulfilled, that God would bruise the serpent's head beneath the woman's seed. Dear soul, rest thee there. Thou canst not, but God can. He is a man of war, and behind Him thou mayest rest, till He brings judgment to victory. In the meanwhile, go on thy way, making known to all nations the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the commandment of the Eternal God.

SATURDAY, September 21. 1 Corinthians i.

This letter was written from Ephesus, and is one of peculiar interest and importance. This Church was richly gifted. "In everything it was enriched" (5). But for that reason, its position was specially perilous, and called out all the grace and wisdom of the Apostle's guidance and admonition—even of his reproof. But he was animated by the consciousness that God was as eager as he was for its ultimate blamelessness and beauty (8). What a blessed thing it is to know that we may be in fellowship, in partnership with the Son of God, in all our earthly pilgrimage! All his resources are at our disposal! All that He has is ours.

There were divisions in Corinth. The Church seemed to be broken into four schools of thought, which accepted Paul's teaching, or which loved eloquence such as Apollos gave them, or which clung to the Hebrew line of thought and doctrine identified with the Apostle Peter, or which eschewed all human teachers and professed to follow Christ only. As far as the Apostle Paul was concerned, he affirmed that he had never sought to make a following for himself, and had even shrunk from baptizing to any large extent. He had never sought to attract to himself, but to the Lord. He had even studied the utmost simplicity of speech, that the Cross of the Redeemer, as the symbol of his death for us and ours with Him, might stand out in its conquering grace and power. What need of the flowers of rhetoric to adorn its sublime splendour and beauty? Moreover, he had not sought to attract the wise or eloquent, being sure of God's choice.

Let us specially ponder the closing affirmation of our heritage in Christ, and avail ourselves of it. He is made unto us; but we must possess our possessions.

The White Slave Traffic.

RESCUE work, in spite of the labours and influence of many preventive and remedial agencies, continues to be one of the chief needs of our land. A sad illustration of the laxness of morals is found in the fact that the applicants for help made to the Homes for the Friendless and Fallen, at the chief office and receiving home, 200, Euston Road, reached a total of no fewer than 600 during the eight months ending August 31 last. Parental neglect; a nervous craving for pleasure, not infrequently as an offset to sordid conditions of life; impatience even of reasonable control, and many other contributory causes, swell the vast army of wanderers from the path of virtue.

SAVED FROM THE DEPTHS.

Some typical cases recently undertaken by Mr. W. J. Taylor, secretary of the institutions referred to, will serve to illustrate both the exacting character of the work and the difficult problems, demanding promptitude and resource, which Mr. Taylor is daily called upon to solve. One was that of a young woman but twenty-one years of age, who, although quite untrained in domestic service, managed to "get through" in one situation after another. Marked by simpleness of manner and mind, and yet not sufficiently weak to be permanently detained by the authorities, she easily became the prey of a designing villain. Her child died, but she drifted into fast company, and was rapidly going from bad to worse, when a lady mission worker came to the rescue, and took her to the Euston Road Home, where she was at once admitted.

Another example is that of a respectable young woman, saved just in time from a position of grave moral danger. Although she had enjoyed the privileges of a training school to which a lady had sent her, and was placed in a situation, she forsook the place on the ground that "the work was too hard," and might easily have yielded to evil tempters who beset her path, but she is now safely sheltered in the Preventive Home.

"Can you help me to get into the workhouse infirmary?" was the question put by a wretched girl, who, although only twenty years of age, was homeless, penniless, and, is said, had been sleeping anywhere. Obtaining more sympathetic aid than she had looked for, the poor creature was sent, after being supplied with some food, to the infirmary, whence she will, by-and-by, be received and trained in ways of sobriety and self-respect.

THE "WHITE SLAVE" TRAFFIC.

One of the many preventive cases in which quite young girls figure was that of a child of fourteen. Her father is in an asylum, and her mother, who had to go out to daily work, felt herself unable to control the wilful child, who evinced a dangerous desire for the society of evil companions in the streets. She will now be trained for domestic service. The particulars of some cases are far too shocking to print. In these, the co-operation of the police has to be sought, for the "white slave traffic," carried on with infinite daring and subtlety, has to be grappled with again and again, as fresh agents and decoys take up the wicked work of moral destruction.

While, however, there is much and exhausting toil, encouragement may well be taken from the frequent cases in which former inmates have developed into godly and industrious women. Indeed, it is by no means uncommon for those who have been helped to become rescuers in their turn, communicating with Mr. Taylor regarding any whom they know to be in need of sheltering care. It may be mentioned that the income of these deserving institutions is considerably less than the expenditure, a fact which is the more to be regretted, since no sincere applicant fails to find immediate assistance in turning from her life of degradation and sorrow.

The Water of Life is divine in its origin, free in its communication, satisfying in its effects, constant in its supplies, active in its operations, and glorious in its result.—Kidd.

"Something More."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"WHAT a happy girl you must be, Dora," said Captain Lacey to his little niece, "you seem to have so many gifts, and many dear friends to love you."

"Yes, uncle, and you have brought me a lovely present. I am so glad you have come to stay with us."

"Come, little lassie, and tell me if you are happy and satisfied!" and the tall man led her into the pretty conservatory.

"I am happy, uncle, but not satisfied, there is something more I want to enjoy," said Dora, flushing as she spoke, lest he should think her ungrateful.

"We understand each other; now you tell me just what you mean." It was true, for Dora and the Captain were quite confidential friends, and she always delighted to go and stay with her uncle; and now, while her mother was out, she had him all to herself.

"Uncle, there is one little verse I am thinking such a lot about; it is what Jesus said: It is more blessed to give than to receive (Acts xx. 35); and I know how beautiful it is to receive such good things; and if it is more blessed to give, I want to know that something more."

"But, Dora, I heard you say you were sending your left-off dress away, and your old books and toys, to a poor child."

"I could so easily spare them, uncle, I didn't feel I was giving, so I don't think that counts under the more blessed, do you?"

The Captain was silent; had he understood what it meant to be thus blessed?

"Dora, you are right; what else have you thought?" "I thought, uncle, and it must be blessed to give something to Him—is it more blessed?"

THE GREATEST GIFT IS JESUS;

After thinking, he answered: "If you have received the gift of Jesus and his love, I think He will make it more blessed to give yourself to Him, and what you can offer to others will then be doubly blessed; so that is the something more you want."

"That is it, uncle. It spoils my happiness when I feel selfish, and I want to know what Jesus calls the more blessed way, don't you?"

In his heart Captain Lacey wished he had more of that desire; but he answered her brightly:—

"Dora, this thought comes from God. Don't let it go; but ask Him to help you to carry it out. It will make a good and happy life for you."

She did not forget, and as she received each gift she gave out of a loving heart some practical proof that she had found that something more she craved, the joy of that which is more blessed than receiving, and Dora's life brings gladness to many, while yielding full satisfaction to herself.

If we would know her joy we must be quick to see how much we receive, and how much we must give and do, if the something more that Dora craved is to be ours.

"The greatest gift is Jesus," as she said, therefore we must give Him most, for in giving Him body and soul all blessedness will be ours. Then we shall daily see and know, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

"Gaol Birds."—According to Mr. Macdonnel, who has edited a part of the recently published "Blue Book of Criminal Statistics," there has not been of late years any noteworthy increase in juvenile crime. Although reliable materials for a very exact statement are not available, yet it appears that, under several statutes, youthful offenders can be and are turned away from the gaol and its corrupting influence. The result of this wise action is shown by the fact that there is a decline of nearly 34 per cent. in the number of prisoners between sixteen and twenty-one years of age. It is sad to find, however, that, despite this excellent change, there were, at the close of the period referred to in the report, no fewer than 34,320 males and 4,791 female prisoners under twenty-one who had been convicted of serious offences during the year. Worse still, a number of children under twelve were in gaols. These figures point to something lacking in our compulsory secular education system.

Temperance Notes.

AT Blackburn Brewster Sessions the police stated that almost every night large batches of girls and boys, of seventeen or eighteen years of age, trooped into two public-houses.

A temporary State Inebriate Reformatory for women has been established at Aylesbury; and temporary arrangements have been made to receive a few male inebriates in the Debtors' Wing at Warwick Prison.

Mr. T. Whitaker, J.P., who, at Haslingden, had recently before him a woman charged with being drunk and incapable, remarked that there had latterly been such a serious increase of female drunkenness in the town that it would soon be necessary to set apart a special day for hearing the cases against women alone.

Sir John Woodburn, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in response to the representations of a number of associations, has issued orders prohibiting the employment of barmaids in Calcutta. Those already engaged will be allowed to serve out their term of engagement, but no new ones are to be imported. A similar regulation has already been put in force in Rangoon.

The anniversary meetings of the United Kingdom Alliance will take place on Tuesday, October 22. The public meeting will be held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, Sir Robert T. Reid, M.P., presiding. The annual Council meeting will be held in the morning of the same day in the Central Hall, Manchester, when Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., as President of the organization, will preside.

Surly Hall Hotel, near Windsor, the riverside resort of many generations of Eton boys, to say nothing of boating men generally, has been closed. At the annual licensing meeting of the Windsor division of Berkshire, a letter was read from the Dowager Duchess of Sutherland stating that it was not intended to apply to renew the license. The hotel adjoins her Grace's residence, "The Willows."

At the Eton Union Workhouse, where the drink bill used to exceed £200 a year, no beer has been consumed for over twenty years. The cost of intoxicants ordered for invalids does not exceed a few shillings per annum, a bottle of brandy (costing 3s.) having sufficed for the sick for two years. The master of the workhouse is a brother of the master of the Maidenhead Workhouse, in which it was recently announced the consumption of beer has been reduced to seven pints a week.

A paragraph from a Dutch journal is quoted by Le Bien Social, in which we read: An agent of police, who counts more than twenty-seven years' service, told me recently that during that time he had seen not less than 700 colleagues dismissed. About 600 of these unfortunate men were compelled to resign their functions, directly or indirectly, through the abuse of alcoholic liquors, and many were irremediably lost. He added: "It really requires an energetic will to prevent one becoming a slave to drink. At every moment the temptation is there, flattering and violent. We never enter a tavern, we never render a service to anyone, but they offer us a drink."

At Halifax, on the night previous to the Brewster Sessions, a very large and enthusiastic open-air meeting to protest against new licences was held in the district affected, addressed entirely by workers living in the locality. On the following morning two important cases were heard at the Borough Sessions, one for a large hotel in a popular residential neighbourhood, where licences are by no means plentiful, and where the owners have now fought their battle in the Sessions for the fourth time without success. The employers of labour in the district personally opposed this application. Another application for a licence to sell bottled beer in quantities of not less than a dozen bottles was also refused. The applicant for this licence had spent over £4,000 in building very commodious premises.

The Church of England Temperance Chronicle gives some facts and figures to show what public-house prosperity costs the nation in taxes. Here is an example:—A widow, aged thirty-five, respectably connected, who had given way to drink, and had been cast off by her relatives in consequence, spent nine months of that year in prison, in seventeen convictions, and was also two months in the infirmary. Homeless, friendless, more ragged, more feeble after each imprisonment, work or lodging were equally impossible, and the drink crave stronger each time. Here we have in one year the cost of eleven months' maintenance, and in addition the heavy expense of seventeen times conveying the woman to the police courts, and seventeen times driving her from thence to the gaol. Three children were in the Poor Law schools, and another was supported by relations.

A Rabbit Story.

By Rev. Dr. Balgarnie.

THOSE who have visited Dickens' country and his favourite residence at Gadshill know the beauty of Cobham Park. Through the courtesy of Lord Darnley the woods and groves of Cobham are always open to the public. From Gravesend to Gadshill and Rochester the path lies through miles of spring or summer flowers. The music of the brook blends with the song of the thrush and the nightingale. Innumerable little wild creatures enliven the scene with their freaks and gambols, whilst the thick foliage of the ancient trees casts its grateful shade for the pedestrian over the moss-covered walks.

Monday is the parson's half-holiday, and my choice was to spend it in Cobham woods. I had not gone far one morning when a young rabbit crossed my path, scuttled away in front for a few yards, and then disappeared hurriedly into the bracken. A minute later it was followed by a pair of stoats, or weasels, let us call them, who had evidently made up their minds to have rabbit that day for breakfast. I could run then, so gave chase to see the finish. The poor little fugitive did its best to shake off its enemies. Once and again it emerged from the bracken and tried its speed in the open, but only to be frightened back by the fierce, rasping squeals of its pursuers. I could see, however, that Bunny was losing ground. Every time it reappeared the distance between them was shortened. The end was near.

At last the path widened on a space of smooth turf surrounding the mausoleum, where rest the ashes of the Earls of Darnley. There the shelter of the bracken was lost, and further effort to escape was useless. Down sank Bunny upon the turf, rigid and motionless, its eyes fixed, its fur on end like a brush, a picture for a painter of "the fear of death." One of the weasels leapt over it, and turned to attack in front, the other was preparing to spring. Just then I arrived—with a stick. It was cruel, perhaps, to deprive the two little wretches of their breakfast, seeing they had worked so hard for it, but "the best laid schemes . . . gang aft agley," and I thought of the rabbit.

Having settled matters with the enemy I thought I had released their prisoner, but I found it still rooted to the spot, spellbound under the fear of death. "Poor little beast!" I said kindly, as if it had been a kitten, but it took no notice of my Scottish accentuation—it was an English rabbit—till I stooped to stroke it. Then it seemed to realize its deliverance. It got to its feet, shook itself, staggered about for a little, and scuttled off into the wood.

Does the story remind us of something about ourselves? The guilt of sin haunted us. The fear of death paralyzed us. We gave ourselves up for lost. But a friendly eye had followed us, a mighty arm brought us salvation. "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee," He whispered to us, and so we became "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

The Scarlet Geranium.

AT the top of a house in a busy town lived a little girl named Ella. The child was a cripple, and had to lie on her bed all day long. Her elder sister went out to work in the day-time, and Ella looked forward to the evening when she returned. Kind neighbours lent her books to read, and one had given her a canary, which sang sweetly in its cage and brightened the dull hours. On wet days the time seemed to go more slowly than on fine ones. When she was tired of reading on a wet day, Ella would trace the pattern of the wall-paper in her room, which she knew almost by heart. On fine days she liked to watch the sunbeams that came in at the window, and danced about on their different objects in the room.

There was one visitor whom Ella always looked forward to seeing, and this was a lady who had a district in the crowded city, and visited the different houses in it once a week. She always brought some little present with her for the child, sometimes a book or some flowers, or something to tempt her to eat. One day when she came she brought a beautiful scarlet geranium in a flower-pot. Ella was delighted with it.

The lady sat down by the child and put the geranium on a table where she could look at it. She always tried to bring some message of comfort to the little cripple as well as a present. This day she took out a small piece of red glass from a bag, and asked Ella to look at her geranium through the glass.

"Why!" exclaimed the child, "the geranium is quite white when I look at it through the red glass!" Then to make sure that the flower had not changed its colour, she looked at it again without the glass, and it was quite scarlet as before. This little experiment quite pleased the cripple child.

The lady smiled at her pleasure, and then she tried to draw a lesson from the flower. She repeated a well-known text—"Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool." She taught Ella that when we are looked at by God, as we are by nature, our sins appear as red as the scarlet geranium; but when He looks at us through Christ our sins are washed away.

She repeated two sentences to the child, and gave her a little prayer to learn by heart. The sentences were—

"Looked at apart from Jesus Christ I am lost."

"Looked at through Jesus Christ I am saved."

Prayer: "O God, look at me always and only through our Lord Jesus Christ."

SUNDAY, September 15.

The True Honour (John v. 41-44).

"THEM that honour Me, I will honour; and those that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed." These memorable words speak through all the ages, and contain a principle which each of us should write deeply on the heart-tablets.

It is quite natural to desire the respect and goodwill of our friends and neighbours. None of us can be indifferent to the esteem in which we are held. And, moreover, we have a wider range of influence if we are held in the esteem and honour of our fellows. A good name is as ointment poured forth, which attracts people, and predisposes them to receive whatever of good we are capable of giving. But it is here that we reach the parting of the ways.

There are some who set themselves to obtain this honour from man as their avowed object. You will remember how Saul entreated Samuel, after that terrible scene in which the old prophet pronounced his sentence of deposition, to turn back with him, and do him honour in the face of his elders and leading officials. And there are many like him. They do not care what price they pay, if only they may secure the recognition and outward respect of men of influence and high-standing. They are not concerned as to the inner thought of such people, and are not specially careful as to any private estimate about their character, so long as they receive patronage and notice in the eyes of others.

To what despicable shifts will not people stoop to receive honour from men. And our Master says that such cannot believe, and are surely destitute of the love of God. Their one thought is self, and they are satisfied if they are noticed by the world's great ones, if they receive invitations to fêtes and parties, and if they can show visiting cards as proofs that they are on terms of social equality. What a temptation it is to us all to quote the names of titled or noble personages, who at some time or other may have crossed our path! All this is very despicable. How well would it be, like our Master, to resolve that we will not receive honour from men, that we will not make it a prime object of our choice.

On the other hand, a Christian man seeks to do the will of God, let him turn neither to the right to win a smile, nor to the left to avoid a frown, but go straight forward to please God. "Walk worthy of the Lord unto all well-pleasing." This is what our Lord means by coming in the Father's Name. Name is equivalent to nature. To come in the Name of God is to manifest his Nature, and obey the laws of his Being, to make Him first, and to be moulded by his will. Let a man do this, and ultimately God will see that he is honoured. "Promotion," says the Psalmist, "comes neither from the east, nor from the west." God is the supreme Judge, and Fountain of Honour; He sets up one, and deposes another.

I was much struck with an illustration of this, which I read only recently. John Woolman was a poor tailor, a Quaker, who lived in Massachusetts at the close of the eighteenth century. He was much concerned about the slave-holding members of the Friends' community, and set himself to pray and bear witness, travelling from place to place in great hardship and privation, enduring scorn and contumely. Finally he came to England as a steerage passenger, and died in York of small-pox absolutely destitute. Yet his journal has been republished again and again. It is one of the most beautiful memorials of a holy soul in the language; and Whittier, in his introduction, says that to John Woolman is undoubtedly due one of the earliest and most powerful impulses that led to the overthrow of the slave-trade.

Let us so live that God may honour us, and cause us to shine among his stars for ever and ever.

The Joy of Being Children.—The Lord, though he rebuke and chasten those who throng the fatal path, and who prefer the prospect of gain to the means of grace, will not forsake his offending children, but in his own time, and in his own way, will draw their hearts to himself, and make them feel the joy of being the children of such a Father.—Noel.

Patience of God.—Never was there a sin of thought, or word, or action, which was not diametrically opposed to the unchanging nature of the blessed God. His name is holy; his law is holy; his throne is holy; and yet it is to the unholy, it is to those who are in rebellion against the attributes of his nature, that his wondrous patience is extended.—Rev. F. Burder.

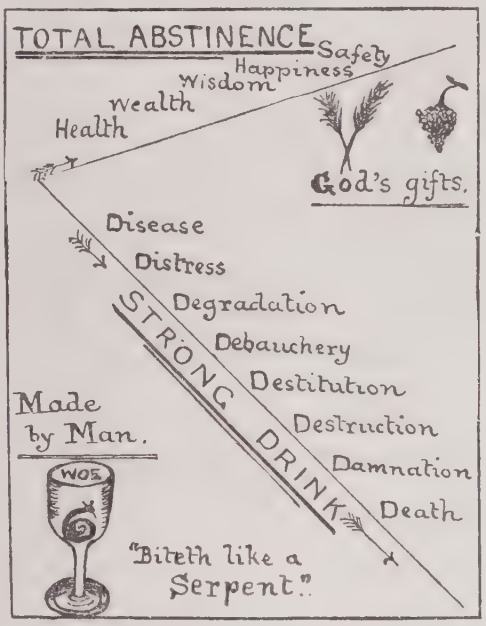
Temperance Lesson—Prov. xxiii. 29-35.

Golden Text—Prov. xx. 1.

For the Teacher.

IN view that our country, its prosperity, its morals, is being ruined by strong drink, and that the only hope lies in the young being trained for temperance, and taught all the evil effects of alcohol, this lesson is most important. Our Bands of Hope fail greatly in that the children are not taught that their pledge is binding for life. Safety is not in moderate drinking or in taking pure liquors; alcohol in small or large quantities is harmful, and what is safe for us, may be ruin to another (1 Cor. vii.). "The chemical analysis of various strong drinks shows that they contain alcohol, arsenic, alum, aloes, bitter almonds, blood, chalk, cherry-laurel water, cocculus indicus, copperas, gypsum, henbane, isinglass, lime, lead, logwood, nux-vomica, opium, oil of juniper, oil of turpentine, tobacco, sugar of lead, resin, &c." Contrast this with God's pure water, and the lovely grapes before spoiled by man. There would be food for all, if the grain were not wasted.



Proverbs.

This book is a collection of wise sayings, mostly by Solomon, who was the wisest of men. What he writes of the drunkard 3,000 years ago is true to-day. If, then, before the invention of brandy, whisky, gin or rum, the results were so disastrous, how much more now.

Expository.

The Question: (29) a burden of woes. Literally it means, "Who cries out, Oh! Alas!" A character sketch of the drunkard; full of woe and sorrow, quarrelsome, grumbling, complaining, getting bodily injuries, carrying about marks of disgrace in his eyes and face! Who would like this to be their photograph? An old man named "Sol Russel" was cured of drinking by seeing a photo of himself taken when he was drunk. Let us never begin lest this should ever be our likeness.

The Answer (30): "Tarry long"—beginning with little, seek more, trying it stronger, mixed with spices and drugs.

The Remedy (31): Don't look at it, lest you long after it. Every drunkard was once an innocent child, and then a moderate drinker. A total abstainer can never be a drunkard.

The Evil Consequences (32) if this warning is not attended to. The serpent is beautiful to look at, fascinating but poisonous, and brings death. So the social glass brings pleasure, but ends in temporal and eternal ruin. The adder, probably the horned snake (Cerastes) which coils itself up in the sands of the East and starts out unexpectedly at wayfarers. So, strong drink is a lurking foe, with hidden poison.

Alcohol is Poison (33): Unsteadiness of vision, neither the will nor the words under control. Loss of self-control a certain result of strong drink.

(34) Giddy and sick like one at sea; unsteady in walk like a landsman trying to walk on a vessel-deck in a storm; like someone unconsciously drowning in the sea (many are drowned when they are drunken), or like a silly sailor lad going to sleep on the mast-head. All figures to forcibly show the insecurity and extreme danger of the drinker's position.

(35) In dire peril, but, alas, unaware of it, for he is asleep! And the worst of all the woes is the slavery of habit, holding the poor drunkard in iron chains, stricken, beaten, wounded; yet he says, "I will seek it again."

The Pledge and Christ Jesus.

The pledge is no use in our own strength. But the Saviour can save to the uttermost; He can break the chains of sin, and give strength to overcome habit. His command is, "Be not drunken with wine, but be filled with the Spirit." The Holy Spirit is God's antidote to the devil's ardent spirits.

Welsh Notes.

THE experiment of holding Welsh services in Bradford has proved so successful that they are to be continued. The Welsh students at Headingley College, Leeds, will assist in the carrying on of the work.

Some time ago it was announced that Rev. T. Johns, of Llanelly, was engaged in collecting a sum of money to enable the well-known Welsh missionary in China, Rev. Hopcyn Rees, to make good the loss of his library during the Boxer rebellion. It is now announced that Mr. Johns has been successful in collecting no less a sum than £235.

In welcoming the Trades Union Congress to Swansea on Monday, September 2, and speaking on behalf of the Church of England, Rev. W. Morgan said that a new spirit was taking possession of the clergy, and that they no longer sought the interest of the pen. Rev. James Owen, in speaking for the Nonconformists, said that the charge brought against the Christian Church of helping the rich and the strong against the poor and the weak could not be brought against the Free Churches of Wales, for their churches were largely comprised of toilers, and their ministers drawn from labour's ranks.

Scottish Notes.

THE Y.M.C.A. Conference at Dumbarton last week was preceded by a special gathering on Sabbath morning, over which Dr. Dugald Campbell presided. Lord Overtoun gave an address based on 2 Pet. i. 5, in the course of which he called for the exercise of a grace which he feared had somewhat fallen in abeyance—that of taking trouble. Going on to describe the upbuilding of Christian character, he pointed to devotion to Christ as a secret to all.

Among other notable speakers was Lord Kinnaird, who, in the course of a discussion on "The Junior Section," pointed out that the organizing of such efforts should be planned as an extension of the work, not being undertaken as a tacit confession of failure in their own proper sphere.

In the course of a discussion last week, in Dundee Presbytery, on the observance of the Lord's Day, Rev. Dr. Colin Campbell instanced the case of the men employed on steamers trading between that port and London, whose voyages are so planned that the Sabbath is always a day of full work at sea.

In view of the proposal by the United Free Assembly that a series of special evangelistic services should be held throughout the churches during the current year, Principal Rainy and Dr. John Smith visited the Glasgow Presbytery last week. Dr. Smith emphasized three aspects of the present life of the country which specially impressed him: (1) The extent to which public opinion, as expressed by public movements and in journalism, was trying to shake itself clear of religious restraint. (2) The peculiar caste feeling which was coming into the thoughts and public actions of the working-classes, as expressed in their great organizations. They were living within the nation separate from the nation. They were not allying themselves with the reforms in which the middle classes were engaged, but were confining themselves to improvements of their own condition, and seeking far too much for material advantages. (3) The growing inclination to drift away from the Church, and a tendency on the part of the influential professional classes—people high in the social scale—and leaders of industry, to reduce the Lord's Day to the rank of a common day; to erase all those distinctive observances by which reverence for that day had been maintained in past times. There was ethical paralysis in the life of the nation of the most ominous kind. There had been a falling back since the beginning of last century. There was a day at the beginning of last century when England, at great cost to herself, wiped out slavery; but he feared that her aims were different to-day.

Prayer.—Who can express the powerful oratory of a believer's prayer? This little word Father, lisped forth in prayer by a child of God, exceeds the eloquence of Demosthenes, Cicero, and all the most renowned orators in the world. We knock at heaven, and the heart of God flies open!—Gurnall.

Evangelistic.

Work in Glasgow.

THE work here grows apace in interest. Our honoured brother, Mr. D. J. Findlay, and his heroic band of workers are doing famous service. There is no lack of energy, and that of diverse character. The tides of life in this vast city run strongly to the Exhibition, the total of entries since the opening already exceeding 7,000,000. The people come from all parts of the country and kingdom. Among such masses of human life the work is found, and it needs "go" and "vim," and downright earnestness, to hold an aggressive place, and insist upon being heard. By processions, bands, music, torches, and living advertisement, we attract attention and crowd the buildings.

Sunday last was a wonderful day. The prayer company "fired the engine-rooms," and 1,200 people attended the morning service in the Tabernacle. It was a live meeting. In the evening, a great company marched to St. Andrew's Hall, which was filled with more than 3,500 people. It was good to be there. Deep impressions were made; the great volume of praise, the after meeting, and the number who confessed Christ, made us think of the joy in harvest. I beseech your readers to pray for this work, and for me also. Henry Varley.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson re-commenced a mission in Glasgow on Lord's Day, September 1, when he preached in the City Hall, afternoon and night. Open-air services were held half an hour prior to the indoor meetings. On week nights, also, open-air and indoor meetings are being held.

In the south-east of the city the workers of Buchanan Memorial United Free Church have had an open-air campaign this week. Such work helps to solve the problem as to how to reach the masses. The minister of the church, Rev. J. W. Findlay, and others, have, night by night, sounded out the Gospel message.

Under the auspices of the United Evangelistic Association, Mr. Hugh Paton is at present conducting a mission in the Tent Hall, and some precious souls are finding their way to Christ. Prior to the indoor service, an open-air meeting is held each evening in the Gaol Square, about 300 yards distant, at which many hear the Word. From the square to the hall, along the Saltmarket, the workers march in processional order, attracting attention as they go.

A united Gospel Temperance movement has been in progress this week, several of the United Free Churches in the Plantation district having combined to make an onslaught on the drink traffic, preaching the Gospel as the great remedy. Each evening meetings have been held, both outside and in, in which the salvation of individuals from drink's enslaving and debasing power has been the aim. The meetings have been well attended, and results have not been lacking.

Mr. Tennyson Smith in Wales.

A very helpful Gospel Temperance Mission has been conducted by Mr. Tennyson Smith in the Rhondda Valley. The campaign opened with a procession of Good Templars, Bands of Hope, &c., assembling at Ystrad Station to meet the lecturer. The procession, headed by the Salvation Army Band, then paraded the district, after which two meetings were held at Bethesda Chapel. On the Sunday afternoon, at Jerusalem Chapel, and in the evening, in Hebron Chapel, crowded meetings were held, the buildings being packed to excess, and numbers being unable to gain even standing room. The same thing has occurred at subsequent meetings, and much enthusiasm has been aroused.

In Sussex Villages.

In a number of country places, Rev. Jesse Mayo, who labours in connection with the Free Church Council, has held evangelistic services with excellent results. Mr. Mayo writes:—"At Rogate, our advent was viewed at first with some suspicion, which, happily, was soon broken down; and now, at the request of a number of non-church-goers, a return visit has been arranged. At Fittleworth, it was strange to know that the missioner was preaching to numbers who would not show themselves, but yet were interested. At Lodsworth, the van was pitched on a spot where we looked right into the bar room of a public-house. The landlord was won over and he very kindly provided seats. Quite 200 people came on the closing night, while numbers listened at their doors and windows. They are desiring another visit. At Stedham, where a Free Church service is now being nursed into vigorous life, the meetings are creating interest, and a goodly number of men have listened to the Gospel."

Mr. H. Bridger asks for the help of workers in the Mission in Bow Common Lane. Services are held nightly at 7 p.m., and open-air work and tract distribution are also undertaken. Mr. Bridger's address is 19, Grove Road, Bow, E.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

CONFERENCE ON "REVIVALS."

In order to consolidate the work and to lead to a clearer and more lively apprehension of the fundamental truths for which the work stands, a three days' Conference was held in the tent at Islington on September 3, 4, and 5. It met with cordial support, many local ministers taking part in the proceedings.

The gatherings were marked by a deep spirit of devotion, and the days of the conference were indeed days of waiting upon God for fresh light and inspiration. On the Tuesday afternoon Mr. Leonard Weaver said that in his belief the greatest revivals lie ahead, and that God is leading his people on to more glorious times of blessing than the Church has known. The speaker went on to say that (1) All revivals must come from God. People think they must have some wonderful manifestation, or work up a little interest. All true revival, however, comes from on high. (2) It comes through the Churches. The members are the hands and feet of the body of Christ. God is pleased through the preaching of the Gospel to save them that believe. (3) Revivals are the result of a spiritual condition of the Church. If you have the true conditions among the people of God you would beyond doubt have a revival. The spirit of prayer is one of the conditions, earnest desire for souls is another, and the preaching of the word, which must be Scriptural and clear, is a third.

Mr. Bewley Weaver, who followed, was earnest and stirring in the thought that the moment a church ceases to be aggressive it ceases to fulfil its mission, and that to go forward is to follow the Apostolic method by pushing on into tracts where the name of Jesus is either unknown or dishonoured.

In the evening session Mr. Charles Inglis suggested four things that hinder a revival. (1) Lack of sympathy. One reason why crowds thronged around the Son of God on earth was that they knew they were coming to one who would have sympathy. (2) Lack of watchfulness. (3) Lack of humility. It does not matter if the messenger be forgotten if the message be remembered. (4) Lack of charity. In conclusion Mr. Inglis quoted Augustine:—

> The whole of Christ for my salvation,
> The whole Bible for my study.
> The whole Church for my fellowship.
> The whole world for my Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, who followed, spoke on "Helps to Revivals," urging as the first necessity the individual consecration of men and women. Christ wants to save the world, and he is simply waiting for the instruments. We might have a revival that would touch every street in London if the members of the churches were consecrated to Him. He spoke of some of the objections which men raise when called to service. Moses asked, "Who am I?" There are men and women to-day who say the same thing. Others say, "I stammer, I stutter." "Give your stammering tongue to God, and He will make use of it. Then there is the fear of criticism that hinders some. We shall never really do anything until we lose this fear, and the love of God casts out all fear."

One of the striking features of the tent meetings has been the very cordial reception accorded to all American speakers, and Dr. Mixion, a coloured worker, who took part on Wednesday evening, was no exception to this rule. He was most cordially received. He spoke of the revival times at present being experienced in the Southern States. Dr. Mixion sang, as he closed, "When the roll is called up yonder."

Mr. Bewley Weaver's message was from Luke ii. 7. "There was no room for them at the inn." With vigour and many pungent comments on national evils, the speaker asked, "Is there any room for Christ in modern Society? Is there room for Jesus in our home life? I believe more harm has been done to the cause of Christ through the low state of religious life in the home than by Atheism. There is room for science and literature, but no room for the Man of Sorrows."

At the afternoon gathering on Thursday Mr. George E. Morgan, M.A., spoke from 1 Sam. x. 6, 7: "The Spirit of the Lord shall come upon thee, and thou shalt be turned into another man. And let it be when these signs are come unto thee, that thou do as occasion serve thee, for God is with thee." Addressing especially those who had been brought to the Lord during the mission, the speaker urged those upon the Spirit of the Lord had thus come to remember that they were new "new creatures in Christ Jesus," that they must be doers as well as hearers, and not be like the forgetful hearer (James i. 23, 24), who "goeth his way, and forgetteth what manner of man he was."

Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, spoke from 1 Kings xviii. 41, his subject being "An Abundance of Rain." Throughout his address the leading thought was the power of prayer in revival. Many Christians seem scarcely to believe that God answers prayer. God has, however, left room in his purposes for our prayer. This prayer must be (1) for others, (2) believing, (3) definite, (4) fervent, (5) earnest, (6) persevering.

In the evening session of the closing day Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow urged the need of being filled with the Spirit of God, and then living a life of obedient service for God. Mr. Charles Inglis spoke of the comprehensive nature of the Redemption, and Rev. J. Gregory Mantle of the power of faith as illustrated in the grain of mustard seed, and the cause of failure in the Christian service of to-day as revealed by the disciple's question, "Why could not we cast him out?"

Throughout these three days of quiet in the presence of the Lord, a very deep spirit of prayer prevailed, and there can be no doubt that the outcome will be more earnest, faithful, and zealous service for the Master, and a more intelligent comprehension of the divine methods in the work of soul-winning.

During the past week the committee and evangelists of the London Tent Campaign have met with much encouragement. It was, perhaps, the most fruitful week experienced since the opening of the season. The financial burden, however, continues heavy, and it is earnestly hoped that the Lord's stewards will enable the work to be maintained with the thoroughness and to the extent for which the many opportunities call.

The work at Islington will be brought to a close on Monday, September 16, with a meeting for prayer, praise, and testimony, in which Mr. Leonard Weaver and other well-known workers will take part.

Clapham tent is to open on September 14, on a site in Clapham Road, midway between Clapham and Stockwell Stations on the Electric Railway. Mr. Charles Hall will be the hon. treasurer for this district.

There have been difficulties at Wimbledon in obtaining a suitable site, but an excellent one has now been secured, free of charge, in Merton Road (corner of Griffiths Road), and the first meeting is fixed for Saturday, September 14.

At Harlesden Lane, the Weaver Brothers are experiencing much blessing. The meetings for men are a special feature. At the meeting on Sunday morning, a large number of men were present from Messrs. George Baker's works, and the words of the evangelists were listened to with deep interest and appreciation.

Friends at Leyton will be glad to know that the mission is to be prolonged for two weeks. Dr. John Robertson has been conducting the meetings here of late, and a season of revival has been given. The addresses, full of plain dealing with sin, and also of forcible appeal for decision, have impressed many.

The meetings at Lavender Hill have grown each night in attendance and power. Many inquirers sought advice from the Christian workers. Tuesday night especially was a time of great blessing. All over the tent there were evidences of a complete breakdown among the unsaved. Mr. Leonard Weaver took the meeting on Wednesday, and Rev. J. Wilson, of Woolwich, spoke on Thursday from "How often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, but ye would not." The Word was with power, and many difficult cases were dealt with afterwards. On Friday night Mr. Weaver again took the meeting, as also on Saturday, when he gave his lecture, "The Devil Evicted," the tent being filled with just the right class of people whom it was desired to reach.

At Deptford the character of the work has been deep and far-reaching. This well-known district, with its vast working-class population, has evinced much interest in the mission. Mr. William Grove's hearty and earnest addresses have had good effect, and it has been cheering to witness the large attendances; some hundreds of men have had to stand outside, even on a week night. A notable feature of the Deptford meetings is the singing of Madame Annie Ryall, who has now recovered from her recent illness.

At Great Easton, Leicestershire.

"Thank God for the Tent Mission!" This exclamation conveys our feelings for the opportunities, privileges, and blessings experienced during the recent Tent Mission, carried on here first by Mr. Brown, followed by Mr. A. E. Sims, both of the Evangelization Society. The same exclamation is expressive of the feelings of many more in this district and neighbourhood, and we and they rejoice because of so many declaring for Christ. Another cause for rejoicing is the unity between the different churches, and, moreover, for the practical outcome of the mission, namely, the starting of a branch of the "Home Missionary Circle" (the organizing secretaries of which are Messrs. J. Clifford and A. E. Sims), which furnishes the supply of a strongly felt want here, i.e., a common ground where all who believe in "the common salvation" (Jude i. 3) may meet and praise the God of "eternal salvation" (Heb. v. 9), and join together in prayer for the gift of his Holy Spirit (Eph. vi. 17-19), and to study together "the Word of Life" (Phil. ii. 16), that they may so hold it forth as to lead others to believe and receive "the Life" and "the Light" of the world (John i. 4).

While we regret that Messrs. Brown and Sims could not stay longer with us, we praise God for their faithful services. We have about thirty names as members of the "Home Missionary Circle," with hopes of more joining.

REAR-ADMIRAL H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CORNWALL AND YORK, K.G., and the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS, &c.

Increased FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of The Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 185 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 70 seaports in every part of the world.

Seventy-one Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and 96 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1900—£49,166.

Obituary.

MR. W. G. WILKINS.

A NOTABLE figure in London Congregationalism has passed away in the person of Mr. W. G. Wilkins, of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N. Mr. Wilkins became connected with New Court before the present building was erected in the North London suburb, and had for many years been senior deacon and treasurer. He was a director of the London Missionary Society, and was associated with many religious and philanthropic undertakings. He was always a devoted friend and sympathetic counsellor, and was held in the highest esteem throughout North London. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who had arrived from America on a brief visit, took part in the funeral service.

REV. J. ERHARDT.

A veteran missionary of the C.M.S., Rev. James Erhardt, passed away at Stuttgart on August 4. He came to England in 1846, and went out to East Africa in 1848 under the auspices of the C.M.S. In 1856 Mr. Erhardt again went out for the C.M.S., but this time to India, where he laboured for thirty-five years. He was stationed successively at Bhagulpore, Benares, Lucknow, and finally at Secundra, near Agra, where he remained twenty years, till he retired from active service in 1889. His great work was done at Secundra, where he and his devoted wife were in charge of the orphanage, and where also he formed a community or village of native Christian children and young people, superintending not only their religious training, but also their general education in various trades.

Irish Notes.

A GOSPEL Temperance Mission, in which the ministers of all the Churches united, has been held for the last two months at Ligoniel. A large number of pledges have been taken, and it is believed that several have decided for Christ.

A meeting to bid farewell to Rev. T. J. and Mrs. McClelland, who are going out as Methodist missionaries to Calcutta, has just been held in the Methodist Church, Dalkey. There was a large attendance, and impressive addresses were delivered by Rev. J. O. Park, B.A.; William Crawford, M.A.; J. D. Lamont, and others.

Presbyterianism in Dublin is prospering in spite of many adverse circumstances, In thirty-two years the number of its families has gone up from 1,077 to 1,539; the number of communicants from 1,422 to 2,393, and its religious and charitable contributions to various funds from £6,030 to £12,576. During that period, too, it has built or rebuilt four new churches, and established St. Andrew's College as a first-class intermediate school.

Rev. William Meara, who went to South Africa from this country as a Methodist missionary just before the war broke out, has been allowed by the authorities to return to Barberton, where he visits the Boer laager, in which there are over 700 women and about 2,000 children. He also visits the fever-laden military camp at Komati Poort and the hospitals. He is doing a splendid work among Boers and Britons, and seems to have been raised up for the occasion.

At present life for Protestants in the west of Ireland is becoming almost intolerable. Unless people see their way to join the United Irish League they are threatened with the "forty foot pole medicine" and the publication of their names in a black list. Indeed, it is stated that in County Galway the small Protestant farmers, after holding out as long as possible, have been compelled to join the League, and that the most trifling offices of Christian kindness to neighbours who have incurred the displeasure of the League are visited with condign punishment. Moreover, in Sligo Protestants are excluded from every public appointment, and their children are obliged to leave the district in order to secure employment. Further, at some of the League meetings it has been openly stated that if the people had rifles and pom-poms they would be justified in rising in rebellion and driving the last vestige of British rule from the land. Where this sort of thing is going to end it is hard to see.

"Mercy and Truth Met Together."—In Christ crucified we have the clearest discovery of the evil of sin, the misery of sinners, the holiness, justice, and faithfulness of God, consistent with his love to men, the grace and merit of Christ, the purchase and security of eternal life.—Hurrion.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Archbishop of Armagh has been forbidden by his doctor to preach the Church Congress sermon in the parish church of Brighton on October 1. His place will be taken by the Bishop of Calcutta.

Rev. W. Odom, who is this month completing thirteen years of ministry as Vicar of Heeley, Sheffield, has prepared the "Official Handbook" to the Missionary Exhibition to be held in Sheffield in October next.

St. Paul's Church, Canonbury, has been re-opened after restoration. The vicar, Rev. H. L. C. de Candole, preached appropriate sermons and there were crowded congregations. Mr. de Candole acknowledged, thankfully, that of the total cost—£2,300—over £2,010 had been received or promised.

Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson, of St. John, West Chelsea, has a variety of machinery at work, and lately the "Church Sisters' Home" of the Ladies' League has been planted in the parish, to the great benefit of the district. The parochial agencies involve financial transactions to the extent of over £3,000 yearly, so that the financial responsibility is great and the labour of collecting the various funds is considerable.

Rev. P. A. Bennett, formerly of the C.M.S. Niger Mission, and at present holding a curacy in Dorking, has been appointed the Nairobi-Mombasa Chaplain. Hundreds of Europeans and Eurasians are resident in Mombasa and Nairobi. For those in Mombasa Sunday services have been possible, and spiritual ministrations available during a number of years, the missionaries of the C.M.S. having willingly done what they could in addition to the labours for which they have been more immediately responsible. But for those in Nairobi, more than 300 miles distant from Mombasa, it has not been possible to provide for church services, except at very long intervals. Mr. Bennett sails with the Bishop of Mombasa on December 7.

Congregational.

Rev. R. J. Campbell has returned to Brighton greatly benefited by rest and change. He preached to congregations that taxed to the utmost the capacity of Union Church.

At the first annual meeting of the Plumstead Church, it was decided to enlarge the present iron structure so as to seat 340 persons, provide a lower hall to seat eighty, and additional rooms for the use of the several societies connected with the church, at a cost not exceeding £400. The Sunday school, Band of Hope, Christian Endeavour Society, and open-air mission each gave encouraging reports of the work they are doing.

The programme of the autumnal Congregational meetings in Manchester has been strengthened by the addition of the name of Rev. John Thomas, M.A., of Liverpool, who has consented to preach the Colonial missionary sermon on the Thursday afternoon (October 17). It will be delivered in Union Chapel (Dr. McLaren's), where the evening meeting will also be held under the presidency of Mr. Edwyn Holt, at which Rev. David Walters, late of Chorlton-cum-Hardy, will be one of the chief speakers.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, chairman of the London Congregational Board, and Professor Massie, of Mansfield College, Oxford, have been appointed to represent the Congregational Union of England and Wales next month at New Haven, Connecticut, at the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the founding of Yale University. Mr. Gibbon will also represent the Congregational Union at the National Council of the Congregational Churches of America, to be held at Portland, Maine.

Rev. J. Pearse, of Madagascar, who has now seen thirty-eight years of service in that island, declares his conviction that the Malagasy Church has never been stronger or purer, or more full of promise than it is to-day. "The Jesuits have now a very large staff in the Island, but round the capital they make no perceptible headway. The Hova is still emphatically a Protestant tribe. There is a good demand for the Bible, and it never had so many readers, or so many followers of its precepts, as at the present day."

Horncastle (Lincolnshire) claims the honour of having for one of its inhabitants the oldest Congregational minister living, in the person of Rev. Thomas Lord. He was ordained to the Congregational ministry as far back as the year 1834, at Wollaston, Northamptonshire, and he is now in his ninety-fourth year. He is wonderfully vigorous, and has recently been preaching with great acceptance in the locality in Congregational, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist pulpits, and one of his latest efforts was in preaching the quarterly sermon of the Free Church Council.

A large congregation gathered in Queen Street Chapel, Wolverhampton, on Sunday morning of last week, to meet Rev. Henry C. Carter, M.A., on the commencement of his ministry in succession to late Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D. The sermon was based on 1 Cor. iii. 9, "For we are God's fellow-workers." At the conclusion of the service there was a large attendance of members at the solemn and impressive Communion service. In the evening Mr. Carter preached to a congregation which crowded the chapel to its utmost capacity.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. J. E. Hodge, to South Eston; Rev. W. Green, to Corsham; Rev. W. Whittley, of Cricklewood, to Ingatestone.

Baptist.

Rev. Silas Mead, M.A., and his daughter, Dr. Gertrude Mead, have arrived in Perth, West Australia. Mr. Mead is engaged to occupy the pulpit of his son-in-law, Rev. S. Wilson, now visiting England, until Mr. Wilson returns to Perth.

From the report of the Baptist Total Abstinence Society it appears that the Twentieth Century Million Pledges Crusade is making progress. Temperance among ministers is also a growing influence. Ninety-two ministers and missionaries have asked to have their names added to the Society's list of abstainers, which now stands at 1,853, or a net increase of sixty-nine on the year. Returns have been received from nine colleges, as compared with seven last year, showing that every one of the 201 students are total abstainers.

Rev. E. H. Ellis, who has accepted the pastorate of the East London Tabernacle, did good work some years ago at Devonshire Square before he went to Australia. He has gained respect and affection in Adelaide, where he gathered a strong church about him. He is an ex-President of the South Australian Baptist Union, and will represent that body at the Œcumenical Session at the forthcoming meetings at Edinburgh. After the Autumnal Assembly he will return to Australia till the end of the year, and he is expected to begin his work at the East London Tabernacle in January next.

Calls (accepted).—Mr. W. J. Cleal, of Bristol College, to Heneage Street Church, Birmingham; Rev. Herbert Nicolls, of Eccles, to Woodlands Road Church, Nelson.

Methodist.

The actual receipts to date of the Twentieth Century Fund, in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Church, amount to £661,650, and the promises to £927,000. It is hoped that at the various district synods to be held this month the one million aimed at will be reached.

A new chapel which has just been erected by the Primitive Methodists at the corner of Camp Street and Great Clowes Street, Broughton, Manchester, was opened for public worship on September 4. The building takes the place of the old chapel in Blackfriars Street (which has been sold), and affords accommodation for 450 people.

During his labours in connection with the Wesleyan Manchester Mission, Rev. W. H. Heap proved himself to be a powerful preacher and excellent organizer. His departure from the Mission was on account of ill-health. In June, 1900, Mr. Heap met with a serious bicycle accident. Eager for work, he did not realize how serious the consequences were, and soon after resuming his ministerial duties his health was found to be in a precarious state. The sad loss of his mother, followed by the death of a little child, at such a time, hindered Mr. Heap's recovery. He has left Manchester for Douglas, Isle of Man.

Now that the central office of the Wesley Guild has been fixed in Leeds, the friends in Yorkshire have already begun to work vigorously. The first meeting of the Central Council in the Brunswick Rooms on September 23 at three p.m. The circular summoning the members says:—"As this will be the first meeting of the Central Council in Leeds, a few of the Leeds members have invited the Leeds Wesleyan Methodist Council and the Guild secretaries of the district to meet Rev. Charles H. Kelly and the council at tea after the council meeting. There will be a public meeting in Brunswick Chapel at 7.30. It is to be hoped a great impetus will be given to this important and popular movement."

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. A. Hutton, M.A., of the Bristo United Free Church, Edinburgh, has accepted the call to the pastorate of Jesmond Church, Newcastle, in succession to Rev. Hugh Falconer, B.D. The induction has been fixed by Newcastle Presbytery to take place on October 3.

The young cause at Bath is steadily progressing under the care of Rev. T. R. Rawle, B.A. The attendances have been well kept up. Mr. Rawle is an acceptable preacher, and it is hoped that visitors, by their presence and support, will do all they can to forward the cause at this interesting period of its efforts and anxieties.

Church extension in Gateshead has advanced another step by the appointment of Rev. W. Murray Meston (at present assistant in Paisley) to take charge of the preaching-station in Brighton Avenue. The appointment is hearty and unanimous, and great results are looked for. It only remains for the committee to push on with the building of the hall, the present meeting-place (Board Schools) being very inconvenient for adults. It is intended to build a hall capable of holding 500, with suitable class-rooms and caretaker's house. The immediate neighbourhood is occupied by the working classes. It is the intention of the committee to have the whole district systematically visited.

Society of Friends.

John Chawner Clerk, of the Californian Yearly Meeting, is now visiting England. His services as an educationalist and in other ways, are well-known in America, both in North Carolina and on the Pacific coast, and a cordial greeting will be accorded him this side the Atlantic.

In the course of a paper on "Helps and Hindrances to our Meetings for Worship," Mary Lucy Whiting writes in The Friend: "We hear the cry for a more cultured and trained ministry. Doubtless it is a need, and the cultivation of intellectual gifts for this purpose is desirable. But it seems to me that the deep need underlying that cry, is the dedication of these talents to our Divine Master and Teacher, to be used as He wills in his service and in the Church, and the need of the baptism of the Holy Spirit to give spiritual power."

Emily Hutchinson, of the Friends' Industrial Mission, Pemba, recently visited Middlesbrough, and gave an address on "Mission Work in Pemba" in the Meeting-house. There was a good company present, who thoroughly enjoyed the interesting account of the work carried on in the island, more especially that part which has fallen to the lot of Herbert William Sellars, who left Middlesbrough for Pemba in March, 1900. The difficult work of reclaiming those upon whose character slavery has left its degrading influence, and the fact that there are so few to carry on the work, emphasized the words which the speaker wished those present to prayerfully consider: "Am I called to be a missionary?"

The Salvation Army.

The Toronto City Council has voted an annual grant of 300dols. in aid of the Army's Social Work amongst men in Canada.

The Crown Prince of Denmark, on visiting the Army's Rescue Home at Copenhagen, inquired into the work, had a conversation with the officers and inmates, expressed satisfaction greetings should be conveyed, and on leaving gave a donation of 100 kroner.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. J. HALLETT HOTHAM, formerly vicar of Sutton-at-Hone, near Dartford.—Rev. MOSES HARVEY died suddenly at St. Johns, Newfoundland, on September 2, at the age of eighty-two. He was born near Armagh, Ireland, and graduated at Belfast College. In 1843 he was Presbyterian minister at Maryport, Cumberland, and took charge of the Presbyterian church of St. Johns in 1852. He retired from active duty in 1878, since which time he was chiefly engaged in literary work. —Rev. E. L. CUTTS, D.D., who had been vicar of Holy Trinity, Haverstock Hill, for thirty years, died on September 1. After holding curacies at Coggeshall and Billericay in Essex, he was secretary of the A.C.S. from 1865 to 1871, when the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's presented him to Holy Trinity. He was a voluminous writer, particularly on Church history and archæological subjects.—The Baptist Church at Atherton has suffered a heavy loss in the sudden death of Mr. ABRAHAM BURROWS, J.P., in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He was a man of broad sympathies and benevolent spirit. Many a struggling church and many a needy individual could bear testimony to his generosity and goodness of heart.—Mr. R. B. BELCHER, a member at Blockley Baptist church for forty-eight years. For thirty years he was Sunday-school superintendent. —Mr. ROBERT PHILLIPS, of Manchester, an earnest member of the Church of England, and a strong supporter of many evangelical causes.—At Belfast, Rev. R. BUTLER, Methodist minister, aged sixty-two years.—At Duninakilly, Seamlecross, Rev. R. E. BUSCON, M.A., rector of the parish.—At Feale's Bridge, co. Kerry, Rev. M. O'CONNER, for twenty-seven years the earnest rector of Brosna and Abbeyfeale.

Notes & Comments

"He Careth for You." To meet the wishes expressed by a number of our readers, our publishers have produced the poem, "He Careth," which appeared in our issue of August 29, as a four-page leaflet (price 1s. 6d. per 100).

"Foundation Truths." Our publishers hope to issue, on September 30, under the title, Foundation Truths of the Gospel (3s. 6d.), the series of papers which appeared in our columns during the early months of this year. The following list of subjects dealt with indicates how widely the ground has been covered:—(1) "The Value of a Creed," by Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, D.D.; (2) "God the Beginning and the End," by Rev. Canon R. B. Girdlestone, M.A.; (3) "The Fall," by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.; (4) "Sin—What it Is, and what it Does," by Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A.; (5) "The Atonement," by Rev. Wm. Crosbie, M.A., LL.B.; (6) "The Significance of the Cross," by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson; (7) "Sin and Forgiveness—an Old Testament View," by Rev. David Baron; (8) "The Resurrection of Christ," by Mr. Henry Varley; (9) "The Resurrection," by Dr. Robert Anderson, C.B.; (10) "The Person of Christ," by Rev. T. A. Gurney, M.A., LL.B.; (11) "Repentance: Its Necessity and Urgency," by Rev. David M. McIntyre, M.A.; (12) "Repentance: Its Nature and Place," by Rev. Dr. John Gritton; (13) "Faith," by Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson; (14) "Regeneration," by Rev. Dr. Moule (Bishop-Designate of Durham); (15) "Justification," by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, M.A.; (16) "The Holy Spirit," by Professor John Laidlaw; (17) "The Sanctification of the Spirit," by Rev. T. G. Selby; (18) "The Bible: Its Origin and Authority," and (19) "Its Contents, and How to use It," by Rev. Canon R. B. Girdlestone, M.A.

Anarchism—its Cause and Remedy. Among the miscellaneous comments on Anarchism which the assassination of President McKinley has called forth in the daily and weekly press, there is much that is futile and beside the mark, but the following paragraph from the Pilot goes to the root of the trouble:—

> To hold up our hands in horror is useless, and the pains and penalties we are able to inflict on the criminal are all but useless to prevent a repetition of the crime. It occurs again and again, and the fact that the miserable creatures who perpetrate it are generally indifferent to the safety of their own lives makes mere punishment of no avail. Besides hunting our vocabularies for words in which to condemn the insane wretches who commit these crimes, we ought ourselves to feel that their commission is a disgrace and shame to our civilization. Anarchism is a disease bred among the dirt and refuse of civilization, and can only be exterminated by a cleanliness that shall go to the very roots of national life. A man who, by neglect of his person, finds himself attacked by vermin, does not as a rule cry out against the vermin; he holds his tongue and makes himself clean. To make a noise about an outrage of this kind only gratifies the Anarchists, and possibly encourages them. It is against ignorance and squalor that we must direct the campaign.

If the spirit of these weighty words be acted upon by the governments of the world, President McKinley will not have died in vain, nor his life have been thrown as "fruitless to the void." The civilized world must face the question of the forces which menace society. Invective will accomplish little—we ought to penetrate right to the bottom of the matter and search for the causes. It is remarkable that most of the villains who have assassinated kings and rulers have been idlers or atheists; and murderous anarchy is the natural product of their lives and teaching. On the Continent the doctrine, "Ni Dieu, ni maître," has borne its fruits. While the doctrines of atheism and lawlessness are openly proclaimed, we shall never be safe from the murderous anarchist. If anarchy is to cease, the fiery doctrines which produce it must not be allowed free voice. The disquiet which reigns everywhere is the result of the widespread abandonment of the law of God, which imposes love to Himself and to our neighbours. The sole radical cure for all the world's discontent is to bring God back to his proper place in human life.

The Prospects of Peace in Europe. The approaching visit of the Czar to France, whatever be its immediate purpose, must in the end tend to the consolidation of European peace. That no sinister motive lies behind it is guaranteed, not only by the character of the Czar himself as a lover of peace, but by the semi-private conference preceding this visit, between him and our own King, and the Emperor of Germany. So long as the rulers of these four great countries understand each other, and direct their policies in harmony, there is likelihood of prolonged peace. At the same time the question inevitably arises—Will these nations ever trust each other sufficiently to give up their bristling armaments, and cease to manufacture those costly playthings—forts and repeating-guns and navies?

The Chinese Peace Protocol. After many weary months of negotiation, the Chinese peace protocol has at length been signed. Diplomatically, the trouble with China is now ended. The Princes of that Empire promise, for the future, to govern their country in accordance with the laws of civilization. It is an immense relief all round that this goal has finally been reached. As we earnestly prayed to God during the trouble, let us not fail to render thanks to Him now that it is ended. Not only China, but Europe has learned a bitter lesson at a great price. It is incumbent upon European merchants and residents in China, and indeed upon all who deal with that people, to take every care to avoid a recurrence of the irritations which largely produced the late sorrow. Europe is under a pledge, as well as China.

Methodist Union. By far the most important item of the recent Œcumenical Conference in London was the Friday meeting, in which the question of Methodist Union was discussed. The spirit which animated the representatives of the various Methodist bodies was more than conciliatory; it was practically a demand for union all round. A few years ago such a meeting would have been impossible; that it has actually taken place is a striking proof of the prevalent desire for real, visible, Christian union. Our Methodist brethren, in particular, have very little reason for remaining in separate bodies. As one speaker said, "the burial of the dead controversies of the past, and our ever-increasing fraternization, has brought us to the point of union." And in this all Evangelical Christians must rejoice, for it makes toward our Lord's desire for his people.

A Unifying Factor. One of the speakers at the Conference, in alluding to the unifying power of a common tongue among believers all over the world, referred to the fact that in ancient times the dispersive power of sin was emphasized by the "confusion of tongues." There is no doubt that language is an immense factor in the growing solidarity of the English-speaking races, and though the dream of "Volapük" is not yet realized, and not likely to be, yet the vast extension of the English tongue is a tremendous force working for unity in faith as well as patriotism throughout the world. To find representatives of some 30,000,000 Methodists from all parts able to exchange their profoundest thoughts on the greatest of all themes and experiences, without the aid of an interpreter, is a great and moving sight. The universal standard of English is the English Bible, as it is of Christian thought, wherever it is read and expounded. The great Methodist Council is itself an illustration of this fact.

Holy War Maxims. It is in keeping with the spirit of the time that a new translation of the famous military maxims of Napoleon has just appeared in this country. It is regrettable that current events compel the authorities to give increasing attention to the subject of war. From a military point of view, however, Napoleon's maxims take the first rank for shrewd and scientific counsel. More than one of them may well be applied to the Holy War in which the soldiers of Christ are engaged; at any rate, they convey sound lessons in tactics. For example, one of the most famous is the following:—

> Nothing is so important in war as an undivided command; for this reason—when war is carried on against a single power, there should be only one army, acting from one base, and conducted by one chief.

This is àpropos of our continual insistence upon a more real union between those whose basal interests are identical. In the presence of such menacing forces as sacerdotalism, materialism, and indifference, nothing is so essential as concentration in attack. Is it possible to over-estimate the result to our country of a practical union of all the Evangelical forces, within and without the Established Church? Neither the Free Churches nor the Evangelical section of the Anglican Church can afford to work in practical separation from each other, as is largely the case at present. "United we stand—divided we fall."

Modern Preaching. The Guardian has opened its columns to a discussion of the time-honoured subject, "The (alleged) Decay of Preaching." One suggestive letter ascribes the lack of interest shown by large numbers towards the pulpit to the "prevalent and increasing undenominationalism"—a feature which is fostered by the supply of "type-written sermons, which undoubtedly have a large sale, and which, prepared to suit all opinions, must keep away from definite doctrinal teaching." By "undenominational" the writer clearly means indefinite preaching, which has no clear doctrinal message, and therefore is bound to leave the hearers in a fog. The use of bought "type-written sermons," however definite their teaching might be made, is bound to fail for another and still more weighty reason—they are a palpable fraud on the part of the preacher, who professes to deliver a message of his own, when actually preaching another man's sermon. Such "preaching" is sure to bring the whole ministry into disrepute, and cannot be too strongly condemned. Fortunately this is a charge that cannot apply to more than a small section of the clergy of the Church of England, and a man who has a personal message to deliver will not fail of an audience.

The Law of Bible Study. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, in a recent article, offers some old, yet necessary, advice concerning the reading of the Bible. One point he insists upon, which demands serious attention. He says:—

> The law of progress in understanding the Word is that the truth already received shall have been obeyed in the life. The Bible is a sealed book to thousands of people because there has not been response in their lives to the measure of truth received.
> There must be the disciple's heart for the reception of truth. The characteristics of the true disciple are willingness to learn and determination to work. Prejudice and laziness will inevitably dull the mind and obscure the vision.

This law can never be too frequently pointed out. Just now it needs special emphasis, since many are posing as judges of the Bible while choosing or rejecting at will what pleases or displeases them. The end of Divine revelation is more than the imparting of information. Information, of course, must be the base of it, but we are informed of truth that we may practise it. And in Bible study, as in everything else, the law holds good that obedience to the heavenly vision is necessary for the enrichment of personal life, and the development of an apostolic career.

Some Light Upon Relics. Cardinal Vaughan made an admission at Newcastle last week, which may well shake seriously the belief even of his ardent co-religionists in the value of "saints'" relics. For the new Roman cathedral at Westminster a supposed relic of "St. Edmund" had been obtained from Toulouse. Certain scholars, however, wrote to the Times challenging its genuineness, and a committee was formed to inquire into the matter. The committee reports that the relics are not genuine, and Cardinal Vaughan tried to show that the discovery will not be "an awkward matter for the Church," since "the Church pretends to no divine guidance for accuracy in such things as relics." The Cardinal's effort, however, places in the most ridiculous light such holy nonsense as relic worship; for had Dr. James and Dr. Bigg not challenged the matter, the "faithful" would have been enjoined to adore false relics, as are the deluded people in every Romish land, where there is no Dr. Biggs to take up the cudgels against the infamous pretence. Things like these ought to open the eyes of Roman Catholics to the absurdities of their superstitions.

Second-hand Faith. True religion is the establishment of vital relations between the soul and God, by means of the only Advocate and Mediator, Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanses from all sin, and whose Spirit dwells in the cleansed heart. This relationship can be none other than personal. Many things we may do by deputy, but this thing must be done individually. There is always a danger, however, of persons mistaking Gospel light that falls upon them, for light that is within them. Many content themselves with a reflection of its splendour. Like a diamond, the light that flashes from them is light external to themselves, scintillating from a dead, hard surface. They believe themselves to have faith, but it is a second-hand faith only—a belief which is but an echo of what others say. This class of people is photographed in the Gospels. "Many of the Samaritans believed on Him for the saying of the woman" (John iv. 39). To all such it might be real salvation if they read the sequel of that history—"Many more believed . . . and said . . . Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard Him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world" (John iv. 42).

Do Men Desire Immortality? There is a singular article in the current Fortnightly Review under the above heading. An attempt has been made, by means of circulars, to discover, from men's own confessions, whether there is any general wish for a life beyond the grave; and the conclusion arrived at is that men are not interested in the Beyond, therefore the Beyond is hypothetical. It is very evident that the writer has treated his theme in the most superficial manner. The evidence given by circulars in such a question as this is next to valueless. Many men who might declare in writing that the future life has no hold upon them show, in various ways, how much they are haunted by the thought of eternity. Amidst the rush of life it is easy to forget eternal things, but when the soul is still, reflective, and face to face with death, it is impossible to escape the thought of the life beyond. In place of asking men whether they desire to live beyond the grave, it would be far more to the point to remind them that, whatever their desires be, the life beyond is inevitable, and wisdom counsels them to prepare for it.

The Limits of Science. The admissions made by the President of the British Association in his address at Glasgow are worth noting. They are a healthy set-off against the over-confident assertions which many students of physical science are so fond of making. The great masters of science have nearly always been modest when promulgating their hypotheses, for they are aware that further light may completely destroy a hypothesis which to-day appears well established. One of the headings of Professor Rücker's address was "The Limits of Physical Theories," under which he frankly said:—

> Physical theories begin at the surface with phenomena which directly affect our senses. When they are used in the attempt to penetrate deeper into the secrets of nature it is more than probable that they will meet with insuperable barriers. The range of our speculations is limited both in space and time—in space, for we have no right to claim a knowledge of the infinite universe; in time, for the cumulative effect of actions which might pass undetected in the short space of years of which we have knowledge, may, if continued long enough, modify our most profound generalizations.

Lesser lights than Professor Rücker might with advantage weigh these words.

Foolish Prophesying. One great reason why the truth of our Lord's second coming is received with such coldness by many Christian people is, we fear, the continual and foolish attempt of certain modern prophets definitely to fix times and seasons. The fate of these attempts in former days should at least have taught men a little discretion and prevented them from repeating manifested folly. We are extremely sorry to see advertisements in most of the papers definitely fixing the date of the end of this age. The same advertiser has changed his date several times, each time fixed passing by without witnessing the fulfilment of the sensational predictions. This kind of thing counts for a great deal with very many people, and it leads to jesting or to indifference concerning an important subject. Earnest and wise Bible students, however, will not be deterred from searching the Scriptures and proclaiming the truths they find therein revealed. To-day, as of old, it is necessary to distinguish between the chaff and the wheat, and not to reject the wheat because it is mixed with chaff.

The Responsibilities of Leisure. The report of the Labour Department of the Board of Trade reveals the encouraging fact that while, in 1900, wages were higher, the average hours of labour were lower than in former years. It is especially encouraging to find that this decrease in hours was chiefly among miners, whose conditions of labour are exceptionally trying. At the same time, these figures open up a very important question. Are the working classes of this country putting to the best use their ever-increasing periods of leisure? It is clear that while every man when "off duty" has the legal and social right to do what he likes with his time, he is also responsible in a higher sense for every minute of it. It is equally clear that enlarged leisure only multiplies avenues of temptation, if he is not capable of turning it to some profit for himself and others. "The uses of spare time" would be an invaluable subject for training for the senior classes in our schools.

Stopping the Supplies. The Administration in Belgium has taken a very wise course in prohibiting the circulation by post or railway in that country of a number of French periodical publications of an immoral tone. No fewer than thirty such papers have been included in the list, and to anyone who is aware of the evil nature of this literature it will not be surprising that the Ministers have thought it necessary in the interests of public morality to interdict them. It would be well if a similar course could be taken in England, not only in regard to foreign filth of the kind, but also as to a number of publications printed within our own borders which, although they are offensive and distinctly immoral in tendency, are openly exposed for sale, and permitted to circulate through the Post Office.

A New Incentive to Juvenile Smoking. The pernicious habit of cigarette smoking among boys has recently received an unexpected impetus through the "enterprise" of one or two firms of manufacturers, who are offering money prizes for complete sets of certain portraits of celebrities, which are given away with each packet. To the craze for "collecting" is thus added the sinister influence of a bribe to keep on buying cigarettes for the sake of the portraits. A more objectionable temptation could scarcely be concocted, and already it is evident that there is a marked increase in juvenile smoking. In certain European countries the practice of juvenile smoking is prohibited by law. It would be well if it were so here.

The Late President McKinley

IN January last, the world was plunged into mourning through the death of Queen Victoria, and the heart of the British nation was especially touched by the manner in which the Anglo-Saxon peoples stood beside each other in a great common sorrow. Now we are called to extend the hand of sympathy to our sister English-speaking nation in a time of dire grief, which has an additional and tragic element of pain. The crime to which we referred last week has resulted in the death of President McKinley, the third occasion on which a chief ruler of the Republic has fallen by the hand of the assassin. All were men of character, piety, and devotion to their country, rising from the humblest position to the highest, and that without in any way playing fast and loose with the principles of right living. Each of them fell the prey to attacks by men who had no grudge against them personally, but who slew them as representatives of civilization and order.

In these last days, it has been shown at the Methodist Œcumenical Conference that the bond between the two countries is constantly strengthening: and to-day, as we stand in spirit round the mortal remains of the great statesman so suddenly called away from his wide sphere of usefulness, we feel that we are brothers indeed, nearer of kin and in spirit than many who acknowledge a single government.

Such differences as those between monarchical and republican rule may at times bulk largely in the public mind; but the generation has long passed away which found anything incongruous in the appearance at State functions of the plainly-dressed representative of the United States. It was fitting that King Edward and the Emperor William should be among the first to express sympathy with the kingly man who was yet only President over his fellow-citizens.

Tracing his descent from a family of Scottish Covenanters, Mr. McKinley had inherited their deeply religious spirit, their love of a simple form of worship, and their eagerness for education, which in his case amounted to a passion. His own ambition for a college education in order to qualify him for the legal profession, was loyally supported by the family. The lack of means with which so many great men have had to contend in their youth only put the future president on his mettle, and adversity helped to develop the best qualities of a strong and intense nature.

The first great national crisis in which he took a share was the Civil War, which turned him from a student to a soldier. Entering the army as a private he was soon appointed sergeant, not long after received a commission, and served with much success and appreciation on the staffs of two generals. So far was he from regarding this as an interruption of his education that he placed a high value on his military experience, and in after days "looked back on these four years of campaigning as a more potent educational force than all the years he spent over Latin and mathematics in the seminary."

It is not our purpose to follow in detail his professional and political careerafter the War, but his progress in both respects was steady and rapid. When, in 1893, he was elected Governor of the State of Ohio, it was felt that a strong and good man had been chosen, and the result of the close scrutiny to which all are exposed who fill exalted places, was his entering in 1897 on the highest office which his countrymen could bestow. His term of office was one which put all his powers to the most severe test, and his return a second time last November was the best proof the nation could give of its approval of the past and confidence for the future.

The testimony of his minister (Rev. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, of the Metropolitan Methodist Church, Washington) is that he was an exemplary church member, as well as an attentive and appreciative hearer of the Gospel. He felt strongly that, though the head of the State, he was there at least the equal of the humblest of his fellow-members. A certain amount of public attention was unavoidable, but it was known to be his wish that in no way should notice be directed to him, and this wish was carefully respected. Of his dark, expressive eyes, Dr. Bristol said, "there is a fascination in feeling that they are watching me. The President has a beautiful face, the face of a whole-souled gentleman." Another characteristic which Dr. Bristol singles out for special notice was his deep love for children, who could always command his close attention, and who were always welcome visitors.

In early business days in Canton, Mr. McKinley met the young lady who was to become his wife, Miss Ida Saxton, when transacting business in her father's bank, where she acted as one of the assistants; and they were married in 1871 "in the quaint old Presbyterian church where Ida's parents and grandparents worshipped, and where the girl taught a class in the Sunday school." They have shared deep sorrow. Their two children died before reaching the age of four. The marriage was a true union of hearts, and President McKinley would have been first to ascribe his success to the home influence which upheld him.

Mr. E. V. Smalley says in his biography:

The grief of the young mother wrecked her health, and left her a victim to a nervous disease which made her a cripple for life, able to walk only with pain, and with a supporting arm. The devoted husband saw before him the tragic vision of a childless life and the companionship of an incurable invalid. No man ever accepted such a situation with more cheerful self-abnegation. He made himself the faithful and skilful nurse of his unfortunate wife, and gave every hour he could spare from his work to the task of lightening her sorrows, and cheering her broken life. This course he has pursued unfalteringly for more than twenty years, without admitting in his own secret thought that he has been doing anything worthy of praise. His wife's condition cut him off from most of the social pleasures which men enjoy—the easy-going fellowship of clubs and smoking-rooms, of hunting excursions and pleasure trips, of dinners and receptions; for, once free from his duties as a lawyer or as a congressman or governor, he always returned to his wife's side, feeling that she had need of his companionship.

One of the pictures which will be treasured deep in the heart of the nation is that of Mr. McKinley hard at work, with Mrs. McKinley knitting or sewing in the same room, each satisfied to be in the presence of the other, and upheld by that when weighed down by different burdens, though the demands of public business prevented verbal intercourse.

It is a consolation of no mean order that the fierce light that falls on the death-bed of a ruler revealed so noble a spirit of heroic endurance and magnanimous dignity as was shown throughout this brief illness. Mr. McKinley's anxiety that his murderer should have fair play shown to him, the absence of any bitterness or rebelliousness of spirit, his humble submission to the "will of God," his tender consideration towards his sick wife, his gratitude to those who waited on him—these are traits of a true Christian man passing through the valley of the shadow of death, and will have a profound influence on the world that has been watching by the bedside. The sympathy which flowed with so strong a current across the Atlantic, when Britain lost her aged Queen at the beginning of the year, now flows in the other direction with redoubled depth and power.

One of the highest tributes paid last week was by Bishop Galloway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:—

We at this Conference talked about peace. William McKinley was the incarnation of peace. But above everything else he illustrated those private and domestic virtues which have made our country great, and which make our civilization great: great as a statesman, distinguished as a leader, lofty in his patriotism, devoted, not only as a citizen of our great country, but of our Methodism.

As the duties and cares of earth were passing from him, the Christian character of the dying President stood out in bold relief. His last words to his wife were—"God's will, not ours, be done"; and the last murmur heard before he lost consciousness, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." With him it is well. He bore manfully his share of the burden and heat of the day, and has now entered into his rest and reward. He has done much to leaven with Christian influence the political life of America, bearing a simple testimony to the Saviour he loved. He loved, too, to remember regularly the dying love of the Lord; now he sees Him face to face. May his influence for good be like ever-widening ripples on the surface of a lake! May his sorrowing, heart-broken wife be comforted by Him who alone is "the Husband of the widow."

Christianity and Modern Unbelief.

By Rev. J. AGAR BEET, D.D.*

BY unbelief, I understand an intelligent rejection of convictions held firmly by the mass of Christians as the ground of their hope and the rule of their life. Unbelief, thus understood, is not modern, but is as old as Christianity. It has, however, in a modern environment, assumed forms more or less peculiar to our own day. Some reject, as destitute of sufficient evidence, all definite conception of an Unseen greater than the visible world around us and claiming to control human action.

The unbelievers are sometimes called Agnostics. They profess that they know nothing beyond the visible universe around. Not a few of them assert that nothing more can be known. Others look up with more or less confidence and joy to a Father in Heaven, and expect, with hope or fear, a judgment to come. But they reject, either as incredible or as destitute of adequate proof, certain distinctive doctrines held firmly by a large majority of professed Christians, such as the Divinity of Christ, pardon of sins through the death of Christ, and the resurrection of Christ. This second class of unbelievers may be called Rationalists. Each of these forms of unbelief has been prevalent in all ages, and their prevalence reveals deep-seated causes. On the one hand, Religion, especially the Religion of Christ, claims to rule the entire action and thoughts of man, thus limiting his activities and pleasures, while at the same time the fascinations and terrors of the material world, supported by subtle influences born in us, draw us in an opposite and lower direction. This influence tends to warp the judgment and to weaken the moral sense.

They who yield themselves to the fascinations of the world are prone to welcome arguments which tend to break down barriers to self-indulgence, and to discredit an authority which demands self-restraint. In other words, no one comes unprejudiced to the claims of religion and of Christ. If we have felt the insufficiency of things around to satisfy man's deep need, we shall welcome One who offers rest to the weary, even though it be by laying upon them his yoke.

Another hindrance to faith is that Christianity involves a new and complicated conception of God as Father, Son, and Spirit; and, therefore, involves to thoughtful men sustained mental effort. Mere Theism is much simpler than is the New Testament teaching about Christ. And, in the weariness of life, we are prone to welcome that which makes least demand on our thought.

MODERN HINDRANCES TO FAITH.

We turn now to certain specifically modern hindrances to faith. Strange to say, among these must be placed the searching and accurate methods of research adopted now in all departments of human knowledge, and the indisputable success gained by these methods in the field of natural science. These methods commend themselves at once to our intelligence, and the results thus gained have greatly enriched and elevated human life.

Then, too, religious teaching has often been little better than traditional dogmatism, or has been supported by arguments sufficient only to give a colour of plausibility to beliefs already accepted for other reasons. Moreover, the Gospel has sometimes been so misrepresented as to drive into revolt the intelligent moral sense even of devout persons.

Other hindrances have their source in a one-sided development of knowledge. No results of modern research are better attested, or are of further-reaching importance, than are the universal reign of law, the invariable sequence of cause and effect, and the close relation of whatever exists to whatever else exists as parts of one whole. In days gone by, events differing widely from the ordinary course of things, and unaccountable by natural causes, excited little surprise. We have now learnt that whatever exists and whatever takes place, belongs to a class larger than itself, and has appropriate antecedents. Not a few men have rejected, without discussion, the emphatic and repeated statements of the writers of the New Testament that their Master was raised from the dead. We have a plain contradiction between the teaching of the earliest followers of Christ and an attitude of mind prompted by modern methods of research.

In view of these tendencies of modern thought,

WHAT ATTITUDE OUGHT TO BE TAKEN UP

by those who have in their own experience decisive proof that the Gospel is true, and especially by those set apart to proclaim it? This question the greatest of the Apostles will answer by his own example. His own method he thus describes (in 2 Cor. iv. 2), "by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." This implies that the truth (by which I understand here the great reality underlying the Gospel) appeals to that inner faculty by which every man, in spite of human fallibility, pronounces what is, in the main, a just judgment on moral questions.

Before going into the fight we must carefully examine our weapons. For, however plausible error may appear, it is always dangerous, and may be fatal; for it may lead astray. Or, on the other hand, discovery of the truth may discredit the teacher. Truth alone appeals to that which is noblest and best in man. To eliminate error from our own religious beliefs is by no means easy. For, although in our own moral and spiritual life we have complete proof that the Gospel is true in the main, we have no right to assume that our beliefs are true in all minor details. For error is apt to mingle with truth. To remove error from the statement of Divine truth is the first duty of the Christian apologist. In our effort to do this, the methods of modern historical and scientific research will greatly help us.

WE MUST SIFT THE EVIDENCE for the historic facts, and for the doctrines of Christianity, as we should sift the evidence for any other human belief. We may hope thus to remove from our advocacy of the Gospel some of the misrepresentations which have raised serious hindrances to it. Moreover, this method will gain for us the respect of some whom we wish to convince, and who, in other departments, are accustomed thus to sift evidence.

But, when all is done, serious difficulties will remain, especially those which gather round the resurrection of Christ. Can we do anything to lessen them? I think we can. We can show that a denial of the resurrection of Christ does not remove the difficulty of accounting for the origin of Christianity, and for its wonderful effect on the world, as revealed in the unique pre-eminence of the Christian nations. Indisputably, out of a religion peculiar to a small and decaying nation, arose suddenly another religion similar to it, yet containing elements quite new; and, in marked contrast to Judaism, which had existed for centuries without greatly influencing the nations around, this new religion soon burst all national bounds, and spread rapidly over the Roman Empire, and continued to spread until now, for many centuries, it has been conterminous with civilization, and has monopolised all that is best in human life.

The rise and influence of Christianity stand absolutely alone in the history of the world. They reveal a unique cause. It is also certain that the earliest preachers of the Gospel, by whom Christ was boldly proclaimed to be the Saviour of the world, bowed before Him as One infinitely greater than the greatest of men; and did so because they had evidence which convinced them that He had risen from the dead. If He did not rise, and was not in a unique sense the Son of God, these men were in deep error touching their Master and touching the nature of God. In other words, a movement based only on a stupendous delusion has, in this case, conferred on our race infinite blessing. From this dilemma the only way of escape is through the empty grave of our Risen Lord. On this way of escape

MODERN SCIENCE SHEDS WELCOME LIGHT.

For it reveals to us an event, or a small series of events, as unlike the ordinary course of nature, and as unaccountable by the known forces of nature, as is the return of a dead man to life. Of these the most conspicuous is the origin of life. The origin of life is as much or as little a miracle as is the resurrection of Christ. Thus the resurrection of Christ, followed by the marvellous effects of the Gospel He preached, no longer stands alone, but stands (as a fact of history) in line with a few other events, each of them introducing a new era which changed completely the whole aspect of the world. This relief from a serious theological difficulty is of utmost importance, for it reveals a deep and far-reaching harmony between things seen and unseen, and shows us light reflected from the one upon the other.

Our first duty to unbelievers is ourselves to examine carefully the treasure committed to our charge, and to eliminate as far as we can the error which ever tends to mingle with truth. In so doing, we shall welcome from all departments of knowledge correct methods of research. This will do much to gain us a hearing from those whom we wish to convince. We must then state clearly the results of our research, and reproduce as far as we can the

EVIDENCE ON WHICH OUR OWN BELIEF RESTS.

To the believer, the strongest confirmation and verification of our faith is found in his own inner life; but this can be reproduced only to a very small extent. Yet, just as the unseen grandeur of the Son of God revealed itself to men in his holy life on earth, so may we hope that He will clothe us his servants with some measure of his own moral glory. This will be the true complement to that historical evidence we ought ever to be ready to produce. Each of these departments of evidence needs, and neither supersedes, the other. We read that, while Moses talked with God on the mountain, his face caught the brightness of Him with whom he spoke. That supernatural brightness revealed to Israel the Divine authority of the covenant given through Moses. But it did not supersede the words written on the tables of stone. So do they who set forth and defend the Gospel of Christ need to stand before Him, and to go forth from his presence bearing in their hands the words of life written down from his lips, and reflecting in their own uprightness, kindness, and devotion to his work the moral glory of the Master whom they serve.

*Notes of a paper read before the Œcumenical Conference last week.

A Harvest Hymn.

"Sing forth the honour of his name" (Ps. lxvi. 2).

Sing to Jehovah the tribute of praise!
Loud be the anthem begun;
Glorious in power, in wisdom, and grace—
Speaking, and lo, it is done!

Sing to Jehovah the tribute of praise!
Earth is now teeming again,
Far on the landscape our vision surveys—
Beauty and fruitfulness reign.

Sing to Jehovah the tribute of praise!
Loudly his goodness proclaim!
Joyfully offer the sweetest of lays,
Due to his excellent name!

Sing to Jehovah the tribute of praise!
Bright is the harvest once more;
His is the fulness which gladdens our days—
His is the love we adore.

The Failure of Atheism.—The proceedings of the London Bankruptcy Court last week, in the affairs of a notorious Atheist lecturer, revealed to the world that organized Atheism in this country is dying for want of support. It is not the case of one solitary individual becoming bankrupt, it is an entire movement that is represented in this collapse. It is a healthy sign that organized Atheism cannot live in our free country. We cannot be content with the absence of negation; we want to see the people positively evangelized and brought to Christ.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

XI.—The Judge Standeth at the Door (v. 1-6).

LIKE a torrent whose stream becomes more rapid as it nears the cataract, the language of the Epistle gathers in strength as it approaches its climax. The intensity of his feeling breathes through this closing chapter, in view of the nearing coming of the Lord. That coming is regarded from two aspects, as a truth of terror for the unready, and a truth of consolation for those who look for his appearing. This contrast is manifest in the two sections of this chapter. Down to verse 6 inclusive, he clearly addresses the rich Sadducean, non-Christian class, representative of the great majority of the nation. Then from verse 7 onwards, with the introduction of the title "brethren," he turns to the poor and afflicted Christians, with words of encouragement based upon the nearness of the very coming which is

A JUDGMENT UPON THE UNREADY.

There is, strange to say, no word of exhortation in the terrible picture of the approaching destruction of the rich and unprepared. That destruction is spoken of as certain, speedy, inevitable. It is James' mission now simply to declare it, leaving the very severity of his language to work such dismay in the hearts of his readers that this very dismay may become the germ of godly fear. "When God's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." By the power of spiritual insight that belongs to a prophet, he discerned the nation's character in its true light, and thus could foretell in detail the future arising from that character, as e.g., witness the prophecy of his own death.

"Go to now, ye rich, weep and howl for your miseries that are coming upon you" (v. 1)—the already-impending, already-threatening miseries. "Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and your silver are rusted; and their rust shall be for a testimony against you, and shall eat your flesh as fire." It is, we mark at once, in the sphere of their ill-gotten wealth that the judgment falls. It strikes first that which they had acquired by defrauding their neighbours. It punishes the human wrong rather than the Divine insult. Isaiah summons Babylon in similar language to "howl," "because the day of the Lord is nigh," and Joel thus addresses the profligates of his day, because their sweet wine was cut off (i. 5). The miseries thus foretold as close at hand fell specially upon the rich within the besieged capital; they suffered most from the ruinous contest of rival parties, in which all property was destroyed. In the dispersion, among the rest of the Jews, the war of revolution was terribly avenged upon the rich throughout the country, and Josephus tells us how the wealthier Jews suffered even as far as Alexandria.

GRADATIONS OF WEALTH AND EVIL.

Three classes of wealth are named here, each with their distinctive corruptibility: "Your riches (of corn and other grain, v. 4) are rotten; your garments ("the heirlooms of ages") are moth-eaten (see Isa. li. 8); your gold and your silver are rusted." Mayor quotes Strabo as speaking of a fuliginous vapour rising from the Dead Sea, by which even gold is rusted. But it may refer to the general destruction in which they will share. Then follows an intensely vivid picture. "Their rust shall be for a testimony against you, and shall eat your flesh as fire." That very rust shows that the wealth has been hoarded instead of being spent on the poor. "It will testify to your hardness. You have kept it back (v. 4) when it was crying out from your hands against you as the wages of an unpaid labourer. You have clutched it to yourselves, and you shall keep it now without the possibility of throwing it away, and it shall burn through your delicate skin like a fire." So, Lady Macbeth, long after the murder of Duncan, ever seeks in vain, in her dread sleep-walking, to wash out the stain of blood upon her hands: "Out, damnèd spot! out, I say!" "What, will these hands ne'er be clean?" You made, adds James, a fatal and terrible mistake. You did not reckon with the time. "Ye laid up your treasure in the last days." The tense is Aorist; he speaks from the standpoint of a judgment already accomplished (so cf. Isa. v. 25). All along, that wealth was the wealth of others—not your own. "Behold the hire of the labourers who mowed your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth out" (or, "which is kept in arrear crieth out from you who thus wrongfully retain it"); "and the cries of them that reap have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." Thus there is going up to the ear of the Eternal. There is the cry of the sin itself, and there is the cry of those who are wronged by it. (For sins "crying unto heaven," see Gen. iv. 10 and xviii. 20, and Deut. xv. 9 and xxiv. 15).

The same tone of irrevocable judgment, summing up follies which are past and now irretrievable in result, continues:—"Ye lived delicately on the earth and took your pleasure"—the last word, used again 1 Tim. v. 6, refers to luxurious and sensuous pleasure. Such luxury stands in contrast to the hard, simple, toiling lives of those defrauded by their selfishness. Did you perceive the goal of all this over-satiety? "You nourished, you pampered your hearts like fattened beasts in a day of slaughter about to fall." Is any irony in the Bible so terrible as this? "You fed yourselves . . . that you might be ripe for the killing."

The Khandhs of Orissa had, in former years, a curious custom of entrapping unsuspecting victims passing along the plains below, and then, after nourishing them royally for some time, killing them as a sacrifice to their earth-god. They were kinder to their victims than the rich of James' day were to themselves. The contrast is terrible between appearance and reality. Before men—delicacy, luxury, "faring sumptuously every day," the "Soul, take thine ease" of a degraded selfishness, the pomp of a tinselled splendour, squeezed from the withheld earnings of the hireling; the pleasure of a moment which drew its sweetness from the bleeding hearts of the poor. Before God—the wrong, the inhumanity of it, the resultant curse, the tears and blood and agony of doom.

THE COUNTERPART IN MODERN TIMES.

Do we see in such language a picture for ourselves? There is still the same excessive accumulation of wealth, hoarded or lavished for pleasure at the expense of the poor; the same laying up of treasure "in the last days," the same pampering self-regard, and life of wanton luxury. Is it self-nourishment for the coming day of slaughter? Ominous signs on every hand warn us that the present social conditions cannot continue long as they are. A prophet might read in our present state, which baffles the skill of statesmen and social reformers, the signs of a judgment already present upon national and individual selfishness. A body, when the heart has become hypertrophied, is in danger; yet this is the condition of modern civilisation, with its congested capitals, its teeming, degraded populations, its social ghettos, with their enfeebled "city types."

And these social conditions are the outcome of our Gentile unfaithfulness to the Christian ideals set before us. The book, "No. 5, John Street," presents a problem yet unsolved. The solution may cost us both tears and blood. The flaring gin-palace, the hideous slum, the filthy opium den, the streets flaunting with impudent vice, the crowded war dockyard, the unrest and jealousy of the nations, the religion which has lost its power to heal—these are all marks of a present judgment upon previous unbelief.

THE APOSTLE'S OWN FATE.

One further point completes James' indictment. "You condemned, you killed the just one"; you do it still; "he doth not resist you." These words are a prophecy, probably quite unconscious, of the martyrdom of the writer himself, for we can hardly doubt the substantial truth of the accounts given by Hegesippus and Eusebius. It is true they differ from that of Josephus. But the fact of the martyrdom is accepted by all alike, and Schürer says ("The Jewish People in the Time of Christ") that from a chronological point of view they are at least as worthy of consideration. They tell how the Jews brought James, "who through his exceeding righteousness was called 'Just,' to the battlement of the Temple and asked him to persuade the multitude not to go astray about Jesus." There is much in his character as an Israelite which quite explains their vague hope; but, when thus addressed, he answered: "Why do ye ask me concerning Jesus, the Son of Man? He is both seated in heaven on the right hand of power, and will come on the clouds of heaven." Whereupon they cried out, "Ho, ho! Even the Just has gone astray!" and "they fulfilled that which was written by Isaiah, 'Let us take away the just,' and cast him down, saying, 'Let us stone James the Just,' whilst he prayed, 'O Lord God my Father, I beseech Thee forgive them, for they know not what they do,' and so he bore his witness."

Origen and Josephus unite with the others in ascribing the siege of the city, which they state as having immediately followed, under Vespasian, to James' martyrdom. They crucified the Lord of Glory Himself, yet still mercy waited well-nigh forty years. They slew "the Lord's brother," and the long-delayed doom fell. When He had sent unto them a prophet, who, by their own confession, stood forth as their ideal of an Israelite, the son of a "just man," and himself "the just one," walking in all the precepts of their law, a Nazarite, and an ascetic, fulfilling all the ordinances of their religion, speaking the language of their own prophets, reflecting in his teaching the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount; and when they had slain him for being a faithful witness, the cup of iniquity was full. The terrible avenging armies of Rome burst in upon their fighting factions, shut up the doomed city, as Christ had forewarned in each successive detail (Luke xix. 43, 44), and laid it low. The dispersed nation fought and suffered with their city, and over the sickening maddened hunger, frantic resistance, infuriated passion, and frenzied despair, the dark war-clouds close, shrouding in awful blackness pictures of horror and terror such as the world has only seen once in its long history.

"These things are for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come." The features of the society which then perished present startling parallels with our own. And Christ asserted once for all his commandingness over all human history in that tremendous judgment. The spirit which rejected his words is as rife to-day as then. Summer lightnings over glowing seas at sunset foretell the oncoming midnight storm. Such signs are present already to those who have eyes to read them. "Behold, the Judge standeth at the door." The handwriting is upon the wall. "Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which" already "is not?" (Prov. xxiii. 5). Augustine owed his conversion, under God, to the words which he read in a garden, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof" (Rom. xiii. 14). The warning is for ourselves. One of the unwritten sayings of Christ runs thus: "In that wherein I find you, in that will I judge you."

Romish Casuistry.—Here is one of those unsavoury cases which from time to time furnished the Roman theologians with a fitting subject for their casuistry. In this instance a woman deliberately took a false oath with that reservatio mentalis so dear to the Jesuits. Upon the falsehood being discovered the case was submitted to the College at Rome, and it was decided that she had acted rightly, "as she had received from another source the forgiveness of her sin." The (Roman) Catholic Times defends this decision on the ground that "the woman was free from the sin because it had been forgiven in confession." Apart altogether from the spiritual danger of such teaching as this, there underlies it a grave peril to society and the State. It strikes at the root of all morality and safety. It is applicable, for instance, to the case of a murderer, who, according to the logic of this Papal decision, published on the authority of the Pope's domestic prelate, would be free from his sin if it had been "forgiven in confession."

Million New Pledges Crusade.

ARRANGEMENTS are now in a forward state for the series of demonstrations in London to be addressed by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry (New York), and in which the Fisk Jubilee Singers will also take their own peculiar and delightful part, singing for half an hour before the time stated in each case, as well as at intervals during the proceedings. We trust our readers will be much in prayer for the furtherance of this movement, and at the same time lose no opportunity for making local gatherings known among all classes of people.

Of the arrangements for the different meetings, full particulars will be announced locally and in our columns.

It is earnestly hoped that the demonstrations will be but the starting point of a determined effort to deal effectively with the drink sin. The crusade of the Church of God against this infamous traffic must go on with increasing vigour so long as the fires of breweries and distilleries are alight, or the doors of public-houses, swinging night and day (the Sabbath not excepted), pour out their myriads of our fellow-creatures, dragged to their destruction for time and eternity.

Many applications are being received for the reserved seat tickets, and friends are urged to secure the numbers they require without delay, in order to facilitate the making of the necessary arrangements.

Sunday Labour on Telephones.—A letter in the Melbourne Argus announces that no female employed at the Telephone Exchange will be subjected to penalties for not undertaking Sunday duties, nor shall they be employed except between the hours of 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. We think that in this country telephone business on the Lord's Day might, if due consideration were shown by subscribers, be either entirely suspended or reduced to purely nominal dimensions.

Distressed Governesses.—The Protestant Governesses' Fund and Home continue to be a boon to many who require a temporary home whilst awaiting engagements, or, from failing health, need seaside rest, but are unable to pay for it. Among those in declining years distress is often painfully severe. The loneliness of living in one room is a common experience. Many are penniless, in weak health, and without friends. Several last year were admitted free, and in order that others may not be refused admission when unable to pay for their maintenance, Miss Clementina Kingdon appeals for the practical sympathy of friends. Communications may be addressed to her at 22, Chatham Place, Brighton, Sussex.

Licence Reduction in Liverpool.

DEAR SIR,—You have more than once referred to the attitude of the Liverpool licensing bench in reducing the number of licenses. The policy adopted of late years has this year been continued, with the result that thirty-five licenses have been refused: sixteen on account of misconduct, and nineteen because they were not required. Add to these numbers, seven renewals not applied for, and we have a total reduction in the number of licensed houses of forty-two. The total diminution of licenses refused, &c., on like grounds, since 1890, in Liverpool has been 346. It was in that year that the Vigilance Committee was formed, and the licensing reform movement was systematically entered upon. The action of the Liverpool bench forms an example that might well be followed by other authorities. Not only has it had the effect of considerably reducing the number of public-houses, but it has also served to make existing holders careful in the conduct of their houses.

Are there not philanthropic men of influence in London and other towns who would form themselves into Vigilance Committees in their districts? The Liverpool Committee has done an incalculable amount of good. London licensing affairs need, I think, special looking into. Whilst standing opposite a large metropolitan public-house one night, waiting for the train, I entered into conversation with the policeman on the beat. He informed me that it was useless making reports to headquarters with reference to public-houses, as they were not attended to. Clearly, then, energetic action is needed to see that the police carry out their duty in the matter.

Why, too, should London houses be kept open until midnight, necessitating the employment of men and women in a vitiated atmosphere, and constituting a sphere of slavery? I would, further, earnestly suggest that in the programme of temperance reform should be included a measure making it an offence to employ females in connection with licensed premises. This has been brought about in one Continental country, as also in America, and it is due to the womanhood of our land that they should be protected.—Yours faithfully,

Liverpool. W. H. Priest.

Temperance Notes.

IN the "Jewish Encyclopædia" the following passage occurs under alcohol:—"Alcoholism prevails all over the world, and is probably increasing, more especially among the northern nations. But among the Jews it is almost an unknown affection. Statistics confirm the general opinion of Jewish sobriety."

In the annual report to the Joint Committee of the Lanark and Govan Lunacy Districts for Kirklands Asylum Dr. J. B. Skeen, medical superintendent, says:—"The causes of insanity in those admitted, as far as ascertained, show an increase in the number of cases due to alcoholism, either primarily or in conjunction with other causes."

The master of the Wharfedale Union, near Otley, Yorks, writing to a daily contemporary, says his workhouse may be justly termed teetotal, for there is not, nor has there been, one single drop of beer given in the house for thirty-seven years; while the cost for stimulants—brandy or whisky—works out at only about ½d. per day during his tenure of office.

A correspondent in The Times has emphasized the need for applying the ordinary law for the suppression of drunkenness; one letter deprecates the leniency of the Bench, while another points out the clubs as the great cause of drunkenness, which a third writer, a county J.P., would punish, after the first warning fine, with, in cases of "drunk and disorderly," two or three weeks' hard labour, and in cases of assault committed by drunkards with a much severer sentence.

The quantity of beer brewed in the United Kingdom during the first half of the current year, and retained for home consumption, was 14,481,545 barrels in England and Wales, 899,435 barrels in Scotland, and 1,522,873 barrels in Ireland. The exports were—From England and Wales, 197,836 barrels; from Scotland, 120,590 barrels; and from Ireland 6,681 barrels. As compared with the corresponding half-year, there was a decrease in production of 367,968 barrels, the falling off being in England, the figures for Scotland and Ireland showing an increase.

The Gospel in Gipsydom.

THE missions to hop-pickers, now progressing in the Hampshire gardens, are practically an invasion of gipsydom. About fifteen per cent. are home-dwellers, the Cockney being rigidly barred; for the rest, the plantations teem with gipsies, tramps, and nondescripts of the hedgerow.

Though the bulk of the "hoppers," however, are of nomadic disposition, the true Romany blood is the boast of the few. The gipsy leaves an ineffaceable impression. The flaunting air, the visionary gleam of the eyes, the innate fearlessness evinced by the forbidding look, the shrewd mind and shuffling style, the tawny skin, "the vellum of the pedigree they claim," the eccentricity and scrappy brogue—these are features that mark the true Bohemian.

The ignorance which prevails among these people is remarkable. In visiting a small encampment, of twenty-seven persons, I found not one could read a word! "We be no scholards, my genelmen," said an old man of eighty years. Yet the gipsy is an admirable listener. When "buttonholed" he invariably gives a ready ear to the friendly word, and is grateful for the interest shown in his welfare.

So far we have experienced much blessing in this mission, which is conducted by Miss Chinn, and was founded by her esteemed father nearly forty years ago. There are five tents pitched within a radius of about eighteen miles, every centre having, at least, two trained evangelists in charge. These canvas churches are crowded night by night with eager, attentive listeners, who fully appreciate and seem to drink in the truths proclaimed. By speech, picture, and song, we endeavour to arrest, seeking to lead them to the sinner's Friend.

The hop-harvest is prolific—the largest output for the past twenty years. The weather is splendid, facilitating our movements, and furthering our plans. Sunny mornings have not only made garden visitation possible, but enjoyable, while the calm, dry evenings afford opportunities for camp-talks and services under the star-lit sky.

Again and again we have visited the gipsies "at home," after the toil and heat of the day. Some sleep in caravans, some in huts, some in small fragile tents, many of which unhappily are far from clean. We have in mind a family of eight persons sleeping in a sort of wigwam twelve feet in circumference. The earth is strewn with straw upon which they lie, their heads converged towards the centre, their bodies stretched out at angles like the spokes of a wheel. Nothing covers them but sackcloth and the family shawl. If the weather be rough, the hurricane that sweeps the meadow or hedgerow will, in all probability, dismantle the unpretentious shelter, its many parts becoming sport for the winds.

The Gospel is having its effect upon many; we have seen tears flow unchecked down the gipsy's cheeks as, in the night stillness, we have read or narrated the heart-subduing story of the Cross.

The Mormons are parading the gardens, giving away attractive booklets to propagate their creed. These persons, with a full basket, are going the round scattering error and vice on all sides. Our campaign might well be extended and prolonged if sustained according to its opportunities for soul winning.

The King's Declaration.—A leaflet deserving of a wide circulation has been published by Mr. Walter Walsh, under the title, "The King's Mutilated Declaration." (To be had free, Imperial Protestant Federation, 3, Palmer Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.) It is pointed out that the Bill "passed through the House of Lords, but it was found impossible, owing to the strong opposition which existed, to pass it through the House of Commons this Session. But we must not, on that account, go to sleep, assuming that all danger has passed. On the contrary there is more need than ever to be wakeful and energetic in preserving intact the King's Protestant Declaration, as it still exists by law, since next Session will surely see a fresh attempt to remove this safeguard from our Protestant Constitution."

The Homes of Hope.

THE useful institutions in Regent Square, W.C., known of the "Homes of Hope," have been established for over forty years, during which time upwards of five thousand young girls and young women have been afforded that assistance which their helpless and painful condition urgently called for.

Among recent cases helped is that of D— L—, a young woman of very attractive appearance and manners (whose parents have long since been dead), who was engaged as nursemaid to children in a family in the West of England. Her mistress was much attached to her, on account of her fondness for the children, and the conscientious way in which she fulfilled her duties. She was, however, led astray by one who proved to be already married, and who had also given way to habits of drunkenness. The young woman was taken to the Homes overwhelmed with remorse. She evinced much gratitude for the care that was here taken of her, and did not fail to show marked signs of contrition for her unhappy departure from virtue. Her letters denote great anxiety to do well in future, and her mistress, who subsequently took her back into her service, expresses satisfaction with the manner of life she is living. Writing to the matron, the young woman says:—

I am getting on nicely, and also doing all I can to please my kind mistress, in whom I am most thankful to have a kind friend. I have thanked God for having given me such a friend in my trouble.

Another young woman who was deceived and deserted, but who was received, nursed, and helped into a situation, wrote:

I often think of you and the Home, and wonder how many poor young women have to spend their Christmas away from the world and their friends, although I know how kindly they are treated. I cannot say how sorry I feel for them. It is a blessing that there is such a place of refuge, and the more I think of it the more I thank God that I was led to such a Home.

These cases are, of course, illustrative of the many that come under the care of Mr. W. J. Hornibrook, the secretary, and his band of devoted workers. The records are full of instances showing how forlorn and homeless girls have found sheltering care.

The Homes are all conducted on Evangelical principles, and distinctively religious teaching is given. Morning and evening the matrons read from the Scriptures, and helpful meetings are held on the Lord's Day, and on Wednesday evenings.

One of the most pleasing features of the work is the marked difference which is observed in the behaviour of the inmates after they have been in the Homes for some length of time. This is doubtless attributable to the thorough training, the kindly treatment, and, above all, to the earnest efforts which are put forth to bring home to the inmates the truths of the Gospel. Mr. Hornibrook deserves hearty encouragement in his labours.

Manchester Strangers' Home.

THE foundation twenty years ago, through the influence of Bishop Fraser, of the Manchester (London Road) Strangers' Lodging House (41, Downing Street; hon. treasurer, Miss J. E. Wright), has proved the need of something like a very cheap hotel or temporary boarding-house for respectable women and girls, strangers in the city. The 843 cases dealt with in twelve months hailed from 150 different towns and countries. The balance-sheet shows that of the £211 required £92 was contributed by the inmates.

The aim in view is preventive work, succeeding the guardianship of childhood, when the aspirations of young people lead them, often through necessities of their homes, to seek city work for themselves. The Home meets a need created by our times; young women are increasingly compelled, by the want of country employment, to move into our towns. The fame of Manchester for its many industries acts upon the fancy, and so young people rush in, arriving at the railway stations, chiefly from the South, unprotected and ignorant of immediate perils.

Glasgow Bible Institute.

AT the public inaugural meeting of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, on Thursday, 12th inst., the large hall was filled with students and visitors. Lord OVERTOUN, who occupied the chair, spoke of the good work done in past years, and said he found it very difficult to believe that they were now commencing the eleventh session, as it seemed but the other day since the late Mr. D. L. Moody, at one of the annual meetings of the United Evangelistic Association, suggested the scheme. Mr. JOHN ANDERSON mentioned that seventy-five students, male and female, had been enrolled for the session now beginning, and that within a few weeks he hoped the number would be increased. He considered it a matter for gratification that the misgivings entertained at the commencement of the work, as to whether an outlet could be found for the students, had been dissipated, alluding specially to the fact that at the close of the last session an opening had been put within the reach of every student finishing his course.

Rev. DAVID WATSON, as representing the Church of Scotland, gave an interesting address on "Those things which are most surely believed among us" (Luke i. 1), enumerating three points—(1) Christ as a Teacher, (2) Christ as the Ideal Man, and (3) Christ as the Saviour of men. His words on each of these points were listened to with rapt attention and hearty acceptation.

Rev. G. L. CARSTAIRS followed, and in his address counselled the students to find opportunity to meet in each other's rooms at times to wait in prayer upon the Great Teacher. His words on the need of private devotion were spoken in an exceedingly kind and feeling way. Going back in thought on his own student days, he told of prayer meetings held by little groups of students that had left their mark on his memory and life.

Mr. W. M. OATTS, having been called upon to speak, recounted in an interesting manner incidents connected with his recent round-the-world tour. He had met with former students of the Institute in widely different parts of the world—in Burmah, Tasmania, Canada—and all, he was glad to say, were doing good work, though some of the fields, especially in the north-west of Canada, are very trying.

Howard Street Mission, S.W.

FOR the past thirty-two years the Howard Street Mission, Wandsworth Road, S.W., has gone steadily forward in its work of proclaiming the Gospel to the poor.

Since the present superintendent, Mr. John Soames, initiated the work, it has developed in many directions. Large numbers of people have heard with gladness the story of redeeming love. The needs of those who suffer "behind the scenes" in the depths of slumdom are not forgotten. The hungry are fed, the sick visited, and the ragged clothed.

During the past six months some powerful evangelistic meetings have been held, large crowds staying to listen to the truths of the Gospel, so faithfully preached by an earnest band of missioners. Many cases of blessing are recorded, a particularly interesting one being that of a man who was at one time a noted Battersea pugilist. Since giving his heart to God, this brother has testified with boldness to the Lord's goodness.

In the Gospel meetings which are held in the hall blessing has also come, and the Sunday and Ragged Schools are prospering. Importance is attached to the duty of shielding the young from the snares and temptations entailed by indulgence in strong drink; by lantern lectures, and other means of instruction, the temperance cause is advanced, and a variety of testimony shows that the strenuous efforts made to combat the drink traffic have fruitful results. During the winter months, too, an additional number of philanthropic agencies are set to work in order to relieve the suffering poor, and it is to be hoped that the mission will receive needed encouragement.

God will never Leave the Believer until He has accomplished what He has promised concerning him; and God will never leave the sinner until He has accomplished what He has threatened concerning him.—Romaine.

"Regions Beyond" M.U.

FOR some time past the question of finance has been pressing upon the Trustees and Directors, and it has now been decided to close Cliff College, near Curbar, during the winter months, and to concentrate the students and tutors at Harley House, Bow. Rev. F. B. Meyer, as one of the Directors, has for some time counselled this step, and would have felt compelled to withdraw from the position of responsibility he occupied, had it not been taken. There was no breach of Christian love; only a difference of judgment; and now the matter is settled.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., has resigned his position as Principal of Cliff College, which he has held for many years, with the greatest benefit to the students, and with the full confidence of the Directors. All over the world are men who attribute the first awakening and culture of their intellectual powers for the service of God to his judicious and able direction. He is removing to Cambridge (12, Harvey Road) at the end of September, and is now open to conduct missions or services in any part of the United Kingdom.

Writing on his behalf, Mr. Meyer says: "It was partly at my instigation that he gave up his mission work, and became associated with these institutions, and it seems only fitting now that I should do what I could to put him in touch with work as a missioner, for which he is well qualified."

We earnestly hope that these useful institutions will be speedily relieved of their pecuniary embarrassment, and that friends of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union will show their interest in a practical manner. The present policy of retrenchment is a wise one, under the circumstances, but there is ample scope for the educating and fitting of young men and women for the foreign field, in proportion as the necessary funds are supplied.

The Lord's Day on Railways.

THE memorials to railway directors by the Shareholders' Union for Defence of the Sabbath are gathering in influence and volume. That presented at the London and North Western meeting last month bore the signatures of 1,957 proprietors, whose holdings are believed to be about £3,400,000. The chairman (Lord Stalbridge) assured the deputation that not a waggon would pass over the lines if it could be avoided, and urged the memorialists to continue their efforts with other companies.

Several years ago, Mr. Harry Curtis Nisbet declared at the Midland meeting that the traffic manager who found a way for putting the Sunday goods traffic into the week days would immortalize his name; and the hope is indulged that this honour may fall to the North-Western Company. Much prayer, watchfulness, and effort will, however, still be necessary before the battle is won; and the secretary (Mr. J. F. Wilson, 7, King's Road, St. Leonards) will be glad to hear from shareholders in any company who are willing to take any part in the presentation or support of memorials to the directors. Already over 8,400 shareholders are in correspondence with the Union.

A Word for the Fish-Curing Girls.—A strong appeal is being made by Canon Gore on behalf of the thousands of Scotch girls employed in the English fish-curing industry. These young women, to the number of 20,000, leave their homes in the Highlands to "follow the fish" as they coast round the island, with a view of earning a scanty and precarious living. Launched into trying and unfamiliar surroundings, they work on piers and "denes" in the open, exposed to cold and wet, and are driven to lodge six in a room and three in a bed in the already overcrowded waterside streets. Their condition is one of great peril and temptation, and they stand in need of friendly and timely help. The migration of the fish is now driving them farther and farther south in search of employment, and there is pressing need for more adequate friendly oversight, and better religious opportunities. Something is being done for them already, but much more is necessary to meet the case.

From the Karawanken Mountains—III.

A FEW stations from Villach, in the Ossiacher valley, the traveller en route for Vienna, will notice a pretty white spire standing out from the green background of a fine forest, and to its left and right some handsome buildings, which cannot fail to arouse his curiosity. "What place is that, sir?" he will ask his neighbour. If the man happens to be a Karinthian Protestant, he will tell him that this is the Evangelical part of Waiern, and that the excellent pastor up there is carrying on a beautiful work for the Lord.

On the morrow of the Conference at Schloss Treffen, we stood with Pastor Schwarz on the little balcony of his parsonage, looking with pleasure over the well-wooded, fruitful hill-land. Our host had been telling us a few facts of his life. He was born at Moelk, on the Danube, on February 21, 1845. His father, a descendant of the German mountaineers, who in remote years had immigrated from Saxony into North Hungary, was the only Evangelical man for miles around.

The law, demanding that his four daughters should be taught in the religion of their mother, who was a Catholic, permitted a Protestant training to his three sons. Yet, forced by circumstances, he was obliged to send the boys to the same schools as the girls, and it was not until after his removal to Vienna that he was able to place them under the influence of Evangelical teaching, and even then his efforts were only partially successful.

What a joy it must have been to the struggling father to see two of his sons turning their hearts to the Lord and his work. The eldest, Ludwig, who is senior pastor at Gall Neukirchen (Upper Austria), became the originator of several benevolent establishments, such as a deaconesses' home, a hospital, an orphanage, an asylum, &c.

The youngest son, Ernest Schwarz, responded in 1871 to a pressing call to Waiern, where, since 1853, a church had existed. His present congregation consists of 660 souls, who are scattered over

FORTY-NINE DIFFERENT PARISHES.

Some of the children attending school, have to walk one or two hours, which in winter time makes it difficult for them to be regular.

"When I came here," said the pastor, "the Lord seemed to whisper to me: 'This is the spot where I will bless thee.' He has done so. The woodland above the church is church property; but this," and he pointed to a farmhouse in front of us, surrounded by a splendid piece of land, "belongs to our orphans."

"How were you led to build the orphanage?" we asked.

"I always had a very tender heart for the multitude of poor, miserable, neglected children in our country; but it was after the burial of an old servant, who had left three children to the care of nobody, that I took the first decided step in sending out appeals in all directions. At first it seemed hopeless; but I kept on pleading with Him who had given me the desire for the work, and my heart was strengthened by a sympathetic letter from an American brother, Dr. A. W. Clark, of Prague, who, as missionary of the American Board, promised for three years the support of a godly husband and wife, willing to take charge of a group of orphans.

To commemorate the centenary of the Edict of Tolerance, given by Austria's enlightened ruler, Joseph II., to the Protestants of his empire, Pastor Schwarz inaugurated on October 31, 1881, an orphanage. The children were put up partly in the school-house and partly in the parsonage until a separate building became an imperative necessity. The need was made known, and among those responding to the appeal, were many kind friends from Germany and Switzerland. The building, begun in 1887, was opened in November, 1888. It accommodates from seventy to eighty children. Twice as many would come if space and means permitted their admission.

Since then Pastor Schwarz was able to open in 1892 a Christian Home for College Students, at Klagenfurt; and in 1894 a Hospital for Protestants at Waiern. The same building contains pleasant rooms for those who need to come apart and rest awhile. Weary workers and victims of the rush of our city life, find a pleasant change in the quiet of that hilly spot.

Pastor Schwarz records some marvellous experiences in connection with the erection of the various establishments, which in some instances

REMINDED US OF GEORGE MULLER.

The times of greatest anxiety were also those of the sweetest fellowship with God.

Among the friends of the orphanage is an afflicted woman who has no forearms, but who uses her hands in making shawls for the orphans. The little folks at Basel and in other parts of the country send in many love-gifts. One little girl abstained for a whole year from sugar in her coffee that she might be able to give a dress to a poor orphan child.

An appalling percentage of the children being born out of wedlock, the number of little ones uncared for weighs heavily upon Pastor Schwarz's heart. He thinks another orphan home indispensable; and, equally necessary, a Protestant College at Klagenfurt, where sound Evangelical teaching could be imparted to the youth of the country. This seems a propitious time for such a step, especially as the "Los von Rom" movement seems to be increasing in vigour, if only the means were forthcoming. Mrs. Schwarz fully enters into her husband's work, and holds him up in prayer and practical assistance. They have three sons and three daughters. "And what about the pastor's four sisters?" someone might ask. They all have joined the Protestant Church. The eldest of them was seventy years of age when she took the step.

Women's Protestant Union All Day of Prayer.—Thursday, September 26, will be observed as an "All Day of Prayer" by the Women's Protestant Union, meetings being held in Exeter Hall at 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 7 p.m. The secretary (Mr. G. W. Lonsdale Barraclough, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.), will forward a detailed programme on receipt of stamped addressed envelope. All interested in the Protestant cause are earnestly invited to join in the supplications of God's people, in view of a number of questions at present before the public.

"Walk, Not. . ."

By Pastor F. E. MARSH, Sunderland.

THE negatives of the New Testament are very positive in their utterance. They need no "Old Mortality" to chisel out their meaning, or to make their characters legible. They stand out in the sky-line of Holy Writ with unmistakable clearness. There are seven places where the words "Walk not" are found in Scripture. In them we shall discover some of the gold of practical truth—precious metal which the heavenly Goldsmith may make into ornaments of grace.

I. Grace's Effect.

"Walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (Rom. viii. 4). As the Revised Version brings out, this separation from the flesh on the one hand, and the separation to the Spirit on the other, is the consequence of being saved, and not a condition of salvation. The "flesh" is a term which describes the natural man in his sinful and selfish estate (Rom. viii. 5-9). The flesh in its working is always downward in its tendency (Gal. v. 19-21), although sometimes it puts on a religious garb (Phil. iii. 4-7), to hide its deformity (Rom. vii. 18). The grace of God lifts the believer in Christ out of the realm of the flesh, and the evidence of its working is demonstrated by not moving in the old sphere (Eph. ii. 2-6).

II. Faith's Antithesis.

"We walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Cor. v. 7). The word antithesis implies the opposite of anything. The following instances of antithesis will illustrate. "When our vices leave us, we flatter ourselves we leave them." "The prodigal robs his heir, the miser robs himself." "Excess of ceremony shows want of breeding." "Liberty with laws, and government without oppression." Faith bases all its actions upon the Word of God, and looks above the hills to the Lord (Psa. cxxi. 1 marg., 2). Sight makes environment everything, and looks at men and cities like the ten spies (Num. xiii. 31-33); but faith is like Caleb and Joshua—it counts upon God's ability to overcome difficulties (Num. xiii. 30). Sight looks at the winds and waves, as Peter did, and finds itself sinking (Matt. xiv. 30); but faith goes boldly forward at the Lord's command, although the Red Sea and Jordan are in the line of advance (Ex. xiv. 22; Jos. iii. 15).

III. Christian Guilelessness.

"Not walking in craftiness" (2 Cor. iv. 2). The word "craftiness" is rendered "subtilty" in 2 Cor. xi. 3 and "cunning craftiness" in Eph. iv. 14. Craftiness looks out for number one, like Judas (John xii. 6); believes in securing the best, like Jacob (Gen. xxvii. 36); sacrifices principles to gain its own ends, like Balaam (2 Pet. ii. 15); juggles with its conscience, like Ananias (Acts v. 2); passes itself off for what it is not, like the spies employed by the priests (Luke xx. 20); and baits the hook of disobedience with the bait of plausibility, like Satan did for Eve (2 Cor. xi. 3). But the Christian walking with the Lord avoids this subtilty, and experiences the deliverances of the Lord, who takes the "wise in their craftiness" (1 Cor. iii. 19).

IV. The Preacher's Testimony.

"I saw they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the Gospel" (Gal. ii. 14). Paul withstood Peter with his faithful testimony, when he found the latter wanted to entangle the believers in the meshes of the law. The Lord had given deliverance from the "yoke of bondage," and Peter wanted to put this collar on again. A legal spirit is a lazy spirit, for all its movements are prompted by the lash of duty; but love is a lively spirit, for the fuel of a holy passion feeds the fire of its being. The stern rule of legality never brought anyone to the goal of blessing; but the cross of Christ's atonement lifts to the highest heaven. The bell of legalism only rings out the doom of the sinner; but the bells of the Gospel tell out

Love's deliverance of the sinner. The law only reveals the misery of the unsaved, but the Gospel unfolds the mercy of God (comp. Deut. xxi. 18-21 with Luke xv. 20, &c.). Therefore, any preacher of the Gospel, who blows hot and cold, sometimes preaching Gospel and at other times Law, deserves to be rebuked, for he does not walk according to the uprightness of God's grace.

V. LOVE'S DEPENDENCE.

"Walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind" (Eph. iv. 17). The context shows that the apostle had been urging the saints to recognize their oneness with Christ, and their consequent oneness with each other which manifests itself in practical love; hence, three times in the chapter we have the words "in love" (verses 2, 15, 16). The believer's love has God for its source (1 John iv. 7, 8), Christ's love as its measure (Eph. v. 2), the Holy Spirit as its might (Col. i. 8), obedience as its credentials (1 John v. 2), labour as its outcome (1 Thess. i. 3), disinterestedness as its character (Rom. xii. 9), and believers as its object (1 John iii. 14). When these are known in reality, there cannot be emptiness in the life, as suggested by the sentence—"vanity of their mind." To walk in the vanity of the mind means to have the big head of pride, the weak knees of unbelief, the dim sight of doubt, the ague of fear, the uncertain gait of compromise, and the fever of unholy temper.

VI. WISDOM'S CAREFULNESS.

"Walk circumspectly, not as fools" (Eph. v. 15). The word circumspectly is thought by some to mean to go to the summit. Its meaning undoubtedly is, to be exact, accurate, and thorough. The same word is rendered "diligently," when Herod instructed the wise men how they were to search for the infant Christ (Matt. ii. 8), and "perfect," when Luke says he had "perfect understanding," or, as the Revised Version has it, "Traced the course of all things accurately" (Luke i. 3). This is the course wisdom ever traverses. It does not act in a slipshod manner, nor does it do things half-heartedly. Folly is the opposite to this. Wisdom is careful; folly is careless. Wisdom is thoughtful; folly is inconsiderate. Wisdom diagnoses a case; folly takes things for granted. Wisdom keeps a good lookout; folly makes shipwreck of itself by its rashness. Wisdom sees the evil and avoids it; folly says there is no evil, and walks into it.

VII. FIDELITY'S ACTION.

"Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us" (2 Thess. iii. 6). There are times when the child of God has to act in a seemingly harsh manner, and when he lays himself open to the charge of being uncharitable; but there should be no hesitation nor equivocation when the Lord's word is disobeyed, and when his honour is in question. Suppose a brother disobeys a definite command of the Lord, or walks in worldly company, or compromises the principles of the Gospel, or proclaims error, or is contumacious, or factious, or is immoral, there can be no question as to what our course should be, for the Lord says, we are not to be yoked with unbelievers (2 Cor. vi. 14), not to give heed to "another gospel" (Gal. i. 6-9), not to tolerate error (1 Tim. i. 3, 4), not to resist the properly constituted authorities of the Church (Heb. xiii. 17), not to allow division (1 Cor. xi. 18, 19), and not to have fellowship with any unclean person" (1 Cor. v. 1).

The Housing of the Labourer.—The King has given a practical illustration of the interest he has always evinced in the housing question by ordering the erection of a number of excellent cottages upon the Royal estate at Windsor at a rental of 2s. 6d. per week, as against 6s. now being paid for very indifferent accommodation.

Rhenish Missionary Society.

SOME particulars from the annual report of the Rhenish Missionary Society may interest English readers:—

It has been a year of marked progress, but also of exceptional difficulty and disadvantage, not only on account of the war in South Africa and the troubles in China, but through the loss, by death, of seven brethren and three sisters (most of whom were in the vigour of youth), and through the grave illness of four others, who, it is feared, will not be able to return to the field.

In CAPE COLONY the existence of martial law has involved various hindrances to the work, which is further impeded by the bitterness of feeling between the natives and a section of the whites.

In the German Protectorate of SOUTH WEST AFRICA, work has been commenced in the native reserve allotted to the Society, and efforts are being made to obtain further concessions on behalf of the natives. Rinderpest, drought, and locusts are the calamities which the country has grievously suffered from, and there is every apprehension of a fresh famine; but in spite of these outward troubles there have been manifestations of rich blessing. Among the Hereros, especially, the movement towards Christianity, which began in the previous year, has continued to extend.

DR. SCHREIBER.

In the Ovambo country, distressing experience has been encountered as to

THE DANGER OF THE CLIMATE.

Of the five missionaries stationed there, two had to return invalided, and two others in rapid succession succumbed to malarial fever, leaving one in the field. The intrusion of Roman Catholic priests from the Portuguese territory adds to the difficulties of the situation, while the hostility of the surrounding tribes may culminate in an attack, whenever the death should occur of the principal chief, who is well disposed towards the mission.

Turning to SUMATRA, the progress in the Toba country (recently described) is the most important movement. The establishment in that district of a leper asylum has become a necessity, owing to the barbarous treatment these afflicted creatures received at the hands of the natives. The initial expenses were borne by a generous Dutchman, and the refuge is largely supported by Scotch contributions, while a grant in aid is confidently expected from the Dutch Government.

(1) The establishment of an Industrial School by the Toba Lake; (2) the commencement of a Medical Mission at Pea Radja (Silindung), where a commodious hospital is now being built. A capital suggestion of Dr. Schreiber's on the occasion of his last visit of inspection has been acted upon in the formation of a Missionary Association among the native Christians, with most happy results. By means of this "Band of Watchers," interest in missionary work has been considerably stimulated, and good pioneer work has been done in the neighbouring villages; while its existence is evidence of healthy Christian life, and will materially assist in the solution of the long-contemplated problem of sending the Gospel to the group of islands south of Nias, for which the means have already been provided. The edition of the New Testament, which appeared in 1885, and consisted of 9,000 copies, is exhausted—a fact which proves how genuine is the demand for the Scriptures, for these Testaments were not given away, but sold.

On the island of Nias the work is full of hope just now, especially in the south-west part of the island, among the notorious Irauny Huna tribe, where hundreds have broken with their superstitions, and where it is quite refreshing to witness the joy these people have found in the Gospel. Means will have to be obtained to establish a station among this tribe, for the movement is too important to be left in charge of a native assistant.

Death and illness have sadly hindered the work in New Guinea, while in China it has been brought to a temporary standstill. But the lives of the brethren in China have been preserved, and their property was found but slightly damaged.

On the whole, the record gives abundant cause for praise and thanksgiving.

B. HITJER.

The Volunteers of America.

THE leader of the Volunteers of America, General Ballington Booth, Mrs. Booth, and Colonel Watkins-Lindsay recently addressed, respectively, three large audiences at the Auditorium in Asbury Park, New Jersey. In the afternoon, Colonel Watkins-Lindsay spoke upon the extensions of the Volunteer Tenement Work projected for the coming fall and winter. The force of officers set apart for this special effort is to be increased, and it is intended to open a home, which shall not be merely a day nursery for the children of poor mothers, but a place where they can be taken care of for two or three weeks at a time, when the mothers may be sick in bed either in their homes or in the hospital.

In the evening, Mrs. Booth spoke about her Prison League, making the announcement that she was in touch, by correspondence, with no fewer than 20,000 out of the 84,000 prisoners in the State prisons of this country. A number of warders had testified to the excellent results of her work, one of them saying that the discipline of the prison where he was had improved by 50 per cent. since the Volunteer League had been established in it. Mrs. Booth also directed attention to the number of Volunteer "field" officers who had been appointed "parole officers" by the States of Illinois and Massachusetts, thus showing the confidence reposed not only in the representatives of the organization within the walls, but in its regular officers outside.

ROGER MARTIN.

Bull-Fights in Madagascar.—We learn by the last mail that the French have introduced this horrible "amusement" at Antananarivo. They sent to Spain and hired a matador, and the Malagasy now witness these degrading spectacles every Lord's day afternoon on the Imahamosina Plain (the Champ-de-Mars of Antananarivo). They were forbidden by a heathen queen some sixty years ago, yet the representatives of an enlightened and so-called Christian Government re-introduce them!

An Unrenewed Heart.—If you have any known sin which you do not hate, and had not rather leave it than keep it; and do not pray, and strive, and watch against it, as far as you know and observe it, but rather excuse it, plead for it, desire it, and are loth to part with it, so that your will is perpetually more for it than against it—it is the sign of an impenitent and unrenewed heart.—Baxter.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 22. 1 Corinthians ii.

"IN weakness, and fear, and much trembling," the Apostle said, but it is by no means certain that the Corinthians felt it so; for there is tremendous force in the man who loses himself in his message, who has but one aim, to glorify the Saviour, and who seeks no other credentials than the demonstration of the Holy Spirit.

The hidden secret of God had been revealed to the Apostle; he saw what the Eternal Mind had conceived, and what the Almighty Workman had been executing through the slow-moving centuries. He realized that Christ was the consummation of all the ages, the key to all perplexity, the answer to every question, to know and love, to follow and obey whom, was the new hope for the world. The heart of the wisest of the sons of men could not have anticipated such an answer as this, which God spoke out of his heart. The ear of man could not have detected such a majestic or lowly footfall. The eye of man had never thought of beholding such an appearance. Christ, only Christ, filled the Apostle's soul, and He, not as teacher or miracle-worker, so much as Saviour, the Man of the Cross, the Redeemer of men by his own blood.

This glorious truth had been revealed to the Apostle, by the Spirit who searches the deep things of God; but he felt the difficulty of conveying it to those who were not spiritual, in whom there was no spiritual affinity to these great and glorious realities. First, we must receive, not the spirit of this world, but the Spirit which is of God; and secondly, we must be humble, and spiritual, delivered alike from the spurious wisdom of the mere intellect, and from pride of heart. Only through the door of childlikeness can we enter God's Paradise, where the second Man, the Lord from Heaven, awaits us.

MONDAY, September 23. 1 Corinthians iii.

The carnal man may be in Christ, but Christ is in him to a very limited extent. He is taken up with sectarian notions, does not distinguish between the little church to which he happens to belong and the great Church of Christ; and is perpetually thinking and talking of the human instrument, to the neglect of that God, who achieves his purpose in the world through men. God preserve us from a life of carnal Christianity, which is so destitute of the Spirit of God, that it can have no knowledge of his deep things; and let the Pauls and Apolloses among us remember that they are nothing, just human instruments, and that all the success and increase of the Divine work in the church or the world are due to the Divine Worker! The Church is God's husbandry, God's building.

But, mark how carefully the Apostle balances this thought! The Christian worker is not thereby robbed of all responsibility. He must take heed how he builds. He cannot alter the foundation, which is Christ, but he may build into the fabric of the church, the wood, hay, and stubble of his own notions, rather than the gold, silver, and precious stones of God-revealed truth. And on the choice he makes will depend his ultimate position in the judgment of eternity. He may be saved, so far as his own soul is concerned, though his life-work will be ruined, and his reward forfeited.

Let ordinary Christian folk look beyond the instrument to the Divine Workman, not glorying or boasting in this or the other, but believing that God is beyond all men and things, all circumstances and events, achieving his eternal purpose for each of an infinite variety of servants.

TUESDAY, September 24. 1 Corinthians iv.

The Apostle carries his cause from the courts of earthly judgment to the Divine bar. He says, in effect, that there are four bars before which the soul must stand. There is the large outer court of human judgment. Within that is the judgment of the Church, or fellow-believers—"of you." Within that, again, is the judgment of a man's own conscience. But, above all of them, intenser and more inward, more searching and authoritative, is the judgment of Christ—"He that judgeth me is the Lord."

We may well lay to heart the Divinely inspired advice, to judge nothing before the time, till the Lord comes to reveal the secret of men's hearts. We are so apt to form wrong and uncharitable opinions, because we do not take into consideration the motives, the questions of heredity, temperament, and environment with which each man has to contend. Suspend your judgment as to that offending brother; you may know nothing of the nature he has inherited, and the temptations to which he was exposed; and do not think your verdict is final on the glory or splendour of any life, which has cast its radiance over the world, until you know that what seems so beautiful was the expression of a really beautiful soul, actuated by only noble motives. Look to yourself! Judge yourself as harshly as you please, and others as leniently. Compare the best things in others with the worst in yourself; not, as is so commonly the case, your best with their worst. Be content, like the Apostle, to bear all privation and suffering with a light heart, if thereby the great world of men is being helped and saved.

WEDNESDAY, September 25. 1 Corinthians v.

We are all tempted at times to be pessimistic in our outlook. But amid countless voices of despair, and the wailings of the vast multitudes of the oppressed, in face of the apathy of the Church, the indifference of the world, we should cherish an indomitable hope, as we contrast the state of things to-day with what they were when the Apostle penned this chapter. Such a state of things could not be found in any modern Church, however recently brought out of heathenism.

Have we, so far as we know, cleansed out the leaven from heart and life with the care exercised by Jews on the approach of the Passover? I am told that when every crevice and crack has been searched, every drawer and cupboard cleansed, and every possible hiding-place ransacked, the Jewish householder then recites a sentence, saying that if in spite of all his search one grain of leaven has escaped, it shall henceforth be reckoned as common dust. Well will it be to reckon ourselves from henceforth to be dead indeed unto sin. One great step in this direction—the way of a holy life—will ever be in the care with which we choose our friends and associates. It would be well to expose new companions to a kind of quarantine, to be quite sure that they will not bring the plague with them if we admit them to our home and heart.

THURSDAY, September 26. 1 Corinthians vi.

We are not to go to law, if merely our own wrongs are to be adjusted; but when a wrong has been done to another, or when the commission of wrong to ourselves will, if winked at by us, produce injury to the character of the wrong-doer, or set him free to perpetrate wrongs on others, we must certainly see to it, for the sake of society, that he shall feel the full stress of the law. All this, however, is widely different from invoking the law to execute our vengeance on others.

Corinth was the Paris of its time. One would encounter there the forms of sin and licence which still disgrace great Eastern cities, as Constantinople and Cairo. But as a white lily will lie outspread on the waters of a polluted pond, from the mud of which it seems to originate, so, already, there were many natives of Corinth who had been washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of Jesus, and by the Spirit of God.

What a glorious argument for purity is presented in the latter half of the chapter. The Apostle does not only dwell on the evils of impurity, that it tends to dominate the soul, that it is out of harmony with the prospect of resurrection, that it degrades the body infinitely; but he sets before the heart and mind a vision of the exceeding beauty of purity, that it is the way to fellowship with Jesus, and ennobles the body to be the shrine of the Holy Spirit. Let us seek this great gift. Let us ask for perfect deliverance from the bonds of corruption, that we may be our best and truest selves. The impure man is cramped and limited indeed; only as we are pure, are we free; only as we are free in Christ, and by the Holy Ghost, can we realize God's ideal.

FRIDAY, September 27. 1 Corinthians vii.

We must remember, as we read this chapter, that in some points it is not a final utterance. It was a time of great distress. The Roman world was greatly agitated. Wars and rumours of wars were rife; famine, pestilence, and dread were abroad; men's hearts were failing for fear of the things that were coming; the fall of Jerusalem was at hand. "The time was short." And the Apostle's advice was dictated by the exigencies of the age. "Take care," he cried; "don't root yourselves too deeply in the existing state of things. Remember that the pilgrim attitude is the most becoming and the safest."

It is not difficult to determine what is temporary and what eternal; what is to be regarded as transient, and what as permanent. Among the permanent things, is the affirmation that the conversion to Christianity of a husband or wife does not dissolve the marriage-tie. And what follows is of eternal significance, that we should, unless where conscience forbids, so far as possible, remain in the condition in which we were when we were called of God. On the whole, remain in association with the same religious community, and follow the same trade. Christ did not come to unsettle existing relationships, but to make new creatures.

I think that the closing paragraph deals with a man's relations to his betrothed. They were, of course, free to marry; but perhaps, under the existing circumstances, it was as well for them to remain single. This seems to me to give a better significance, than the suggestion of the R.V. (36).

SATURDAY, September 28. 1 Corinthians viii.

Already the music of the thirteenth chapter is in the Apostle's heart. The light of heavenly love is shining on his soul. As we see the contrast between knowledge that puffs up the man who knows, and love that seeks the welfare and up-building of another; as we see that knowledge must always disappoint, because it is at the best partial, while love lays the whole soul open to God's knowledge and recognition, we can do no other than cry to God for perfecting in love. And ye who would be perfect in love must open your hearts to God! All love is of Him, and it is in us only as we possess Him! Love breaks in waves on our hearts, and we send back the waves, reverberating—that is all! Break, O Divine ocean, on my heart; and may I send thee back to God and man! Love is not mawkish, maudlin sentiment; it is strong. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength."

See how the Apostle argues against false gods. He affirms that these are an offence against the unities of the universe. There can be but one God, who has made Himself known to us in Jesus. But though this were so, yet some recent converts still thought an idol stood for a positive existence in the spiritual world, and would grievously misunderstand and be hindered by any action dictated by Christian liberty, which made light of their scruples—therefore it would be better to abandon any act that would be a stumbling-block. The love that considers others is a greater thing than the knowledge which merely confers freedom from old restraints.

Home Missionary Circle.—The members of "Hope" Mission Branch Circle (headquarters) decided at their last weekly meeting to advertise the Sunday services of their mission in a local paper, the expense to be met out of their Branch Circle thank-offering fund. A "rally" on Saturday nights, for the purpose of visiting the busy thoroughfares of Portsmouth, with "invites" to Sunday services, tracts, &c., was also determined on. Such forward movements as these will surely commend themselves to other branch circles, for as missionaries they will delight in doing all that lies in their power to keep their churches aggressive.

Methodism in Force.

FURTHER ŒCUMENICAL SESSIONS.

NOTWITHSTANDING adverse prophecies the Œcumenical Conference in London has been a great success. No former gathering has demonstrated more forcibly how far Methodism is fulfilling her mission as a branch of the universal Church. All lines of distinction have been forgotten, and the proceedings have provided abundant evidence of the vital connection between these parts of the Body of Christ. Independent as these churches are of one another, they feel the bond of the Spirit, and are quick to respond to each other's call. During the past fortnight Methodism has spoken with a voice which has been heard beyond the precincts of Wesley's Chapel, and will re-echo throughout the civilized world. The tone and character of the essays and addresses was of the highest standard, and the moral and spiritual influence of the Conference will remain when its work is over.

The chairman on Tuesday was Bishop Vincent, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Among other announcements it was mentioned that a pastoral to be addressed by the Conference to world-wide Methodism will be prepared.

As noted in last issue, the essay read at the morning session by Dr. Agar Beet, dealt with "Christianity and Unbelief." The substance of this paper will be found on page 12. That the Conference appreciated the essay was evidenced not by applause, but by that silence which tells of strained attention. More than one of the subsequent speakers from both sections acknowledged their indebtedness to Dr. Beet.

The Pretensions of Secularism.

Bishop J. W. Hamilton followed with a stirring address on the subject of "Secularism and Christianity." He declared that secularism, as theory or practice, proceeds upon the assumption that there is no God. He is dead or on a journey, and cannot be concerned with the men and women of earth. They recognise no present governing Father by whom duty is enjoined, or to whom responsibility is answerable. The out-breaking sinner practically proceeds in his conduct on the same presumption. Secularists would have us think of man as a passionate creature of spontaneous mental action. They are extreme dogmatists, whose business it is to denounce dogma. Christianity, on the other hand, is the direct revelation of the presence of the one true and living God in this world. It must be supreme in its authority, and universal in its dominion. It will tolerate no rival claim; all other forms of faith must disappear; Jesus of Nazareth, the historic Founder, must be accepted as the only Son of God.

CHRISTIANITY IS NO EXPERIMENT;

it is not an opinion, a phenomenon, a philosophy. It is the holy assertion of the imminent presence and infinite truth of the supernatural world, brought down to earth. It is intelligible and reasonable. It is not to be vindicated by skilful argument, but by that holy incarnate living which makes holy the lives of men and nations, according to the pattern of a Perfect Example.

The next speaker, Rev. R. Abercrombie, said that secularism was taught in novels, and in proof of this read an extract from a popular work of fiction. Certainty was the demand of the secularist and agnostic, who told them their beliefs might or might not be true, and founded life on what they saw and felt.

Dr. A. B. Leonard expressed the opinion that modern apologists are too much on the defensive and TOO LITTLE ON THE AGGRESSIVE.

Books in defence of Christianity are too largely an attempt to ward off the blows of the enemies. Any system that is too much on the defensive will be sure to lack aggressive power. It has always been true that when Christianity has assumed the attitude of aggressiveness it has been a conquering power, and just to the extent that we lose the spirit of aggressiveness in our attitude towards modern unbelief, we shall find ourselves more and more weakened in the propagation of Christianity.

A thoughtful discussion followed, in which many phases of unbelief were brought to light, and the means whereby error should be refuted were set forth. Among those who took part were Bishop Tyree, Revs. J. B. Young, John Hallam, and W. H. Nelson. Chancellor N. Burwash, D.D., said he was convinced that the souls of men are hungry, not for negations, but for positive truths. But that positive truth must be the truth that appeals to the conscience and to the religious heart of humanity, the truth that will save men; the truth that comes home to them with strong, positive, and living conviction; the truth of which our Lord spoke when He said, "The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life"; the truth that Tertullian referred to when he made his appeal to the soul of the common man, as we find him in the market-place and the highways of life.

Modern Indifferentism.

In the afternoon an able essay was read by Professor Wm. J. Shaw, of Montreal, on the evils of Modern Indifferentism. This evil, he said, is, unfortunately, nothing new. The Israelities kept not the covenant of God, and amid the dimmed hope and wearied faith of his disciples, Christ had occasion to upbraid them for their unbelief. Indifferentism grows out of instability of religious opinions, reaction from Romanism, Sabbath desecration (for which infidelity and Romanism are equally responsible); modern criticism in its radical and destructive forms; love of pleasure and ease as the chief aims of life; sectarianism; the influence of demagogues of malicious intent; irreverence and frivolity; and an individualistic abuse of the doctrine of private judgment. One remedy is to be sought in a ministry which combines moral earnestness with intellectual conviction. But the is the power of the Holy Spirit—a mighty, supernatural Power, giving impulse to holy purpose, loving sympathy to our words, and an invincible power to our lives.

Rev. Joseph Ritson (Paisley), of the Primitive Methodist Church, dealt with the subject of "Apathy in the Church." One symptom of this is the alarming weakness of the Church, so that conversions are few and far between. There is also a lack of healthy appetite. The evil is rooted in imperfect spiritual vision. When the eyes of the heart are opened, men lose their apathy; for faith, the sight of the soul, produces that earnestness which commands success. A strong, vigorous faith would give a clear vision of eternal things, and would put an end to weakness and apathy, by linking the Church with God as the great source of life.

Speaking of "The Antidote for Indifferentism and Apathy," Rev. J. M. King, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (Philadelphia), showed that the religious thought and conscience of the people are being confused by discussions concerning the authority of the Scriptures; and amid such distraction conviction of sin is impossible. Religious, moral, and social forces appear to be getting more and more cowardly in the presence of giant monopoly and money power. The latter is only beginning to be Christianized. Love of wealth was the teaching of paganism; love of man is the teaching of Christianity. The family and the home are inventions of God; and, without Christianity, people are housed but homeless.

The conversation that followed was of a decidedly optimistic tone, and included stirring personal experience of God's mighty power in the revival of his people.

Practical Evangelism.

A meeting was held in the evening in St. James' Hall, when "Evangelistic Work in Great Cities," was considered. Mr. Robert Bird presided, and said when he saw the spirit of indifference in the churches, the growing habit of gambling, the increasing power of the drink traffic in spite of all the efforts of temperance reformers for fifty years; when he saw two Christian peoples engaged in a terrible struggle, and hardly a gathering of Christian men, even of ministers, with the courage to raise their voice for peace and arbitration, he sometimes asked himself what was the use of our Christian organizations for preaching the Gospel of peace? But in some directions the outlook was brighter, and he believed strongly in the power of the Gospel to reach the masses, though not so much by great organized movements as by personal application and contact.

Rev. F. Mason North, D.D., said that the work in the cities was the most unique, important, and hopeful thing in modern Methodism.

A vigorous speech followed from Rev. J. A. B. Wilson, D.D. The problem in America, he remarked, was made more difficult by the demagogic labour leader, who tried to increase the breach between his constituency and the Church by representing the latter as an enemy of progress.

Rev. S. F. Collier gave a glowing account of the mission work at the Central Hall, Manchester. There was an idea abroad that churches and chapels were a kind of close corporation for the respectable; they were very often thought to belong to the few. This great barrier, whether real or imaginary, must be broken down. The remedy is to get into personal touch with the "outsiders," and for this an army of voluntary workers is required.

Wednesday's proceedings were under the direction of Rev. G. T. Candlin (Methodist New Connexion). The earlier portion of the morning session was devoted to the consideration of statistics. The reports were pleasant reading, inasmuch as they showed how rapidly Methodism has advanced. The delegates learned from the figures presented that there are now thirty-two million members and adherents of Methodism, and that their church property is valued at sixty million pounds.

Methodist Authorship.
